

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Bd. Aug. 1931

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Received

Jan. 31. 1901

L

115 40

THE LAWYERS REPORTS ANNOTATED

BOOK XLIX

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE, WITH FULL ANNOTATION.

BURDETT A. RICH, EDITOR, AND HENRY P. FARNHAM, ASST.

0

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

1900.

KF
132
27
Dec. 11

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year nineteen hundred, by

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,

In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

Rec. Jan. 31, 1901

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE

OF ALL

CASES REPORTED IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED,

BOOK 49,

NOT OFFICIALLY REPORTED WHEN THIS BOOK WENT TO PRESS.

(To be "tipped in" in front of regular table, used as a book mark or as data for marking each case. Like tables will be furnished for subsequent volumes as fast as possible.)

A. B. Farquhar Co. v. National Harrow Co. (42 C. C. A. 600, 102 Fed. 714).....	755	Hightower v. Bailey (108 Ky. 198) ..	255
Adams v. Shelbyville (154 Ind. 467) ..	797	Horne v. Rodgers (110 Ga. 362).....	176
Allen v. Allen (73 Conn. 54).....	142	Howarth v. Lombard (175 Mass. 570) ..	301
v. Gerard (21 R. I. 467).....	351	Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Sims (77 Miss. 325).....	322
Andrews v. Roanoke Bldg. Asso. & Inv. Co. (98 Va. 445).....	659	Irvine v. McCreary (108 Ky. 495).....	417
Angus v. Scully (176 Mass. 357).....	562	James Clark Co. v. Colton (91 Md. 195) ..	698
Bacon v. Reich (121 Mich. 480).....	311	Jones v. Chicago, St. P. Minn. & O. R. Co. (80 Minn. 488).....	640
Bageard v. Consolidated Traction Co. (64 N. J. L. 316).....	424	J. Thompson Mfg. Co. v. Gunderson (106 Wis. 449).....	859
Begbie v. Begbie (128 Cal. 154).....	141	Kager v. Vickery (61 Kan. 342).....	153
Behring v. Somerville (63 N. J. L. 568) ..	578	Lauraglen Mills v. Ruff (57 S. C. 53) ..	448
Bradford v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co. (43 C. C. A. 310, 102 Fed. 48).....	530	McCullen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (41 C. C. A. 365, 101 Fed. 66) ..	642
Braun v. Northern Pac. R. Co. (79 Minn. 404).....	319	Mackin v. Portland Gas Co. (38 Or. 120) ..	506
Bryson v. McShane (48 W. Va. 126) ..	527	Middlesex Water Co. v. Knappmann Whiting Co. (64 N. J. L. 240).....	572
Bucknam v. Bucknam (176 Mass. 229) ..	735	Miskimins, Ex parte (8 Wyo. 392).....	831
Caye v. Fabel (108 Ky. 124).....	251	Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Dingley (40 C. C. A. 459, 100 Fed. 408).....	132
Central State Bank v. Spurlin (111 Iowa, 187).....	661	Nashville St. R. Co. v. Griffin (104 Tenn. 81).....	451
Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. King (40 C. C. A. 432, 99 Fed. 251).....	102	Nevels v. Kentucky Lumber Co. (108 Ky. 550).....	416
Childers v. Neely (47 W. Va. 16).....	468	Newport v. Masonic Temple Asso. (108 Ky. 333).....	252
Clark v. Skeen (61 Kan. 526).....	190	New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Cromwell (98 Va. 227).....	462
Crafts v. Ray (22 R. I. 179).....	604	Pearl v. West End St. R. Co. (176 Mass. 177).....	820
Denver & Rio Grande R. Co. v. Roller (41 C. C. A. 22, 100 Fed. 738).....	77	Reed v. Peacock (123 Mich. 244).....	423
Finney v. Guy (106 Wis. 256).....	486	Rundell v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique (40 C. C. A. 625, 100 Fed. 655).....	92
First Baptist Church v. Fort (93 Tex. 215).....	617	San Antonio & Ark. Pass R. Co. v. Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. (93 Tex. 313) ..	459
Gargan v. West End St. R. Co. (176 Mass. 106).....	421	Seasongood, Stix, Krouse & Co. v. Tennessee & O. R. T. Co. (Ky.) Not to be Rep.....	270
Garrett v. Southern R. Co. (41 C. C. A. 237, 101 Fed. 102).....	645	Shaw v. Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co. (123 Mich. 629).....	308
Gastineau v. Commonwealth (108 Ky. 473).....	111	Shrum v. Simpson (155 Ind. 160).....	792
Gatzow v. Buening (106 Wis. 1).....	475	Smith v. Day (40 C. C. A. 366, 100 Fed. 244).....	108
Hall v. Vernon (47 W. Va. 297).....	464	South Bend v. Reynolds (155 Ind. 70) ..	795
Hayward v. Leeson (176 Mass. 310) ..	725
Hechinger v. Mayaville (Ky.) Not to be Rep.....	114
Hickey v. O'Brien (123 Mich. 611) ..	594
High School Dist. No. 137 v. Lancaster (60 Neb. 147).....	343

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE OF CASES.

Sperry v. Flygare (80 Minn. 325)	757	Tecumseh Mills v. Louisville & N. R.
Standard Life & Acc't Ins. Co. v. Thornton		Co. (108 Ky. 572)	557
(49 C. C. A. 116, 100 Fed.		Thompson v. West (59 Neb. 677)	337
582)	116	Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Johnson City (40
State v. Hay (126 N. C. 999)	588	C. C. A. 58, 99 Fed. 663) ...	123
v. Knowles (90 Md. 646)	695	Turner v. Boger (126 N. C. 300)	590
v. McKee (73 Conn. 18)	542	Utley v. Hill (155 Mo. 232)	323
v. Rook (61 Kan. 382)	186	Wahl v. Franz (40 C. C. A. 638, 100
v. Savery (126 N. C. 1083)	585	Fed. 680)	62
State, Guilbert v. Halliday (61 Ohio		Warren v. Tanner (Ky.) Not to be Rep.	248
St. 352)	427	Watson v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co.
Perez v. Wall (41 Fla. 463)	548	(104 Tenn. 194)	454
Supreme Council Catholic K. of A. v.		Wheeler v. Traders' Deposit Bank (107
Densford. (Ky.) Not to be		Ky. 653)	315
Rep.	776	Wickes, Re (128 Cal. 270)	138
Swanson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co.		Wysong v. Rambo (Tenn. Ch. No. Off.
(79 Minn. 398)	625	Rep.)	766
Taylor v. Beckham (108 Ky. 378)	253

TABLE

OF

CASES REPORTED

IN

LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK XLIX.

A. A. B. Farquhar Co. v. National Harrow Co. (C. C. App. 3d C.)..... 755 Adams v. Shelbyville (Ind.)..... 797 Allen v. Allen (Conn.)..... 142  v. Gerard (R. I.)..... 351 American Product Co., Foote v. (Pa.) 764 Andrews v. Roanoke Bldg. Asso. & I. Co. (Va.)..... 659 Angus v. Scully (Mass.)..... 562 Appeal of Ballantine (Pa.)..... 444  Brown (Conn.)..... 144  Macdonald (Conn.)..... 144 B. Bacon v. Reich (Mich.)..... 311 Bageard v. Consolidated Traction Co. (N. J. Err. & App.)..... 424 Bailey, Hightower v. (Ky.)..... 255 Ballantine's Appeal (Pa.)..... 444 Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stankard (Ohio)..... 381 Bank, Central State, v. Spurlin (Iowa) 661  Commercial & S., Wells, F. & Co. v. (Cal.)..... 647  First Nat., Warman v. (Ill.).. 412  Second Ward Sav., Huron v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)..... 534  Swedish American Nat., v. Dickinson Co. (N. D.)..... 285  Traders' Deposit, Wheeler v. (Ky.)..... 315 Barber v. Barber (Conn.)..... 142 Barnicoat, Weston v. (Mass.)..... 612 Barry, Slayton v. (Mass.)..... 560 Beckham, Marshall v. (Ky.)..... 258  v. Taylor (Ky.)..... 258 Begbie v. Begbie (Cal.)..... 141 Behring v. Somerville (N. J. Err. & App.)..... 578 Boger, Turner v. (N. C.)..... 590 Brackman, Griffith v. (Tenn.)..... 435 Bradford v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. (C. C. App. 3d C.)..... 530 Braun v. Northern P. R. Co. (Minn.).. 319 Broughel v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. (Conn.)..... 404	Brown, Pifer v. (W. Va.)..... 497 Brown's Appeal (Conn.)..... 144 Brownback v. North Wales (Pa.)..... 446 Brush Elec. L. & P. Co. v. Lefevre (Tex.) 771 Bryson v. McShane (W. Va.)..... 527 Bucknam v. Bucknam (Mass.)..... 735 Buening, Gatzow v. (Wis.)..... 475 Buxer, Union C. L. Ins. Co. v. (Ohio).. 737 C. Cahill v. Colton (Md.)..... 698 Carney v. New York L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 471 Carolina C. R. Co., Neal v. (N. C.).... 684 Cassard v. Tracy (La.)..... 272  v. Zacharie (La.)..... 272 Caye v. Fabel (Ky.)..... 251 Central State Bank v. Spurlin (Iowa) 661 Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. King (C. C. App. 6th C.)..... 102 Chicago v. Collins (Ill.)..... 408  Frost v. (Ill.)..... 657 Chicago & G. T. R. Co., Shaw v. (Mich.) 308 Chicago & N. W. R. Co., McCullen v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)..... 642 Chicago Bd. of Trade, Green v. (Ill.).. 365 Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., Swanson v. (Minn.)..... 625 Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co., Jones v. (Minn.)..... 640 Childers v. Neely (W. Va.)..... 468 Cincinnati, Cincinnati, L. & N. R. Co. v. (Ohio)..... 566 Cincinnati, L. & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati (Ohio)..... 566 Clark v. Skeen (Kan.)..... 190 Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt (C. C. App. 7th C.)..... 98 Cobb, Perry v. (Me.)..... 389 Collins, Chicago v. (Ill.)..... 408 Colton, Cahill v. (Md.)..... 698  James Clark Co. v. (Md.)..... 698 Commercial & S. Bank, Wells, F. & Co. v. (Cal.)..... 647 Commonwealth, Gastineau v. (Ky.).... 111 Compagne Générale Transatlantique, Rundell v. (C. C. App. 7th C.)..... 92
----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Consolidated Traction Co., Bageard v. (N. J. Err. & App.).....	424
Conway v. Smith Mercantile Co. (Wyo.)	201
Corbin v. Philadelphia (Pa.)	715
Cornett, Ward v. (Va.)	550
Crafts v. Ray (R. I.)	604
Crawford, Vickery v. (Tex.)	773
Cromwell, New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. (Va.)	462
Cudahy, Ryan v. (Ill.)	353

D.

Day, Smith v. (C. C. App. 9th C.)	108
Densford, Supreme Council C. K. of A. v. (Ky.)	776
Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller (C. C. App. 9th C.)	77
Dickinson Co., Swedish American Nat. Bank v. (N. D.)	285
Dingley, Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App. 9th C.)	132

E.

Enright, Wells, F. & Co. v. (Cal.)	647
Estate of Parry, Re (Pa.)	444
Wickes, Re (Cal.)	138
Ex parte Miskimins (Wyo.)	831

F.

Fabel, Caye v. (Ky.)	251
Finch v. Gregg (N. C.)	679
Finney v. Guy (Wis.)	486
First Baptist Church v. Fort (Tex.)	617
First Nat. Bank, Warman v. (Ill.)	412
Fitzgerald, Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. (Ga.)	175
Flygare, Sperry v. (Minn.)	737
Foot v. American Product Co. (Pa.)	764
Fort, First Baptist Church v. (Tex.)	617
Franz, Wahl v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	62
Friedheim, Lauraglen Mills v. (S. C.)	448
Frost v. Chicago (Ill.)	657

G.

Gargan v. West End Street R. Co. (Mass.)	421
Garrett v. Southern R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.)	645
Gastineau v. Com. (Ky.)	111
Gatzow v. Buening (Wis.)	475
Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Fitzgerald (Ga.)	175
Gerard, Allen v. (R. I.)	351
Gilkey v. Howe (Wis.)	483
Glenwood Lumber Co., Limberg v. (Cal.)	33
Goddard, State ex rel., v. Johnson (Kan.)	662
Gray v. Kaufman Dairy & I. C. Co. (N. Y.)	580
Great Camp K. of M., Hembau v. (Mich.)	592
Green v. Chicago Bd. of Trade (Ill.) ..	365
49 L. R. A.

Gregg, Finch v. (N. C.)	679
Grimm, Nashville Street R. Co. v. (Tenn.)	451
Griffith v. Brackman (Tenn.)	435
Guilbert, State ex rel., v. Halliday (Ohio)	427
Gunderson, J. Thompson Mfg. Co. v. (Wis.)	859
Guy, Finney v. (Wis.)	486

H.

Halbert v. San Saba Springs Land & L. S. Asso. (Tex.)	193
Hall v. Vernon (W. Va.)	464
Halliday, State ex rel. Guilbert v. (Ohio)	427
Hanover F. Ins. Co., Bradford v. (C. C. App. 3d C.)	530
Hay, State v. (N. C.)	588
Hayward v. Hopewell (Mass.)	725
v. Leeson (Mass.)	725
Hechinger v. Maysville (Ky.)	114
Hembeau v. Great Camp K. of M. (Mich.)	592
Hewell, Lawson v. (Cal.)	400
Hickey v. O'Brien (Mich.)	594
High School Dist. No. 137 v. Lancaster (Neb.)	343
Hightower v. Bailey (Ky.)	255
Hill, Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App. 9th C.)	127
Utley v. (Mo.)	323
Hopewell, Hayward v. (Mass.)	725
Horne v. Rodgers (Ga.)	176
Howarth v. Lombard (Mass.)	301
Howe, Gilkey v. (Wis.)	483
Huron v. Second Ward Sav. Bank (C. C. App. 8th C.)	534
Hygeia Distilled Water Co. v. Hygeia Ice Co. (Conn.)	147
Hygeia Ice Co., Hygeia Distilled Water Co. v. (Conn.)	147

I.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sims (Miss.)	322
Insurance Co., Hanover F., Bradford v. (C. C. App. 3d C.)	530
Mutual L., v. Dingley (C. C. App. 9th C.)	132
Mutual L., v. Hill (C. C. App. 9th C.)	127
New York L., Carney v. (N. Y.)	471
Standard L. & A., v. Thornton (C. C. App. 6th C.)	116
Travelers', v. Johnson City (C. C. App. 6th C.)	123
Travelers', v. Myers (Ohio)	760
Union C. L., v. Buxer (Ohio)	737
Irvine v. McCreary (Ky.)	417

J.

Jackson, People ex rel., v. Suburban R. Co. (Ill.)	650
James Clark Co. v. Colton (Md.)	698
Johnson, State ex rel. Goddard v. (Kan.)	662

Johnson City, Travelers' Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App. 6th C.)	123
Jones v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (Minn.)	640
J. Thompson Mfg. Co. v. Gunderson (Wis.)	859
Judge of Probate v. Sulloway (N. H.)	347

K.

Kager v. Vickery (Kan.)	153
Kaufman Dairy & I. C. Co., Gray v. (N. Y.)	580
Kentucky Lumber Co., Nevels v. (Ky.)	416
King, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. (C. C. App. 6th C.)	102
Knappmann Whiting Co., Middlesex Water Co. v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	572
Knowles, State v. (Md.)	695

L.

Lancaster, High School Dist. No. 137 v. (Neb.)	343
Lauraglen Mills v. Friedheim (S. C.)	448
v. Roddey (S. C.)	448
v. Ruff (S. C.)	448
Lawson v. Hewell (Cal.)	400
Leeson, Hayward v. (Mass.)	725
Lefevre, Brush Elec. L. & P. Co. v. (Tex.)	771
Libby, Pinkham v. (Me.)	693
Limberg v. Glenwood Lumber Co. (Cal.)	33
Lombard, Howarth v. (Mass.)	301
Louisville & N. R. Co., Tecumseh Mills v. (Ky.)	557
Watson v. (Tenn.)	454

M.

McClain v. Williams (S. D.)	610
McCreary, Irvine v. (Ky.)	417
McCullen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	642
Macdonald's Appeal (Conn.)	144
McKee, State v. (Conn.)	542
Mackin v. Portland Gas Co. (Or.)	596
McShane, Bryson v. (W. Va.)	527
Maine Water Co. v. Waterville (Me.)	294
Marshall v. Beckham (Ky.)	258
Masonic Temple Asso., Newport v. (Ky.)	252
Maysville, Hechinger v. (Ky.)	114
Michel, State ex rel. State Pharmaceutical Asso. v. (La.)	218
Middlesex Water Co. v. Knappmann Whiting Co. (N. J. Err. & App.)	572
Miskimins, Ex parte (Wyo.)	831
Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Dingley (C. C. App. 9th C.)	132
v. Hill (C. C. App. 9th C.)	127
Myers, Travelers' Ins. Co. v. (Ohio)	760

N.

Nashville Street R. Co. v. Griffin (Tenn.)	451
49 L. R. A.

National Harrow Co., A. B. Farquhar Co. v. (C. C. App. 3d C.)	755
Neal v. Carolina C. R. Co. (N. C.)	684
Neely, Childers v. (W. Va.)	468
Nevels v. Kentucky Lumber Co. (Ky.)	416
Newport v. Masonic Temple Asso. (Ky.)	252
New York L. Ins. Co., Carney v. (N. Y.)	471
New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Cromwell (Va.)	462
Northern P. R. Co., Braun v. (Minn.)	319
North Wales, Brownback v. (Pa.)	446

O.

O'Brien, Hickey v. (Mich.)	594
Opinion of Justices (Mass.)	564

P.

Parry's Estate, Re (Pa.)	444
Peacock, Reed v. (Mich.)	423
Pearl v. West End Street R. Co. (Mass.)	826
People, Ruhsrat v. (Ill.)	181
People ex rel. Jackson v. Suburban R. Co. (Ill.)	650
Perez, State ex rel., v. Wall (Fla.)	548
Perry v. Cobb (Me.)	389
Philadelphia, Corbin v. (Pa.)	715
Stork v. (Pa.)	600
Pifer v. Brown (W. Va.)	497
Pinkham v. Libby (Me.)	693
Portland Gas Co., Mackin v. (Or.)	596

R.

Railroad Co., Baltimore & O., v. Stankard (Ohio)	381
Carolina C., Neal v. (N. C.)	684
Chicago & G. T., Shaw v. (Mich.)	308
Denver & R. G., v. Roller (C. C. App. 9th C.)	77
Illinois C., v. Sims (Miss.)	322
Louisville & N., Tecumseh Mills v. (Ky.)	557
Louisville & N., Watson v. (Tenn.)	454
New York, P. & N., v. Cromwell (Va.)	462
Suburban, People ex rel. Jackson v. (Ill.)	650
Railroad & Banking Co., Georgia, v. Fitzgerald (Ga.)	175
Railway Co., Chesapeake & O., v. King (C. C. App. 6th C.)	102
Chicago & N. W., McCullen v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	642
Chicago, M. & St. P., Swanson v. (Minn.)	625
Chicago, St. P. M. & O., Jones v. (Minn.)	640
Cincinnati, L. & N., v. Cincinnati (Ohio)	566
Cleveland, C. C. & St. L., v. Tartt (C. C. App. 7th C.)	98
Nashville Street, v. Griffin (Tenn.)	451
Northern P., Braun v. (Minn.)	319

Railway Co., San Antonio & A. P., v. Southwestern Teleg.&Teleph. Co. (Tex.)	459
Southern, Garrett v. (C. C. App. 6th C.)	645
West End Street, Gargan v. (Mass.)	421
West End Street, Pearl v. (Mass.)	826
Rambo, Wysong v. (Tenn.)	766
Ray, Crafts v. (R. I.)	604
Raymond, Supreme Lodge O. of S. F. v. (Kan.)	373
Reed v. Peacock (Mich.)	423
Reich, Bacon v. (Mich.)	311
Re Parry's Estate (Pa.)	444
Tuthill (N. Y.)	781
Wickes's Estate (Cal.)	138
Reynolds, South Bend v. (Ind.)	795
Richardson, Territory v. (Okla.)	440
Roanoke Bldg. Asso. & I. Co., Andrews v. (Va.)	659
Roddey, Lauraglen Mills v. (S. C.)	448
Rodgers, Horne v. (Ga.)	176
Roller, Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. (C. C. App. 9th C.)	77
Rook, State v. (Kan.)	186
Ruff, Lauraglen Mills v. (S. C.)	448
Rubstrat v. People (Ill.)	181
Rundell v. Compagnie Générale Trans- atlantique (C. C. App. 7th C.)	92
Ryan v. Cudahy (Ill.)	353

S.

San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Southwestern Tele. & Teleph. Co. (Tex.)	459
San Saba Springs Land & L. S. Asso., Halbert v. (Tex.)	193
Savery, State v. (N. C.)	585
Scully, Angus v. (Mass.)	562
Seasongood, S. K. & Co. v. Tennessee & O. R. Transp. Co. (Ky.)	270
Second Ward Sav. Bank, Huron v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	534
Shaw v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (Mich.)	308
Shelbyville, Adams v. (Ind.)	797
Shrum v. Simpson (Ind.)	792
Simpson, Shrum v. (Ind.)	792
Sims, Illinois C. R. Co. v. (Miss.)	322
Skeen, Clark v. (Kan.)	190
Slayton v. Barry (Mass.)	560
Smith v. Day (C. C. App. 9th C.)	108
Smith Mercantile Co., Conway v. (Wyo.)	201
Somerville, Behring v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	578
South Bend v. Reynolds (Ind.)	795
Southern New England Teleph. Co., Broughel v. (Conn.)	404
Southern R. Co., Garrett v. (C. C. App. 6th C.)	645
Southwestern Tele. & Teleph. Co., San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. (Tex.)	459
Sperry v. Flygare (Minn.)	757
Spurlin, Central State Bank v. (Iowa)	661
Standard L. & A. Ins. Co. v. Thornton (C. C. App. 6th C.)	116

Stankard, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. (Ohio)	381
State v. Hay (N. C.)	588
v. Knowles (Md.)	695
v. McKee (Conn.)	542
v. Rook (Kan.)	186
v. Savery (N. C.)	585
State ex rel. Guilbert v. Halliday (Ohio)	427
Goddard v. Johnson (Kan.)	662
State Pharmaceutical Asso. v. Michel (La.)	218
Perez v. Wall (Fla.)	548
State Pharmaceutical Asso., State ex rel., v. Michel (La.)	218
Stork v. Philadelphia (Pa.)	600
Suburban R. Co., People ex rel. Jackson v. (Ill.)	650
Sulloway, Judge of Probate v. (N. H.)	347
Supreme Council C. K. of A. v. Densford (Ky.)	776
Supreme Lodge O. of S. F. v. Raymond (Kan.)	373
Swanson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.)	625
Swedish-American Nat. Bank v. Dickin- son Co. (N. D.)	285

T.

Tartt, Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. (C. C. App. 7th C.).....	98
Taylor v. Beckham (Ky.).....	258
Tecumseh Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.).....	557
Tenner, Warren v. (Ky.).....	248
Tennessee & O. R. Transp. Co., Season- good, S. K. & Co. v. (Ky.)..	270
Territory v. Richardson (Okla.).....	440
Thompson v. West (Neb.).....	337
Thornton, Standard L. & A. Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App. 6th C.).....	116
Tracy, Cassard v. (La.).....	272
Traders' Deposit Bank, Wheeler v. (Ky.).....	315
Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Johnson City (C. C. App. 6th C.).....	123
v. Myers (Ohio).....	760
Turner v. Boger (N. C.).....	590
Tuthill, Re (N. Y.).....	781

U.

Union C. L. Ins. Co. v. Buxer (Ohio) ..	737
Utley v. Hill (Mo.)	323

V.

Vernon, Hall v. (W. Va.).....	464
Vickery v. Crawford (Tex.).....	773
Kager v. (Kan.).....	153

W.

Wahl v. Franz (C. C. App. 8th C.)	62
Wall, State ex rel. Perez v. (Fla.)	548
Ward v. Cornett (Va.)	550
Warman v. First Nat. Bank (Ill.)	412
Warren v. Tanner (Ky.)	248

Waterville, Maine Water Co. v. (Me.)	294	Weston v. Barnicoat (Mass.)	612
Watson v. Louisville & N. R. Co.		Wheeler v. Traders' Deposit Bank (Ky.)	315
(Tenn.)	454	Wickes's Estate, Re (Cal.)	138
Wells, F. & Co. v. Commercial & S.		Williams, McClain v. (S. D.)	610
Bank (Cal.)	647	Wysong v. Rambo (Tenn.)	766
v. Enright (Cal.)	647
West, Thompson v. (Neb.)	337
West End Street R. Co., Gargan v.
(Mass.)	421
Pearl v. (Mass.)	826
49 L. R. A.

Z.

Zacharie, Cassard v. (La.)	272
---------------------------------------------	-----

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.

Abbott v. Omaha Smelting & Ref. Co. 4 Neb. 416	485
Ackerson v. Erie R. Co. 31 N. J. L. 309.	82
Adams v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 46 Kan. 151, 26 Pac. 439.	631
v. Lloyd, 3 Hurlst. & N. 351.	853
Adams County Bank v. Morgan, 26 Neb. 148, 41 N. W. 993.	857
Adams Express Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 166 U. S. 220, 41 L. ed. 977, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 604.	434
Adrianze P. & Co. v. National Harrow Co. 98 Fed. Rep. 118.	756
Ætna F. Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. ed. 395.	397
Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Lyon County, 44 Fed. Rep. 329.	539, 540
Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Coggins, 60 U. S. App. 140, 88 Fed. Rep. 455, 32 C. C. A. 1.	107
Alaska, The, 130 U. S. 201, 32 L. ed. 923, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461.	96
Albany Street, Re, 11 Wend. 149, 25 Am. Dec. 618.	780
Albright v. Smith, 2 S. D. 577, 51 N. W. 590.	253
Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185 v. M'Pherson, 1 H. L. Cas. 191.	609, 74
v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543.	490, 491, 493
Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.	183
Allwood v. Cowen, 111 Ill. 481.	410
Alwood v. Ruckman, 21 Ill. 200.	794
American Bank v. Snow, 9 R. I. 11, 98 Am. Dec. 364.	352
American F. Ins. Co. v. Hazen, 110 Pa. 530, 1 Atl. 605.	763
American Freehold Land Mortg. Co. v. Woodworth, 79 Fed. Rep. 951.	307
American Salt Co. v. Heidenheimer, 80 Tex. 344, 15 S. W. 1038.	485
American Waltham Watch Co. v. United States Watch Co. 173 Mass. 85, 43 L. R. A. 826, 53 N. E. 141.	152
American Waterworks v. State ex rel. Walker, 46 Neb. 194, 30 L. R. A. 447, 64 N. W. 711.	598
American Waterworks Co. v. State ex rel. O'Connor, 31 Neb. 445, 48 N. W. 64.	599
Ames v. Union P. R. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 835, 64 Fed. Rep. 185, 169 U. S. 550, 42 L. ed. 850, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.	676
v. Union P. R. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 619, 62 Fed. Rep. 7.	678
Amory v. Kannoffsky, 117 Mass. 351, 10 Am. Rep. 416.	583
Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Shear, 2 Sandf. 599 Anacosta Tribe No. 12, I. O. of R. M. v. Murbach, 13 Md. 91, 71 Am. Dec. 625.	151, 378, 594
Anderson v. Hopkins, 63 U. S. App. 533, 91 Fed. Rep. 77, 33 C. C. A. 346.	102
v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375, 6 L. R. A. 390, 12 S. W. 670.	271
v. Likens, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1001, 47 S. W. 867.	265
Anderson County Comrs. v. Beal, 113 U. S. 227, 28 L. ed. 968, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438.	530, 540
Andover v. Oxford County Comrs. 86 Me. 185, 29 Atl. 982.	393

Andreas v. Redfield, 98 U. S. 225, 25 L. ed. 158.	649
Andrews v. Andrews, 7 Helsk. 251.	769
v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 34 Conn. 57.	406
Anniston Nat. Bank v. Durham School Committee, 121 N. C. 100, 23 S. E. 134.	686, 689
Anonymous, 2 Hill, 375.	227
Anonymous, 1 Mod. 209.	831
Appollon, The, 9 Wheat. 362, 6 L. ed. 111	98
Archer's Case [1892] 1 Ch. 822.	732
Armstrong v. Beadle, 5 Sawy. 484, Fed. Cas. No. 541.	96, 97
v. Lear, 12 Wheat. 169, 6 L. ed. 589	69
Arrington v. Jenkins, 95 N. C. 462.	591
Arrowsmith v. Gleason, 129 U. S. 86, 32 L. ed. 630, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 237.	73
Arthur v. Willius, 44 Minn. 409, 46 S. W. 867.	490, 491
Ashbridge's Succession, 1 La. Ann. 206.	280
Ashley v. Presque Isle County Supers. 16 U. S. App. 656, 60 Fed. Rep. 55, 8 C. C. A. 455.	530
Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. v. Rucker, 28 Fed. Rep. 220.	467
Aspinwall, Re, 83 Fed. Rep. 851.	67, 71
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 682, 28 L. ed. 297, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192.	670
v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 879, 15 Am. Rep. 362.	645
v. Sumner County Comrs. 51 Kan. 617, 33 Pac. 312.	485
Atkinson v. Ritchie, 10 East, 530.	578
Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 111 N. C. 463, 18 L. R. A. 393, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 294, 16 S. E. 393.	675
Attorney General v. Boston, 142 Mass. 200, 7 N. E. 722.	675
v. Cornthwaite, 2 Cox Ch. Cas. 44.	72
v. Edison Teleph. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 254.	460
Atwood v. Williams, 40 Me. 409.	257
Auburn v. Young Men's Christian Asso. 86 Me. 244, 29 Atl. 902.	254
Auditor of State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 6 Kan. 505, 7 Am. Rep. 575	666, 670
Ault v. Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. 54 Wis. 300, 11 N. W. 545.	481
Austin v. Colony Dist. Twp. 51 Iowa, 102, 49 N. W. 1051.	541
v. Davis, 128 Ind. 472, 12 L. R. A. 120, 26 N. W. 890.	529
v. New York & E. R. Co. 25 N. J. L. 383.	81
v. Searing, 16 N. Y. 112, 69 Am. Dec. 665.	378
v. Walton, 68 Tex. 507, 5 S. W. 70.	773

B.

Babb v. Reed, 5 Rawle, 151, 28 Am. Dec. 650.	254
Bacon v. Fairman, 6 Conn. 121.	349
Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 359, 8 Am. Dec. 105.	562
Baggett v. McCormack, 73 Miss. 552, 19 So. 89.	323
Bagley v. Tyler, 43 Mo. App. 195.	307
Bagnall v. Carlton, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 371	732, 733, 734

Bahnsen v. Gilbert, 55 Minn. 334, 56 N. W. 1117	214	Beatty v. Gregory, 17 Iowa, 109, 85 Am. Dec. 546	514
Bailey v. Austrian, 19 Minn. 535, Gil. 465	595	Beck v. Kantorowicz, 3 Kay & J. 230	732
v. Bensley, 87 Ill. 556	872	v. Kittanning Water Co. (Pa.) 9 Cent. Rep. 538, 11 Atl. 300	574
v. Sawyer, 4 Dill. 403, Fed. Cas. No. 744	307	Beckwith v. Cheshire R. Co. 143 Mass. 68, 8 N. E. 875	321
Bain v. Whitehaven & F. Junction R. Co. 3 H. L. Cas. 1	642	Bedford v. Terhune, 30 N. Y. 403, 86 Am. Dec. 394	583
Baker v. Bolton, 1 Camp. 493	405	Bedford Quarries Co. v. Tomlinson, 36 C. C. A. 272	68
v. Fehr, 97 Pa. 70	766	Beekman v. Saratoga & S. R. Co. 3 Paige, 45, 22 Am. Dec. 679	788
v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 12 Gray, 603	398	Beers v. New York L. Ins. Co. 96 Hun, 75, 20 N. Y. Supp. 788	475
Baldwin v. Bennett, 6 Rob. (La.) 309, 280, 283	283	Beete v. Bidgood, 7 Barn. & C. 453	550
v. London, C. & D. R. Co. L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 582	398	Beigenland v. Jensen, 114 U. S. 355, 29 L. ed. 152, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860	97
v. Walker, 21 Conn. 168	145	Bell v. Farwell, 176 Ill. 489, 42 L. R. A. 804, 52 N. E. 346	307, 492
Ball v. Baile, 41 Ind. 221	805	v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 26 C. L. 428	85
v. Tompkins, 41 Fed. Rep. 486	67, 71	v. Moon, 79 Va. 341	556
Balletine v. Joplin, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1062, 48 S. W. 417	417	v. State, Miller, 4 Gill, 303, 45 Am. Dec. 130	835
Ballou v. Black, 21 Neb. 131, 31 N. W. 673	257	Bellepoint v. Pence, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 371, 17 S. W. 197	346
Ballow v. Motheral, 5 Baxt. 602	438	Belleville v. Citizens' Horse R. Co. 152 Ill. 171, 26 L. R. A. 681, 38 N. E. 584	655
Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603, 40 L. ed. 274, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105	107	Bellinger v. People, 8 Wend. 595	854
v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. ed. 354	80, 82	Bello v. Davis, 38 Cal. 256	640
Bangor v. Rising Virtue Lodge No. 10, F. & A. M. 73 Me. 428, 40 Am. Rep. 369	254	Benchley v. Chapin, 10 Cush. 173	349, 350
Bank v. Brown, 112 Ind. 474, 14 N. E. 358	290	Benedict v. Torrent, 83 Mich. 181, 11 L. R. A. 278, 47 N. Y. 129	417
Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 587, 10 L. ed. 274	560	Bennett v. Locomotive County Mut. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 274	763
Bank of British N. A. v. Delafield, 126 N. Y. 418, 27 N. E. 797	584	Benton v. North Carolina R. Co. 122 N. C. 1007, 30 S. E. 333	83
Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 56, 27 N. E. 1015	305, 491	Bergeron v. Hobbs, 96 Wis. 641, 71 N. W. 1036	485
v. Wheeler, 28 Conn. 433, 73 Am. Dec. 683	287, 290	Bernard v. Toplitz, 160 Mass. 162, 35 N. E. 673	288
Bank of State v. New Albany, 11 Ind. 139	609	Berry v. Northeastern R. Co. 72 Ga. 137	175
Bank of Toledo v. International Bank, 21 N. Y. 542	485	Berthold v. O'Hara, 121 Mo. loc. cit. 97, 25 S. W. 845	837
Bank of United States v. Merchants' Bank, 7 Gill, 415	287, 290	Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323	608
Bank of Woodland v. Heron, 122 Cal. 107, 54 Pac. 537	650	Bever v. Spangler, 93 Iowa, 576, 61 N. W. 1072	88
Banks, Re, 56 Kan. 243, 42 Pac. 693	547	Bldwell v. Coleman, 11 Minn. 78, Gil. 45	759
Banta v. Chicago, 172 Ill. 204, 40 L. R. A. 611, 50 N. E. 233	411	Blgelow v. Blgelow, 120 Mass. 320	736
Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Edgerton, 125 Ind. 453, 25 N. E. 437	805, 806, 810, 820	v. Sprague, 140 Mass. 425, 5 N. E. 144	550
Bardon v. Land & R. Improv. Co. 157 U. S. 327, 39 L. ed. 719, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650	75	v. West End Street R. Co. 161 Mass. 893, 37 N. E. 367	422
Barker v. Braham, 2 W. Bl. 806, 3 Wils. 368	881	Binney v. Plumley, 5 Vt. 500, 26 Am. Dec. 313	661
Barling v. Bank of British N. A. 1 C. C. A. 510	68	Black & White-Smiths' Soc. v. Vandyke, 2 Whart. 308, 30 Am. Dec. 263	594
Barnes v. Dyer, 56 Vt. 469	824	Blackburn v. Reilly, 47 N. J. L. 290, 1 Atl. 27	575
v. Gibbs, 31 N. J. L. 317, 86 Am. Dec. 210	287, 288	Blair, Re, 4 Wis. 526	835
Barnesly v. Powell, 1 Ves. Sr. 284	74	v. Com. 25 Gratt. 850	443
Barney v. Barney, 14 Iowa, 189	141	Blanc v. Alsburg, 63 Tex. 489, 51 Am. Rep. 666	621
Barrow S. S. Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S. 100, 42 L. ed. 964, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530	82	Bland v. Jackson, 51 Kan. 496, 33 Pac. 295	672
Bartero v. Real Estate Sav. Bank, 10 Mo. App. 76	312	v. Southern P. R. Co. 55 Cal. 570, 36 Am. Rep. 50	321
Bartholomew v. Austin, 52 U. S. App. 512, 85 Fed. Rep. 359, 29 C. C. A. 568	298, 299	Bland's Case [1893] 2 Ch. 612	732, 734
Bartlett v. Cleavenger, 35 W. Va. 720, 14 S. E. 273	509	Blend v. People, 41 N. Y. 604	180
Barton v. Erickson, 14 Neb. 164, 15 N. W. 206	424	Block v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 529	82
Bates v. Pilling, 6 Barn. & C. 38	831	Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. Rivers R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 31 Am. Dec. 313	788
Batman v. McGowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533	265, 287	Blount v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 22 U. S. App. 129, 61 Fed. Rep. 375, 9 C. C. A. 526	107
Baucus v. Stover, 89 N. Y. 1	349	Blue v. Beach (Ind.) 56 N. E. 89	589
Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. of P. 102 Ind. 262, 1 N. E. 571	369, 378	Bogart v. Lamotte Twp. 79 Mich. 294, 44 N. W. 612	541
Baxter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 119 N. Y. 450, 7 L. R. A. 293, 23 N. E. 1048	132	Boggs v. Martin, 13 B. Mon. 243	252
v. Brooks, 29 Ark. 173	205	Bolden v. Southern R. Co. 123 N. C. 614, 31 S. E. 851	600
v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 83 Ill. 140	363, 364, 372	Bollman, Ex parte, 4 Cranch, 75, 2 L. ed. 554	845
Beadleston & Woers v. Cooke Brew. Co. 46 U. S. App. 18, 74 Fed. Rep. 229, 20 C. C. A. 405	151	Bond v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 100 Ind. 801	631
Bealrd v. Russ, 84 La. Ann. 315	282	Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371, 80 Am. Dec. 90	314
Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 389, 24 L. ed. 176	583	Bonnett ex rel. Newmeyer v. Bonnett, 61 Iowa, 200, 47 Am. Rep. 810, 16 N. W. 91	835
49 L. R. A.		Booe v. Kenner, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1343, 49 S. W. 330	265

Booth v. Dear, 96 Wis. 516, 71 N. W. 816 490, 491, 493	Buck v. Rich, 78 Me. 437, 6 Atl. 871..... 393
v. Spuyten Duyvil Rolling Mill Co. 60 N. Y. 487..... 577	Budd v. Meriden Electric R. Co. 69 Conn. 262, 37 Atl. 683..... 406
v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 118..... 565, 608	Buffington v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 20 L. ed. 122..... 185
Borer v. Chapman, 119 U. S. 587, 30 L. ed. 532, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 342..... 72, 73	Bull v. Rothschild, 16 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 356, 4 N. Y. Supp. 826..... 268
Borgsted v. Nolan, 17 La. 593..... 280, 283	Bullock v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 137, 33 Am. Rep. 356..... 192
Bosher v. Richmond & H. Land Co. 89 Va. 455, 18 S. E. 360..... 782	Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. 352..... 204
Boston Franklinite Co. v. Condit, 19 N. J. Eq. 394..... 466	Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, 35 Pac. 444..... 732
Boston Safe-Deposit & T. Co. v. Salem Wa- ter Co. 94 Fed. Rep. 238..... 574	Burch v. Taylor, 1 Wash. St. 245, 24 Pac. 438..... 305
Bouldin v. Alexander, 15 Wall. 131, 21 L. ed. 69..... 622	Burchell v. Marsh, 17 How. 349, 15 L. ed. 96..... 895
Boulter, Re, 5 Wyo. 329, 40 Pac. 520..... 836	Burk v. McMullen, 4 Pa. 317..... 209
Bowden v. McLeod, 1 Kdw. Ch. 588..... 621, 622	Burke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 7 Helak. 451, 19 Am. Rep. 618..... 645, 646
Bowen v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 89 Hun, 594, 35 N. Y. Supp. 540..... 87	Burlington Voluntary Relief Dept. v. White, 41 Neb. 547, 59 N. W. 751..... 378
v. Phinney, 162 Mass. 593, 39 N. E. 283..... 257	Burnham v. Wabash Western R. Co. 91 Mich. 523, 52 N. W. 14..... 107
Bowery Nat. Bank v. Duryee, 74 N. Y. 491 288	Burns v. Hill, 19 Ga. 22..... 561
Box v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 58 Mo. App. 359..... 631	Burr Case, 1 Burr, Tr. 255, Fed. Cas. No. 14,693..... 855
Boyd v. Dubois, 3 Campb. 133..... 398	Burr's Trial, 1 Burr, Tr. 244, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692e..... 839, 840, 853-855
v. Hall, 56 Ga. 563..... 451	Burroughs v. Housatonic R. Co. 38 Am. Dec. 71, and cases cited in note, 15 Conn. 124..... 645
Boyden v. Frank, 20 Ill. App. 175..... 774	Burton v. Dickinson, 3 Yerg. 112 767, 768, 769
Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50..... 456	v. Stratton, 12 Fed. Rep. 696..... 151
Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 340, 35 N. E. 62..... 183	Bush v. Peckard, 3 Harr. (Del.) 385..... 661
Bradley v. Farwell, Holmes, 433, Fed. Cas. No. 1,779..... 705	Buswell v. Supreme Sitting, O. of I. H. 161 Mass. 224, 23 L. R. A. 846, 36 N. E. 1065..... 307
Bradley v. Lill, 4 Biss. 473, Fed. Cas. No. 1,783..... 192	Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652..... 183
Bramberry's Estate, 156 Pa. 628, 22 L. R. A. 504, 27 Atl. 405..... 445	Butler v. Boston, S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612..... 96
Brant v. Ehlen, 59 Md. 24..... 708	Butler Sav. Bank v. Osborne, 159 Pa. 10, 28 Atl. 183..... 469
Brantford City, The, 29 Fed. Rep. 373..... 97, 98	Butterfield v. Byron, 153 Mass. 517, 12 L. R. A. 571, 27 N. E. 667..... 503, 695
Brassell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 241..... 107	Buts v. Muscatine, 8 Wall. 575, 19 L. ed. 490..... 277
Brenham v. German American Bank, 144 U. S. 173, 36 L. ed. 390, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559..... 541	Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 37 L. ed. 867, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906 70-74
Brevoort v. Grace, 53 N. Y. 245..... 792
Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62, 16 Am. Rep. 395..... 297, 298, 609
Brickell v. Hulise, 7 Ad. & El. 455..... 426
Bridgeport v. Hubbell, 5 Conn. 237..... 145
Brigel v. Starbuck, 34 Ohio St. 280..... 857
Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 35 L. ed. 662, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 924..... 331
Bright v. McCullough, 27 Ind. 223..... 803
Brinton v. Van Cott, 8 Utah, 480, 33 Pac. 218..... 529
Brisco v. Norris, 112 N. C. 671, 16 S. E. 850..... 591
British Seamless Paper-Box Co., Re, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 467..... 732
Brokenbrough v. Spindle, 17 Gratt. 21..... 557
Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, 22 L. ed. 599..... 65, 67, 71, 75 Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 624, 88 Am. Dec. 711..... 565
v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. Rep. 518, 11 L. R. A. 567 66, 67, 68, 70, 72, 75, 76
Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 250..... 589
Brooks v. Cook, 8 Mass. 246..... 352
Brown v. Corry, 175 Pa. 528, 34 Atl. 854..... 796, 797
v. Dorch, 12 Helak. 740..... 769
v. Dunham, 1 Root, 272..... 561
v. Illinois C. R. Co. 100 Ky. 525, 88 S. W. 862..... 560
v. Morristown Co-op. Stove Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 42 S. W. 161..... 713
v. Russell, 166 Mass. 14, 32 L. R. A. 253, 43 N. E. 1005..... 565
v. Smith, 88 Fed. Rep. 565..... 307
v. Trail, 89 Fed. Rep. 641..... 307
v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 80..... 529
v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644..... 851
Brown University v. Granger, 19 R. I. 704, 36 L. R. A. 847, 36 Atl. 720..... 608
Brunner v. American Tele. & Teleph. Co. 161 Pa. 447, 25 Atl. 29..... 532
Buchanan v. Comstock, 57 Barb. 583..... 288
v. Meisser, 105 Ill. 643..... 451
49 L. R. A.
	C.
	Cable v. Southern R. Co. 122 N. C. 892, 29 S. E. 379..... 691
	Cadillac v. Woonsocket Inst. for Sav. 16 U. S. App. 546, 58 Fed. Rep. 935, 7 C. C. A. 574..... 538
	Cahill v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 U. S. App. 85, 74 Fed. Rep. 285, 20 C. C. A. 184..... 102
	Cain v. Ingham, 7 Cow. 478..... 550
	Cairo v. Zane, 149 U. S. 122, 37 L. ed. 673, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 803..... 539, 540
	Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648..... 276
	Caldwell v. Carthage, 49 Ohio St. 334, 31 N. E. 602..... 571
	Calhoun v. Thompson, 56 Ala. 166, 28 Am. Rep. 754..... 853, 855
	California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 362, 42 L. ed. 198, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831..... 125
	Callen v. Junction City, 43 Kan. 627, 7 L. R. A. 786, 23 Pac. 652..... 674
	Camden & A. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 16 Pa. 87..... 457
	Cameron v. Union Trunk Line, 10 Wash. 507, 39 Pac. 128..... 86
	Cammeyer v. United German Lutheran Churches, 2 Sandf. Ch. 186..... 343
	Campbell, Ex parte, 20 Ala. 93..... 835
	Campbell v. Shields, 6 Leigh, 517..... 556
	Canada Northern R. Co. v. International Bridge Co. 7 Fed. Rep. 653..... 578
	Candler v. Pettit, 1 Paige, 168, 19 Am. Dec. 399..... 287
	Canfield v. Great Camp, K. of M. 87 Mich. 626, 13 L. R. A. 625, 49 N. W. 875..... 378, 593, 594
	Cannon v. McCape, 114 N. C. 580, 19 S. E. 703, 20 S. E. 276..... 591

- Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 878, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580. 180
- Capron v. Van Noorden, 2 Cranch, 126, 2 L. ed. 229. 64
- Carey v. German American Ins. Co. 64 Wis. 80, 20 L. R. A. 287, 54 N. W. 18. 764
- Carleton v. Lombard, A. & Co. 149 N. Y. 137, 43 N. E. 422. 862
- Carling's Case, L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 115. 733
- Carlson v. Kenealy, 12 Mees. & W. 139. 191
- Carlson v. United N. Y. S. H. Pilots' Asso. 93 Fed. Rep. 468. 96
- Carpenter v. Boston & A. R. Co. 97 N. Y. 494, 49 Am. Rep. 540. 310
- v. Cincinnati & W. Canal Co. 35 Ohio St. 307. 857
- v. Gay, 12 R. 1. 306. 352
- Carr v. Brown, 20 R. 1. 215, 38 L. R. A. 294, 38 Atl. 9. 608
- Carter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 16, 17 N. E. 396. 132
- v. Buchanan, 3 Ga. 513. 80
- v. Carriger, 3 Yerg. 411, 24 Am. Dec. 585. 165
- Cartersville Improvement, Gas & Water Co. v. Cartersville, 89 Ga. 683, 16 S. E. 25. 208
- Caruth-Byrnes Hardware Co. v. Wolter, 91 Mo. 484, 3 S. W. 865. 337
- Case v. Citizens' Bank, 2 Woods, 23, Fed. Cas. No. 2,489. 715
- Casey v. Cincinnati Typographical Union, No. 3, 12 L. R. A. 193, 45 Fed. Rep. 135. 756
- v. Galli, 94 U. S. 678, 24 L. ed. 108. 303, 307
- Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768. 821
- Cason v. Jerome, 58 N. Y. 315. 349
- Castleberg v. Wheeler, 68 Md. 277, 12 Atl. 3. 714
- Caswell v. Davis, 58 N. Y. 223, 17 Am. Rep. 223. 151
- Cate v. State, 3 Sneed, 120. 412
- Catholic Church v. Tobbein, 82 Mo. 418. 465
- Cator v. Great Western Ins. Co. L. R. 3 C. P. 552. 400
- C. D. Smith Drug Co. v. Casper Drug Co. 5 Wyo. 510, 40 Pac. 979, 42 Pac. 213. 857
- Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 Kan. 453. 672
- Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 32 L. ed. 370, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41. 130
- v. Valentine, 18 Hun, 417. 414
- Central P. R. Co. v. Gallatin, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496. 671
- Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Phinazee, 93 Ga. 488, 21 S. E. 66. 83
- Central Trust Co. v. Colorado Midland R. Co. 89 Fed. Rep. 560. 83
- v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 97 Fed. Rep. 237, 38 C. C. A. 143. 83
- Chaffee County Comrs. v. Potter, 142 U. S. 355, 35 L. ed. 1040, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216. 540
- Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551. 569, 570, 571
- Chandler v. Bacon, 30 Fed. Rep. 538. 732, 733
- Chapin v. Fellowes, 36 Conn. 132, 4 Am. Rep. 49. 754
- Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, 29 L. ed. 83, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799. 75
- v. Douglas County, 107 U. S. 348, 27 L. ed. 378, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62. 126
- v. Eames, 67 Me. 452. 794
- Charles v. Eshleman, 5 Colo. 107. 469
- v. Marion, 100 Fed. Rep. 538. 824
- v. Marion, 98 Fed. Rep. 166. 802
- Chase v. Barrett, 4 Paige, 148. 794
- v. Jennings, 38 Me. 44. 530
- Chatham Street, Re, 191 Pa. 604, 43 Atl. 365. 603
- Cheatham v. Riddle, 8 Tex. 105. 775
- Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604. 140
- Chenault v. Chenault, 88 Ky. 83, 11 S. W. 424. 777
- Chicago v. McLean, 133 Ill. 149, 8 L. R. A. 765, 24 N. E. 527. 96
- Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Meech, 163 Ill. 305, 45 N. E. 290. 83
- Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400. 668
- Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 20 L. ed. 571. 65, 75
- Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. 105. 88
- Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Ottawa, 148 Ill. 397, 36 N. E. 85. 410
- Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Neilson, 162 Ill. 431, 44 N. E. 743. 372
- Chicago City R. Co. v. Taylor, 170 Ill. 40, 48 N. E. 831. 86
- Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Hoyt, 149 U. S. 1, 37 L. ed. 625, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 779. 575
- v. Lowell, 151 U. S. 209, 38 L. ed. 131, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281. 107
- v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 981, 33 L. ed. 220, 970, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 462, 702, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 209, 467. 667, 677
- Chicago Packing & P. Co. v. Chicago, 88 Ill. 221, 30 Am. Rep. 545. 411
- Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 136 U. S. 269, 34 L. ed. 349, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 999. 191
- Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542. 107
- Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Spliker, 134 Ind. 381, 33 N. E. 280, 34 N. E. 218. 87, 90
- Chicago, St. P. & F. du L. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 20 Ill. 385, 71 Am. Dec. 285. 83
- Chicot County v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 529, 37 L. ed. 546, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695. 76, 77
- Child v. Eureka Powder Works, 45 N. H. 547. 287, 290
- Childs v. Hurd, 82 W. Va. 66, 9 S. E. 362 485
- Chinn v. State, 47 Ohio St. 575, 11 L. R. A. 630, 26 N. E. 968. 550
- Choate v. Arrington, 116 Mass. 552, 349, 350
- Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429, 12 N. E. 648. 491
- Cilley, Re, 58 Fed. Rep. 977. 67, 68, 71
- Cincinnati v. Batsche, 52 Ohio St. 324, 27 L. R. A. 536, 40 N. E. 21. 571
- Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Farra, 31 U. S. App. 306, 66 Fed. Rep. 406, 13 C. C. A. 602. 107
- v. Kentucky, 115 U. S. 321, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57. 569
- Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Bensley, 6 U. S. App. 115, 19 L. R. A. 796, 2 C. C. A. 480, 51 Fed. Rep. 738. 125
- Citizens' Gaslight & H. Co. v. O'Brien, 19 Ill. App. 231. 91
- Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455. 564, 611
- City of Lincoln, The, 25 Fed. Rep. 835. 94, 95
- Cladin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834. 162
- Clapp v. Maxwell, 13 Neb. 542, 14 N. W. 653. 341
- Clark, Re, 9 Wend. 220. 846
- v. Ewing, 87 Ill. 344. 203
- v. Lowell & L. R. Co. 9 Gray, 231. 612
- v. Howling, 3 N. Y. 216, 53 Am. Dec. 290. 312, 313, 314
- Clark's Case, 12 Cush. 320. 847
- Cleveland v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 303, 568, 570, 571
- Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 204, 54 Am. Rep. 312, 3 N. E. 836. 87
- Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Phillips, 24 U. S. App. 489, 64 Fed. Rep. 823, 12 C. C. A. 618. 100
- Clother v. Maher, 15 Neb. 6, 16 N. W. 902 347
- Clyne, Re, 52 Kan. 441, 35 Pac. 23. 189
- Coates v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 61 Mo. 38. 645
- Cochran v. Arnold, 58 Pa. 399. 485
- Croker v. Cowper, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 418. 516
- Coe v. Hobby, 72 N. Y. 145, 28 Am. Rep. 120. 583
- Coffin v. Indianapolis, 59 Fed. Rep. 221 589, 540

Coffin v. Kearny County , 12 U. S. App. 562, 57 Fed. Rep. 137, 6 C. C. A. 288.....	541
Cogdell v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 124 N. C. 302, 32 S. E. 706.....	690
Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co. 142 U. S. 101, 35 L. ed. 951, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150.....	130, 137, 288
Cohn v. Husson , 67 How. Pr. 461.....	288
Cole v. La Grange , 113 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416.....	564
v. Satsop R. Co. 9 Wash. 487, 87 Pac. 700.....	306
Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls , 90 Tenn. 466, 18 S. W. 1045.....	257
Coleman v. Newby , 7 Kan. 86.....	666
v. White , 14 Wis. 700, 80 Am. Dec. 797.....	490, 491, 496
Coles v. Allen , 64 Ala. 98.....	312
v. Iowa State Mut. Ins. Co. 18 Iowa, 425.....	369
Collector, The, v. Day , 11 Wall. 113, 20 L. ed. 122.....	185
Collier, Re , 6 Ohio St. 56.....	858
Collins v. Gilbert , 94 U. S. 753, 24 L. ed. 170.....	416
Collinsville v. Cole , 78 Ill. 114.....	412
Coloma v. Eaves , 92 U. S. 484, 32 L. ed. 570.....	540
Colorado Midland R. Co. v. Jones , 29 Fed. Rep. 193.....	65
Colt v. Owens , 90 N. Y. 368.....	476
Colter v. Frese , 45 Ind. 98.....	257
Colton v. Drovers' Perpetual Bldg. & Loan Asso. 90 Md. 85, 46 L. R. A. 388, 45 Atl. 23.....	702
v. Mayer , 90 Md. 711, 45 Atl. 874.....	702
v. Montpelier , 71 Vt. 413, 45 Atl. 1039.....	610
Columbian Nat. Bank v. White , 65 Mo. App. 679.....	684
Comer v. Folsom , 13 Minn. 219, Gil. 205.....	759
Comfort v. McTeer , 7 Lea. 652.....	711
Commercial Bank v. Markham , 3 La. Ann. 698.....	280
Com. v. Blanding , 3 Pick. 313, 15 Am. Dec. 214.....	547
v. Bradford , 126 Mass. 42.....	616
v. Brinton , 132 Pa. 69, 18 Atl. 1092.....	446
v. Central Dist. & Printing Teleg. Co. 145 Pa. 421, 22 Atl. 841.....	434
v. Corkin , 136 Mass. 429.....	616
v. Deacon , 2 Wheeler, C. C. 1.....	850
v. Gardner , 133 Pa. 284, 7 L. R. A. 668, 19 Atl. 550.....	446
v. Harmel , 166 Pa. 89, 27 L. R. A. 388, 5 Interns. Com. Rep. 89, 30 Atl. 1036.....	446, 447
v. Jones , 10 Bush, 725.....	265, 260
v. Lockwood , 109 Mass. 323, 12 Am. Rep. 699.....	443
v. Pennsylvania Beneficial Inst. 2 Serg. & R. 141.....	360
v. Perry , 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325, 28 N. E. 1126.....	183
v. Petty , 96 Ky. 452, 29 L. R. A. 786, 29 S. W. 291.....	434
v. Philadelphia Co. 150 Pa. 527, 27 Atl. 378.....	434
v. Phillips , 11 Pick. 28.....	284
v. Robinson , 146 Mass. 571, 16 N. E. 452.....	616
v. Snyder , 182 Pa. 630, 38 Atl. 356.....	446
v. Stevens , 153 Mass. 421, 11 L. R. A. 337, 26 N. E. 992.....	348
v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. 150 Pa. 265, 24 Atl. 1107.....	434
Com. ex rel. Fischer v. German Soc. 15 Pa. 254.....	360
Bryan v. Pike Beneficial Soc. 8 Watts & S. 250.....	360
Jack v. The Sheriff , 5 Watts & S. 108.....	851
Commonwealth Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Wood , 171 Mass. 484, 51 N. E. 19.....	307
Computing Scale Co. v. National Computing Co. 79 Fed. Rep. 962.....	756
Comstock v. Herron , 6 U. S. App. 628, 55 Fed. Rep. 803, 5 C. C. A. 286.....	72
Conant v. Smith , 1 Alk. (Vt.) 67, 15 Am. Dec. 689.....	467
Concord First Nat. Bank v. Hawkins , 174 U. S. 364, 43 L. ed. 1007, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 742.....	305
Congden v. Olds , 18 Mont. 487, 46 Pac. 261.....	469
Conn v. Cass County Comrs. 151 Ind. 517, 51 N. E. 1064.....	805
Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 25 Conn. 265, 63 Am. Dec. 571.....	405
Connor v. Drake , 1 Ohio St. 166.....	358
Consalus, Re , 95 N. Y. 340.....	349
Consolidated Traction Co. v. Lamberton , 59 N. J. L. 297, 36 Atl. 100.....	85
Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Palmer , 42 Conn. 60, 19 Am. Rep. 530.....	777, 778
Cook v. Parham , 63 Ala. 456.....	312
v. Pridgen , 45 Ga. 331, 12 Am. Rep. 582.....	514
Cooper, Re , 32 Vt. 253.....	847
v. Foss , 15 Neb. 515, 19 S. E. 506.....	341
v. Hodge , 17 La. 476.....	280, 283
v. Lansing Wheel Co. 94 Mich. 272, 54 N. W. 39.....	595
v. People ex rel. Wyatt , 13 Colo. 353, 6 L. R. A. 430, 22 Pac. 790.....	839
Copeland v. Bruning , 72 Fed. Rep. 5.....	68, 71
Coplay Iron Co. v. Pope , 108 N. Y. 232, 15 N. E. 335.....	862
Corbett v. Woodward , 5 Sawy. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 3,223.....	701, 705
Corbin v. Mills , 19 Gratt. 438.....	556
Corey v. Wadsworth , 118 Ala. 488, 44 L. R. A. 768, 25 So. 503.....	704
Corvallis v. Carille , 10 Or. 139.....	808
Corwin v. Comptroller General , 6 S. C. N. S. 394.....	225
Cory v. Boylston F. & M. Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14.....	398, 399
Cosgrove v. Bennett , 32 Minn. 371, 20 N. W. 359.....	862
Cota v. Buck , 7 Met. 588.....	191
Cotting v. Kansas City Stock-Yards Co. 82 Fed. Rep. 815.....	668
Counsell v. Hall , 145 Mass. 468, 14 N. E. 530.....	39
Counsellman v. Hitchcock , 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Interns. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195.....	839, 842, 852, 853, 855
Courvoisier v. Raymond , 23 Colo. 113, 47 Pac. 384.....	87
Coville v. Gilman , 13 W. Va. 314.....	471
Covington v. Woods , 98 Ky. 344, 33 S. W. 84.....	412
Cowles v. Mercer County , 7 Wall. 118, 19 L. ed. 56.....	65
Cowley v. Northern P. R. Co. 159 U. S. 569, 40 L. ed. 263, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.....	75
v. Smyth , 46 N. J. L. 380, 50 Am. Rep. 432.....	337
Cox v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. 123 N. C. 604, 31 S. E. 848.....	690
v. Vanderkleed , 21 Ind. 164.....	86
v. Walker , 26 Me. 504.....	622
v. Williams , 5 Mart. N. S. 142.....	284
Coy v. Indianapolis Gas Co. 146 Ind. 655, 36 L. R. A. 535, 46 N. E. 17.....	86
Cramer v. Singer Mfg. Co. 93 Fed. Rep. 636, 35 C. C. A. 508.....	313, 314
Crandall's Petition , 34 Wis. 177.....	845
Crawfordsville v. Braden , 130 Ind. 149, 14 L. R. A. 268, 28 N. E. 849.....	808
Creamer v. West End Street R. Co. 156 Mass. 320, 16 L. R. A. 490, 31 N. E. 391.....	422
Crews v. Cantwell , 125 N. C. 616, 34 S. E. 688.....	689
Crippen v. Loughton (N. H.) 46 L. R. A. 467, 44 Atl. 538.....	308
Croco v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 18 Utah, 311, 44 L. R. A. 285, 54 Pac. 985.....	90
Crofts v. Marshall , 7 Car. & P. 597.....	398
Cromie v. Louisville Orphans' Home Soc. 3 Bush, 365.....	560
Cronkhite v. Cronkhite , 94 N. W. 323.....	518
Crosby's Case , 3 Wils. 188.....	849, 849
Crouch v. Jeffries , 4 Burr. 2460.....	276
Crowder v. Sullivan , 128 Ind. 486, 13 L. R. A. 647, 28 N. W. 94.....	485

Crumley v. Watanga Water Co. 99 Tenn. 420, 41 S. W. 1058.....	598	Dennistown v. Philadelphia Co. 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 599.....	603
Cuddy, Re, 131 U. S. 280, 33 L. ed. 154, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703.....	855	v. Philadelphia Co. 161 Pa. 41, 28 Atl. 1007.....	603
Cullen v. Butler, 5 Maule & S. 461.....	399	Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 84 Pa. 43	732
v. Com. 24 Gratt. 624.....	841	Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231	698
Cumberland Coal & I. Co. v. Parish, 42 Md. 598.....	705	Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 30 L. ed. 1146, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1288	90
Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 153, 25 L. ed. 903.....	75	Deobold v. Oppermann, 111 N. Y. 531, 2 L. R. A. 644, 19 N. E. 94.....	349
Cunningham v. Hall, 4 Allen, 268.....	863	Dermott v. Jones, 2 Wall. 1, 17 L. ed. 762	576
v. Mahan, 112 Mass. 59.....	227	De Roo v. Foster, 12 C. B. N. S. 272.....	561
Curley, Re, 34 Iowa, 185.....	835	De Kuvigne's Case, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 306.....	733
Curtis v. Bradford, 33 Wis. 190.....	81	DeLaur v. Stroh Brew. Co. 119 Mich. 282, 77 N. W. 950.....	313
v. Ford, 78 Tex. 262, 10 L. R. A. 529, 14 S. W. 614.....	352	Deupree v. Deupree, 45 Ga. 415.....	550
Curtis, The, The Camden, The Welcome, 37 Fed. Rep. 705, 3 L. R. A. 711.....	94, 95	Devries v. Squire, 55 Neb. 438, 76 N. W. 16.....	342
Cutts v. Haskins, 11 Mass. 56.....	142	Dexter v. Edmunds, 89 Fed. Rep. 467.....	305
D.		v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415.....	577
Dally's Case, 106 N. C. 321, 11 S. E. 320.....	691	Diamond Brick Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 58 Illun, 396, 12 N. Y. Supp. 22.....	631
Dakins v. Wagner, 3 Dowl. P. C. 535.....	304	Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 580, 25 L. ed. 619.....	533
Daniels v. Harris, L. R. 10 C. P. 1.....	396	Dickey v. Linscott, 20 Me. 453, 37 Am. Dec. 66.....	694
Danlher v. Grand Lodge A. O. of U. W. 10 Utah, 110, 37 Pac. 245.....	378	Diehl v. Rodgers, 169 Pa. 316, 32 Atl. 424	442
Dark v. Johnston, 55 Pa. 164, 93 Am. Dec. 732.....	466	Dietrich v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 71 Pa. 432, 10 Am. Rep. 711.....	459
Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248.....	791	Dill, Re, 32 Kan. 668, 49 Am. Rep. 505, 5 Pac. 39.....	839
Darragh v. H. Wetter Mfg. Co. 49 U. S. App. 1, 78 Fed. Rep. 7, 23 C. C. A. 609.....	75	Dimmick v. Brodhead, 75 Pa. 464.....	600
Darrah v. Gow, 77 Mich. 16, 43 N. W. 851.....	313	Dinsmoor v. Bressler, 164 Ill. 223, 45 N. E. 1086.....	839
Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 477, 506 31 Ala. 91.....	274, 277	District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 34 L. ed. 472, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 993.....	86
Daughdrill v. Alabama Life Ins. & T. Co. 16 Conn. 310.....	349	Dixon v. Niccolla, 39 Ill. 372, 89 Am. Dec. 312.....	794
Davenport v. Richards, 16 Conn. 310.....	349	Dobbins v. Oberman, 17 Neb. 163, 22 N. W. 356.....	191
Davenport Plow Co. v. Mewls, 10 Neb. 317, 4 N. W. 1059.....	341	Dodge v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 85 Me. 215, 27 Atl. 105.....	396
Daves v. Haywood, 54 N. C. (1 Jones, Eq.) 253.....	767	Doe ex dem. Lemon v. Chunn, 1 Blackf. 337.....	808
Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616.....	569, 800	Dolphin v. Robins, 7 H. L. Cas. 390.....	139, 140
Davis, Re, 58 Kan. 368, 49 Pac. 161.....	666	Donaghue v. Gaffy, 54 Conn. 257, 7 Atl. 552.....	548
v. Gamber, 57 Iowa, 239, 10 N. W. 658.....	774	Donahoe v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 83 Mo. 560, 53 Am. Rep. 594.....	724
v. Graham, 2 Colo. App. 210, 29 Pac. 1007.....	39	Donahy v. Clapp, 12 Cush. 440.....	257
v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 21 L. ed. 447.....	75	Doonan v. Glynn, 28 W. Va. 715.....	509
v. Scarritt, 17 Ill. 202.....	414	Doon Twp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 366, 35 L. ed. 1044, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220.....	539, 540
v. State, 38 Wis. 467.....	180	Dorrance Street, Re, 4 R. I. 230.....	607
v. United States Electric Power & Light Co. 77 Md. 41, 25 Atl. 982.....	706	Dougherty v. Central Nat. Bank, 93 Pa. 227, 39 Am. Rep. 750.....	414
Deaderick v. Bank of Commerce, 100 Tenn. 457, 45 S. W. 786.....	334	v. Creary, 30 Cal. 290, 89 Am. Dec. 116.....	469
Dean v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 413, 40 N. W. 270.....	645	Douglas County Comrs. v. Bolles, 94 U. S. 104, 24 L. ed. 46.....	540
Deardorf v. Thacher, 78 Mo. 128, 47 Am. Rep. 95.....	469	Douglass v. State, 3 Wis. 820.....	189
Deare v. Carr, 3 N. J. Eq. 513.....	579	Dowell v. Tucker, 46 Ark. 451.....	68
Dearing v. McKinnon Dash & Hardware Co. 33 App. Div. 31, 53 N. Y. Supp. 513.....	495	v. Vinton, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 327, p. 140.....	200
Debs, Re, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900.....	756	Dowlan v. Sibley County, 36 Minn. 430, 31 N. W. 517.....	759
De Frece v. National L. Ins. Co. 136 N. Y. 144, 32 N. E. 556.....	132	Downer v. Chesebrough, 36 Conn. 39, 4 Am. Rep. 29.....	642
Degener, Ex parte, 30 Tex. App. 566, 17 S. W. 1113.....	837	v. Howard, 44 Wis. 82.....	141
De Hass v. Roberts, 59 Fed. Rep. 853.....	191	v. Reed, 17 Minn. 493, Gil. 470.....	661
Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall. 811, 20 L. ed. 581.....	151	Downey v. Hendrie, 46 Mich. 498, 41 Am. Rep. 177, 9 N. W. 828.....	322
v. Roberts, 72 Mich. 49, 40 N. W. 53.....	313	Downing v. Marshall, 37 N. Y. 380.....	141
Delaware County Inst. of Science v. Delaware County, 94 Pa. 163.....	254	Dows v. National Exch. Bank, 91 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 214.....	683
Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Converse, 139 U. S. 469, 35 L. ed. 213, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569.....	107	Doyle v. Mizner, 42 Mich. 332, 3 N. W. 968	485
Delaware Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F. v. Allmon, 1 Penn. (Del.) 160, 39 Atl. 1098.....	424	Draining in Chilli, Re, 5 Hun, 116.....	790
Dempsey v. Kip, 61 N. Y. 462.....	514	Drake v. Vorse, 52 Iowa, 417, 3 N. W. 465	595
Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439.....	75, 82	Drane v. McGavock, 7 Humph. 132.....	352
Dennis v. Dennis, 68 Conn. 186, 34 L. R. A. 449, 36 Atl. 34.....	143	Draper v. Cowles, 27 Kan. 484.....	415
49 L. R. A.		Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Blue, 110 Mich. 31, 67 N. W. 1105.....	414, 416
		Drury v. Cross, 7 Wall. 302, 19 L. ed. 40 v. Milwaukee & S. R. Co. 7 Wall. 302, 19 L. ed. 40.....	705
		Dudley v. McCord, 65 Iowa, 671, 22 N. W. 920.....	838

Dunning v. West, 51 La. Ann. 618, 25 So. 307, 278, 281, 282, 283, 284	Erle's Appeal, 91 Pa. 398, 796
Durach's Appeal, 62 Pa. 491, 565	Erlange v. New Sombroero Phosphate Co. L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1218, 732
Durbrow & H. Mfg. Co. v. Cuming, 54 N. Y. Supp. 818, 862	Ermentrout v. Girard F. & M. Ins. Co. 63 Minn. 305, 30 L. R. 346, 65 N. W. 635, 764
Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 568, 460, 470	Ernst v. Steckman, 74 Pa. 13, 15 Am. Rep. 542, 191
Duval v. Goodson, 79 Ky. 228, 777, 778, 779	Esposito v. Bowden, 17 El. & Bl. 763, 577
	Eureka Co. v. Bass, 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152, 8 So. 216, 39
E	Evans v. Brown, 30 Ind. 514, 95 Am. Dec. 710, 264
Eagle v. Kohn, 84 Ill. 292, 538	Evansville v. Dennett, 161 U. S. 434, 40 L. ed. 760, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613, 540
Eames v. Boston & W. R. Co. 14 Allen, 151	Evenson v. Ellingson, 67 Wis. 634, 31 N. W. 342, 481
Eastern Township's Bank v. Beebe, 53 Vt. 177, 38 Am. Rep. 665, 812, 814	Everhart v. Everhart, 34 Fed. Rep. 85, 70, 72
Eastman v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. 17 Minn. 48, 111, 31, 288	Ewing v. King, 169 Mass. 97, 47 N. E. 597, 307
Easton v. Pennsylvania & O. Canal Co. 13 Ohio, 81, 387	Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 15, 433
Katon v. Hill, 50 N. H. 235, 9 Am. Rep. 189, 561	Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 20 L. ed. 791, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556, 668
E. B. Ward, The, 16 Fed. Rep. 255, 96
Eckert v. Long Island R. Co. 43 N. Y. 503, 3 Am. Rep. 721, 723, 724	F
Eckman v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 169 Ill. 312, 38 L. R. A. 750, 48 N. E. 496, 656	Fahs v. Roberts, 54 Ill. 195, 288
Eddy v. Lafayette, 4 U. S. App. 247, 49 Fed. Rep. 807, 1 C. C. A. 441, 645	Falbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 158, 41 L. ed. 388, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56, 788, 789
Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 32 L. R. A. 659, 43 N. E. 1108, 184	Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 187, 559
v. Ridsdale Railway Lamp & Light- ing Co. L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 368, 783	Farwell v. Chicago, 71 Ill. 269, 412
Edgar v. Clevenger, 3 N. J. Eq. 258, 287	Faunce v. Burke, 16 Pa. 469, 55 Am. Dec. 519, 387
Edwards v. Kearney, 13 Neb. 502, 14 N. W. 536, 213	Fay v. Guynon, 131 Mass. 31, 615
v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 81 Mich. 364, 45 N. W. 827, 456	v. Springfield, 94 Fed. Rep. 409, 802
Edard v. Piedmont Land Improv. & Invest. Co. 55 S. C. 87, 32 S. E. 758, 449, 451	Fear v. Bartlett, 81 Md. 435, 33 L. R. A. 721, 32 Atl. 322, 703, 704, 708, 711, 718
Eggleston v. Smiley, 17 Johns. 133, 550	Featherstonh v. Compton, 8 La. Ann. 285, 280, 283
Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 265, 48 Am. Rep. 622, 90	Ferguson v. Smith, 4 East, 107, 518
E. H. Rollins & Sons v. Gunnison County Comrs. 49 U. S. App. 899, 80 Fed. Rep. 632, 26 C. C. A. 81, 540	Fertigan, Re, 9 Johns. 239, 849
Elgartner v. Illinois Steel Co. 94 Wis. 70, 34 L. R. A. 503, 68 N. W. 664, 82	v. Bobo, 54 Miss. 121, 561
Elderkin v. Peterson, 8 Wash. 674, 36 Pac. 1089, 306	v. Sherman, 116 Cal. 169, 37 L. R. A. 622, 47 Pac. 1023, 305
Eldridge v. Hubbell, 119 Mich. 61, 77 N. W. 631, 424	Ferrall v. Bradford, 2 Fla. 508, 50 Am. Dec. 298, 312, 314
Ellcott v. Search, 72 Md. 25, 18 Atl. 863, 714	Ferraria v. Vasconcellos, 31 Ill. 25, 54, 621
Ellis, Ex parte, 11 Cal. 223, 835	Fidelity Mut. L. Asso. v. Ficklin, 74 Md. 172, 21 Atl. 680, 23 Atl. 197, 138
Ex parte, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 542, 40 S. W. 275, 839	Field v. Boynton, 33 Ga. 239, 176
v. Davis, 109 U. S. 497, 27 L. ed. 1010, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327, 65, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72, 75	Filmore v. Great Camp, K. of M. 103 Mich. 437, 61 N. W. 785, 378
v. Portsmouth & R. R. Co. 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 138, 645	Finch v. Ullman, 105 Mo. 255, 16 S. W. 863, 485
v. Whitlock, 10 Mo. 781, 336	Finch Mfg. Co. v. Stirling Co. 187 Pa. 596, 41 Atl. 294, 703
Emack v. Kane, 34 Fed. Rep. 46, 756	First Nat. Bank v. Davies, 43 Iowa, 424, 485
Emery v. Burbank, 163 Mass. 326, 28 L. R. A. 57, 39 N. E. 1026, 495	v. Emmitt, 52 Kan. 603, 35 Pac. 213, 192
v. Irving Nat. Bank, 25 Ohio St. 380, 18 Am. Rep. 299, 683	Fisher v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 80 Ill. 85, 363, 364, 372
v. Parrott, 107 Mass. 95, 732, 733, 734	v. Ronalds, 12 C. B. 762, 853
v. State, 101 Wis. 627, 78 N. W. 145, 841	Flak, Ex parte, 113 U. S. 718, 28 L. ed. 1119, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 724, 839
Emma Silver Min. Co. v. Grant, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 918, 732, 733	v. Henarie, 142 U. S. 459, 35 L. ed. 1080, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207, 65
v. Lewis, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 396, 732, 733	Fitch v. Newberry, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 1, 40 Am. Dec. 33, 612
Engelhardt v. Fifth Ward Permanent Dime Sav. & L. Asso. 148 N. Y. 281, 35 L. R. A. 289, 42 N. E. 710, 660	Fithian v. Monks, 43 Mo. 502, 467
Equitable L. Assur. Co. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822, 131	Fitts v. Hall, 9 N. H. 441, 561
Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620, 130, 131, 137, 138	Fitzgerald & M. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 137 U. S. 110, 34 L. ed. 608, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 36, 704
v. Pettus, 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822, 131	Fitzsimmons v. Marks, 66 Barb. 333, 290
v. Redding, 48 U. S. App. 665, 83 Fed. Rep. 85, 27 C. C. A. 404, 130, 137, 138	Flash v. Conn, 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263, 305
Erickson v. Nesmith, 15 Gray, 221, 4 Allen, 233, 305, 491	Fleitas

Foster v. Charles Betcher Lumber Co. 5 S. D. 57, 23 L. R. A. 490, 58 N. W. 9	81	German Sav. Bank v. Franklin County, 128 U. S. 526, 32 L. ed. 519, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159	538
v. Pettibone, 20 Barb. 350	774	Gerould v. Wilson, 81 N. Y. 573	349
v. Posson, 105 Wis. 98, 81 N. W. 124	496	Gianella v. Bigelow, 96 Wis. 186, 71 N. W. 111	490, 491
Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757	491	Gibney v. State, 137 N. Y. 1, 19 L. R. A. 365, 33 N. E. 142	724
Fouvergne v. Municipality No. 2, 18 How. 470, 15 L. ed. 399	67, 71	Gibson, Ex parte, 81 Cal. 619	847
Fowle v. Ward, 113 Mass. 548, 18 Am. Rep. 534	734	v. Armstrong, 7 B. Mon. 481	622
Fox v. Althorp, 40 Ohio St. 322	313	v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 904	321
v. Citizens' Bank & T. Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 35 L. R. A. 678, 37 S. W. 1102	661	v. South Eastern R. Co. 1 Post. & F. 23	645
v. Kansas City Bank, 30 Kan. 441, 1 Pac. 789	414	Gilbert v. Foote, cited in White v. White, 5 Barb. 483	789
v. McDonald, 101 Ala. 51, 21 L. R. A. 529, 13 So. 418	674	Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 812, 1 Atl. 921	467
v. Spring Lake Iron Co. 89 Mich. 387, 50 N. W. 872	310	Gilman v. Ketcham, 84 Wis. 60, 23 L. R. A. 52, 54 N. W. 395	495
Frankford & B. Turnpk. Co. v. Philadelphia & T. R. Co. 54 Pa. 350	645	v. Tucker, 128 N. Y. 190, 13 L. R. A. 304, 28 N. E. 1040	277
Franklin v. Northwestern Teleph. Co. 69 Iowa, 97, 28 N. W. 461	460	Gillmore v. Hirst, 56 Kan. 626, 44 Pac. 603	191
Franz v. Wahl, 81 Fed. Rep. 8	70	v. Pittsburgh, V. & C. R. Co. 104 Pa. 276	600
Fraternal Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Applegate, 7 Ohio St. 292	754	Gilson v. Spear, 38 Vt. 311, 88 Am. Dec. 659	561
Frazer, Re, 18 Alb. L. J. 353, Fed. Cas. No. 5,068	67, 71	Gittings v. Baker, 2 Ohio St. 21	388
Fredericktown v. Fox, 84 Mo. 59	485	Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 675	830
Freeland v. Hastings, 10 Allen, 570	564	Gleason v. Gleason, 54 Cal. 135	288
Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335	649	Glenn v. Liggett, 133 U. S. 633, 34 L. ed. 284, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 867	306
v. Hebenstreit, 1 Rob. (La.) 565	280, 283, 393	v. Williams, 60 Md. 93	306
Friend, Appellant, 53 Me. 387	280, 283, 393	Glynn County Academy Comrs. v. Dart, 67 Ga. 765	204
Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 39 L. ed. 657, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586	565	Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431, 6 Atl. 354	183
Frorer v. People, use of School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395	183, 184	Goldman v. Goldman, 51 La. Ann. 761, 25 So. 555	284
Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 30 L. ed. 1010, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1129	75	Goodrich v. Winchester & D. Turnpk. Co. 26 Ind. 119	803
Fry v. Graham, 122 N. C. 773, 30 S. E. 390	591	Goodsell v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 33 Conn. 51	406
Fuller v. Martin, 96 Ky. 500, 29 S. W. 315	778	Goodwill v. Elkins, 51 La. Ann. 522, 25 So. 317	281
Fullerton v. Fordyce, 144 Mo. 519, 44 S. W. 1053	88	Goodwin v. State ex rel. Foley, 142 Ind. 117, 41 N. E. 359	805
Funk v. Haideman, 53 Pa. 229	466	Gookin v. Holt, 3 N. H. 892	351
Fuss v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. loc. cit. 264	331, 333, 334, 335, 336	Gooseley's Case, Fed. Cas. No. 15,230	853
G.
Gabay v. Lloyd, 3 Barn. & C. 793	400	Gordon v. Anderson, 83 Iowa, 224, 12 L. R. A. 483, 49 N. W. 86	661
Gachet v. Warren, 72 Ala. 288	863	v. United States, 7 Wall. 194, 19 L. ed. 36	393
Gager v. Marsden, 101 Wis. 598, 77 N. W. 922	490	Gormley v. Bunyan, 138 U. S. 623, 34 L. ed. 1088, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453	136
Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 23 L. ed. 524	66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 75, 76	v. Clark, 134 U. S. 338, 33 L. ed. 909, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554	75
Galena v. Corwith, 48 Ill. 423, 95 Am. Dec. 557	541	Gosnell v. State, 52 Ark. 231, 12 S. W. 392	698
Galloway v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 56 Minn. 346, 23 L. R. A. 442, 57 N. W. 1058	310	Gottlieb v. Fred W. Wolf Co. 75 Md. 126, 23 Atl. 108	204
Gallup v. Schmidt (Ind.) 56 N. E. 443	808	Gould, Ex parte, 90 Cal. 360, 21 L. R. A. 751, 33 Pac. 1112	839
Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Horne, 69 Tex. 643, 9 S. W. 440	645	v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 90 Mich. 302, 51 N. W. 455	764
Garcelon, Re, 104 Cal. 570, 32 L. R. A. 595, 38 Pac. 414	649	v. Gould, 2 Atk. (Vt.) 180	143
Gardner v. Miller, 19 Johns. 188	349	Goulds v. Brophy, 42 Minn. 109, 6 L. R. A. 392, 43 N. W. 834	862
v. Moutt, 10 Ad. & El. 464	426	Gowen v. Harley, 12 U. S. App. 574, 56 Fed. Rep. 973, 6 C. C. A. 190	541
Garland, Ex parte, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366	442	Gower v. Carter, 3 Iowa, 244, 66 Am. Dec. 71	557
Garnett v. Richardson, 35 Ark. 144	485	Graham, Re, 7 Wash. 237, 34 Pac. 931	835, 844
Garrison v. Howe, 17 N. Y. 458	450	v. Conger, 85 Ky. 582, 4 S. W. 327	759, 760
Garvin v. Dausman, 114 Ind. 429, 16 N. E. 828	805, 811, 812, 813, 815, 820, 822	Grandberry v. Jordan, 3 Tenn. Cas. 267	768
Gaslight Co. v. Colliday, 25 Md. 1	599	Grand Island Sav. & L. Asso. v. Moore, 40 Neb. 686, 59 N. W. 115	341
Gaslight Improv. Co. v. Terrell, L. R. 10 Eq. 175	703	Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679	107, 643, 692
Geer v. Hovy, 1 Root. 179	561	Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396	298, 299, 796, 797
Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Lybrend, 89 Ga. 421, 27 S. E. 794	841, 856	Graven v. MacLeod, 92 Fed. Rep. 846, 35 C. C. A. 47	107, 108
Georgia R. Co. v. Smith, 70 Ga. 894	675	Graves v. Saline County, 161 U. S. 359, 40 L. ed. 732, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526	538
Gerault v. Anderson, Walk. (Miss.) 30, 12 Am. Dec. 521	164	Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 986, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 910	306
Gerli v. Poldehard Silk Mfg. Co. 57 N. J. L. 432, 30 L. R. A. 61, 31 Atl. 401	575	Green v. Creighton, 23 How. 90, 16 L. ed. 419	72
German Ins. Co. v. Heiduk, 30 Neb. 288, 46 N. W. 481	764
49 L. R. A.

- Green v. Greenbank, 2 Marsh. 485..... 561
v. Reading, 9 Watts, 382, 33 Am.
Dec. 127..... 602
Greenfield v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 83
Iowa, 270, 49 N. W. 95..... 645
Greenleaf v. Grounder, 86 Me. 298, 29 Atl.
1082..... 694
Greenwood v. Butler, 52 Kan. 424, 22 L.
R. A. 465, 34 Pac. 967..... 277
Gregory v. Wendell, 39 Mich. 337, 33 Am.
Rep. 390..... 322
Grieg v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 318, 33 Pac. 913
Grier v. Sampson, 27 Pa. 188..... 649
v. Shackelford, 2 Treadway, Const.
642..... 205
Griesemer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 10 Wash.
203, 38 Pac. 1031..... 132
Griffith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Cal.
627, 36 Pac. 117..... 131, 561
Grove v. Nevill, 1 Keble, 778..... 557
Groves v. Graves, 1 Wash. (Va.) 1..... 466
Grubb v. Bayard, 2 Wall. Jr. 81, Cas. No.
5,849..... 307
Guaranty Trust & S. D. Co. v. Green Cove
Springs & M. R. Co. 139 U. S.
137, 35 L. ed. 116, 11 Sup. Ct.
Rep. 512..... 257
Guernsey v. Moore, 131 Mo. 650, 32 S. W.
1132..... 348
v. Walsham, 16 R. I. 699, 19 Atl.
323.....
Gutta-Percha & R. Mfg. Co. v. Ogalalla, 40 Neb. 775, 59 N. W. 513.....

H.
Haas v. Bank of Commerce, 41 Neb. 754,
80 N. W. 85..... 485
Hackett v. Ottawa, 99 U. S. 86, 25 L. ed.
363..... 539
Hagan v. Walker, 14 How. 29, 14 L. ed.
312..... 72
Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111
U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup.
Ct. Rep. 663..... 800
Hager v. Southern P. Co. 98 Cal. 311, 33
Pac. 110..... 42
Hahn v. Dierkes, 37 Mo. 574..... 204
Haight v. Cornell, 15 Conn. 74..... 548
Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 71, 16 Am.
Rep. 82, 118..... 622
v. Hardon, 95 Fed. Rep. 747, 37 C.
A. 240..... 307, 494-496
v. Woods, 9 N. H. 103..... 350
Hale's Appeal, 69 Conn. 611, 38 Atl. 392
Haley v. Young, 134 Mass. 366..... 226
Hall v. Butterfield, 59 N. H. 354, 47 Am.
Rep. 209..... 562
v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 116, 35 L. ed.
958, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154, 130, 137
v. Hall, 3 Swabey & T. 349..... 143
v. Kilnack, 25 S. C. 356, 60 Am. Rep.
511..... 449, 450
v. People ex rel. Rogers, 57 Ill. 307
v. Smith, 14 Bush, 611..... 319
Hallahan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co.
102 N. Y. 194, 6 N. E. 287..... 89
Halsey v. McLean, 12 Allen, 438, 90 Am.
Dec. 157..... 305
v. Van Vliet, 27 Kan. 474..... 165
Hamer v. Hamer, 4 Strobb. Eq. 124..... 767
Hamilton v. Clarion, M. & P. R. Co. 144
Pa. 35, 13 L. R. A. 779, 23 Atl.
53..... 485
v. Glenn, 85 Va. 901, 9 S. E. 129..... 306
v. Great Falls Street R. Co. 17
Mont. 334, 42 Pac. 860, 43
Pac. 713..... 86
v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 136
U. S. 242, 34 L. ed. 419, 10
Sup. Ct. Rep. 945, 33 Cent. L.
J. 168..... 387
Hammond v. People ex rel. Vacaro, 32 Ill.
446, 83 Am. Dec. 286..... 335
Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414,
44 N. E. 349, 172 Mass. 39, 42
L. R. A. 396, 51 N. E. 207, 305,
v. Ellis, 172 Mass. 39, 42 L. R. A.
396, 51 N. E. 207..... 492, 495
v. Farnum, 20 R. I. 466, 40 Atl.
343..... 308
v. Farnum, 176 U. S. 640, 44 L. ed.
619, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506..... 307
49 L. R. A.
Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed.
535, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242..... 136
Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Martin, 111
Ill. 220..... 86
Hannum v. Tourtellott, 10 Allen, 494..... 227
Hanrick v. Hanrick, 153 U. S. 192, 38 L.
ed. 685, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 835..... 65
Hanson v. Davison, 73 Minn. 454, 78 N.
W. 254..... 490, 493, 494, 495,
496
Hardin v. Sweeney, 14 Wash. 129, 44 Pac.
138..... 306
Hare v. Murphy, 45 Neb. 809, 29 L. R.
A. 851, 64 N. W. 211..... 341
Harker v. Irick, 10 N. J. Eq. 269..... 330
Harmon v. Dreher, Speers Eq. 87..... 622
Harper v. Carroll, 68 Minn. 487, 69 N.
W. 610..... 400
v. Straws, 14 B. Mon. 48..... 622, 623
Harris, Ex parte, 26 Fla. 77, 6 L. R. A.
713, 7 So. 1..... 549
Harrisburg, The, v. Rickards, 119 U. S.
190, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct.
Rep. 140..... 96
Harrison v. King, 9 Ohio St. 388..... 857
Hartford Bridge Co. v. Union Ferry Co.,
29 Conn. 210..... 545
Hartnett v. Plumbers' Supply Assn., 168
Mass. 229, 38 L. R. A. 194, 47
N. E. 1002..... 615
Hartwell v. Armstrong, 19 Barb. 166..... 790
Harvey v. Harvey, 87 Ill. 54..... 142
Hastings v. Thompson, 54 Minn. 184, 21
L. R. A. 178, 55 N. W. 968..... 192
Haugen v. Albina Light & Water Co., 21
Or. 411, 14 L. R. A. 424, 28
Pac. 244..... 598, 654
Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 319, 33 L. ed.
184, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739..... 306
Hayden v. Thompson, 36 U. S. App. 361, 71
Fed. Rep. 60, 17 C. C. A. 592..... 76
Hayes v. Brotzman, 46 Md. 519..... 702, 706
v. Pratt, 147 U. S. 557, 37 L. ed.
270, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 503..... 73
v. State, 58 Ga. 35..... 179, 180
Hays v. McNealy, 16 Fla. 406..... 214
Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 9, 28
L. ed. 889, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441, 789
Heard v. Lodge, 20 Pick. 53, 32 Am. Dec.
197..... 350
Hebb v. Kittanning Ins. Co., 138 Pa. 174,
20 Atl. 837..... 138
Hedges v. Dixon County, 150 U. S. 182, 37
L. ed. 1044, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71, 126
Helms Brewing Co. v. Flannery, 137 Ill.
309, 27 N. E. 286..... 650
Heinbokel v. National Sav. Loan & Bldg.
Assn., 58 Minn. 340, 25 L. R. A.
216, 59 N. W. 1050..... 660
Heins v. Lincoln, 102 Iowa, 69, 71 N. W.
180..... 541
Henderson v. Strangers' Rest Lodge No.
13, I. O. O. F. 17 Ky. L. Rep.
1041, 17 S. W. 215..... 254
Hendrickson v. Shotwell, 1 N. J. Eq. 577..... 622
Henley v. State, 98 Tenn. 665, 39 L. R. A.
126, 41 S. W. 352, 1104..... 608
Henry v. Hinds, 18 Mo. App. 497..... 257
v. Koch, 80 Ky. 395..... 421
v. Pittsburgh & A. Bridge Co., 8
Watts & S. 85..... 602
Henry & C. Co. v. Evans, 97 Mo. 47, 3 L.
R. A. 332, 10 S. W. 868..... 257
Henry County Comrs. v. Gilles, 138 Ind.
667, 38 N. E. 40..... 808
Herbert v. Rainey, 54 Fed. Rep. 248..... 750
Herman v. Port Blakely Mill Co., 69 Fed.
Rep. 646..... 94, 95
Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 75, 28 L. ed.
927, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377..... 86
Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 Barn. & C. 221..... 74, 76, 77
Hichens v. Congreve, 4 Russ. Ch. 562, 1
Russ. & M. 150, note..... 732
Hicks v. Murray, 43 Cal. 515..... 257
Higbe v. Leonard, 1 Denio, 186..... 550
Higgle v. National Lloyds, 11 Biss. 395, 14
Fed. Rep. 143..... 396
Higgins v. Central New England & W. R.
Co., 155 Mass. 176, 29 N. E.
534..... 305
High v. Carolina C. R. Co., 112 N. C. 385,
17 S. E. 79..... 686, 688
Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec.
289..... 508

Hill v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 63 N. Y. 101.....	458
v. Todd, 29 Ill. 101.....	192
Hillyard v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 85 N. J. L. 415, 37 N. J. L. 444, 18 Am. Rep. 741.....	577
Hinman v. People, 13 Hun. 266.....	180
Hinshaw v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 118 N. C. 1047, 24 S. E. 426.....	687
Hinson v. Hinson, 120 N. C. 400, 27 S. E. 80.....	417
Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 341, 24 L. ed. 659.....	126
Hitchings v. Ellis, 12 Gray, 449.....	794
Hoa v. Lefranc, 18 La. Ann. 897.....	281
Hobart v. Gould, 8 Fed. Rep. 57.....	451
Hobhouse's Case, 3 Barn. & Ald. 420.....	848
Hocker v. Pendleton, 100 Ky. 726, 39 S. W. 250.....	270
Hodson v. Eugene Glass Co. 156 Ill. 897, 40 N. E. 971.....	416
Hoe v. Sanborn, 21 N. Y. 552, 78 Am. Dec. 163.....	862
Hoffman Steam Coal Co. v. Cumberland Coal & I. Co. 16 Md. 456, 77 Am. Dec. 811.....	713
Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. (4 Dev. L.) 1, 25 Am. Dec. 877.....	692
Holden v. Clark, 16 Kan. 346.....	191
Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 15, 28 L. ed. 52, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495.....	75
Holliday v. Hilderbrandt, 97 Iowa, 177, 66 N. W. 89.....	541
Hollis, Ex parte, 59 Cal. 407.....	837
Hollowell v. Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. 120 N. C. 286, 26 S. E. 781.....	591
Holman v. Austin, 34 Tex. 668.....	838
Holmes v. McCray, 51 Ind. 358, 19 Am. Rep. 735.....	793
Holyoke v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 N. H. 541.....	86
Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365.....	386
Homer v. Thwing, 3 Pick. 492.....	561
Hope v. Barker, 112 Mo. 338, 20 S. W. 567.....	191
Hotchkiss v. Marion, 12 Mont. 218, 29 Pac. 821.....	539
Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 224, 25 L. ed. 617.....	38
v. Western Transp. Co. 3 Wall. 20, 18 L. ed. 123.....	94, 95
Houghwout v. Bolsaubin, 18 N. J. Eq. 815.....	204
House v. Woodard, 5 Coldw. 200.....	768, 769
Hovey v. State ex rel. Carson, 119 Ind. 395, 21 N. E. 21.....	674
Howarth v. Angle, 162 N. Y. 179, 56 N. E. 489.....	807
v. Angle, 39 App. Div. 151, 57 N. Y. Supp. 187.....	307
v. Ellwanger, 86 Fed. Rep. 54.....	807
Howell v. Manglesdorf, 33 Kan. 194, 5 Pac. 759.....	305
Hower v. Ulrich, 156 Pa. 412, 27 Atl. 37.....	532
Howes v. Perry, 92 Ky. 260, 17 S. W. 575.....	269
H. S. Pickands, The, 42 Fed. Rep. 239.....	94, 95
Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 501.....	466, 467
Huling v. Topeka, 44 Kan. 577, 24 Pac. 1110.....	674
Hume v. Commercial Bank, 9 Lea, 728.....	334
v. Commercial Bank, 10 Lea, 1, 43 Am. Rep. 290.....	549
Hunt v. Stevens, 25 N. C. (3 Ired. L.) 365.....	352
Hunter v. Truckee Lodge, No. 14, 1 O. O. F. 14 Nev. 24.....	257
Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224.....	305, 491
v. Force, 152 Ind. 368, 53 N. E. 443.....	817
Huntington County Comrs. v. Heaston, 144 Ind. 583, 41 N. E. 457, 43 N. E. 651.....	825
Huntoon v. Russell, 41 Mich. 316, 2 N. W. 83.....	314
Hbron, Re, 58 Kan. 152, 36 L. R. A. 822, 48 Pac. 574.....	669
Husted's Case, 1 Johns. Cas. 136.....	840
Hutcheson v. Storrie, 92 Tex. 635, 45 L. R. A. 289, 51 S. W. 848.....	824
Hutchins v. Ford, 82 Me. 370, 19 Atl. 832.....	396
Hutchinson v. Ashburn, 5 Neb. 402.....	343
49 L. R. A.
Hyde v. Stone, 20 How. 170, 15 L. ed. 874.....	65, 73
Hyde Park v. Ingalls, 87 Ill. 13.....	541
Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr, 83 Pa. 332.....	722
Hygienic Plate Ice Mfg. Co. v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 122 N. C. 881, 29 S. E. 575.....	687
h
Illies v. Fitzgerald, 11 Tex. 417.....	775
Illinois C. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 90, 18 L. ed. 591.....	83, 86
v. Cragin, 71 Ill. 177.....	427
Independent School Dist. v. Stone, 106 U. S. 183, 27 L. ed. 90, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.....	540
Indianapolis v. Imberry, 17 Ind. 175.....	803
Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. State ex rel. Lawrenceburg, 37 Ind. 489.....	655
Indianapolis & V. R. Co. v. Capitol Paving & Constr. Co. 54 N. E. 1076.....	821
Indianapolis Furnace & Min. Co. v. Herklmer, 46 Ind. 142.....	485
Ingle v. Jones, 2 Wall. 1, 17 L. ed. 762.....	576
v. State, 8 Blackf. 574.....	839
Interstate Commerce Commission v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 168 U. S. 144, 42 L. ed. 421, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47.....	667
v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 187 U. S. 479, 42 L. ed. 263, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900.....	667
Intoxicating-Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 758, 37 Am. Rep. 284.....	674
Iowa Union Teleph. Co. v. Oskaloosa Bd. of Naturalization, 67 Iowa, 250, 25 N. W. 155.....	460
Ipswich Mfg. Co. v. Story, 5 Met. 810.....	349
Iron Mountain Co. v. Haight, 39 Cal. 541.....	223
Irons v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 21 Fed. Rep. 197.....	307
Irvine, Ex parte, 74 Fed. Rep. 954, 838, 840.....	842
Isaacson v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 94 N. Y. 278, 46 Am. Rep. 142.....	822
j
Jackett v. Judd, 18 How. Pr. 385.....	141
Jackson v. Burnham, 20 Colo. 532, 39 Pac. 577.....	87
Jacob v. Lorenz, 98 Cal. 332, 33 Pac. 119.....	287, 288
Jacobs, Re, 98 N. Y. 108, 50 Am. Rep. 636.....	184
Jacques v. Hall, 3 Gray, 194.....	287
James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. 9, 55 Am. Dec. 376.....	461
Jaques v. Com. 10 Grati. 690.....	549
Jarnecke Ditch, Re, 69 Fed. Rep. 161.....	65
Jasper County v. Ballou, 103 U. S. 745, 26 L. ed. 422.....	538
Jeane v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 86 Me. 434, 80 Atl. 70.....	394
Jenkins v. International Bank, 127 U. S. 484, 32 L. ed. 189, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1196.....	293
Jennings v. Rundall, 8 T. R. 335.....	561
J. I. Case Plow Works v. Nile & S. Co. 90 Wis. 590, 63 N. W. 1013.....	863
Joffe, Ex parte, 46 Mo. App. 360.....	336
John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 103 Ind. 582, 53 Am. Rep. 550, 2 N. E. 188.....	420
Johns v. Adams, 2 Wyo. 184.....	214
Johnson, Re, 12 Kan. 102.....	674
v. Frisbie, 16 Mich. 286.....	192
v. Northern F. R. Co. 47 Minn. 430, 50 N. W. 473.....	87
v. Patterson, 13 Lea, 626.....	769, 770
v. Pensacola & P. R. Co. 16 Fla. 623, 26 Am. Rep. 731.....	675
v. Ple, 1 Lev. 169, 1 Sid. 258, 1 Keble, 903.....	561
v. Provincial Ins. Co. 12 Mich. 216, 86 Am. Dec. 49.....	313
v. Richardson, 52 Tex. 481.....	550
v. Thomas, 2 Palge, 383.....	142
v. 21 Bales, 2 Faine, 601, Fed. Cas. No. 7,417.....	98
v. Waters, 111 U. S. 640, 28 L. ed. 547, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619.....	73

Johnson City v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co.	125
100 Tenn. 138, 44 S. W. 870.
Jones v. Aspen Hardware Co. 21 Colo. 283,	485
29 L. R. A. 143, 40 Pac. 475.	469
v. Clark, 42 Cal. 181.
v. Great Southern Fireproof Hotel
Co. 58 U. S. App. 897, 86 Fed.	257
Rep. 870, 80 C. C. A. 108.	287
v. Jamison, 15 La. Ann. 35.	893
v. Larrabee, 47 Me. 474.
v. Tonawanda, 158 N. Y. 438, 58	812
N. E. 280.
v. United States, 96 U. S. 24, 24 L.	576
ed. 644.	412
Joyce v. East St. Louis, 77 Ill. 156.	200
Jubb v. Thorp, 2 Wyo. 406.	422
Judd v. Fargo, 107 Mass. 264.
Judge v. Braswell, 18 Bush, 67, 26 Am.	469
Rep. 185.	351
Judge of Probate v. Adams, 49 N. H. 150.	351
v. Briggs, 5 N. H. 68.
v. Claggett, 86 N. H. 381, 72 Am.	350
Dec. 814.	351
v. Emery, 6 N. H. 141.	351
v. Locke, 6 N. H. 390.
Junction City v. Keffe, 40 Kan. 275, 19	188
Pac. 735.

K.

Kadish v. Garden City Equitable Loan &
Bldg. Assn. 151 Ill. 531, 38 N.	656
E. 236.
Kahn v. Central Smelting Co. 102 U. S.	469
645, 26 L. ed. 267.
Kahnweiler v. Phenix Ins. Co. 32 U. S.	136
App. 280, 67 Fed. Rep. 483, 14
C. C. A. 485.
Kaine, Ex parte, 3 Blatchf. 5, Fed. Cas. No.	834, 835
7,597.	313, 314
Kane v. Morehouse, 46 Conn. 300.	387
v. Stone Co. 89 Ohio St. 1.
Kansas City v. McDonald, 60 Kan. 481, 45	672
L. R. A. 429, 57 Pac. 128.
Karsen v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 29	645
Minn. 12, 11 N. W. 122.
Kaufman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 281, 18 L. R. A.	42
124, 29 Pac. 481.
Kearney, Ex parte, 7 Wheat. 38, 5 L. ed.	850
891.	839
Kearny, Ex parte, 55 Cal. 212.
Keith v. Wilson, 145 Ind. 149, 44 N. E.	821
13.
Kelley v. Ypsilanti Dress-Stay Mfg. Co. 10	756
L. R. A. 686, 44 Fed. Rep. 23.
Kellogg, Ex parte, 64 Cal. 343, 30 Pac.	839
1030.
v. Dickinson, 147 Mass. 432, 1 L. R.	650
A. 846, 18 N. E. 223.	565
v. Waite, 12 Allen, 529.
Kelly v. Neely, 12 Ark. 657, 56 Am. Dec.	549
288.
Kemble v. Kemble, 44 N. J. Eq. 454, 11 Atl.	467
733.
Kendall v. Creighton, 23 How. 90, 16 L.	72
ed. 419.	203
v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 95.
Kennon v. Gilmer, 181 U. S. 22, 33 L. ed.	86
110, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697.
Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Louis-	254 ville, 100 Ky. 470, 40 L. R. A.
119, 36 S. W. 921.
Kentucky Masonic Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mil-	778
ler, 13 Bush, 494.
Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S.	560
321, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct.
Rep. 57.
Kenyon v. Mondovi, 98 Wis. 50, 73 N. W.	86
314.	793, 794
v. Williams, 19 Ind. 44.
Kerkhof v. Atlas Paper Co. 68 Wis. 674,	481
32 N. W. 766.
Kerr v. Bennett, 109 Mich. 546, 67 N. W.	813
564.
Kester Bros. v. Miller Bros. 119 N. C. 475,	684
26 S. E. 115.	698
Kiefer v. State, 87 Md. 562, 40 Atl. 377.
Kieley v. McGlynn, 21 Wall. 503, 22 L. ed.	561
599.
Kilgore v. Jordan, 17 Tex. 341.	283
v. Planters' Bank, 3 La. Ann.	388
693.
Kill v. Hollister, 1 Wils. 129.
49 L. R. A.

Kimball v. Howard F. Ins. Co. 8 Gray, 33	768
v. Merchants' Sav. Loan & T. Co.
89 Ill. 611.	410
King v. King, 38 Ohio St. 370.	857
v. Netherseal, 4 T. R. 258.	68
Kingman v. Brockton, 153 Mass. 255, 11	565
L. R. A. 123, 26 N. E. 998.	349
Kinney v. Ensign, 18 Pick. 232.
v. North Carolina R. Co. 122 N. C.	82
961, 30 S. E. 313.
Kinsley v. Chicago, 124 Ill. 359, 16 N. E.	411
260.
Kiowa County Comrs. v. Howard, 49 U. S.	538
App. 642, 83 Fed. Rep. 296, 27	550
C. C. A. 531.	808
Kirby v. State, 89 Ala. 63, 8 So. 110.
Kirkham v. Russell, 76 Va. 956.	764
Kirkman v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 90 Iowa, 457,
57 N. W. 952.	141
Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42	853
Pac. 1064.
v. State, 9 Wis. 140.
Klizer v. Winchester, 141 Ind. 694, 40 N.	805
E. 265.
Kleckner v. Turk, 45 Neb. 176, 63 N. W.	342
469.
Kleiber v. People's R. Co. 107 Mo. 240, 14	89
L. R. A. 613, 17 S. W. 946.
Knapp v. Thomas, 39 Ohio St. 377, 48 Am.	443
Rep. 462.	694
Knight v. Bean, 22 Me. 531.
Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 40	650
Pac. 1047.	395
Knox v. Symmonds, 1 Ves. Jr. 369.
Koetter v. Manhattan Elev. R. Co. 36 N.	88
Y. S. R. 611, 13 N. Y. Supp.
459.
Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed.	276
506, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443.
Krumberg v. Cincinnati, 29 Ohio St.	570, 571
69.	438
Kuhn v. Feiser, 3 Head, 82.
Kunts v. Sumption, 117 Ind. 1, 2 L. R. A.	825
658, 19 N. E. 476.

L.

Lackey v. Campbell (Tex. Civ. App.) 54 S.	774
W. 46.	284
Lacroix v. Menard, 7 Mart. N. S. 347.	514
Lacy v. Arnett, 33 Pa. 169.
Ladd v. Philadelphia, 171 Pa. 485, 33 Atl.	602
62.	806
Lafayette v. Cox, 5 Ind. 38.
Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404,	80
15 L. ed. 451.
Lafferty v. Huffman, 99 Ky. 88, 32 L. R.	264
A. 203, 35 S. W. 123.
Laird v. Moonan, 32 Minn. 858, 20 N. W.	257
354.
Lake County Comrs. v. Platt, 49 U. S.	530
App. 216, 79 Fed. Rep. 567, 25
C. C. A. 87.
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Orndorff	821
(Ohio) 38 L. R. A. 140.
Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70	184
Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71.
v. Tate, 130 Ill. 247, 6 L. R. A.	658
268, 22 N. E. 791.	469
Lamar v. Hale, 79 Va. 147.	421
Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505.
Lancaster v. Amsterdam Improv. Co. 140	485
N. Y. 584, 24 L. R. A. 322, 35	609
N. E. 964.
v. Clayton, 86 Ky. 373, 5 S. W. 864.	414
Lancaster County Nat. Bank v. Huver, 114
Pa. 216, 6 Atl. 141.	684
Landa v. Lattin Bros. 19 Tex. Civ. App.
246, 46 S. W. 48.	71
Langdon v. Goddard, 2 Story, 267, Fed.
Cas. No. 8,060.	836, 839
Lange, Ex parte, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed.
872.
Lantalum v. Ins. Co. 22 Nat. Bankr. Reg.	594
14.
Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co.	796
146 Ind. 408, 35 L. R. A. 656,	485
45 N. E. 588, and cases cited.
Larned v. Beal, 65 N. H. 184, 23 Atl. 149.
Lathrop v. Commercial Bank, 8 Dana, 114,	560
83 Am. Dec. 481.	830
Latter v. Braddell, 50 L. J. C. P. N. S. 166.
Law v. Jackson, 8 Cow. 746.	210

- McLaughlin's Case, 5 Watts & S. 276. 849
 McNairy v. McNairy, MSS. Sup. Ct. Dec. Term, 1874, cited in note 3 Verg. 2d ed. 112, 1 Tenn. Cas. 829. 787-771
 McNichol v. United States Mercantile Reporting Agency, 74 Mo. 457. 81
 McNiel, Ex parte, 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624. 75
 Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 239. 515
 McQuaid v. Ross (Wis.) 22 L. R. A. 187. 868
 McTighe v. Macon Constr. Co. 94 Ga. 308, 32 L. R. A. 208, 21 S. E. 701. 485
 McTwiggan v. Hunter, 19 R. I. 265, 29 L. R. A. 526, 33 Atl. 5. 609
 v. Hunter, 18 R. I. 776, 30 Atl. 962. 307
 McVickar v. Jones, 70 Fed. Rep. 754. 307
 McWhorter v. Pensacola & A. R. Co. 24 Fla. 417, 2 L. R. A. 504, 5 So. 129. 675
 McWilliams v. Bragg, 3 Wis. 424. 482
 Maddox v. Tierney, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 396. 774
 Magee v. North Pac. C. R. Co. 78 Cal. 430, 21 Pac. 114. 40
 Mahagan v. Mead, 63 N. H. 130, 3 Atl. 919. 350
 Mallory v. La Crosse Abattoir Co. 80 Wis. 170, 49 N. W. 1071. 257
 v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410. 121
 Manatt v. Scott, 106 Iowa, 203, 76 N. W. 717. 88
 Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Fields (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 280. 138
 v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 163, 58 Am. Rep. 806, 5 N. E. 417. 764
 Mann v. Second Nat. Bank, 30 Kan. 412, 1 Pac. 579. 414
 v. Second Nat. Bank, 34 Kan. 746, 754, 10 Pac. 150. 415
 Mansfield & S. City R. Co. v. Veeder, 17 Ohio, 385. 387
 Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U. S. 379, 28 L. ed. 462, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510. 64
 Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Newell, 71 Wis. 309, 37 N. W. 420. 416
 Manville v. Parks, 7 Colo. 128, 2 Pac. 212. 469
 Marion County Comrs. v. Harvey County Comrs. 26 Kan. 181. 539
 Markey v. Corey, 108 Mich. 184, 36 L. R. A. 117, 66 N. W. 493. 191
 Marriot v. Marriot, 1 Strange, 666. 74
 Marsh v. Philadelphia, 195 Pa. 130, 45 Atl. 1094. 601 Marshall v. Croom, 60 Ala. 121. 312
 v. Eare, 1 Dyer, 376. 550
 v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 34 L. R. A. 757, 42 N. E. 419, 808, 491. 492
 Marson v. Delther, 49 Minn. 423, 52 N. W. 38. 306
 Martin v. California C. R. Co. 94 Cal. 320, 29 Pac. 645. 39, 40, 41
 v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 654, 17 Pac. 162. 674
 Marvel v. Phillips, 162 Mass. 899, 26 L. R. A. 416, 38 N. E. 1117. 695
 Marvin v. Stone, 2 Cow. 781. 349
 Marx v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 321. 122
 Mary Garrett, The, 63 Fed. Rep. 1009. 94
 Maryland F. Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 25 Md. 266, 89 Am. Dec. 779. 705
 Maryland Steel Co. v. Marney, 88 Md. 482, 42 L. R. A. 842, 42 Atl. 60. 724
 Maskall v. Maskall, 3 Sneed, 208. 141
 Mason v. Chappell, 15 Gratt. 572. 863
 Mathes v. Cover, 43 Iowa, 512. 312
 Mathes v. Neldig, 72 N. Y. 100. 450
 Mattingly v. Grimes, 48 Md. 102. 352
 Mattoon v. Cowing, 13 Gray, 387. 349
 Mauritz v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 765. 457
 Maxcy v. Williamson County Ct. 72 Ill. 207. 539
 May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101, 45 N. W. 499. 491, 492
 v. Wood, 172 Mass. 11, 61 N. E. 191. 615
 Mayer's Case, 90 Md. 711, 45 Atl. 874. 706
 Mead v. Acton, 139 Mass. 341, 1 N. E. 413. 564
 v. Parker, 111 N. Y. 259, 18 N. E. 727. 475
 Mead v. Stirling, 62 Conn. 586, 23 L. R. A. 227, 27 Atl. 591. 402
 Mechanics' Sav. Bank v. Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. 87 Fed. Rep. 113, 91 Fed. Rep. 456. 307
 Meek v. Breckinridge, 29 Ohio St. 642. 514
 Meeker v. Meeker, 74 Iowa, 352, 37 N. W. 773. 88
 Megrue v. Lennox, 59 Ohio St. 479, 52 N. E. 1022. 631
 Melsenheimer v. Kellogg (Wis.) 81 N. W. 1033. 479
 Mellor v. Philadelphia, 160 Pa. 614, 28 Atl. 991. 600
 Melon Street, Re, 182 Pa. 397, 38 L. R. A. 275, 38 Atl. 482. 603
 Memphis & J. R. R. Co. v. Southern Exp. Co. 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556. 668
 Memphis, K. & C. R. Co. v. Thompson, 24 Kan. 170. 126
 Mentz v. Armenia F. Ins. Co. 79 Pa. 478, 21 Am. Rep. 80. 386
 Mercantile Trust Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 49 U. S. App. 462, 81 Fed. Rep. 254, 26 C. C. A. 383. 678
 Marcein v. People ex rel. Barry, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653. 835
 Mercer County v. Hackett, 1 Wall. 83, 17 L. ed. 548. 540
 Merchants' Bank v. Ballou, 1 Va. S. C. Rep. 102, 44 L. R. A. 306, 32 S. E. 481. 277
 Merchants' Exch. Bank v. McGraw, 15 U. S. App. 332, 59 Fed. Rep. 972, 8 C. C. A. 420. 136
 Merchants' Mfg. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 21 Blatchf. 109, 13 Fed. Rep. 358. 80
 Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hall, 83 N. Y. 838, 88 Am. Rep. 434. 322
 Meredith v. People, 84 Ill. 479. 180
 Meredith v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 616, 13 S. E. 137. 686, 688, 691
 Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. ed. 197. 608
 Merriam v. Cunningham, 11 Cush. 40. 561
 Merrill v. Monticello, 138 U. S. 673, 34 L. ed. 1069, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441. 541
 Merriman v. Jones, 43 Minn. 23, 44 N. W. 526. 258
 Metcalf v. Hart, 3 Wyo. 513, 27 Pac. 900, 31 Pac. 407. 513
 Metcalf v. Watertown, 128 U. S. 586, 32 L. ed. 543, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173. 64
 Metcalfe v. The Alaska, 180 U. S. 201, 32 L. ed. 923, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461. 96
 Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Assn. v. Scrimgeour (1895) 2 Q. B. 604. 733
 M. E. Union Church v. Pickett, 19 N. Y. 482. 485
 Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Davidson, 157 U. S. 201, 39 L. ed. 672, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563. 64, 65
 Meyer v. Brown, 65 Cal. 583, 4 Pac. 25, 625, 26 Pac. 281. 539
 Middlebrook v. State, 43 Conn. 257, 21 Am. Rep. 650. 153
 Middleport v. Etina L. Ins. Co. 82 Ill. 565. 541
 Middlesex Sheriff, 11 Ad. & El. 273. 846
 Milles v. Strong, 68 Conn. 273, 36 Atl. 55. 545
 Miller v. Gable, 2 Denio, 492. 621, 622, 624
 v. School Dist. No. 3. 5 Wyo. 217, 39 Pac. 879. 539
 Millerstown v. Bell, 123 Pa. 151, 16 Atl. 612. 447
 Milligan v. Wedge, 12 Ad. & El. 737. 830
 Milner v. Milner, 2 Edw. Ch. 114. 288
 Milwaukee v. The Curtis, The Camden, & The Welcome, 37 Fed. Rep. 705, 3 L. R. A. 711. 94, 95
 Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 460, 24 L. ed. 256, 85, 398, 773
 Milwaukee Boiler Co. v. Duncan, 87 Wis. 120, 58 N. W. 232. 863
 Milwaukee Masons & Builders' Assn. v. Niezrowski, 95 Wis. 129, 37 L. R. A. 127, 70 N. W. 166. 480
 Minneapolis Baseball Co. v. City Bank, 68 Minn. 441, 38 L. R. A. 415, 69 N. W. 331. 494
 Minton v. Stahman, 96 Tenn. 98, 34 S. W. 222. 334

- Mirande, Ex parte, 73 Cal. 371, 14 Pac. 888.
- Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. ed. 206, 67, 76, 77.
- Mississippi Mills v. Cook, 56 Miss. 40.
- Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Krumselg, 40 U. S. App. 620, 77 Fed. Rep. 32, 23 C. C. A. 1.
- Mitchell v. Hotchkiss, 48 Conn. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 146.
- v. Rogers, 40 Ark. 91.
- Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238.
- Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 756, 24 L. ed. 580.
- Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coons, 6 Watts & S. 101.
- v. Fenlon, 4 Watts & S. 205.
- Montgomery v. Lansing City Elec. R. Co., 103 Mich. 47, 29 L. R. A. 287, 61 N. W. 543.
- v. Phillips, 53 N. J. Eq. 203, 31 Atl. 622.
- Montoya v. London Assur. Co. 6 Exch. 451.
- Montreal Gas Co. v. Cadieux (1899) A. C. 589.
- Moore, Re, 4 Wyo. 98, 31 Pac. 980.
- v. Burrow, 89 Tenn. 101, 17 S. W. 1035.
- v. White, 45 Mo. 206.
- Moran v. Miami County, 2 Black, 722, 17 L. ed. 342.
- Morbach v. Home Min. Co. 53 Kan. 740, 37 Pac. 125.
- Morehouse v. Comstock, 42 Wis. 628.
- Morgan v. Edwards, 53 Wis. 609, 40 Am. Rep. 781, 11 N. W. 23.
- Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 38 L. ed. 925, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54.
- Morning Star Lodge No. 26, I. O. O. F. v. Hayslip, 23 Ohio St. 144.
- Morris v. Columbus, 102 Ga. 792, 42 L. R. A. 175, 30 S. E. 850.
- v. Morris, 9 Helsk. 814.
- Morris & W. v. Taylor, 31 Or. 62, 49 Pac. 660.
- Morrison v. Grubb, 23 Gratt. 342.
- v. McKinnon, 12 Fla. 552.
- Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159.
- Morville v. Fowle, 144 Mass. 109, 10 N. E. 766.
- Moses v. State, 11 Humph. 232.
- Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1324.
- Mounson v. West, 1 Leon. 88.
- Mount Adams & E. P. Inclined R. Co. v. Lowry, 43 U. S. App. 408, 74 Fed. Rep. 463, 20 C. C. A. 596.
- Mount Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Iowa, 138, 13 L. R. A. 198, 49 N. W. 81.
- Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.
- Mullen v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 89 Tex. 259, 34 S. W. 605.
- Mundy v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 31 U. S. App. 606, 97 Fed. Rep. 683, 14 C. C. A. 583.
- Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77.
- Murphy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 29 Conn. 496.
- v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 184.
- Muster v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Wis. 325, 50 Am. Rep. 141, 21 N. W. 223.
- N.
- Nanty-glo & B. Ironworks Co. v. Grave, L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 738.
- Nash v. Jewett, 61 Vt. 501, 4 L. R. A. 561, 18 Atl. 47.
- Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McConnell, 82 Fed. Rep. 65.
- National Bank v. Dean, 86 Iowa, 656, 53 N. W. 338.
- v. Whitman, 76 Fed. Rep. 697.
- 49 L. R. A.
- National Bank of Commerce v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 92, 23 L. ed. 208.
- National Furnace Co. v. Keystone Mfg. Co. 110 Ill. 427.
- National L. Ins. Co. v. Huron Bd. of Edu. 27 U. S. App. 244, 62 Fed. Rep. 778, 10 C. C. A. 637, 537, 539, 540.
- National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer, 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. ed. 1001.
- Nearing Case, 27 N. Y. 306.
- Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. State ex rel. Yelser, 55 Neb. 627, 45 L. R. A. 113, 76 N. W. 171.
- Needham v. Wright, 140 Ind. 190, 39 N. E. 510.
- Neidlinger v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 18 Blatchf. 297, 11 Fed. Rep. 514.
- Nelson v. Vermont & C. R. Co. 26 Vt. 717, 62 Am. Dec. 614.
- New Albany v. Cook, 29 Ind. 220.
- Newberry v. Lee, 3 Hill, 523.
- Newell v. People ex rel. Phelps, 7 N. Y. 9.
- New Era L. Assn. v. Musser, 120 Pa. 384, 14 Atl. 155.
- New Haven Horse-Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. 142 Mass. 349, 7 N. E. 773.
- New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, 24 L. ed. 521.
- v. Fourchy, 30 La. Ann. 910.
- v. New Orleans Waterworks Co. 36 La. Ann. 432.
- New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Wallace, 50 Miss. 244.
- Newport v. Masonic Temple Assn. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 266, 45 S. W. 881.
- Newport News & M. V. R. Co. v. Thomas, 96 Ky. 613, 29 S. W. 437.
- Newsom v. State, 2 Ga. 60.
- New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 78.
- Newton v. Boodie, 8 C. B. 795.
- New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 28 How. Pr. 187.
- New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 37 L. ed. 292, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444.
- v. McHenry, 21 Blatchf. 400, 17 Fed. Rep. 414.
- Nichols v. Brabazon, 94 Wis. 549, 69 N. W. 342.
- Nickells v. Atherstone, 10 Q. B. 944.
- Nickerson v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co. 46 Conn. 25, 33 Am. Rep. 1.
- Nielsen, Re, 131 U. S. 183, 33 L. ed. 120, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 674.
- Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184.
- Nitro-Glycerine Case, The, 15 Wall. 524, 21 L. ed. 206.
- Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Howison, 81 Va. 125.
- v. Pinnacle Coal Co. 44 W. Va. 574, 41 L. R. A. 414, 30 S. E. 196.
- Norris v. Towle, 54 N. H. 290.
- North Carolina R. Co. v. Swepson, 71 N. C. 350.
- Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 159.
- Northern P. R. Co. v. Freeman, 174 U. S. 379, 43 L. ed. 1014, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703.
- v. Urilin, 158 U. S. 271, 39 L. ed. 977, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840.
- North Lebanon R. Co. v. McGrann, 33 Pa. 530, 75 Am. Dec. 624.
- Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 76 Minn. 334, 79 N. W. 315.
- Norton v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 61 Fed. Rep. 618.
- Norwalk Street R. Co.'s Appeal, 69 Conn. 578, 39 L. R. A. 794, 37 Atl. 1080, 38 Atl. 708.
- Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187.
- v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 111 N. C. 236, 16 S. E. 4.
- O.
- Oakley v. Taylor, 64 Fed. Rep. 245.

People ex rel. Johnson v. Nevins, 1 Hill, 170.....	850	Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 50 Am. Rep. 86, 11 N. E. 540.....	305
Mitchell v. New York Sheriff, 7 Abb. Pr. 96.....	847	Potter v. Titcomb, 7 Me. 302.....	349
Hunter v. Peters, 4 Neb. 254.....	348	Potwin Place v. Topeka R. Co. 51 Kan. 609, 33 Pac. 309.....	655
Attorney General v. Provines, 84 Cal. 520.....	674	Powell v. Bennett, 131 Ind. 465, 30 N. E. 518.....	793
Wallace v. Salomon, 46 Ill. 415.....	289	v. Madison, 107 Ind. 110, 8 N. E. 31.....	539
Herrick v. Smith, 21 N. Y. 598.....	789	v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992.....	183
Cunningham v. Thistlewood, 103 Ill. 139.....	656	Powell ex rel. Boyce v. Goodwin, 22 Mich. 496.....	265
Muir v. Throop, 12 Wend. 183.....	370	Powers v. Heath, 20 Mo. 319.....	312
Cooke v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 371.....	539	v. Kansas City, 56 Mo. App. 573.....	88
People's Live Stock Ins. Co., Re, 56 Minn. 180, 57 N. W. 468.....	494	Poyer v. Des Plaines, 123 Ill. 111, 13 N. E. 819.....	410
People's R. Co. v. Grand Ave. R. Co. 149 Mo. loc. cit. 253, 50 S. W. 829.....	336	Pratt v. Donovan, 10 Wis. 378.....	847
Pepperell v. Burrell, 2 Dowl. P. C. 674.....	203	Prell v. McDonald, 7 Kan. 426, 12 Am. Rep. 428.....	674
Perkins, Re, 2 Cal. 424.....	835	Presbyterian Congregation v. Johnston, 1 Watts & S. 1.....	622
v. Concord R. Co. 44 N. H. 223.....	87	Presbyterian Mut. Assur. Fund v. Allen, 106 Ind. 593, 7 Ind. 317.....	369
Permistick, Re, 3 Wash. 674, 29 Pac. 351.....	838	Preston v. Roberts, 12 Bush. 570.....	136
Perry v. McLendon, 62 Ga. 601.....	835	Price v. Dewhurst, 4 Myl. & C. 76.....	85
Peter Schoenhofen Brewing Co., Re, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 141.....	447	v. Hewett, 8 Exch. 146.....	561
Petty v. Ducker, 51 Ark. 281, 11 S. W. 2.....	68	v. Hopkin, 13 Mich. 325.....	197
Poyton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 41 La. Ann. 861, 6 So. 690.....	724	v. Whitman, 8 Call. 412.....	225
Phelan v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 113 N. Y. 147, 20 N. E. 827.....	132	Prichard v. Evans, 31 W. Va. 137, 5 S. E. 461.....	509
Philadelphia v. Masonic Home, 160 Pa. 572, 23 L. R. A. 545, 28 Atl. 964.....	253	v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102.....	130
Philadelphia, N. & N. Y. R. Co. v. Cooper, 105 Pa. 289.....	600	Pritchett v. State, 92 Ga. 65, 18 S. E. 536.....	160
Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Anderson, 72 Md. 519, 8 L. R. A. 673, 20 Atl. 2.....	107	Probate Court v. Merriam, 8 Vt. 234.....	849
v. Hoeflich, 62 Md. 300, 20 Am. Rep. 223, 18 Am. & Eng. L. Cas. 373.....	821	Proprietors of Mill Dam Foundry Co. v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 417.....	574, 577
Phillip Schneider Brew. Co. v. American Ice Mach. Co. 40 U. S. App. 382, 77 Fed. Rep. 138, 23 C. C. A. 89.....	136	Prouty v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 N. Y. 272.....	288
Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Fire Dept. of Montgomery, 117 Ala. 631, 42 L. R. A. 468, 23 So. 843.....	608	Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Adler, 65 Md. 162, 4 Atl. 121.....	398
Phosphate Sewage Co. v. Hartmont, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 304.....	732	Public Schools v. Bennett, 27 N. J. L. 513.....	578, 577
Pieratt v. Young, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1815, 40 S. W. 964.....	337	Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 134, 18 L. R. A. 203, 50 N. W. 1034.....	85, 89
Pierce v. Carleton, 12 Ill. 358, 54 Am. Dec. 405.....	852	Purple v. Horton, 13 Wend. 9, 27 Am. Dec. 167.....	424
v. North Carolina R. Co. 124 N. C. 83, 44 L. R. A. 316, 32 S. E. 399.....	83	Putnam v. Wise, 1 Hill, 234, 37 Am. Dec. 309.....	794
v. Roble, 39 Me. 205, 63 Am. Dec. 614.....	661	Putney v. Whitmore, 66 Fed. Rep. 338.....	288
Pike v. Fay, 101 Mass. 134.....	615
Pike County Comrs. v. People ex rel. Metz, 11 Ill. 202.....	650	Q.
Pilcher v. New York L. Ins. Co. 83 La. Ann. 322.....	754	Quackenbush v. Sawyer, 54 Cal. 439.....	794
Pingrey v. National L. Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 382, 11 N. E. 562.....	754	Queen v. Boyes, 1 Best & S. 311.....	852, 854, 855
Piper v. Pearson, 2 Gray, 120, 61 Am. Dec. 438.....	847	Quill v. Indianapolis, 124 Ind. 292, 7 L. R. A. 681, 28 N. E. 788.....	803, 804, 806, 816, 820
Pitcher v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 121 Ill. 412, 18 N. E. 187.....	372	Quincy v. Warfield, 25 Ill. 317, 79 Am. Dec. 330.....	541
Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Campbell, 86 Ill. 443.....	645
Pittsburg Min. Co. v. Spooner, 74 Wis. 307, 42 N. W. 259.....	732	R.
Plaquemines Tropical Fruit Co. v. Buck, 52 N. J. Eq. 219, 27 Atl. 1094.....	732	Rae v. National L. Ins. Co. 20 U. S. App. 410, 60 Fed. Rep. 600, 9 C. C. A. 215.....	131, 182
Platt v. Larter, 94 Fed. Rep. 610.....	307	Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Aid & Ben. Assn. v. Robinson, 147 Ill. 159, 35 N. E. 168.....	380
Plymouth v. Plymouth County Comrs. 16 Gray, 341.....	843	Randal's Case, 2 Mod. 308.....	160
Plymouth, The, 3 Wall. 20, 18 L. ed. 125.....	94, 95	Randolph v. Kinney, 3 Rand. (Va.) 394.....	471
Pole v. Fitzgerald, Willes, Rep. 644.....	399	Randon v. Toby, 11 How. 493, 13 L. ed. 784.....	650
Police Jury v. Britton, 15 Wall. 566, 21 L. ed. 251.....	541	Rangely v. Webster, 11 N. H. 299.....	290
Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 520, 22 L. ed. 376.....	491	Rank v. Shewey, 4 Watts, 218.....	550
v. Baylor, 6 Munf. 433.....	557	Rapier, Re, 143 U. S. 110, 36 L. ed. 93, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 374.....	545, 547
Pooley v. Whitmore, 10 Helsk. 629, 27 Am. Rep. 733.....	469	Ratterman v. Ingalls, 48 Ohio St. 468, 28 N. E. 168.....	435
Porter v. United States L. Ins. Co. 160 Mass. 183, 35 N. E. 678.....	764	Rawson v. State, 19 Conn. 292.....	145
Portland v. Portland Water Co. 67 Me. 135.....	299	Ray v. Banks, 120 N. C. 389, 27 S. E. 28.....	591
Portland Sav. Bank v. Evansville, 25 Fed. Rep. 389.....	541	v. Jeffersonville, 90 Ind. 567.....	811, 821
49 L. R. A.		Read v. Plattsmouth, 107 U. S. 568, 27 L. ed. 414, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208.....	126, 127
		Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 302, 38 L. ed. 1014, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1054.....	667, 675
		Redfield v. Oakland Consol. St. R. Co. 112 Cal. 220, 43 Pac. 1117.....	42

Reed v. Reed, 31 Fed. Rep. 49.....	67, 71	Rogers & Brother v. Rogers, 53 Conn. 121, 1 Atl. 807, 5 Atl. 875.....	151
v. Washington F. & M. Ins. Co. 138 Mass. 372.....	386	Rogers Park Water Co. v. Fergus, 178 Ill. 571, 53 N. E. 363.....	635
Reg. v. Boyea, 7 Jur. N. C. 1158.....	853	Rolls, Re, 30 Kan. 758, 1 Pac. 523.....	839
v. Drullitt, 10 Cox, C. C. 593.....	480	Rood v. Railway Pass. & Freight Conduct- ors' Mut. Ben. Assn. 31 Fed. Rep. 63.....	378, 503
Relyea v. Tomahawk Paper & Pulp Co. 102 Wis. 301, 78 N. W. 412.....	479	Rose's Succession, 48 La. Ann. 422, 19 So. 450.....	284
Reno, Ex parte, 66 Mo. 266, 27 Am. Rep. 337.....	442	Rosen v. United States, 161 U. S. 29, 40 L. ed. 606, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434.....	548
Reno Lodge No. 99, I. O. O. F. v. Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F. 54 Kan. 73, 26 L. R. A. 98, 37 Pac. 1003.....	478	Rosenbaum v. Bauer, 120 U. S. 461, 30 L. ed. 743, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633.....	67
Rex v. Haines, 1 Wils. 214.....	348	Rosetta Gravel Pav. & Improv. Co. v. Ken- nedy, 51 La. Ann. 1535, 26 So. 469.....	273, 281
v. Schlever, 2 Burr. 765.....	848	Ross v. Clarke, 1 Dall. 354, 1 L. ed. 173.....	352
v. Suddis, 1 East, 306.....	835	v. Crockett, 14 La. Ann. 823.....	343
Rextor v. Drury, 4 Chand. (Wis.) 24.....	550	v. Stackhouse, 114 Ind. 200, 16 N. E. 501.....	806, 811
Reynolds, Ex parte, 22 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 21, note p. 28.....	853	Rouse v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 493, 5 L. R. A. 378, 22 N. E. 293.....	705
v. Bowen, 138 Ind. 434, 36 N. E. 756, 37 N. E. 902.....	805	Rowland, Ex parte, 104 U. S. 604, 26 L. ed. 861.....	839
v. Crawfordsville First Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 405, 28 L. ed. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213.....	75	Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. 112 Mo. 45, 18 L. R. A. 823, 20 S. W. 472.....	88
Rhoades v. Toledo, 6 Ohio C. C. 9.....	570	Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955.....	466, 467
Rhodes v. Otis, 33 Ala. 578, 73 Am. Dec. 430.....	513	Ryan v. Cudahy, 157 Ill. 108, 41 N. E. 760, 49 L. R. A. 353.....	372
v. Rhodes, 3 Sandf. Ch. 279.....	529	Ryder v. Robinson, 2 Me. 127.....	142
v. United States Nat. Bank, 24 U. S. App. 607, 84 L. R. A. 742, 56 Fed. Rep. 512, 13 C. C. A. 612.....	307	Ryers, Re, 2 N. Y. 1, 28 Am. Rep. 88.....	780, 700
Rice v. Boyer, 108 Ind. 472, 58 Am. Rep. 53, 9 N. E. 420.....	501, 502
v. Steger, 3 Tenn. Ch. 828.....	768, 769
Rice County Comrs. v. Lawrence, 29 Kan. 163.....	166
Rich v. Keyser, 54 Pa. 89.....	461
Richards v. Morgan, 4 Best & S. 641.....	426
v. New Hampshire Ins. Co. 43 N. H. 263.....	705
Richardson v. Green, 15 U. S. App. 488, 61 Fed. Rep. 423, 9 C. C. A. 565.....	70, 72, 75
v. Green, 138 U. S. 43, 33 L. ed. 521, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280.....	704
v. New York C. R. Co. 98 Mass. 85.....	304
Richey v. Brown, 58 Mich. 435, 25 N. W. 386.....	417
Richman v. State, 2 G. Greene, 532, 534.....	854
Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27, 30 L. ed. 864, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788.....	307
v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Telegr. Co. 174 U. S. 761, 43 L. ed. 1162, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778.....	460
Richmondville Mfg. Co. v. Prall, 9 Conn. 487.....	145
Ricker v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 27 Minn. 193, 38 Am. Rep. 289, 6 N. W. 771.....	754
Riddick v. The Governor, 1 Mo. 147.....	336
Ring, The, 28 Cal. 251.....	835
Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185, 18 N. W. 611.....	594
Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454.....	184, 186
Roan v. Winn, 93 Mo. 511, 4 S. W. 736.....	701
Roanoke Land & Improv. Co. v. Karn, 80 Va. 589.....	257
Robb v. McDonald, 29 Iowa, 330, 4 Am. Rep. 211.....	839
Roberson v. Nail, 85 Tenn. 124, 2 S. W. 19 Robinson, Ex parte, 2 Blas. 309, Fed. Cas. No. 11,932.....	769
Ex parte, 6 McLean, 356, Fed. Cas. No. 11,935.....	484
v. Baker, 5 Cush. 137, 51 Am. Dec. 54.....	835
v. Davidson, L. R. 6 Exch. 260.....	612
v. Superior Rapid Transit E. Co. 94 Wis. 345, 34 L. R. A. 205, 68 N. W. 961.....	577
Robrecht v. Robrecht (W. Va.) 34 S. E. 801.....	482
Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank v. Bliss, 89 N. Y. 338.....	471
Roethke v. Philip Best Brew. Co. 33 Mich. 340.....	491
Rogan v. Watertown, 80 Wis. 259.....	313
Rogers v. Cherokee Iron & R. Co. 70 Ga. 717.....	541
v. Odell, 30 N. H. 452.....	204
Rogers v. St. Paul, 22 Minn. 494.....	287
49 L. R. A. A.....	759
		S.
		Sackett v. New Albany, 88 Ind. 473, 45 Am. Rep. 467.....	808
		St. Louis v. Grone, 46 Mo. 575.....	412
		St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gracy, 126 Mo. 472, 28 S. W. 736, 29 S. W. 579.....	204
		v. Murray, 55 Ark. 248, 16 L. R. A. 787, 18 S. W. 50.....	89
		St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 59 Ark. 122, 26 S. W. 593.....	107
		Saldana v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 862.....	86
		Salem v. People, 164 Ill. 379, 45 N. E. 728.....	842
		Samuel v. People, 164 Ill. 379, 45 N. E. 728.....	856
		San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Robinson, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 400, 43 S. W. 76.....	631
		San Antonio Street R. Co. v. State ex rel. Elmendorf (Tex. Civ. App.) 38 S. W. 55.....	655
		Sands v. Hatfield, 7 Ind. App. 357, 34 N. E. 654.....	821
		Sanford Fork & Tool Co. v. Howe, B. & Co. 157 U. S. 312, 39 L. ed. 713, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 621.....	713
		Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 33 L. ed. 220, 300.....	306
		Sappenfield v. Main Street & A. P. R. Co. 91 Cal. 62, 27 Pac. 590.....	41, 42
		Satterly v. Winne, 101 N. Y. 218, 4 N. E. 185.....	789
		Saunders v. Farmer, 62 N. H. 572.....	485
		Sawtelle v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 15 Blatchf. 216, Fed. Cas. No. 12- 392.....	122
		Sayre v. Louisville Union Benev. Assn. 1 Duval, 143, 85 Am. Dec. 613.....	370
		v. Phillips, 148 Pa. 482, 16 L. R. A. 49, 24 Atl. 76.....	446, 447
		Schiffer v. Columbia College, 87 Fed. Rep. 166.....	307
		Schilling v. Abernethy, 112 Pa. 437, 56 Am. Rep. 320, 3 Atl. 702.....	723
		Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125.....	107
		Schollenberger, Ex parte, 96 U. S. 369, 24 L. ed. 853.....	80
		Schriber v. Langdale, 66 Wis. 616, 29 N. W. 547.....	495
		Schroeder v. Overman, 61 Ohio St. 1, 47 L. R. A. 156, 55 N. E. 158.....	571, 802
		Schunmaker v. Heinemann, 99 Wis. 251, 74 N. W. 785.....	481
		Scofield v. Churchill, 72 N. Y. 565.....	349
		Scotland, The, 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. ed. 1001.....	96, 97
		Scott v. Avery, 5 H. L. Cas. 811.....	378

- Scott v. Duke, 3 La. Ann. 253... 277, 280 283
 v. First Free Methodist Church, 50
 Mich. 528, 15 N. W. 891... 843
 v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892... 85
 Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406,
 23 L. ed. 245... 642
 Seamans v. Temple Co. 105 Mich. 400, 28
 L. R. A. 430, 63 N. W. 408... 495
 Searing v. Heavysides, 106 Ill. 85... 410
 Sears v. Boston Street Comrs. 173 Mass.
 350, 53 N. E. 876... 802
 Seaton v. Scoville, 18 Kan. 433, 26 Am.
 Rep. 779, 21 Am. Rep. 212... 182
 Secord v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 5 Mc-
 Crary, 515, 18 Fed. Rep. 221... 830
 Seeber v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 77 Fed.
 Rep. 957... 532
 Segrave v. Kirwan, Beatty, 157... 74
 Senate Resolution, Re, 9 Colo. 632, 21 Pac.
 475... 225
 Seclor, Ex parte, 37 Fla. 1, 32 L. R. A.
 133, 19 So. 652... 839, 855
 Sewell v. Keen, 2 Whart. 332, 30 Am. Dec.
 268... 352
 Shamokin v. Flannigan, 156 Pa. 43, 26 Atl.
 780... 447
 Shand v. Grant, 15 C. B. N. S. 324... 580
 Shannon v. Frost, 3 B. Mon. 253... 622
 v. Huron, 0 S. D. 356, 69 N. W. 598
 Shapleigh v. San Angelo, 167 U. S. 648, 42
 L. ed. 310, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 957
 Shapley v. Abbott, 42 N. Y. 447, 1 Am.
 Rep. 548... 649
 Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59
 Am. Dec. 759... 608
 Shattuck v. Bill, 142 Mass. 56, 7 N. E. 89
 Shaw, Ex parte, 7 Ohio St. 81, 70 Am. Dec.
 55... 830
 v. Coffin, 58 Me. 254, 4 Am. Rep. 290
 v. Independent School Dist. 62 Fed.
 Rep. 911... 540
 v. People, 3 Hun. 272... 180
 v. Quincy Min. Co. 145 U. S. 444, 38
 L. ed. 768, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935
 Sheafe v. Larimer, 70 Fed. Rep. 921... 65
 Sheehan v. Davis, 17 Ohio St. 371... 307
 Sheets v. Grubbs, 4 Met. (Ky.) 329... 857
 v. Seiden, 2 Wall. 190, 17 L. ed. 826
 Sheffield v. Collier, 3 Ga. 82... 225
 Shepard v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 70 Am.
 Dec. 479 and note, 6 Wis. 639... 515
 v. Pettit, 30 Minn. 119, 14 N. W.
 511... 598
 Shepherd v. McCalmont Oil Co. 38 Hun. 37
 Sherrill v. Western U. Tele. Co. 116 N. C.
 655, 21 S. E. 429... 417
 Sherry v. Gilmore, 58 Wis. 324, 17 N. W.
 252... 460
 Sherwood v. Sherwood, 82 Conn. 1... 689
 Shipman v. Clark, 4 Denio, 44, 47 Am.
 Dec. 264... 485
 Shoenberger v. McEwen, 15 Ill. App. 496... 153
 Shurts v. Johnson, 28 Gratt. 957... 774
 Shute v. Sargent, 67 N. H. 805, 36 Atl. 282
 Sibun v. Pearce, L. R. 44 Ch. Div. 354... 863
 Sicard v. Keystone Oil Co. 149 Pa. 148, 24
 Atl. 164... 556
 Sickles v. Manhattan Gaslight Co. 64 How.
 Pr. 33... 141
 Stebold, Ex parte, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. ed.
 717... 660
 Sifford v. Morrison, 33 Md. 18... 701
 Sigourney v. Wetherell, 6 Met. 553... 509
 Sikes v. Johnson, 16 Mass. 389... 839
 Simmons v. Andrews, 106 N. C. 201, 10 S.
 E. 1052... 336
 v. Holster, 13 Minn. 249, 611. 236... 697
 v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 34 L. ed.
 1054, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369... 349
 Simpson v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co.
 5 Lea, 456... 561
 Sims, Re, 54 Kan. 1, 25 L. R. A. 110, 37
 Pac. 135... 211
 Siner v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 4
 Exch. 123... 840
 Singer v. State, 72 Md. 464, 8 L. R. A. 551,
 19 Atl. 1044... 67, 71
 Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L.
 ed. 496... 646
 Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. Osceola County, 45 Iowa, 168... 674
 Skillman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 198, 83 Am.
 Dec. 96, and note... 822
 Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L.
 ed. 394... 698
 49 L. R. A. 183, 185
- Sleeper v. Goodwin, 67 Wis. 577, 31 N. W.
 835... 494
 Slessman v. Crowler, 80 Ind. 487... 808
 Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111
 Cal. 668, 32 L. R. A. 193, 44
 Pac. 320... 85
 Smethurst, Re, 2 Sandf. 724... 850
 Smiley v. Barker, 55 U. S. App. 125, 83
 Fed. Rep. 684, 28 C. C. A. 9... 542
 Smith v. Cooley, 65 Cal. 46, 2 Pac. 880... 460
 v. Frazier, 119 N. C. 157, 25 S. E.
 866... 591
 v. Holcomb, 99 Mass. 552... 86
 v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 242, 80 Am.
 Dec. 83... 192
 v. Kerr, 108 N. Y. 36, 15 N. E. 70... 583
 v. Lawrence, 38 Cal. 24, 99 Am. Dec.
 344... 650
 v. Lyon, 133 U. S. 315, 33 L. ed.
 635, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808... 65
 v. McDowell ex rel. Hall, 148 Ill. 51,
 22 L. R. A. 393, 35 N. E. 141... 412
 v. Morse, 20 La. Ann. 220... 596
 v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 838... 305
 v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 60 Vt. 682,
 1 L. R. A. 216, 15 Atl. 353... 764
 v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 114 N. C. 728, 25 L. R. A. 287, 10 S. E. 863... 427, 686
 v. Overby, 30 Ga. 241... 86
 v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 361, 19 L. R. A.
 433, 32 L. R. A. 844, 33 N. E.
 777, 44 N. E. 368... 621
 v. Potter, 46 Mich. 258, 41 Am. Rep.
 161, 9 N. W. 273... 322
 v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 30 Minn.
 169, 14 N. W. 797... 90
 v. Sherry, 150 Wis. 210, 6 N. W. 561, 55 Wis. 114, 11 N. W. 465... 484
 v. Sherwood, 95 Wis. 558, 70 N. W.
 682... 180
 v. Yoke, 27 W. Va. 639... 509
 Snell, Re, 31 Minn. 110, 16 N. W. 692... 509
 Snow v. Fitchburg R. Co. 136 Mass. 552, 49
 Am. Rep. 40... 310
 Snow, Case of, 120 U. S. 274, 30 L. ed. 558,
 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556... 836
 Snowden v. Willas, 19 Ind. 14, 81 Am. Dec.
 370... 514
 Snyder v. Albion, 113 Mich. 275, 71 N. W.
 475... 90
 v. Lancaster, 20 W. N. C. 185, 11
 Atl. 872... 600, 302, 603
 v. Rockport Trustees, 6 Ind. 237... 811 Society for Visitation of Sick v. Com. ex
 rel. Meyer, 52 Pa. 133, 91 Am.
 Dec. 139... 360
 Society Perun v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St.
 481, 3 N. E. 357... 485
 Sontag, Ex parte, 64 Cal. 526, 2 Pac. 402
 Soule v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 24 Conn.
 575... 880
 South Carolina v. Stoll, 17 Wall. 425, 21
 L. ed. 650... 406
 Southern R. Co. v. Rhodes, 58 U. S. App.
 349, 86 Fed. Rep. 422, 80 C. C.
 A. 157... 541
 South Joplin Land Co. v. Case, 104 Mo.
 572, 16 S. W. 390... 310
 Southwestern R. Co. v. Mitchell, 69 Ga.
 114... 782
 Soverhill v. Suydam, 59 N. Y. 140... 515
 Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep.
 7... 349
 v. Chicago, & N. W. R. Co. 30
 Wis. 110, 11 Am. Rep. 550... 694, 695
 Speer v. Blairsville School Directors, 50
 Pa. 150... 645
 Spencer v. Merchant, 100 N. Y. 585, 3 N.
 E. 682... 565
 v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed.
 783, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921... 812
 Spidell v. Johnson, 128 Ind. 235, 25 N. E.
 689... 800
 Spler, Re, 12 N. C. (1 Dev. L.) 491... 815
 Spokane Mfg. & Lumber Co. v. McChesney,
 1 Wash. 609, 21 Pac. 198... 588
 Spooner v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 115
 N. Y. 22, 21 N. E. 696... 257
 Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 22 Cal. 434... 724
 Spruill v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co.
 120 N. C. 141, 27 S. E. 39... 485
 686, 689, 690, 691

- State v. Allen, 48 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 257 691, 692
 v. Armstrong, 72 N. C. 193 586
 v. Ballard, 122 N. C. 1024, 29 S. E. 899 586
 v. Blalock, 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 242 443
 v. Brennan's Liquors, 25 Conn. 278 545
 v. Broadbelt, 89 Md. 585, 45 L. R. A. 433, 43 Atl. 771 698
 v. Canton, 43 Mo. 51 338
 v. Carmichael, 8 Kan. 102 188
 v. Carnagy, 106 Iowa, 483, 76 N. W. 805 180
 v. Carpenter, 90 Conn. 97, 22 Atl. 497 547
 v. Central St. Louis Masonic Hall Asso. 14 Mo. App. 596 254
 v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 31 L. R. A. 55, 33 Atl. 518 546
 v. Copp, 15 N. H. 212 847
 v. Costello, 62 Conn. 128, 25 Atl. 477 547
 v. Creditor, 44 Kan. 568, 24 Pac. 348 698
 v. Credle, 63 N. C. 506 586
 v. Crites, 48 Ohio St. 460, 28 N. E. 178 432
 v. Crosby, 17 Kan. 396 188
 v. Cunningham, 25 Conn. 195 545
 v. Curtiss, 69 Conn. 86, 36 Atl. 1014 548
 v. Dalton, 22 B. L. 77, 48 Atl. 234 608
 v. Darrah, 152 Mo. 522, 54 S. W. 228 332
 v. Davidson, 124 N. C. 839, 32 S. E. 957 586
 v. Delesdernier, 11 Me. 473 393
 v. Duffy, 15 Iowa 427 854
 v. Freeman, 66 N. C. 647 586
 v. Fuller, 96 Mo. 165, 9 S. W. 583 485
 v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621, 10 S. E. 285 183
 v. Grand Lodge, 3 Mo. App. 148 402
 v. Haddock, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 162 586
 v. Hinson, 123 N. C. 755, 31 S. E. 854 586
 v. Jennings, 14 Ohio St. 73 774
 v. Johnson, 25 Miss. 836 850
 v. Jones, 51 Ohio St. 513, 37 N. E. 945 484
 v. Jones, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 257 586
 v. Jones, 102 Mo. 305, 14 S. W. 940, 15 S. W. 556 333
 v. Kent, 5 N. D. 555, 35 L. R. A. 518, 67 N. W. 1063 854
 v. King, 12 La. Ann. 593 280
 v. Lane, 73 N. C. 547 586
 v. Lee, 49 Kan. 570, 31 Pac. 147 188
 v. Lewis, 51 Conn. 113 545
 v. McGlimsey, 80 N. C. 377, 30 Am. Rep. 90 587
 v. McLain, 49 Mo. App. 398 333
 v. McLelland, 1 N. C. (Conference) 523 586
 v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 36 L. R. A. 623, 37 Atl. 80 545
 v. Martin, 10 N. C. (3 Hawks) 351 586
 v. Moon, 45 Kan. 145, 25 Pac. 614 188
 v. Moore, 84 N. C. 724 586
 v. Narragansett, 16 R. I. 424, 3 L. R. A. 295, 16 Atl. 901 608
 v. New Orleans, 32 La. Ann. 709 277
 v. Northern C. E. Co. 18 Md. 193 706
 v. Ostwalt, 118 N. C. 1208, 32 L. R. A. 396, 24 S. E. 660 586
 v. Phillips, 66 N. C. 646 586
 v. Powell, 66 N. C. 640 586
 v. Shule, 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 153 691
 v. Smith, 49 Conn. 376 180
 v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.) 35 S. E. 619, 1039 586
 v. Sullivan, 14 Rich. L. 281 284
 v. Swenson, 79 N. C. 632 586
 v. Swenson, 82 N. C. 541 586
 v. Taylor, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 462 586
 v. Thaden, 43 Minn. 253, 45 N. W. 447 854
 v. Tomblin, 57 Kan. 841, 43 Pac. 144 333
 v. Tyler, 85 N. C. 569 586
 v. Vandersails, 42 Minn. 129, 6 L. R. A. 119, 43 N. W. 789 698
 v. Van Wye, 136 Mo. 227, 37 S. E. 938 547
 v. West, 71 N. C. 263 586
 State v. Western N. C. R. Co. 89 N. C. 584 586
 v. Wheeler, 25 Conn. 290 547
 v. White, 26 Or. 805, 40 Pac. 229 443
 v. Wooddin, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 199, 42 Am. Dec. 161 850
 v. Young, 8 Kan. 445 674
 State ex rel. Grand Lodge of Ancient Free Masons v. Addison, 2 S. C. N. S. 499 254
 Wood v. Board of Liquidation of City Debt, 40 La. Ann. 398, 4 So. 122 541
 Burbridge v. Call (Fla.) 26 So. 1016 550
 Taylor v. Delafield Supra. 69 Wis. 264, 34 N. W. 123 599
 Graef v. Forest County, 74 Wis. 610, 43 N. W. 551 485
 Jones v. Graham, 17 Neb. 43, 22 N. W. 114 347
 Walker v. Hurlstone, 92 Mo. 327, 5 S. W. 38 338
 Rogers v. Jenkins, 20 Wash. 78, 54 Pac. 765 442
 Richey v. McGrath, 95 Mo. 193, 8 S. W. 425 254
 Dickason v. Marion County Ct. 128 Mo. 427, 30 S. W. 103, 31 S. W. 23 333
 Grisell v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 184 265
 Bonnet v. Mathews, 33 La. Ann. 103 281
 Loomis v. Moffitt, 5 Ohio, 858 262
 Webster v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404, 22 N. W. 237 598
 Cornell v. Poynter (Neb.) 81 N. W. 431 347
 Stater v. Reis, 38 Minn. 371, 38 N. W. 97 759
 Castor v. Saline County Supra. 18 Neb. 422, 25 N. W. 587 343
 Carter v. School Dist. 49, 22 Neb. 48, 33 N. W. 480 343
 Whitcomb v. Seaton, 61 Iowa, 563, 16 N. W. 736 838
 Welse v. Sedalia Gaslight Co. 34 Mo. App. 501 598
 McCaslin v. Smith, 65 Wis. 93, 26 N. W. 253 847
 Leavenworth v. Tipton, 1 Blackf. 169 850
 State, Duke, Prosecutor v. Central New Jersey Teleph. Co. 53 N. J. L. 341, 11 L. R. A. 664, 21 Atl. 460 460
 New Brunswick Rubber Co., Prosecutors v. New Brunswick Street & Sewer Comrs. 88 N. J. L. 190, 20 Am. Rep. 380 824
 Stratton, Prosecutor v. Collins, 43 N. J. L. 562 609
 State Bd. of Tax Comrs. v. Holliday, 150 Ind. 216, 42 L. R. A. 826, 49 N. E. 14 824
 State Trust Co. v. Sheldon, 68 Vt. 259, 35 Atl. 178 650
 Stearns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 640 88
 v. State, 81 Md. 344, 32 Atl. 282 693
 Steed v. Harvey, 18 Utah, 367, 54 Pac. 1011 82
 Steele v. Frierson, 85 Tenn. 430, 3 S. W. 649 770, 771
 Steinweg v. Erie R. Co. 43 N. Y. 123, 3 Am. Rep. 673 645
 Stephenson v. Duncan, 73 Wis. 408, 41 N. W. 338 38
 v. Placataqua F. & M. Ins. Co. 54 Me. 55 378, 386, 393
 Stevens v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 8 Gray, 262 612
 v. Damon, 29 Vt. 521 313, 314
 v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256 349
 Stevenson v. Farnsworth, 7 Ill. 715 414
 Stewart, Re, 60 Kan. 787, 57 Pac. 976 183
 v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 538, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106 82
 v. Stewart, 5 Conn. 817 146
 Stillson v. Stillson, 46 Conn. 15 147
 Stimpson v. Reynolds, 14 Barb. 508 774
 Stine v. Berry, 96 Ky. 63, 27 S. W. 809 265
 Stinson v. Smith, 8 Minn. 366, Gil. 326 750
 Stirling v. Wagner, 4 Wyo. 5, 31 Pac. 1032, 32 Pac. 1128 212, 213, 215
 Stockton v. Frey, 4 Gill, 406, 45 Am. Dec. 138 86

Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115.....	89	Thomassen v. Whitwell, 9 Ben. 403, Fed. Cas. No. 13,929.....	98
Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 52, 29 Am. Rep. 458.....	458	Thompson v. Clark, 81 Va. 422.....	558
v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 118 U. S. 307, 29 L. ed. 636, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334.....	675	v. Lowe, 111 Ind. 272, 12 N. E. 476.....	793
v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 78 Mo. 655.....	81	v. Melser, 108 Ill. 359.....	451
Stout v. Zulick, 48 N. J. L. 601, 7 Atl. 302.....	485	v. Myers, 95 Ky. 597, 26 S. W. 1014.....	777
Stovall v. Banks, 10 Wall. 583, 19 L. ed. 1036.....	349	v. People, 144 Ill. 378, 32 N. E. 968.....	180
Strohm v. People, 160 Ill. 582, 43 N. E. 622.....	547	v. State, 54 Miss. 740.....	188
Studer v. Bleistein, 115 N. Y. 316, 5 L. E. A. 702, 22 N. E. 243.....	862	Three Spanish Sailors, 2 W. Bl. 1324.....	848
Sturges v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 86 Ill. 441.....	372	Thynn v. Thynn, 1 Vern. 296.....	74
v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 200, 4 L. ed. 549.....	277	Tide-Water Co. v. Coester, 18 N. J. Eq. 518, 90 Am. Dec. 634.....	800
Stutsman County, Re, 88 Fed. Rep. 337.....	75	Tiffany v. Bowerman, 2 Hun. 643.....	288
Stutz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Wis. 147, 40 N. W. 658.....	86	Timayenis v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 223.....	754
Sullivan v. New York & B. Cement Co. 119 N. Y. 848, 23 N. E. 820.....	475	Tinsley, Ex parte, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 527, 40 S. W. 306.....	839
v. Sullivan, 66 N. Y. 41.....	529	v. Hoskins, 111 N. C. 340, 16 S. E. 325.....	591
Summerfield v. Western U. Tele. Co. 87 Wis. 1, 57 N. W. 973.....	482	Tipton County v. Rogers Locomotive & Mach. Works, 103 U. S. 537, 26 L. ed. 344.....	560
Summers, Ex parte, 27 N. C. (5 Fred. L.) 153.....	850	Titusville v. Brennan, 143 Pa. 642, 14 L. R. A. 100, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 735, 22 Atl. 893.....	447
Sunbury & E. R. Co. v. Cooper, 33 Pa. 283.....	263	Todd v. Flournoy, 56 Ala. 99, 28 Am. Rep. 758.....	312
Supreme Commandery K. of G. R. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 46 Am. Rep. 382.....	780	v. Landry, 5 Mart. (La.) 463, 12 Am. Dec. 479.....	280
Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129.....	378	Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 19 L. R. A. 387, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 522, 54 Fed. Rep. 730.....	756
v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298, 3 N. E. 818.....	378	Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611.....	184
Supreme Lodge, K. of P. v. Knight, 117 Ind. 489, 3 L. R. A. 409, 20 N. E. 479.....	403	Tomlinson v. McKalg, 5 Gill, 256.....	702
Sutton v. Phillips, 116 N. C. 502, 21 S. E. 968.....	589	Tompkins v. Tompkins, 1 Story, 547, Fed. Cas. No. 14,091.....	68
Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 24 U. S. App. 145, 63 Fed. Rep. 501, 11 C. C. A. 320.....	704	Toof v. Martin, 18 Wall. 40, 20 L. ed. 481.....	710
Suydam v. Broadnax, 14 Pet. 67, 10 L. ed. 857.....	73	Toram v. Howard Beneficial Asso. 4 Pa. 519.....	594
Swentzel v. Penn Bank, 147 Pa. 140, 15 L. R. A. 305, 23 Atl. 405.....	713	Towanda Coal Co. v. Heeman, 86 Pa. 418.....	532
Syme v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 113 N. C. 565, 18 S. E. 114.....	686	Towle v. Towle, 46 N. H. 431.....	349
T.		Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 47 U. S. App. 260, 78 Fed. Rep. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305.....	119
Tacoma Hotel Co. v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 3 Wash. 316, 14 L. R. A. 669, 28 Pac. 516.....	598	Travellers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360.....	121
Taff v. State, 39 Conn. 82.....	153	v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 397, 19 L. ed. 487.....	87
Tappen, Re, 9 How. Fr. 395.....	840	Travis v. Waters, 12 Johns. 500.....	142
Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. 174, 9 L. ed. 91.....	71	Treusch v. Shryock, 51 Md. 162.....	257
Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 T. R. 656.....	399	Tuchband v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 437, 22 N. E. 361.....	80
Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 Beat & S. 826, 6 Eng. lish Ruling Cases. 603.....	577	Tucker v. Pollock, 21 R. I. 317, 43 Atl. 369.....	352
v. Dunbar, L. R. 4 C. P. 206.....	898	Tulloch v. Webster County, 46 Neb. 211, 64 N. W. 705.....	343
Tefft v. Sternberg (C. C. W. D. S. D. Ga.) 5 L. R. A. 221.....	352	Turbeville v. State, 56 Miss. 793.....	180
Tegarden v. Phillips, 14 Ind. App. 27, 42 N. E. 549.....	550	Turley v. Logan County, 17 Ill. 151.....	262
Temple v. Com. 75 Va. 892.....	841	Turner v. Althaus, 6 Neb. 54.....	347
v. Com. (Va.) 2 Crim. L. Mag. & Rep. 645, note, 654.....	858	v. Hearst, 115 Cal. 401, 47 Pac. 129.....	42
Terre Haute v. Mack, 139 Ind. 99, 38 N. E. 468.....	825	v. Newburg, 109 N. Y. 301, 16 N. E. 344.....	87
Terry v. Hazlewood, 1 Duv. 109.....	319	Twiggan v. Hunter, 19 R. I. 265, 29 L. R. A. 526, 33 Atl. 5.....	607
v. Jewett, 78 N. Y. 338.....	107	Twomley v. Central Park, N. & E. R. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 158, 25 Am. Rep. 162.....	89
Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bigham, 90 Tex. 225, 38 S. W. 162.....	773	U.
v. Cody, 166 U. S. 806, 41 L. ed. 1132, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703.....	107	Ulmer v. State, 14 Ind. 52.....	190
v. Glenn, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 30 S. W. 845.....	631	Underhill v. Collins, 132 N. Y. 271, 30 N. E. 576.....	583
Thayer v. Com. 12 Met. 9.....	847	Union Bank v. Vaiden, 18 How. 503, 15 L. ed. 472.....	73
v. Felt, 4 Pick. 354.....	227	Union C. L. Ins. Co. v. Cheever, 36 Ohio St. 201, 38 Am. Rep. 573.....	754
v. Tyler, 5 Allen, 94.....	352	v. Hook, 62 Ohio St. 256, 56 N. E. 908.....	764
Thebus v. Smiley, 110 Ill. 818.....	451	Union Nat. Bank v. Bank of Kansas City, 136 U. S. 223, 34 L. ed. 341, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1013.....	734
Thomas v. Cook, 2 Barn. & Ald. 119.....	583	v. Hill, 145 Mo. loc. cit. 396, 49 S. W. 1012.....	331
v. Douglass, 2 Johns. Cas. 226.....	204	Union P. R. Co. v. Saunders County Comrs. 7 Neb. 228.....	347
v. Gage, 141 N. Y. 506, 36 N. E. 385.....	584	v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 383, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877.....	136
v. Placerville Gold Quartz Min. Co. 65 Cal. 600, 4 Pac. 641.....	81	United States v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. 142 U. S. 544, 35 L. ed. 1109, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308.....	263
v. Thompson, 2 Johns. 471.....	849	v. Hall, 98 U. S. 343, 25 L. ed. 180.....	565

- United States v. Harmon, 45 Fed. Rep. 416 547
 v. Knox, 102 U. S. 422, 28 L. ed. 216 307
 v. McCarthy, 21 Blatchf. 469, 18 Fed. Rep. 87 854
 v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 466, 37 L. ed. 523, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650. 263
 v. Wayne, Wall. C. C. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 16,654 850
 v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 150, 8 L. ed. 640 442, 443
 v. Wyngail, 5 Hill, 18 845
 United States ex rel. Butts v. Muscatine, 8 Wall. 575, 19 L. ed. 490. 277
 Van Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 552, 18 L. ed. 409. 276
 United States Trust Co. v. United States F. Ins. Co. 18 N. Y. 199. 450
 Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 467, 34 L. ed. 196, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651 70, 77
 Utica Waterworks Co. v. Utica, 31 Hun, 431 299
- V.
- Valentine v. Wyson, 123 Ind. 47, 7 L. R. A. 783, 23 N. E. 1076. 793
 Van Bibber v. Van Bibber, 82 Ky. 350. 770
 Van Dresser v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 48 Fed. Rep. 202. 80
 Van Dyke's Case, 2 Whart. 312, 30 Am. Dec. 263. 378
 Van Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 552, 18 L. ed. 409. 276
 Van Poucke v. Netherland St. Vincent De Paul Soc. 63 Mich. 378, 29 N. W. 863 378, 593
 Vanquellin v. Bouard, 15 C. B. N. S. 341c. 312
 Van Raalte v. Harrington, 101 Mo. 611, 11 L. R. A. 424, 14 S. W. 710. 333
 Van Wagenen v. Paterson Sav. Bank, 10 N. J. Eq. 16. 704, 700
 Van Wickle v. Mechanics & T. Ins. Co. 97 N. Y. 350. 390
 Vasse v. Smith, 6 Cranch, 226, 3 L. ed. 207 561
 Venezuela R. Co. v. Kisch, L. R. 2 H. L. 99 732
 Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 127, 11 L. ed. 205. 640
 Viney v. Bignold, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 172, 27 Tent. L. J. 40. 388
 Vinsant v. Knox, 27 Ark. 272. 814
 Virginia, Ex parte, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676 839
- W.
- Wade v. Leroy, 20 How. 34, 15 L. ed. 813, 90
 Wagman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 48, 6 L. ed. 264. 130
 Wakefield v. South Boston R. Co. 117 Mass. 544 450
 Waldron v. Hughes, 44 W. Va. 126, 29 S. E. 505. 469
 Walker v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24. 352
 v. Davis, 1 Gray, 506. 562
 v. Woolen, 54 Ind. 164. 191
 Wallace v. Morris, 5 Hill, 391. 561
 Walmsley v. Nicholls, 86 La. Ann. 799. 283
 Walnut Street Bridge, Re, 191 Pa. 153, 43 Atl. 88. 603
 Walsh v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 10 764
 v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 160 Mass. 571, 36 N. E. 584. 305
 Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192. 800
 Wankford v. Wankford, 1 Saik. 306. 849
 Ward v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 102 Wis. 215, 78 N. W. 442. 481
 v. Ward, 40 W. Va. 611, 29 L. R. A. 449, 21 S. E. 746. 470
 Warder v. Fisher, 48 Wis. 338, 4 N. W. 470 864
 Wardwell v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 48 Minn. 514, 13 L. R. A. 596, 49 N. W. 206. 321
 Warner v. Abbey, 112 Mass. 355. 794
 v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 339, 42 L. ed. 491, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68. 107, 108
 v. National L. Asso. 100 Mich. 167, 58 N. W. 667. 131
 49 L. R. A.
- Warren v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 115 Mo. 572, 22 S. W. 490. 383
 v. Baxter, 48 Me. 193. 393
 v. Boston & M. R. Co. 163 Mass. 484, 40 N. E. 895. 85
 v. Chambers, 12 Ill. 124. 414
 v. Geer, 117 Pa. 207, 11 Atl. 415. 447
 Warrender v. Warrender, 2 Clark & F. 488 139
 Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 37 L. ed. 284, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 558. 86
 v. Tobriner, 147 U. S. 571, 37 L. ed. 284, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 558. 86
 Washington Ave. Case, 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255. 759
 Waterhouse v. Comer, 19 L. R. A. 403, 55 Fed. Rep. 149. 678
 Watkins v. Page, 2 Wis. 96. 774
 Watkins's Case, 3 Pet. 202, 7 L. ed. 653. 849
 Watson v. Jones, 18 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666 622, 624
 v. Mahan, 20 Ind. 225. 529
 v. New Milford Water Co. 71 Conn. 450, 42 Atl. 265. 407
 v. Sullivan, 5 Ohio St. 42. 857
 Watterson v. Masterson, 15 Wash. 511, 46 Pac. 1041. 304
 Wattles v. Hyde, 9 Conn. 10. 349
 Wattson v. Thibou, 17 Abb. Pr. 184. 293
 Waxahachie v. Brown, 67 Tex. 519, 4 S. W. 207 541
 Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 253. 671
 Weaver v. Davis, 47 Ill. 235. 352
 v. Lapsley, 43 Ala. 224. 277
 v. State, 83 Ind. 289. 189
 Webb, Ex parte, — Nev. — 51 Pac. 1027. 839
 Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 L. ed. 565. 434
 Webster v. French, 12 Ill. 302. 203
 Weddington v. Sloan, 15 B. Mon. 152. 835
 Weed Sewing Mach. Co. v. Baker, 1 McCrary, 579, 40 Fed. Rep. 56. 312
 Weinberg v. Conover, 4 Wis. 803. 774
 Weiner v. Van Rensselaer, 43 N. J. L. 547 774
 Welles v. Stout, 38 Fed. Rep. 807. 451
 Wells, Ex parte, 18 How. 307, 15 L. ed. 421, 442
 v. Alexandre, 130 N. Y. 642, 15 L. R. A. 219, 29 N. E. 142. 596
 v. Pontotoc County Supers. 102 U. S. 625, 26 L. ed. 122. 336
 Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347. 447
 Wentzville Tobacco Co. v. Walker, 123 Mo. loc. cit. 671, 27 S. W. 639. 337 West v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 27 Ohio St. 1, 22 Am. Rep. 294. 763
 v. Hayes, 120 Ala. 92, 23 So. 727. 774
 v. His Creditors, 1 La. Ann. 365. 284
 West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Kennelly, 170 Ill. 508, 48 N. E. 996. 89
 Western Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, 117 Mich. 669, 76 N. W. 105. 307, 492
 v. Reckless, 96 Fed. Rep. 70. 307
 Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Myatt, 98 Fed. Rep. 335. 672
 Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 7 L. ed. 481. 75
 West Plains Twp. v. Sage, 32 U. S. App. 725, 69 Fed. Rep. 943, 16 C. C. A. 553. 539
 Whaley Bridge Calico Printing Co. v. Green, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 109. 732
 Wharton v. Stevens, 84 Iowa, 107, 15 L. R. A. 630, 50 N. W. 562. 513
 Wheeler v. Emerson, 44 N. H. 182. 350
 v. Hanson, 161 Mass. 370, 37 N. E. 382. 615
 Whitaker v. Old Dominion Guano Co. 123 N. C. 368, 31 S. E. 629. 591
 Whitcomb's Case, 120 Mass. 118, 21 Am. Rep. 502. 847
 White v. Brownell, 2 Daly, 329. 402
 v. Murray (N. C.) 35 S. E. 256. 589
 v. Suffolk C. R. Co. 121 N. C. 484, 27 S. E. 1002. 686, 687, 689
 v. White, 3 Dana, 374. 768
 Whitman v. National Bank, 176 U. S. 539, 44 L. ed. 587, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 479. 307, 496
 v. National Bank, 51 U. S. App. 536, 83 Fed. Rep. 288, 28 C. C. A. 404. 307
 Whitmore v. South Boston Iron Co. 2 Allen, 52. 863

Whitney v. National Masonic Accl. Asso. 52 Minn. 378, 54 N. W. 184...	386	Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269.....	263
Whittier v. Wendell, 7 N. H. 257.....	290	Wiseman v. Lucksinger, 84 N. Y. 31, 38 Am. Rep. 479.....	515
Whittington v. Whittington, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 64.....	143	Wittkowsky v. Wasson, 71 N. C. 451690, 692,	693
Whittle v. Fond du Lac Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 1106.....	192	Wood, Re, 82 Mich. 81, 45 N. W. 1115.....	838
Whitwell, Ex parte, 98 Cal. 73, 19 L. R. A. 727, 38 Pac. 872.....	184	v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L. R. A. 376, 32 Atl. 906.....	599
Wickersham v. Orr, 9 Iowa, 254, 74 Am. Dec. 348.....	518	v. Bartholomew, 122 N. C. 177, 29 S. E. 980.....	689
Wight, Re, 184 U. S. 148, 38 L. ed. 870, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 490.....	855	v. Gamble, 11 Cush. 8, 59 Am. Dec. 135.....	312
v. Nicholson, 184 U. S. 148, 38 L. ed. 870, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 490.....	855	v. Goodfellow, 48 Cal. 185.....	650
Wilkins v. Irvine, 33 Ohio St. 138.....	516	v. People, 59 N. Y. 119.....	216
Willard v. Kimball, 10 Allen, 211, 87 Am. Dec. 632.....	774	v. Wood, L. R. 9 Exch. 196.....	360
Willett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869, 7 N. E. 631.....	186	Wood's Case, 3 Mason, 808, Fed. Cas. No. 17,944.....	711
William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Simpson, H. M. & Co. 54 Conn. 527, 9 Atl. 395.....	151	Woodbury v. Parshley, 7 N. H. 237, 26 Am. Dec. 789.....	514
Williams v. Davidson, 48 Tex. 33.....	808	Wood County Petroleum Co. v. West Vir- ginia Transp. Co. 28 W. Va. 210, 57 Am. Rep. 659.....	466
v. Dental Examiners, 93 Tenn. 619, 27 S. W. 1019.....	698	Woods v. Hilliard Flume & Lumber Co. 2 Wyo. 457.....	206
v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. ed. 1047, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617.....	800	v. Tipton County Comrs. 128 Ind. 289, 27 N. E. 611.....	427
v. Morehouse, 9 Conn. 470.....	849	Woolsey v. Independent Order of O. F. Lodge, No. 23, 61 Iowa, 492, 16 N. W. 576.....	594
v. Rich, 117 N. C. 235, 23 S. E. 257.....	591	Wright v. Bank of the Metropolis, 110 N. Y. 287, 1 L. R. A. 289, 18 N. E. 79.....	475
v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Telegr. Co. 116 N. C. 556, 21 S. E. 298.....	687	v. Defrees, 8 Ind. 298.....	262
v. Williams, 15 Lea, 438.....	760	v. Leonard, 11 C. B. N. S. 258.....	561
Williamson v. Jones, 48 W. Va. 562, 38 L. R. A. 694, 27 S. E. 411.....	467	Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 29 L. ed. 229, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086.....	789, 800
Williamson's Case, 28 Pa. 9, 67 Am. Dec. 374.....	847, 851	Wyckoff v. Southern Hotel Co. 24 Mo. App. 382.....	612
Willis v. Mabon, 48 Minn. 140, 16 L. R. A. 281, 50 N. W. 1110.....	495	Wyman v. Mitchell, 1 Cow. 316.....	313, 314
v. St. Paul Sanitation Co. 48 Minn. 140, 16 L. R. A. 281, 50 N. W. 1110.....	495
Willison v. First Nat. Bank, 80 Md. 198, 30 Atl. 749.....	706	X.
Wilson v. Book, 13 Wash. 676, 43 Pac. 939.....	304, 307	Xantho, The, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 503.....	399
v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580, 35 L. R. A. 544, 68 N. W. 278.....	191	Y.
v. Hines, 90 Ky. 221, 35 S. W. 627, 37 S. W. 148.....	269	Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox, 64 Conn. 105, 29 L. R. A. 90, 29 Atl. 803.....	732
v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435.....	266	Yates v. Batavia, 79 Ill. 500.....	410
v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 132 Pa. 27, 18 Atl. 1087.....	86	v. Lansing, 5 Johns. 282.....	849
v. Price-Raid Auditing Commission, 31 Kan. 257, 1 Pac. 587.....	669	v. Lansing, 9 Johns. 423, 6 Am. Dec. 290.....	849, 850
v. Tunstall, 6 Tex. 221.....	312	v. People, 6 Johns. 416.....	835
v. Welch, 157 Mass. 77, 31 N. E. 712.....	307, 734	Yates's Case, 4 Johns. 345.....	849
v. Young, 31 Wis. 574.....	482	6 Johns. 503.....	840, 850
Willt v. Welsh, 6 Watts, 9.....	561	Yelverton v. Yelverton, 1 Swabey & T. 574 Dec. 578.....	139
Willton v. Weston, 48 Conn. 325.....	545	Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 578.....	694
Winham v. McGuire, 51 Ga. 578.....	515	Y'ck Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064.....	697
Winn v. Albert, 2 Md. Ch. 42.....	287	Young Men's Christian Asso. v. Patterson, 61 N. J. L. 420, 39 Atl. 655.....	254
Winship v. Bass, 12 Mass. 198.....	349	Young Men's Protestant Temperance & Benev. Soc. v. Fall River, 160 Mass. 409, 36 N. E. 57.....	254
Winslow v. Grindal, 2 Me. 64.....	312
Winston, Ex parte, 9 Nev. 71.....	857	Z.
Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Taylor County, 52 Wis. 37, 8 N. W. 833.....	608	Zanesville v. Richards, 5 Ohio St. 589...	568
Wisconsin Red Pressed Brick Co. v. Hood, 54 Minn. 543, 56 N. W. 165.....	863
Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32, 21 N. W. 828.....	460

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.

Statutes.

13 Edw. I., chap. 31. Statute of West- minster.....	208
3 Car. I. Petition of right.....	851
16 Car. I. chap. 10. Star chamber court.....	851
31 Car. I. Habeas corpus act.....	851
17 Car. II. chap. 8, § 1. Death between verdict and judg- ment.....	160
31 Car. II. chap. 2. Habeas corpus.....	848
4 Wm. & M. p. 243. Divorce.....	730
49 L. R. A.

8 & 9 Wm. III. chap. 11, § 6. Judgment against dead per- son, p. 6.....	161
-------------------------------------------------------------------------------	-----

United States.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 9. Habeas corpus.....	848
Art. 2, § 2. Power of president to grant pardons.....	442
Amend. 5. Prosecution.....	838
Amend. 10. Rights of states.....	185
Amend. 14. Due process of law.....	185, 265
277, 568, 697, 788, 800

Amend. 14, § 1. Equal protection of the laws. 183, 480

Resolutions.

1780, Jan. Sess. chap. 9. Military pensions. 565

1780, Jan. Sess. chaps. 39, 240. Military pensions. 565

Statutes.

1789, § 12. Judiciary act. 66

1804, § 12. Government of territory of Louisiana. 673

1870, June 30. Bridge over Niagara river. 677

1887, March 3. Jurisdiction of United States circuit courts. 64

1888, August 13. Judiciary act. 64

1893, Feb. 11, chap. 83. Testimony before interstate commerce commission. 852

Statutes at Large.

Vol. 25, p. 433. Judiciary act. 64

Vol. 27, p. 443. Testimony before interstate commerce commission. 852

Revised Statutes.

§ 860. Witnesses. 852

§ 1791, 1792. Flag of the United States. 185

§ 5234. National banking act. 807

Alabama.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 1. Commutation of taxes. 609

Arkansas.

Sandels & Hill's Digest.

§ 1114. Jurisdiction of circuit courts. . . 69

§§ 1120-1122. Appellate jurisdiction over probate courts. 69

§ 1152. Trial de novo in circuit court. . . 69

P. 1599, § 7408. Proving will and contesting probate. 69

§ 7409. Appeal from order of probate. . . 69

§ 7410, 7411. Receiving will in evidence. 69

§ 7441. Proceedings in probate of will. . . 69

§ 7422. Probate of will before court or clerk in vacation. 69

§ 7423. Retrial of question of probate. . . 70

California.

Civil Code.

§ 129. Proof of actual residence required. 139

§ 309. No limitation in actions against directors of corporation. 650

§ 322. Liability of stockholder for debts. 650

§ 1914. Loan presumed to be on interest. 650

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 348. No limitation where money deposited in bank. 650

§§ 359, 360. Statute of limitations. . . . 649

§ 395. Trial of actions, according to residence of parties. 81

§ 411. Service of summons on business agents. 80

§§ 1021 et seq. Costs dependent upon judicial determination. 141

§ 1962. Conclusive presumptions specified. 139

Connecticut.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 3. Freedom of religious profession and worship. 547

Art. 1, § 5. Freedom of speech and press. 546

Art. 1, § 6. No law to be passed to restrain the same. 546

Statutes.

1848, chap. 5, § 2. Survival act. 405

1879, p. 428. Obscene literature. 545

1882, p. 433. Obscene literature. 546

1895, p. 558. Obscene literature. 545

1897, chap. 194, § 16. Allowance of bill of exceptions. 405

49 L. R. A.

Revision, 1750.

P. 43. Descent and distribution. 146

Revision, 1849.

P. 274. Remarriage of divorced parties. 146

Revision, 1875.

P. 422, § 9. Actions for personal injury. 406

Revision, 1888.

§ 1537. Obscene publications. 546

§ 1538. Punishment for spread of immoral publications. 546

General Statutes.

§ 618. Right to dower. 144

§ 619. Application for, and assignment of, dower. 145

§§ 623, 624. Property rights of husband and wife. 145

§ 630. Distribution of intestate estates. . 144

§ 1008. Actions for personal injury. . . 406

§ 1009. Damages for negligence causing death. 406

§ 1111. Facts to appear of record. 407

§ 2803. Remarriage of divorced parties. 144

P. 513. Obscene literature. 545

Dakota Territory.

Statutes.

1888, March 8. Special charter to Huron. 535

Florida.

Revised Statutes.

§ 967. Disqualification of judges. 549

Georgia.

Civil Code.

§ 5181. Declarations of deceased persons. 175

§ 5193. Admissions of privies. 175

Illinois.

Constitution.

Art. 2, § 1. Inherent and inalienable rights. 183

Art. 2, § 2. Due process of law. 183

Art. 2, § 4. Freedom of speech. 183

Art. 4, § 22. Prohibiting special legislation. 183

Private Laws.

1859, Feb. 18, p. 13. Chicago Board of Trade. 355

Statutes.

1899, Apr. 22, p. 234. Flag law. 183

Revised Statutes, 1874.

P. 779, § 34. Denial of execution of instrument. 414

Indiana.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 21. Compensation for property taken. 811

Art. 4, § 12. Each house shall keep a journal. 262

Art. 10, § 1. Uniform taxation. 803

Statutes.

1857, p. 53. Assessment for improvements. 803

1865, p. 29. Assessment for local improvements. 803

1867, p. 66. Assessment for local improvements. 803

1889, p. 74. Assessment of benefits. . . . 806

1889, March 8, p. 237. Street improvements. 790

1891, p. 137. Charter of Indianapolis. . . 822

1891, pp. 175-181. Street improvements. . 822

1891, p. 324. Street improvements. . . . 804

1893, March 3, p. 56. Charter of Indianapolis. 822

1893, March 3, p. 65. Charter of Evansville. 822

PP. 104-110. Street improvements. . . . 822

1893, March 3, 202. Ft. Wayne charter. . 822

1898, March 3, pp. 243-249. Street improvements.....	822
1895, March 11, p. 239. Ft. Wayne charter.....	822
1895, March 11, p. 258. Charter of Evansville.....	822
1895, March 15, p. 384. Indianapolis charter.....	823
1897, Feb. 23, p. 56. Charter of Indianapolis.....	823
1897, Feb. 26, p. 79. Indianapolis charter.....	823
1899, March 3, p. 270. Charter of Terre Haute.....	823
1899, March 4, p. 399. Indianapolis charter.....	823
1899, pp. 314-322. Street Improvements.....	823
1899, p. 631. Street Improvements.....	804
Revised Statutes, 1852.
P. 217. Provision for improvements.....	803
Revised Statutes, 1881.
§ 3163. Assessment for local improvements.....	803
§§ 3160 et seq. Opening and vacation of streets.....	813
§ 3170. Assessment of damages and benefits.....	806
Chap. 49. Drainage.....	813
§ 4288. Assessment of benefits.....	808
Chap. 70. Free gravel roads.....	813
Revised Statutes, 1894.
§ 3541, cl. 46. Planting shade trees at expense of abutters.....	808
§§ 3629 et seq. Opening and vacation of streets.....	813
§ 3633. Assessment of damages and benefits.....	806
Chap. 49. Drainage.....	813
§ 4288-4298. Barrett law.....	799
§ 5624, 5625. Report of commissioners.....	805
§ 5658. Assessment of benefits.....	806
Chap. 76. Free gravel roads.....	813
Horner's Revised Statutes, 1897.
§ 3106, cl. 46. Planting shade trees at expense of abutters.....	808
§§ 3166 et seq. Opening and vacation of streets.....	813
§ 3170. Assessment of damages and benefits.....	806
Chap. 49. Drainage.....	813
§ 4288. Assessment of benefits.....	806
§ 6771-6780. Barrett law.....	799
Chap. 70. Free gravel roads.....	813
Kansas.
Constitution.
Art. 1, § 1. Executive department.....	665
Art. 2, § 1. Legislative department.....	665
Art. 3, § 1. Judicial department.....	665
Statutes.
1899, chap. 124, § 2. Assessment of railroad property.....	670
1898, chap. 28. Court of visitation.....	662
General Statutes, 1897.
Chap. 83, § 30. Appeal upon question reserved by state.....	188
Chap. 102, § 33. Limitation of criminal actions.....	189
General Statutes, 1899.
§§ 5779-5820. Court of visitation.....	663
Code of Civil Procedure.
§ 40. Abatement of action by death of party.....	163
Kentucky.
Constitution.
§ 27. Division of powers of government.....	261
§ 28. Power of one department not to be exercised by other.....	267
§ 36. Meeting of first general assembly.....	261
§ 38. Qualification of members.....	266
§ 40. Each house to keep a journal.....	262
§ 41. Adjournment during session.....	261
§ 42. Limitation of length of session.....	261
§ 59, subs. 27. Local legislation.....	112
§ 80. Adjournment of houses by governor.....	261
49 L. R. A.

§ 90. Determination of contested elections.....	260
§ 170. Property exempt from taxation.....	252
§ 196. Common carrier's liability.....	560
Statutes.
1896, March 21. Mechanics' lien law.....	250
General Statutes.
P. 1036. Property exempt from taxation.....	253
Statutes.
§ 1531. Contested elections.....	267
§ 1535. Notice of contest.....	268
§ 1596a, subsec. 8. Determination of election contests.....	260
§ 2064. Death of devisee before testator.....	778
§ 2332. Liability of tenant in common for waste.....	417
§ 2463. Mechanics' lien law.....	256
§ 4841. Rule as to devise or legacy.....	777
Louisiana.
Constitution, 1868.
Art. 118. Taxation to be uniform.....	608
Constitution, 1879.
Art. 128. Court of appeals in New Orleans.....	279
Constitution, 1898.
Art. 41. Presentation of bills to governor.....	222
Art. 76. Bills to be presented to governor.....	223
Art. 98. Jurisdiction of courts of appeal.....	275
Art. 103. Trial of cases on appeal.....	275
Art. 131. Court of appeal.....	275
Art. 325, § 2. Rule of construction.....	275
Art. 325, § 7. Rule of construction as to courts.....	275
Art. 325, § 8. Constitution in force.....	280
Statutes.
1888, No. 66. Pharmacy act.....	220
1898, No. 190, § 1. Competency of wife to testify.....	283
Revised Statutes.
§ 522. Day of public rest.....	228
Revised Civil Code.
Art. 2281. Competency of wife to testify.....	283
Code Practice.
Art. 207. Legal holidays.....	228
Arts. 539 et seq. Final judgments.....	278
Art. 548. Judgment in property.....	273
Art. 575. Suspensive appeal.....	282
Art. 763. On what days sheriff may act.....	228
Maine.
Constitution.
Art. 9, § 8. Taxes on real estate.....	297
Statutes.
1881, March 16. Charter of Waterville Water Company.....	297
1887, Feb. 8. Amendment of charter.....	297
Maryland.
Declaration of Rights.
Art. 23. Due process of law.....	697
Constitution.
Art. 3, § 39. Banking corporations.....	711
Statutes.
1868, chap. 471, § 195. Suits by receivers.....	702
1886, chap. 439. Regulating business of plumbers.....	698
1894, chap. 263. Proceedings against corporation.....	714
1896, chap. 349. Corporations.....	702
1896, chap. 378. Dentistry.....	696
1896, chap. 446. Deed or conveyance by insolvent.....	713
Code of Public General Laws.
Art. 23, § 239. Power of receivers.....	703
Art. 23, §§ 264, 264a. Dissolution of corporations.....	701
Art. 23, § 269. Power of receivers.....	706
Art. 23, § 274. Suits by receivers.....	702

Art. 32. Dentistry	696
Art. 47. Insolvent law	702
Art. 47, § 11. Distribution of assets	706
Art. 47, § 14. Deed or conveyance by insolvent	718
Art. 47, § 22. Prohibiting preferences	703

Massachusetts.Declaration of Rights.

Art. 6. Exclusive privileges	565
Art. 15. Right of trial by jury	736

Constitution.

Pt. 2, chap. 3, art. 3. Justice of the peace	847
Pt. 2, chap. 5, § 2. Rewards and immunities	565

Statutes.

1784, chap. 28, § 6. Power over witnesses	847
1838, chap. 42. Power over witnesses	847
1895, chap. 378. Requiring fenders on street cars	422
1897, chap. 402, § 1. Right of assignee to sue in his own name	307

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 85, § 33. Justice of the peace	847
--------------------------------------------	-----

Public Statutes.

Chap. 147, § 33. Suit by wife for separate maintenance	735
--------------------------------------------------------------	-----

General Statutes.

Chap. 120, § 50. Justice of the peace	847
Chap. 131, §§ 5, 6. Power over witnesses	847

Minnesota.Constitution.

Art. 9, § 1. Equal taxation	759
Art. 10, § 3. Liability of stockholder	495

Statutes.

1895, chap. 302. Establishment of rural highway	758
1895, chap. 320. Provision for blended motion	642

General Statutes.

§ 2501. Liability of stockholder	490
§ 2696. Duty of railroad to construct crossings	620
§§ 5905, 5906. Statutory liability of stockholders	401
§ 6889. Railroad company not liable when furnishing gate lock	632

Missouri.Constitution, 1875.

Art. 12, § 27. Criminal and civil liability of bank officers	331
--------------------------------------------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1877, April 18, p. 239. Criminal liability of bank officer	331
1877, April 23, pp. 85, 86. Evidence of knowledge of directors	332
1877, May 15, p. 28. Banking act	331
1877, p. 30. Duty of directors to report to secretary of state	325
1887, p. 102. Criminal liability of private banks	332

Revised Statutes, 1879.

Chap. 21, art. 7, § 918. Civil liability of bank officer	332
Chap. 24, art. 3, § 1350. Criminal liability of bank officer	332
§ 3481. Place for bringing suits	81
§ 3489, subdiv. 4. Service of summons	81

Revised Statutes, 1889.

Chap. 42, art. 7. Savings bank and fund companies	329
§ 2751. Duty of directors to report to secretary of state	335
§ 2752. Form of statement	325
§ 2753. Publication of statement	335
§ 2754. Duty of secretary to call for statement	335

§ 2760. Liability of bank directors and officers	325
§ 2761. Evidence of knowledge of directors	332
§ 3581. Criminal liability of banks	332

General Statutes.

Chap. 201. Criminal liability of bank officer	331
-----------------------------------------------------	-----

Nebraska.Constitution.

Art. 9, § 1. Revenue	345
Art. 9, § 4. Taxes not to be released	345
Art. 9, § 6. Municipal taxation	345

Statutes.

1897, chap. 95. Deficiency judgment	341
1899, Apr. 1, chap. 62, §§ 1, 3. Free attendance at public high schools	345

Compiled Statutes, 1897.

Chap. 16, § 42. Power of trustees of religious societies	342
Chap. 16, § 55. Means devoted to object of corporation	342
Chap. 16, § 169. Articles of incorporation	343
Chap. 79, subdiv. 6. High school districts	345
Chap. 70, subdiv. 8, § 3. Powers of trustees	345
Chap. 79, subdiv. 14, §§ 2, 7. General control; elections	345
Chap. 79, subdiv. 17, § 2. Direction and control of free schools	345
Chap. 88, § 2. Effect of repeal on pending actions	341

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 847. Entry of deficiency judgments	341
§ 849. Deficiency judgments	341

New Hampshire.Statutes.

1822, July 2, chap. 31, § 7. Debt due from administrator	349
----------------------------------------------------------------	-----

Revised Statute.

Chap. 159, § 9. Debt due from administrator	349
---------------------------------------------------	-----

Public Statute.

Chap. 188, § 12. Bond of administrator	349
Chap. 189, § 12. Debt due from administrator	349
Chap. 199, § 3. Discharge of surety on probate bond	350
Chap. 199, §§ 5-8. Suit on probate bond	351

New Jersey.Constitution.

Art. 4, § 7, ¶ 12. Assessment of property	609
-------------------------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1896, p. 185. Recoupment	573
--------------------------------	-----

General Statutes.

Vol. 2, p. 2555, § 129. Recoupment	573
------------------------------------------	-----

New York.Constitution, 1894.

Art. 1, § 7. Passage of general laws for construction of drains	788
-----------------------------------------------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1853, chap. 174, § 14. Opening of private roads; procedure	701
1869, chap. 888. Drainage of swamps	789
1870, chap. 619. Improvement of Atlantic avenue	812
1877, May 23, chap. 321. Forfeitures of life insurance policies	129
1881, chap. 689. Improvement of Atlantic avenue	812
1884, chap. 510. Improvement of streets	812
1885, chaps. 396, 406. Street improvements	812

- 1892, chap. 690, § 92. Insurance law; forfeiture of policy... 186 1893, chap. 550. Street improvement... 812
 1895, chap. 384. Drainage of agricultural lands... 787
 1895, chap. 816. Public improvements... 812
- Revised Statutes.*
 Vol. 1, p. 513, §§ 54, 77, 79. Opening of private roads... 789
 Vol. 2, p. 548. Drainage law... 789
 Vol. 2, p. 567, §§ 40, 42. Commitment for contempt... 846
 Vol. 2, p. 706, §§ 1-5. Arrests by justice of the peace... 846
- Code of Civil Procedure.*
 § 544. Filing of supplemental complaint. 290
- North Carolina.
Constitution.
 Art. 1, § 1. Inalienable rights of men... 590
- Statutes.*
 1796, chap. 452. Expression of opinion by trial judge... 689
 1887, chap. 33. Plea of contributory negligence... 690
 1893, chap. 214. Preservation of public health... 568
 1897, chap. 109. Judgment of nonsuit... 685
- Code.*
 § 184. Who are to be defendants... 684
 § 413. Expression of opinion by trial judge... 686
 § 1287. Appeal by the state... 586
 § 1910. Compensation for making partition sale... 590
- North Dakota.
Revised Code.
 §§ 5199-5203. Time of commencing actions... 292
 § 5291. Joinder of actions... 292
 § 5301. Supplemental pleading... 290
- Ohio.
Constitution, 1851.
 Art. 1, § 16. Right of courts to be open... 386
 Art. 1, § 19. Private property inviolate... 566
 Art. 2, § 9. Each house shall keep a journal... 263
 Art. 12, § 2. Uniform taxation... 433, 568
 Art. 13, § 6. Power of assessments... 566
- Statutes.*
 1847, Feb. 8. Habeas corpus... 856
 Vol. 72, p. 145, § 9. Grant of alimony pending suit... 857
 Vol. 75, p. 726. Special proceedings... 857
 Vol. 75, p. 749, § 13. Grant of alimony pending suit... 857
 Vol. 75, p. 804, § 1. Final order... 857
- Swan's Revised Statute.*
 P. 454. Habeas corpus... 856
- Revised Statutes, 1880.*
 Vol. 2, p. 1361. Special proceedings... 857
- Revised Statutes.*
 § 166. Powers of state auditor... 432
 § 2264. Assessment for street improvement... 801
 § 2739. Valuing personal property for taxation... 433
 § 2744. Taxing property of corporation... 432
 § 2781. False valuation of taxable property... 435
 § 4651. Public roads... 572
 § 4963. Entry of order by judge... 857
 § 5331. Entry of judgments on journal... 857
 § 5701. Application for alimony... 857
 § 6707. "Final order" defined... 857
 § 6709. Jurisdiction of Supreme Court... 856
 § 6741. "Mandamus" defined... 432
- Bates's Annotated Statutes, 1899.*
 §§ 2293a, 1-9. Street improvements in Cincinnati... 812
- 49 L. R. A.
- §§ 2293b-2293d. Street improvements in Cincinnati... 812
- Code of Civil Procedure.*
 § 515. Petition in error... 856
 § 530. Abolishment of writs of error and certiorari... 856
 § 604. Code not to control certain proceedings... 856
 § 605. Uniformity of practice in cases of error... 857
- Oklahoma.
Statute.
 §§ 5117, 5118. Pleas on behalf of defendant... 441
 §§ 5127, 5133. Pleas on behalf of defendant... 441
- Pennsylvania.
Constitution, 1838.
 Art. 7, § 4. Compensation for property taken... 601
 Art. 9, § 10. Compensation for property taken... 601
- Constitution, 1874.*
 Art. 16, § 8. Compensation for property taken... 601
- Statutes.*
 1812, March 31. Abolishing survivorship... 444
 1830, Feb. 6 (Pamph. Laws, p. 39). Prohibiting peddling of clocks without license... 447
 1848, April 11. Married woman's act... 445
 1887, June 3. Property of married women... 445
 1889, April 23. Law of the road... 763
 1891, May 16 (P. L. 75). Road law; proceeding before viewers... 601
- Rhode Island.
Constitution.
 Art. 1, § 2. Distribution of burdens of state... 607
- Public Laws.*
 1892, May 19, chap. 1088. Property exempt from taxation... 607
 1896, Jan. Sess. chap. 386. Property exempt from taxation... 607
 Chap. 389. Property exempt from taxation... 607
- General Statutes.*
 Chap. 239, § 1. Submission of case upon agreed statement of facts... 607
 Chap. 254, §§ 2, 3. Sale of attached perishable property... 351
- South Carolina.
Revised Statutes, 1893.
 § 1500. Liability of stockholders... 448
- South Dakota.
Statutes.
 1893, chap. 102. Innkeeper's lien... 611
- Compiled Statutes.*
 P. 257, §§ 1149, 1150. Issuance of bonds for municipal purposes... 541
 § 2505. Rule for construing Code... 611
 § 3686. Innkeeper's lien... 611
 § 4802. Construction of statutes... 611
- Tennessee.
Statutes.
 1887, Feb. 17. Subscriptions to railroad... 124
 1887, March 2. Issuance of bonds by Johnson county... 124
- Milliken & Vertrees' Code.*
 § 2507. Liability of bank directors... 334

- § 4075. Unlawful detainer 438
 § 4082. Notice to quit 438

Texas.

Constitution, 1869.

- Art. 12, § 43. Law of limitation 200

Constitution, 1876.

- Art. 3, § 39. When statutes take effect . . . 108
Statutes.

- 1846, May 13, § 143. Proceedings in district courts 775
 1849, Dec. 1. When laws take effect . . . 198
 1885, March 27. Corporations 197

Revised Statutes, 1871.

- Art. 566, subdiv. 8. Construction and maintenance of telegraph or telephone line 461
 Art. 698. Authority to set poles across public roads 450
 Art. 699. Power of eminent domain by telegraph companies 459

Revised Statutes, 1878.

- Art. 566, subdiv. 27. Corporations 197

Revised Statutes, 1891.

- Art. 642, subdiv. 8. Construction and maintenance of telegraph and telephone line 459
 Art. 745. Permits to foreign corporations to do business 461

Paschal's Digest.

- Art. 4576. Where laws take effect 198

Virginia.

Code.

- § 3395. Actions of contract 462

Washington.

Constitution.

- Art. 4, § 4. Jurisdiction of Supreme Court 844
 Art. 12, § 11. Liability of stockholder . . 304
 49 L. R. A.

Hill's Code.

- Vol. 1, § 1511. Liability of stockholder . . 304

Ballinger's Annotated Codes & Statutes.

- Vol. 2, § 4934. Conditions precedent in contract 136

Wisconsin.

Constitution.

- Art. 1, § 9. Right of persons to remedy for wrongs 495

Private & Local Laws.

- 1872, chap. 92. Attachment of lands to Shawano village 484

Sanborn & Berryman's Annotated Statute.

- § 674. Testing validity of ordinance . . . 485
 § 1816. Liability of railroad for injury . . 641

Revised Statutes, 1898.

- §§ 670, 671. Organization of town 484
 § 1339. Notice of injury 479
 § 2829. Error or defect in proceedings . . 481
 § 2858. Request for special verdict 481
 §§ 3223, 3224. Statutory liability of stockholder 491
 § 4222, subdiv. 5. Notice of injury to defendant 479

Wyoming.

Constitution.

- Art. 1, § 11. Self-incriminating testimony . 839
 Art. 5, § 3. Jurisdiction of court in habeas corpus 836

Statutes.

- 1886, chap. 60, § 778. Defining final order 856
 1890, p. 142. Compounding felony 841
 1890, chap. 38, § 1. Bill of exceptions . . 209

Revised Statutes.

- § 1264, subdivs. 4, 5. Application for habeas corpus 835
 § 1299. Habeas corpus act 836
 § 2341. Computation of time 205
 § 2646. Bill of exceptions 202
 § 2649. Signing and filing of bill 209
 § 3126. Defining final order 856
 § 3128. Jurisdiction of supreme court . . 836

LAWYERS' REPORTS

ANNOTATED.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Albert LIMBERG, Resp't.,

GLENWOOD LUMBER COMPANY, Appt.

(127 Cal. 598.)

1. A teamster of experience will, as matter of law, assume the risk attendant on the use of short lines if he proceeds to perform his work with such appliances, although he has complained to his employer of their insufficiency, where the latter made no promise to remedy the defects, and nine months have elapsed since the last complaint.

2. A teamster of experience cannot claim that he was unaware of the danger attendant on using a wagon without a seat, to avoid the conclusion that he assumed the risk by voluntarily doing so without protest.

3. Evidence that the shortness of lines was remedied after injury to the teamster because thereof is not admissible in an action to recover for the injury.

4. Expert evidence as to what appliances are safe and what are unsafe is not admissible in an action by a teamster to recover from his employer for injuries caused by short lines and absence of a wagon seat.

(February 21, 1900.)

NOTE.—Contributory negligence in entering or remaining in an employment.

1. When the servant's action is barred.

a. Introductory.

b. Servant's knowledge as an element of the defense, generally.

c. Contributory negligence held to be a question for jury where servant's knowledge of defects only is shown.

d. Contributory negligence inferred from servant's knowledge both of defects and resulting dangers.

e. Contributory negligence inferred from servant's knowledge of defects alone.

f. The rationale of the principle.

g. Knowledge of danger held to be not necessarily a bar to the action.

h. Missouri doctrine as to the effect of the servant's continuance of work with knowledge.

i. Failure of servant to report defect.

j. Duty of the servant to quit the employment when he ascertains that he is exposed to an abnormal danger.

II. Relation between the defenses of assumption of risks and contributory negligence.

a. Introductory.

b. Logical independence of the two defenses.

c. Assumption of risk a conclusive defense irrespective of whether servant exercised due care.

d. Contributory negligence in respect to risks assumed.

e. Defenses confused owing to inaccuracies of terminology.

f. Doctrinal confusion between the defenses.

g. Concluding remarks.

1. When the servant's action is barred.

a. Introductory.

b. Assumption of an assumption of the risk caused by the master's breaches of duty is based, as we have seen, upon the theory of an implied contract. But it is obvious that, under the general principles of the law of negligence, evidence of the servant's continued exposure of himself to a known peril also raises a question which is independent of the conventional relations of the parties, viz., whether he was acting with reasonable prudence in encountering that peril. Side by side, therefore, with the series of cases in which the defense raised is an assumption of the risk, we find another series in which the theory upon which the master seeks to escape liability is that the servant contributed to his own injury by his negligence in entering or remaining in an employment which involved abnormal dangers. The rulings upon this aspect of the servant's conduct are much less consistent and harmonious than those in which his knowledge of the risk is dealt with as evidence of its acceptance by him, and the difficulties of formulating a body of clear and well-defined principles are greatly aggravated by the extraordinary confusion, both verbal and doctrinal, between the two defenses. (See II. b, infra).

b. Servant's knowledge as an element of the defense, generally.

There is no dispute with regard to the evidential significance of the servant's knowledge, when considered under its negative aspects. As, in cases where the defense raised is an assumption of the risk, it is well settled that the master cannot escape liability on the ground of the servant's contributory negligence unless the elements of danger are shown to have been known, either actually or constructively, to the servant.

No one can be charged with negligence in failing to avoid danger of which he knows nothing. Kearns v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1885) 66 Iowa, 599, 24 N. W. 231.

Negligence can only be affirmed in respect of situations and conditions known to the party to whom it is imputed. Brown v. Louisville &

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Santa Clara County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant in furnishing plaintiff unsafe appliances with which to carry on his work. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. D. W. Burchard for appellant.

Mr. J. C. Black for respondent.

Garoutte, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant appeals from a judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial. The action is one for damages for personal injuries, and arises upon the following state of facts, as testified to by the plaintiff and his witnesses. Plaintiff was a teamster of experience, forty-one years of age. He was hired by defendant to haul lumber with a wagon and four horses. He continued in this employment for a period of eleven months. Then, while traveling upon the public road with his loaded wagon, he fell therefrom beneath the wheels, and the loss of a leg was the result. He asserts negligence upon the part of the defendant in this, that the appliances furnished him with which to do the work were defective. These defective appliances consisted of a wagon having no seat, and also of a pair of lines, that were too short. It may be conceded that, if either of these defects had not existed, the accident would not have happened. A short time after the hiring of plaintiff he complained to defendant at two different times that the lines were too short, but never made any complaint as to the lack of a seat

N. R. Co. (1895) 111 Ala. 275, 19 So. 1001; s. p. Higgins v. Williams (1896) 114 Cal. 176, 45 Pac. 1041.

As to the general principle that knowledge is an essential element of negligence, see also note to Walkowski v. Penokee & Gogebic Consol. Mines (Mich.) 41 L. R. A. 33.

Among the elements of liability in these cases, there are, in the first place, the abnormal material conditions which create the danger.

In the following cases the action was sustained: Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Donnelly (1888) 70 Tex. 371, 8 S. W. 52 (railway track had suddenly, and without plaintiff's knowledge, become worse owing to the recent passage of a train-hand-car derailed); St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McClain (1891) 80 Tex. 85, 15 S. W. 789 (fireman was ignorant of defective wheel on his engine); Stackman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1891) 80 Wis. 428, 50 N. W. 404 (owing to want of time for examination, and being obliged by the roughness of the ground to look down to see where to step, a servant was caught between a car which he was pushing and a bank); Norman v. Wabash R. Co. (1894) 22 U. S. App. 505, 62 Fed. Rep. 727, 10 C. C. A. 617 (plaintiff injured through kneeling on a floor, not known to be defective); Gisson v. Schwabacher (1893) 99 Cal. 419, 34 Pac. 104 (location of unprotected machinery not known to servant).

An instruction to the effect that the employer has a right to expect that the servant will adopt the less hazardous course is misleading and erroneous, where the evidence is that the servant did not know there was any hazard in the course he actually took. Hawkins v. Johnson (1886) 105 Ind. 29, 55 Am. Rep. 169, 4 N. E. 172 (revolving shaft had been repaired without the plaintiff's knowledge so that he could not drive under it without injury).

If the accident was due to two or more physical conditions, the defense of contributory negligence fails, unless the servant was aware of all of them. Waldhler v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 87 Mo. 37 (switchman knew that point of frog was loose, but did not know that the plate was broken until his foot struck it); New Jersey & N. Y. R. Co. v. Young (1892) 1 U. S. App. 96, 49 Fed. Rep. 723, 1 C. C. A. 428 (fireman knew that the air-brake was defective, but not that the defect was so great as to render it impossible to stop the train within the distance at which a danger signal can be seen); Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Brown (1893) 18 U. S. App. 10, 56 Fed. Rep. 804, 6 C. C. A. 142 (workman did not know 49 L. R. A.

that his cutting of a supporting post would cause a structure to fall).

In Fort Worth & D. City R. Co. v. Wilson (1893) 3 Tex. Civ. App. 587, 24 S. W. 686, it was held that a charge that if the deceased knew of the storm that washed away the defendant's track, the plaintiff could not recover, was properly refused, since the fact that the deceased might have had notice of the rain would not charge him with contributory negligence, unless he also had notice of the condition of the track which rain rendered dangerous.

In Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1896) 162 Ill. 459, 44 N. E. 876, the court, after remarking that the servant usually "assumes" the risks of the service as increased by a known defect, states that this rule is subject to the qualification that "the servant is not chargeable with contributory negligence" if he knows that defects exist, but does not know, actually or constructively, that risks exist. See infra. But as the actual ruling was that the plaintiff's knowledge of the insufficiency of the lights furnished for work on a dark and stormy night did not indicate that he knew of the unsafe condition of the pile of ore and of the risk in working near it, it is plain that the decision might better have been put on the ground that the material conditions creating the danger were not fully known to him.

The second element of liability is, the possibility of injury which is incurred by remaining in the employment. Wuotilla v. Duluth Lumber Co. (1887) 37 Minn. 153, 33 N. W. 551; Taylor v. Carew Mfg. Co. (1885) 140 Mass. 150, 3 N. E. 21; Slms v. Lindsay (1896) 122 N. C. 678, 30 S. E. 19; Bjorman v. Fort Bragg Redwood Co. (1894) 104 Cal. 626, 38 Pac. 451; Clarke v. Holmes (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 937, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 356, 8 Jur. N. S. 992, 10 Week. Rep. 405, per Byles, J. (discovered machinery); Davidson v. Correll (1890) 31 N. Y. S. R. 982, 10 N. Y. Supp. 521 (employee injured by the falling of a platform or structure on which he was required to work, has a right to show his ignorance of the effects arising from the manner adopted in bracing the structure) Reversed in (1892) 132 N. Y. 228, 30 N. E. 573, but not on this point.

A finding that the servant was in the exercise of due care impliedly negatives his knowledge of the danger. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hines (1890) 132 Ill. 161, 23 N. E. 1021.

But the books disclose a wide difference of opinion as to the proper legal effect which, in view of the respective functions of judge and jury in drawing conclusions of fact, shall be ascribed to evidence showing that the servant upon the wagon. Defendant made no promise to remedy the defective lines, but remained silent when the complaints were made. From the foregoing state of facts it is insisted by defendant that the motion for nonsuit should have been granted, and it is also claimed that the evidence does not support the verdict and judgment. The contention, in substance, is but a single one, and the sufficiency of the evidence is the question before the court. Testing the facts of this case by the law, we cannot see how plaintiff is entitled to recover. It may be conceded that defendant was negligent in not furnishing plaintiff with proper appliances to do the work. Such concession being made, then the question presented is not strictly one of contributory negligence upon the part of the plaintiff, but, rather, did plaintiff assume the risk of working with these defective appliances? If there had been an express contract between the master and servant that the work should be done without a seat to the wagon, and with these identical lines, clearly that agreement would have barred a recovery in this action. This being so, do not the facts indicate an implied contract to the same effect? While the servant only assumes the dangers and risks necessarily incident to the work to be performed, he may, by contract, either express or implied, also assume the risk of working with defective appliances. Indeed, many cases go further, and sustain the proposition that, where the servant proceeds at the outset to perform his work with defective appliances, having knowledge of the defect, then an implied contract arises to the effect that he assumes the risk; especially so if he is aware of the danger surrounding him by reason of the defect.

actually possessed a knowledge of one or the other of these elements.

c. Contributory negligence held to be a question for jury, where servant's knowledge of defects only is shown.

An obvious corollary to the rule laid down in the preceding section is that the servant is not prevented from recovering by evidence merely of his knowledge of the material conditions, inasmuch as such evidence still leaves the existence of the other essential element of his culpability to be established.

The mere fact that a servant has knowledge of defects in plans or methods of construction may not charge him with contributory negligence or assumption of risk. The question is, Did he know, or by the exercise of ordinary common sense and prudence could he have known, that, in addition to these defects, the risks existed? Snedden v. Libera (1896) 65 Minn. 337, 68 N. W. 36.

It is error to grant a nonsuit where, although it is admitted that he knew of the defect, he denied (and the evidence is consistent with the inference) that he had any actual knowledge that the appliance was dangerous. Pitts v. Florida C. & P. R. Co. (1896) 98 Ga. 655, 27 S. E. 189 (space allowed to exist between engine and tender, rendering apron liable to fly up—fireman injured); Colbert v. Rankin (1887) 72 Cal. 197, 13 Pac. 491 (plaintiff entitled to instruction that he was not guilty of contributory negligence unless he knew, or might have known, that by reason of the defect the employment involved danger).

That an instruction disregarding the element of danger as distinguished from the knowledge of the defect is properly refused, see Lawless v. Connecticut River R. Co. (1883) 136 Mass. 1. See also Lasure v. Graniteville Mfg. Co. (1882) 18 S. C. 275 (charge to effect that continuance with knowledge of defective conditions bars the action, held erroneous); Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Parrish (1897; Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 191 (same point).

The practical deduction drawn by many courts from this general principle is that, when the specific evidence submitted only goes to the extent of establishing the servant's knowledge of the defect, the question of his contributory negligence cannot be withdrawn from the jury. Goggin v. D. M. Osborne & Co. (1896) 115 Cal. 437, 47 Pac. 248; Eureka Co. v. Bass (1886) 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152, 8 So. 216; Le Clair v. First Div. of St. Paul & P. R. Co. (1873) 20 Minn. 9, 11; Norfolk & W. R. 49 L. R. A.

Co. v. Ward (1894) 90 Va. 687, 24 L. R. A. 717, 19 S. E. 849; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly (1894) 24 U. S. App. 103, 63 Fed. Rep. 407, 11 C. C. A. 260 (negligence question for jury where knowledge of conditions only is indisputable—deadwoods out of repair, holes in track, or incompetency of fireman—brakeman injured while coupling); Parker v. South Carolina & G. R. Co. (1896) 48 S. C. 364, 26 S. E. 660 (derailment caused by defective engine and track); Fordyce v. Edwards (1895) 60 Ark. 438, 30 S. W. 758 (engine derailed by collision with a horse in consequence of its pilot being too high); Laning v. New York C. R. Co. (1872) 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417 (plaintiff knew of incompetency of foreman. Here the master's agent had told the plaintiff that, if the foreman did not do better, he would have to discharge him—a statement amounting to a conditional promise; but the ruling does not seem to turn upon this circumstance entirely); Mehan v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. (1878) 73 N. Y. 585 (nonsuit properly denied, where engineer was injured by a derailment, he knowing merely that the track was somewhat out of repair); Kain v. Smith (1882) 89 N. Y. 375 (1881) 25 Hun. 146 (jigger used in loading cars seen to be defective); Schwandner v. Birge (1884) 33 Hun. 186 (plaintiff knew that the means of escape from fire prescribed by statute were not provided. Emphasis was laid here on the distinction between appliances used by the plaintiff himself and those in other parts of the establishment); McMahon v. Port Henry Iron Ore Co. (1881) 24 Hun. 48 (nonsuit erroneous where plaintiff knew that a blast had been negligently prepared); Heavey v. Hudson River Water Power & Paper Co. (1890) 57 Hun. 339, 10 N. Y. Supp. 585 (lad fifteen years of age continued to use, for the purpose of pushing a heavy pipe, a pole which, to his knowledge, had become spongy and soft at the end, the consequence being that it slipped, and he was precipitated into a vat of hot fluid; error to rule that plaintiff must have known pole to be unfit for use); Fox v. Le Comte (1896) 2 App. Div. 61, 37 N. Y. Supp. 316 (negligence of plaintiff question for jury where he denied that he knew that the clicking of a power press indicated danger, and this testimony was corroborated by other witnesses, who stated that they did not consider danger to be a necessary inference); Hungerford v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1889) 41 Minn. 444, 43 N. W. 324 (brakeman injured by the "gooseneck" of an engine, generally used for passenger trains, but in this case ordered to be coupled to a freight car,—circumstances

And to say that the servant assumes the risk is but another way of saying that he impliedly agrees to release the master from liability. In this case we lay aside any question as to the lack of a seat upon the wagon. If the wagon was defective in this regard, the plaintiff, an expert teamster, by using it for a period of eleven months without objection or protest of any kind, assumed all of the risks incident to the use of that kind of a wagon. We have found no case in the books involving anything like a similar state of facts which holds that plaintiff may recover damages for injuries received. We know of but a possible exception to the rule, and that would be a case where the servant, though aware of the defect, was not aware of the danger incident to it. That exception cannot be urged here. This defect of the wagon was of a character that the servant, as a reasonably prudent man, must have been aware of the danger incidental to its use. He cannot be allowed to close his eyes to the danger, and thereafter say, "I did not know it was dangerous." As to the defective lines, additional principles of law are involved to those arising upon the defect of the wagon; for, as to the lines, the plaintiff made complaint to defendant on two different occasions regarding their defective character. Yet when we pause to consider that the last complaint was made more than nine months before the accident, and to consider the additional fact, pregnant with materiality here, that defendant remained silent under the complaint of the servant, and gave no promise to cure the defect, the case as to the two respective defects is not widely variant. Plaintiff knew of the defect, and must have known of the danger that surrounded him by under which it would be extremely apt to cause injury to the person doing the coupling, if he were not familiar with the appliance): Wuotilla v. Duluth Lumber Co. (1887) 37 Minn. 153, 33 N. W. 551 (where the court, emphasizing the inequality in the positions of the master and servant, refused to set aside a verdict for the plaintiff, who, being only a common laborer, and not a machinist, was caught in a gearing near which, as was testified by several witnesses, it was quite possible for anyone, not acquainted with machinery, to work without anticipating any danger); Wright v. Southern P. Co. (1896) 14 Utah, 383, 46 Pac. 374 (switch engine operated without fireman to observe signals); Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lehmburg (1889) 75 Tex. 61, 12 S. W. 338 (charge directing verdict for defendant, if there were patent defects, held properly refused where the servant saw that a switch engine had a square tank, but did not know the danger of its use); St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McCain (1891) 80 Tex. 85, 15 S. W. 789 (verdict for plaintiff will not be set aside because the record shows that plaintiff knew of the defective condition of the appliance); Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shearer (1892) 1 Tex. Civ. App. 343, 21 S. W. 133 (instruction that knowledge of defect, unballasted track, rendered servant chargeable with negligence is properly refused); Graham v. Newburg Orrel Coal & Coke Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 273, 18 S. E. 564 (case for jury where miner was merely proved to have known that cross-cuts were closed, but denied that he knew the dangerous effect this would have upon the ventilation).

It seems to be the true doctrine that perhaps there may be instances in which the knowledge of the defects, possessed by the injured party, is so definite that he must be deemed, as a matter of law, to have taken the risk on himself of injury arising therefrom, but that, as a general rule, such knowledge is only a circumstance to be submitted to the jury from which they may infer negligence. McMahon v. Port Henry Iron Ore Co. (1881) 24 Hun, 48.

A finding by a judge, sitting as a jury, that a scaffold was manifestly defective, the ledge being too narrow, and the standard not tied, does not necessarily imply that the servant who used it was negligent. Stuart v. Evans (1883) 49 L. T. N. S. 138, 31 Week. Rep. 703 (see especially the opinion of Williams, J.).

An averment that a servant knew that a fellow servant was incompetent for a reasonable time before the injury caused by such fellow servant's negligence does not show that he is debarred from recovery on the ground of 40 L. R. A. contributory negligence. Hoey v. Dublin & B. Junction R. Co. (1870) Ir. Rep. 5 C. L. 206.

It is one thing to be aware that machinery is defective, or in a particular condition, and another thing to know or appreciate the risks resulting therefrom. A man of ordinary intelligence and experience may know the actual condition of an instrument with which he is working and yet not know the nature or extent of the risks to which he is exposed. Wuotilla v. Duluth Lumber Co. (1887) 37 Minn. 153, 33 N. W. 551.

In Graham v. Newburg Orrel Coal & Coke Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 273, 18 S. E. 584, where the injury was caused by an explosion of gas in a mine, the court reasoned thus: "The danger must be such as may reasonably be expected to entail accident and injury, not a remote probability or chance of accident. It must be such as a fairly prudent, cautious man ought to think likely to result in accident, and which he ought not to risk. Does the rule require the employee in all cases to stop work simply because he knows of defective machinery or condition? In this case could the plaintiff fairly expect that these openings would leave an insufficient supply of air? And did he know that there was gas present, in which case the openings would be a real danger, otherwise not? Was it rash, or even imprudent, to work? Was he so in thinking he might go on safely? Under the circumstances of this case, you cannot say that the situation was such as to impress him with a feeling of insecurity. To do so you must fix the rule unalterably that knowledge of any defect whatever, finally resulting in disaster, should have caused the employee to stop, and will forbid recovery. Would the interests of either employer or employee be subserved by such a rule? To know simply of a defect of machinery, or that the condition or surroundings of a working place are not just what they should be to guarantee safety, is not to be certainly or necessarily forewarned of danger. Does the employee from that knowledge in all instances assume all risks? I think not. The question is, Did he know, or ought he to have known by the use of ordinary common sense and prudence, as applied in the particular instance, that dangers were before him likely to flow from the defect or condition? Not simply that he knew the defect or condition existed. He need not in all cases quit work. He may run some risks provided they be such as a prudent, careful man would under the circumstances run."

The doctrine of the above cases has been embodied in Miss. Const. § 193, providing that reason of it. Any reasonably prudent man must have been aware of it, and the defendant must be held to be a man of ordinary prudence; indeed, it appears that he was an experienced teamster. Here the master gave no intimation to the servant that he would remedy the defect, and allowed it to continue for nine months without taking a step towards remedying it. Under these circumstances, the servant, at the time of the accident, was not working in expectation that the defect would yet be remedied. After a lapse of nine silent months, he had no right to indulge in any such expectation. Many cases hold that when the master, after complaint, made promises to correct the defect, the servant may continue his employment for a reasonable time, relying upon the master's promise; but here we have no promise. We also have the lapse of a most unreasonable time. The mere fact that the servant makes complaint of the defect gives him no right to rely for all future time upon the complaint made, and thus irrevocably fasten a liability upon the master. If the master had positively refused to correct the defect when the complaint was made to him, then certainly the servant would have been forced by the law to do either one of two things,—either assume the risk, and thus release the master from liability; or leave the master's employment. In this case the same conditions, substantially, arose when a reasonable time had gone by after the making of the complaint to the master, and nothing had been done, or even promised. After complaint made, and nine months had come and gone, the plaintiff had no right, as a reasonable man, to believe that the master would remedy these defective lines.

such knowledge shall not be a defense except as therein specified, where at the time the servant was injured he had reason to, and did, believe that the defect had been repaired. Welsh v. Alabama & V. R. Co. (1892) 70 Miss. 20, 11 So. 723; Buckner v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1895) 72 Miss. 873, 18 So. 449. The latter case mentions that, in this state, the common-law rule was that contributory negligence was inferred from knowledge of defects merely.

Especially is the servant entitled to the benefit of this principle where the defective appliance had been safely used by himself or his fellow servants so frequently and so long that he might reasonably suppose that its use could be continued without danger. Lyttle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. (1890) 84 Mich. 289, 47 N. W. 571 (footboard, known to be defective, had been used by a switchman one hundred times a day for a week, without injury); Hawley v. Northern C. R. Co. (1880) 82 N. Y. 370 (engine run with cars attached over a defective road was overturned—other engine had frequently been run over the road in safety, in the same way that plaintiff was running his).

d. Contributory negligence inferred from servant's knowledge both of defects and resulting dangers.

By the great majority of the courts it is laid down that where it is established by specific evidence that the servant had knowledge, not only of the abnormal conditions created by a breach of duty on the master's part, but also fully appreciated the extraordinary risk resulting from these conditions, his subsequent continuance in the employment will render him chargeable, as matter of law, with contributory negligence. Stuart v. Evans (1883) 49 L. T. N. S. 138, 31 Week. Rep. 706, per Cave, J.; The Serapis (1892) 8 U. S. App. 49, 51 Fed. Rep. 91, 2 C. C. A. 102 (stevordore used an unsafe steam winch, with knowledge of the danger and risk) Reversing (1891) 49 Fed. Rep. 393, which applied the admiralty rule; The Max Morris (1890) 137 U. S. 1, sub nom. The Max Morris v. Curry, 34 L. ed. 586, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29 (that contributory negligence does not wholly deprive the servant of his right to damages, point not touched upon by the majority of the court of appeals, but made the foundation of a dissent by Goff, J.); Barkdoll v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1888) 21 W. N. C. 281, 13 Atl. 82 (brakeman killed in coupling broken car); Tenanty v. Boston Mfg. Co. (1898) 170 Mass. 323, 49 N. E. 654 (defective saw); Mehan v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. (1878) 73 49 L. R. A.

N. Y. 585 (defective track: conceded that engineer could not recover if he knew that it was so badly out of repair that it was dangerous to run over it); Jones v. Roach (1876) 9 Jones & S. 248; Crutchfield v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1878) 78 N. C. 300 (held error to refuse to charge the jury, that "if they believed that plaintiff [a brakeman] knew, or had reasonable grounds for believing, that the engine used by defendant prior to the time of the injury complained of was not controllable by the engineer, and that the roadbed was in a dangerous condition, and the plaintiff was injured thereby, then the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence"); Nelling v. Industrial Mfg. Co. (1886) 78 Ga. 260 (court refused to set aside a verdict for the defendant considering the jury were not misled by an instruction which announced in substance that if the servant is aware of the dangerous character of a particular tool or instrument, or may, by the exercise of ordinary care, be apprised of it, and continues nevertheless to use it, he cannot have redress for any damage he sustains by its use); Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Munroe (1877) 85 Ill. 25 (switchman worked several years knowing that a drawbar was somewhat dangerous owing to want of a thimble in a bumper to keep the coupling link from running back); St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Britz (1874) 72 Ill. 256 (defective brakes); Glass v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1893) 41 Ill. App. 87 (plaintiff injured by slipping on bolt-head projecting from footboard of engine which he was attempting to board); Pollich v. Sellers (1890) 42 La. Ann. 623, 7 So. 786 (held negligence to trust one's weight, at a height of 70 feet above the ground, supported by guys extending under the trusses of a building in process of demolition, such trusses being known to be in such a condition that they were liable to fall at any moment).

In Darcey v. Farmers' Lumber Co. (1894) 37 Wis. 245, 58 N. W. 382, the jury returned an affirmative answer to the following interrogatory: "Were the dangers and risks to the plaintiff, by reason of the uncovered condition of the saw, such as would be apparent to a person using ordinary care and observation, and having the knowledge and experience in saw-mills which the plaintiff then had?" They also found that there was no want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff which contributed to cause the injury sustained by him.

As the only ground on which contributory negligence was imputed to the plaintiff was, that he remained in the service with knowledge of the risk, the second finding was held to be equivalent to an affirmation that he did not so

The law of this question, as declared by text-books and decisions of courts, is in line with the foregoing views. Shearman & Redfield on Negligence—a work more friendly to servants than any other standard text-book—declares: “The latest and best authorities hold that the liability of the master for risks caused by his negligence, which did not exist when the servant accepted the employment, depends upon a ‘question of fact whether a servant who works on, appreciating the risk, assumes it voluntarily or endures it because he feels constrained to.’ If he voluntarily continues work with full notice of the risk, he assumes it; but not so if he acts under coercion.” There certainly is no question of coercion in this case. It is said in Stephenson v. Duncan, 73 Wis. 408, 41 N. W. 338: “But, if the plaintiff did continue his employment for an unreasonable time after the defendant could have removed the defects, he would then be deemed to have waived his objections, and assumed the risk of operating the machinery in the unsafe and dangerous condition in which it was.” We find the following language in Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 224, 25 L. ed. 617: “If the engineer, after discovering or recognizing the defective condition of the cowcatcher or pilot, had continued to use the engine, without giving notice thereof to the proper officers of the company, he would undoubtedly have been guilty of such contributory negligence as to bar a recovery, so far as such defect was found to have been the efficient cause of the death. He would be held in that case to have himself risked the dangers which might result from the use of the engine in such defective condition. But “there can be no doubt that, where the mas-remain with that knowledge, and to be therefore inconsistent with the first one. Eureka Co. v. Bass (1886) 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152, 8 So. 216 (defective fuse, known to be dangerous); Pleasants v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. (1886) 95 N. C. 195 (section master used dump car which he knew to be out of order and in a dangerous condition); Reese v. Wheeling & E. G. R. Co. (1896) 42 W. Va. 333, 26 S. E. 204 (laborer, in spite of the repeated warnings of his foreman, traveled on a truck in a construction train pushed ahead of the engine—derailment); Ballou v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1882) 54 Wis. 280, 41 Am. Rep. 31; Brossman v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (1886) 113 Pa. 490, 57 Am. Rep. 479, 6 Atl. 226; Bemis v. Roberts (1891) 143 Pa. 1, 21 Atl. 998.

The courts of Illinois are firmly committed to the principle that, “if a person, knowing the hazards of his employment as the business is conducted, voluntarily continues therein, without any promise by the master to do any act to render the same less hazardous, the master will not be liable for any injury he may sustain therein, unless, indeed, it may be caused by the wilful act of the master.” Stafford v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1885) 114 Ill. 244, 2 N. E. 185 (fellow servant known to be incompetent); Pennsylvania Co. v. Lynch (1878) 90 Ill. 333 (plaintiff knew of the unsafety of a platform which he was using to transfer freight from one car to another); Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Munroe (1877) 85 Ill. 25 (plaintiff testified that he knew the defective coupling was not very safe); United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Wilder (1886) 116 Ill. 100, 5 N. E. 92 (fellow servant known to be incompetent, so that plaintiff's position was extra hazardous); Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1896) 162 Ill. 459, 44 N. E. 876 (speaks of defects augmenting the danger of the service); Coal Run Coal Co. v. Jones (1889) 127 Ill. 379, 8 N. E. 865, 20 N. E. 89 (gas in mine exploded—known to have been accumulating in dangerous quantities).

It is error to charge that a servant, although he has full knowledge of a dangerous defect, may recover if he uses ordinary care to avoid injury from such defect; at all events where he has not reported the defect, or objected to the maintenance of the dangerous condition, or received a promise that it will be remedied. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark (1882) 11 Ill. App. 104.

The knowledge which this doctrine contemplates is the complete appreciation which, as we have seen, must also be established before the master can protect himself by the defense that the risk was assumed.

The servant's continuance of work with a mere apprehension of possible danger is not such negligence as will bar his action. Dumas v. Stone (1893) 65 Vt. 442, 25 Atl. 1097 (mason injured by breaking of wire rope some of the strands of which had become rusty, and had been repaired after breakage); Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. Peterson (1890) 39 Ill. App. 114 (request of miner for more props showed apprehension of danger); Erslaw v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. (1896) 49 La. Ann. 86, 21 So. 153 (brakeman killed by guy-wire of street-car company; presumption of servant's fault ought not to rest on vague surmises of the possibility of danger).

That an engineer knows that a road is so far out of repair that he incurs some danger in running his engine over it is not conclusive proof that he is negligent in continuing to use it. Unless the evidence is clear that he understood the danger to be imminent or very great, it is for the jury to say whether he acted with reasonable prudence and discretion in venturing to run his engine over the road. Hawley v. Northern C. R. Co. (1880) 82 N. Y. 370.

e. Contributory negligence inferred from servant's knowledge of defects alone.

On general principles, it is clear that, where there can be no reasonable doubt that a person in the servant's position, who knew of the defect in question, must also have understood the resulting risk, it may be ruled, as a matter of law, that, for the purpose of the defense, his information was complete.

That an appliance may be so grossly or clearly defective that the servant must have known of the risk to which it exposed him was laid down in Sims v. Lindsay (1898) 122 N. C. 678, 30 S. E. 19.

This is in accordance with the general principle laid down by Knowlton, J., in a dissenting opinion: “The danger may be so great and so obvious that, in any possible view of the evidence, the general judgment of common sense would at once condemn his conduct in continuing to work as careless.” Davis v. Forbes (1898) 171 Mass. 548, 47 L. R. A. 170, 51 N. E. 20.

It is only in a very clear case that the question whether the servant appreciated the danger as well as the defect can be withdrawn from the jury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly (1894) 24 U. S. App. 103, 63 Fed. Rep. 407, 11 C. C. A. 260; Kalm v. Smith (1882) 89 N. Y. 375 (1881) 25 Hun. 146.

The essential question is whether knowledge ter has expressly promised to repair a defect, the servant can recover for an injury caused thereby within such a period of time after the promise as it would be reasonable to allow for its performance, and, as we think, for an injury suffered within any period which would not preclude all reasonable expectation that the promise might be kept,"—citing cases. It is said in Morbach v. Home Min. Co. 53 Kan. 740, 37 Pac. 125: "But if a servant continues in his work an unreasonable length of time after the master has agreed to remedy the defect complained of, or if the danger is imminent or obvious, he assumes the risks incident thereto. Generally, the question of reasonable time is one of fact for a jury; but where a servant has full knowledge of the danger of his employment, as in this case, after his first injury, and continues in the master's service while he is conducting his business in a way which the servant knows is dangerous, the servant cannot continue to wait, and, after being injured, then claim damages. He should leave his dangerous employment within a reasonable time, on discovery of the master's method of doing business, when he finds that the master will not remedy the danger, or fulfil his promise in that respect." See also Counsell v. Hall, 145 Mass. 468, 14 N. E. 530; Eureka Co. v. Bass, 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152, 8 So. 216; Davis v. Graham, 2 Colo. App. 210, 29 Pac. 1007. The only recent case in this state, to our knowledge, where this question has been at all involved, is Martin v. California C. R. Co. 94 Cal. 326, 29 Pac. 645. It was there held that the mere fact of a brakeman knowing that an appliance was defective and dangerous did not, as matter of law, bar a recovery based upon of the defects necessarily, and in legal contemplation, carries with it knowledge of the risk or danger, or whether knowledge of the defects can possibly warrant any other conclusion than that the risk was understood. Michael v. Stanley (1892) 75 Md. 464, 23 Atl. 1094.

Whether or not notice of danger in the continued use of a defective appliance can be imputed to the servant will depend upon its character, and upon whether it was in so obviously a dangerous condition as to convey notice to a person of his intelligence of the danger which might result to him in consequence of his continuing to use it. Pitts v. Florida C. & P. R. Co. (1896) 98 Ga. 655, 27 S. E. 189.

If, in the jurisdiction where the action is brought, even a knowledge of the danger is not regarded as requiring a peremptory inference of contributory negligence, the opinion of the jury must still be taken on this point. But, under the theory that the servant's continuance of work with knowledge of the danger renders him chargeable, as matter of law, with contributory negligence, it is obvious that a court, which has deemed itself justified, under the evidence, in finding that a knowledge of the danger was a necessary implication from the knowledge of the defect, is also warranted in taking the next step in the deductive process without the intervention of the jury, and declaring the servant unable to maintain the action. It is in this manner that these decisions are to be explained, which, by holding that the suit was barred by a knowledge of the defect alone, seem to disregard the principle that a knowledge of the resulting danger must also be proved.

That the rule by which the continuance of work with knowledge of defects implies negligence is founded on the presumption that a servant understands the dangers arising from these defects, was expressly noted in Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Parrish (1897; Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 191.

Essentially, therefore, the rulings cited below, in which the action was barred by a knowledge of the defect, are applications of the same theory as that embodied in the cases referred to in the preceding subdivision. Knowledge of the danger is not denied to be a necessary element of the defense. It is merely taken for granted that knowledge of the defect must have carried with it a knowledge of the concomitant danger. Viewed from this standpoint, the supposed conflict between the authorities which has troubled some judges so much entirely vanishes so far as it is a matter of theory, for no court, 49 L. R. A.

not even those of Missouri and of the states which have followed the Missouri decisions, has gone to the length of declaring that it is for the jury, under every conceivable state of the evidence, to say whether a knowledge of the danger shall be inferred. But it must be confessed that, on the facts, it is sometimes extremely difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile the following cases with those cited under I. d. supra. In many instances the circumstances are, for practical purposes, identical, and in at least one, viz., where the defect under review was the unfitness of a fellow servant, absolutely identical. Griffiths v. Gidlow (1858) 3 Jurist. & N. 648, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 404 (defective hook caused the fall of a tub used for holsting water from a pit); Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 224, 25 L. ed. 617 (defective cow-catcher); Reese v. Clark (1892) 146 Pa. 465, 23 Atl. 246 (heavy iron plates which had been laid against a wall fell on plaintiff); Marean v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. (1895) 167 Pa. 220, 31 Atl. 562 (want of signal flag known to plaintiff, a car inspector); Marsh v. Chickering (1886) 101 N. Y. 396, 5 N. E. 56 (defective ladder); Smith v. Memphis & L. R. Co. (1883) 18 Fed. Rep. 304 (in charge to jury); Dillon v. Union P. R. Co. (1874) 3 Dill. 319, Fed. Cas. No. 3,916 (engineer injured owing to want of signal bell in cab of engine); Smith v. Sibley Mfg. Co. (1890) 85 Ga. 333, 11 S. E. 616 (plaintiff here alleged that he knew of the negligent propensities of the delinquent coservant); Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. v. Ray (1883) 70 Ga. 674 (employee who had to light stove knew that it was defective); Porter v. Western N. C. R. Co. (1887) 97 N. C. 66, 2 S. E. 581 (plaintiff held not to be entitled to recover where the jury had returned an affirmative answer to the question: Did the servant remain in the service with knowledge of the incompetency of the fellow servant whose negligence caused the injury); Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Eckols (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 429, 26 S. W. 1117 (plaintiff knew of coservant's unfitness); Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Worley (1893) 92 Ga. 84, 18 S. E. 361 (knowledge of fellow servant's unfitness appeared from plaintiff's own testimony); Nelson v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. (1891) 88 Ga. 225, 14 S. E. 210 (plaintiff nonsuited, where he himself testified that a brake-rod was broken); McGhee v. Bell (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 267, 39 S. W. 823 (Reversing on rehearing (1897) 38 S. W. 702 (lever of hand-car was worm-eaten)); Lawrence v. Hagemeyer & Co. (1892) 93 Ky. 591, 20 S. W. 704 (defective saw); Michael v. Stanley (1892) 75 Md. 464, 23 Atl. 1094 (minor of injuries received by reason of the defect. The element of time was not a material matter in that case, and was not considered; and continued user of the appliance, with knowledge of the defect and its dangerous character, was not shown, and the question not discussed. Magee v. North Pacific Coast R. Co. 78 Cal. 430, 21 Pac. 114, which was relied upon to support the conclusion declared in the Martin Case, is not opposed to the views here expressed.

The question here, then, resolves itself into this: At the conclusion of the introduction of evidence at the trial, was there a question of fact for the jury to pass upon as to whether or not plaintiff remained in the employ of defendant for an unreasonable time after his notification to defendant of the defective character of the lines? If that question ever may become a question of law by reason of any particular state of facts, then it would seem that a question of law alone was presented here. There is absolutely no conflict in the evidence. Plaintiff continued his employment for nine months after a notification to defendant of the defect, without any intimation from his master that the defect would be repaired, during all of which time the defective appliance was constantly before his eyes, and also in his hands. We believe that this delay of nine months is a fact absolutely fatal to plaintiff's cause of action. We see no difference in a delay of nine months and a delay of nineteen months, and, as a matter of law, this court must say that plaintiff, continuing for this long period of time in the employment of his master, after his notification to the master of the defect, by implied agreement released the master from any liability resulting from in-eighteen years injured by circular saw in which two teeth were wanting); Erdman v. Illinois Steel Co. (1897) 95 Wis. 6, 69 N. W. 993 (cracked saw); Morris v. Gleason (1879) 4 Ill. App. 395; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark (1882) 11 Ill. App. 104 (platform near track); Chicago & T. R. Co. v. Simmons (1882) 11 Ill. App. 147, Affirmed (1884) 110 Ill. 340 (danger that the upper portion of a bank may fall when the lower part is excavated held to be obvious); Illinois C. R. Co. v. Jones (1882) 11 Ill. App. 324 (defective coupling); Wabaash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Thompson (1884) 15 Ill. App. 117 (tumbling rod of pumping apparatus not boxed); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Montgomery (1884) 15 Ill. App. 205 (peculiarly hazardous form of coupling); Evans v. Chessmond (1890) 38 Ill. App. 615 (rock in the roof of a drift of a mine in such a condition as to be liable to fall at any moment); Peoria, D. & F. R. Co. v. Puckett (1893) 52 Ill. App. 223 (brakeman injured by a hole in the track); Illinois C. R. Co. v. Swisher (1893) 53 Ill. App. 411 (fireman injured by a collision due to the want of a lamp on a rotary switch); Legnard v. Lage (1894) 57 Ill. App. 223 (plaintiff injured by the fall of a bank of earth, the condition of which was visible); McQueen v. Central Branch U. P. R. Co. (1883) 30 Kan. 689, 691, 1 Pac. 139 (plainly visible defects in wheels of hand car which plaintiff had an opportunity to observe); Jackson v. Kansas City, L. & S. K. R. Co. (1884) 31 Kan. 761, 3 Pac. 501 (plaintiff knew that step of engine was not fit for use); Rush v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 36 Kan. 129, 12 Pac. 582 (unblocked guard rail); Goltz v. Milwaukee L. S. & W. R. Co. (1890) 76 Wis. 136, 44 N. W. 752 (iron hook plainly showed a flaw on the outside. Special finding that the defect could have been observed by the owner of the hook or parties that used it if they were exercising ordinary care in using or taking care of it, held conclusively to negative the right to recover); Anderson v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. (1896) 67 Minn. 79, 69 N. W. 630 (uncovered machinery); King v. Ford River Lumber Co. (1892) 93 Mich. 172, 53 N. W. 10 (same facts); Schroeder v. Michigan Car Co. (1885) 56 Mich. 132, 22 N. W. 220 (same facts); Peterson v. Sherry Lumber Co. (1895) 90 Wis. 83, 93, 62 N. W. 948 (same point); Nadeau v. White River Lumber Co. (1890) 76 Wis. 120, 43 N. W. 1135 (same facts); Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Myers (1881) 55 Tex. 111 (arguendo); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bradford (1886) 66 Tex. 732, 59 Am. Rep. 730, 2 S. W. 595 (no proper appliances furnished for curving rails).

49 L. R. A.

If the servant, acting as a prudent man would ordinarily act, would undertake to do the work with knowledge of the defect, this very test relieves the master from liability, for the obligations and duties of master and servant are correlative; each is held to that degree of care in reference to all matters affecting the safety of the servant while in the master's employment which men of ordinary prudence would or ought to exercise under the same circumstances. If the servant, with a knowledge of the defect, as a prudent man may undertake the work, can it be said that the master has not exercised that degree of care required of him? Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bradford (1886) 66 Tex. 732, 59 Am. Rep. 730, 2 S. W. 595.

McKelvey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 500, 14 S. E. 261, construed in Woodell v. West Virginia Improv. Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 23, 17 S. E. 386, as a ruling that an engineer's knowledge that some stay-bolts in a locomotive boiler were broken rendered him chargeable with negligence in going on working. But the actual decision was that his negligence is for the jury, where a promise to repair had been given.

In Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. (1872) 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598, the court sustained the refusal of the trial judge to charge the jury to the effect that the plaintiff could not recover if he knew, or had reasonable cause to believe, that the engine which exploded was defective, and approved the following instruction as given: "If the plaintiff ran the engine when it was not in good working order, knowing it to be such; and the particulars in which it was not in good working order were signs of a defective condition in the boiler, causing an explosion by which the plaintiff was injured; and a competent engineer ought to have known that such particulars were signs of such defective condition; and the plaintiff held himself out as such a competent engineer when he entered into the employment of the defendants as an engineer,—he cannot recover."

If we compare the language of the instructions thus rejected and adopted, it will be apparent that this Massachusetts case is not an authority for the unqualified proposition in support of which it is sometimes cited, viz., that to defeat the action of the servant it must be proved, not only that he knew of the defects from which the injury resulted, but that he must also have known of the danger.

This opinion we understand only to declare that knowledge of a defect which in the ordinary course of events, under the operation of well-known laws governing matter, may result juries received in the use of the appliance; or, as some of the cases declare, plaintiff must be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence in continuing his employment for this long period of time with this defective appliance,—a defective appliance of which he well knew, and the danger of its use ex necessitate ever present to his mind. In the comparatively early case of McGlynn v. Brodie, 31 Cal. 379, this court said: "Where a party works with or in the vicinity of a piece of machinery insufficient for the purposes for which it is employed, or for any other reason unsafe, with a knowledge or means of knowledge of its condition, he takes the risk incident to the employment in which he is thus engaged, and cannot maintain an action for injuries sustained arising out of accidents resulting from such defective condition of the machinery. This is the principle established by all the cases." In view of the decision in Martin v. California C. R. Co. 94 Cal. 326, 29 Pac. 645, the aforesaid doctrine may be considered modified, but the modification goes to a limited extent only, for the limitation only goes to the point that the servant, after beginning his employment with a defective appliance, may have the time and opportunity to call the attention of the master to the defect, and the master may have the time and opportunity, after the notification, to remedy the defect, before it be held that the servant has assumed the risk.

It was error for the court to admit evidence, under objection, to the effect that the defects were remedied after the accident. In Sappenfield v. Main Street & A. P. R. Co. 91 Cal. 62, 27 Pac. 590, the court said: "Such a rule puts an unfair interpretation in injury, will cast upon the person who, with knowledge of such, continues to use the defective implement or machine, the risks incident to the business done with the defective implement or machine; but there is nothing in the opinion to indicate that the engineer must have had knowledge of the danger of an explosion otherwise than as he may have been affected with knowledge or notice, by the defect itself, that such an event might occur. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bradford (1886) 66 Tex. 732, 735, 50 Am. Rep. 739, 2 S. W. 595.

Cases turning upon this principle, it should be observed, sometimes present the additional feature that there was independent culpability in failing to make an examination of the defective appliance. Senior v. Ward (1859) 1 El. & El. 885, 28 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 139, 5 Jur. N. S. 172, 7 Week. Rep. 261 (plaintiff's intestate and his collaborators had been warned to examine the rope of a hoisting cage before descending into a mine, and had not done so).

Or in failing to notice a defect which was obvious. Bemisch v. Roberts (1891) 143 Pa. 1, 21 Atl. 998 (holes in which the pins which confined the load on a buggy were so worn that the pins would not stay in, and the load fell off).

The phrase "knowledge of the risk," which is customarily employed in statement of this principle, is somewhat ambiguous in meaning. By one court it is interpreted as implying that the action is not barred by the servant's knowledge of a defect, unless the circumstances were such as "necessarily and inevitably to expose him to danger." Snow v. Housatonic R. Co. (1864) 8 Allen, 441, 85 Am. Dec. 720 (plaintiff's foot caught in a hole in a plank crossing). Compare Waidner v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 87 Mo. 37, where the servant was allowed to maintain his action on the ground that the defect was not such as to render the place of work "necessarily dangerous."

But it is manifest that the rulings last cited cannot be brought within the purview of any such stringent principle. They rather proceed upon the theory suggested in other cases, that negligence is properly inferred wherever injury may "reasonably be apprehended." Eureka Co. v. Bass (1886) 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152, 8 So. 216.

Whether continuing in the service, after discovering the defect, constitutes contributory negligence depends in a great measure upon its nature and extent. Unquestionably, when the danger is so apparent that injury appears to be inevitable, the employee is not justified in continuing in the service. No man is bound to 49 L. R. A.

subject himself to certain and inevitable injury, endangering life in rendering service to another. Continuance in service under such circumstances would be reckless, and, if death ensued, suicidal. But that the injury should appear to be unavoidable is not requisite. When injury is imminent—when the appearance of injury is of a degree greater than that which produces the impression that injury may result; when it leaves no room for reasonable doubt—continuing in the service after knowledge of the defect causing the injury, and its nature and extent, must be regarded as contributory negligence. Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Walters (1890) 91 Ala. 442, 8 So. 357.

The probability or improbability of encountering the particular risk of which the servant had knowledge at the time when the injury was received may also, as it would seem, be taken into account. Hoey v. Dublin & B. Junction R. Co. (1870) Ir. Rep. 5 C. L. 206, where Justice Lawson, in denying the soundness of the doctrine which would make continuance in employment with knowledge of the incompetency of a fellow servant contributory negligence, laid stress upon the fact that although a locomotive engineer (the plaintiff) might know that there was one incompetent engineer in the service of the common employer he could not know that, when he was proceeding on the journey during which the injury was inflicted, he was to encounter that particular incompetent engineer.

In other words, whenever the servant sees, or ought to see, that the probable consequence of his remaining in an environment which the master's breach of duty has made more than usually dangerous will be some personal injury, the possibility of disaster is sufficiently serious to require him, as a prudent man, to discontinue work.

The effect of the principle in relation to practical litigation is, as has been remarked, practically to make it a matter of indifference, so far as the servant's rights are concerned, whether he relies on the defense of assumption of risks or contributory negligence. In either case the functions of the jury cease when it is determined that both the defects and the resulting risks were known to him. The Serapis (1891) 49 Fed. Rep. 393, 395.

1. The rationale of the principle.

The theory applied in the decisions cited in the last two subheads is that, whatever the period of service to which the servant's contract binds him, the master's failure to peron human conduct, and virtually holds out an inducement for continued negligence." See also Hager v. Southern P. Co. 98 Cal. 311, 33 Pac. 119; Turner v. Hearst, 115 Cal. 401, 47 Pac. 129. The materiality of this error under the circumstances need not be considered.

It was not proper to admit the testimony of expert witnesses as to what appliances were safe and what were unsafe. As illustrative of this branch of the case, the record discloses the following: "Q. Can you state to the jury whether or not it is more safe for a teamster to sit on a bare load of lumber without a seat, or whether it is more safe with a seat for him?" And again: "Q. Can you state whether or not short lines used to drive horses are as safe as long lines without knots?" These questions were objectionable for two reasons: First, it is not material to the case that the wagon would have been safer with a seat than without it; second, neither was it material to the case that longer lines would have been safer than shorter ones. Defendant was not bound to furnish the safest appliances that could be had in the market. Again, the questions cover a subject-matter not calling for expert testimony under any circumstances. The jury was the best judge of the safety of the appliance used, and as to the safety of other appliances which might have been used no such question was before the court, and clearly it was not material. Sappenfield v. Main Street & A. P. R. Co. 91 Cal. 62, 27 Pac. 590; Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 281, 18 L. R. A. 124, 29 Pac. 481; Redfield v. Oakland Consol. Street R. Co. 112 Cal. 220, 43 Pac. 1117.

We find no merit in the contention that the bill of exceptions cannot be considered.

For the reasons stated, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: Van Dyke, J.; Harrison, J.

form his obligations entitles the servant to throw up his position if he see fit, and that, since he has this right, his conduct in remaining at work after he acquires knowledge of an abnormal hazard must amount, in the absence of some special countervailing circumstance, to that species of negligence which consists in the deliberate exposure of oneself to unnecessary perils. Laning v. New York C. R. Co. (1872) 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Leary v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1885) 139 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733, 2 N. E. 115; Wheeler v. Berry (1893) 95 Mich. 250, 54 N. W. 876; Reese v. Clark (1892) 146 Pa. 465, 23 Atl. 246; Marean v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. (1895) 167 Pa. 220, 31 Atl. 562; Crutchfield v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1877) 76 N. C. 320.

The servant's freedom of action is, of course, more especially decisive where his employment is for no definite period of time. Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Flanagan (1875) 77 Ill. 365 (brakeman employed by the trip).

See note to O'Maley v. South Boston Gas-light Co. 47 L. R. A. 161. Volenti non fit injuria as a defense to actions by injured servants.

This consideration seems to have been forgotten by Messrs. Shearman and Redfield when, in their treatise on Negligence (ed. 1888) § 215, they undertake to sustain the doctrine discussed in I. J. infra, by vouching in aid a supposed general principle that "a party to any other contract having mutual obligations is allowed to fully perform his part notwithstanding the failure of the other party to fulfil a condition precedent, without necessarily waiving his right to insist upon performance of such condition at a later period." (This passage was cited with approval in Thorpe v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 89 Mo. 650, 58 Am. Rep. 120, 2 S. W. 3, but has been excised in the last edition of the treatise.)

The true rule, as it happens, is precisely the reverse of that here stated (see Bishop, Contracts, § 839, and a note by the present writer in 33 Am. St. Rep. pp. 791 et seq.); but in any event, the negligence of the servant must necessarily be the proximate cause of any injury which he receives after the master's breach of the contract gives him the right to consult his personal safety, and thus on general principles a bar to his action.

The situation which thus supervenes upon the servant's failing to exercise his option to 49 L. R. A.

leave the employment is that the master, in permitting his machinery to be more than ordinarily dangerous, is guilty of negligence; the servant by remaining with full knowledge of the resulting risks contributes to his own injury. Swoboda v. Ward (1879) 40 Mich. 420, quoting Cooley, Torts, pp. 551, 552.

While there is an implied contract between employer and employee that the former shall procure and keep suitable tools, implements, means, etc., with which to perform the labors required of the latter, and also that the latter shall be advised by the former of all the dangers incident to the service, of which the latter is not cognizant, yet the failure of the employer in that regard furnishes no excuse for the conduct of an employee who voluntarily incurs a known danger. He must himself use due care and caution to avoid injury. If he has full knowledge of all the perils of a particular service, he may decline to engage in it, or require that it shall first be made safe; but if he does thus enter it, he assumes the risk, and must bear the consequences. Pennsylvania Co. v. Lynch (1878) 90 Ill. 333.

It is for the plaintiff to show, not merely that the place was unsafe, and that he was injured thereby, but that he himself was in the exercise of due care. His evidence falls to show this, if it appears that, knowing and appreciating the danger arising therefrom, he voluntarily exposes himself thereto. Business is sometimes carried on in buildings or places obviously unsafe, and if, with a knowledge that a business is thus conducted, the workman engages in it, he takes the risks which he must know are incident thereto. Taylor v. Carew Mfg. Co. (1885) 140 Mass. 150, 3 N. E. 21.

The fact that a danger is known, or might be known by the exercise of the natural faculties, will preclude a recovery where it is immediate and of such a character as to impose upon one who undertakes to pass the danger a hazard that a prudent man would not incur. A man has no right to cast himself upon a known danger where the act subjects him to great peril. If there is a risk, apparent or known, that will result in injury, he must not encounter it. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pinchin (1887) 112 Ind. 502, 13 N. E. 677 (an action by a stranger).

The causal connection between the employer's negligence and the injury is broken at the time the danger becomes so plain that a person of ordinary care would not assume the risk of continuing to work at the place of danger. Pollich v. Sellers (1890) 42 La. Ann. 623, 7 So. 786.

Is a man without fault who uses a dangerous and insufficient tool knowing it to be so? Can a man claim that he has been damaged by the fault of other employees who have furnished an insufficient tool when he has for months used that tool and knows that it is unsafe, and still runs the risk? An employee is not without fault,—that is, he is a contributor to his own hurt,—if, however negligent others may be, knowing that negligence, seeing the danger, he still chooses to expose himself to the danger. Western & A. R. Co. v. Bishop (1873) 50 Ga. 465.

As to whether the employee was negligent, his actions should be judged by the facts as they existed, within his knowledge, or within what he ought to have known, at the time he acted or failed to act; and the previous negligence of the employer, which was known to the employee, or ought to have been known by him, will not excuse him. In the case at bar the failure to furnish props at the working place of the plaintiff below was negligence on the part of the defendant below; but if plaintiff knew of this negligence, or ought to have known thereof, and remained in the room, knowing the roof to be dangerous, his injury was directly caused by his own negligence in remaining in a room known to be dangerous, and not by defendant's negligence in failing to furnish props. Pittsburgh & W. Coal Co. v. Estlevarnard (1895) 53 Ohio St. 43, 40 N. E. 725.

When the danger is not obvious or imminent, and both the employer and the employee, with full knowledge of the same, enter into the contract of employment, or continue the same, neither party is guilty of culpable negligence as towards the other; while if the danger is obvious and imminent, and it is encountered by the servant, then both parties are equally guilty of culpable negligence—that of the employee being culpable contributory negligence. In all cases the continuance on the part of the servant in the master's employment, with full knowledge of the danger, is either negligence or it is not negligence. If it is negligence, and injury results, then no recovery can be had, because of the culpable contributory negligence of the servant; but if it is not negligence on the part of the servant, then neither can it be negligence on the part of the master. What the servant may lawfully do without negligence, the master may lawfully hire him to do without negligence. The master cannot be found to take greater care of the servant than the servant does of himself. If the danger is such that an ordinarily prudent man could assume it without being guilty of negligence, then the same facts and the same reasoning which would show this would also show that there could not be any culpable negligence or any breach of duty on the part of another person for hiring him to assume it. There cannot be negligence on the part of the one, and not on the part of the other, where both are capable of understanding the danger, and both are fully informed as to all the facts. Rush v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 36 Kan. 129, 12 Pac. 582.

If he were allowed to recover after voluntarily incurring a danger he would receive compensation for his own negligence. Illinois River Paper Co. v. Albert (1893) 49 Ill. App. 363.

The servant, however, is not debarred from recovering for injuries directly due to a specific wilful act of the master's vice principal, merely because he knew that similar acts had previously been committed by the same man. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brentford (1891) 79 Tex. 619, 15 S. W. 561 (intoxicated superintendent by his shouts prevented the plaintiff from hearing properly his foreman's words of command by which the loading of a car was being regulated). The court said: "When the cause of the injury is the direct act of the master or his representative, it cannot be said that the servant's remaining in the employment is the proximate cause of the injury, even though the servant may have known that the master or his representative had frequently done the same, or similar acts, which imperiled his safety; for the act which in such case causes the injury is the wrongful act of the master or of his representative, the result of the exercise of the will of the one or the other, and hence the proximate cause of the effect from which the master ought not to be permitted to go free from liability on the ground that the servant knew he had, before the happening of the injury, done acts such as that from which the injury resulted, but still remained in his service."

g. Knowledge of danger held to be not necessarily a bar to the action.

There is also considerable authority for the view that, even where the case involves none of those special considerations,—such as effect of positive orders, assurances of safety, etc.,—which, as noted elsewhere, may tend to rebut the inference of contributory negligence, a court is not warranted in drawing that inference from proof of the mere fact that the servant remained in the employment with an appreciation of the risks resulting from the master's breach of duty. Weblin v. Ballard (1886) L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 122, 55 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 395, 54 L. T. N. S. 532, 34 Week. Rep. 455, 50 J. P. 597, per Smith, J.; Sledge v. Gayoso Hotel Co. (1890) 43 Fed. Rep. 463 (complaint showing knowledge of danger, not demurrable); and the Missouri cases cited infra, h.

In Kane v. Northern C. R. Co. (1888) 128 U. S. 91, 32 L. ed. 339, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16, it was remarked that negligence was predicable of the exposure of oneself to dangers "so obvious and threatening that a prudent man would have avoided them."

But these words can hardly be intended to carry that restrictive significance which they bear in the Missouri cases, as they should be construed with special reference to the facts, the point being (see h. infra), whether the plaintiff was bound to abandon his duties immediately upon the discovery of the defect. The doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States is, as is shown by the decision in Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 224, 25 L. ed. 617, that, under ordinary circumstances, the action is barred by knowledge of any dangerous defect.

Under the peculiar Illinois doctrine as to comparative negligence, an unequalled instruction to the effect that mere knowledge by the servant of circumstances which render the usual method of doing work more than ordinarily hazardous will disable him from recovery, is rightly refused. Such circumstances demand a commensurate degree of care on the part of the master, and the plaintiff has a right to have the question passed upon, whether the master's duty in this regard has been performed. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Gilbert (1895) 157 Ill. 354, 41 N. E. 724 (servant's work was taking wheels across tracks where trains were passing every few minutes).

The result of this theory obviously is that, whenever the danger is not of that obviously imminent and glaring character which it contemplates, the question whether the servant is debarred from recovering on the ground of contributory negligence depends on the use which he made of his knowledge of the danger. Wilson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1887) 85 Ala. 269, 4 So. 701; Mobile & B. R. Co. v. Holborn (1887) 84 Ala. 133, 4 So. 146. But these Alabama cases embody a doctrine different from that of the decisions of the same court cited in l. e. supra.

h. Missouri doctrine as to the effect of the servant's continuance of work with knowledge.

The Missouri decisions upon the disabling effects of the servant's continuance of work with knowledge of abnormal conditions produced by the master's breach of duty are so extraordinarily conflicting that it will be convenient to review them separately.

In a later subdivision, the confusion, both of doctrine and terminology, which these cases exhibit, will be noted. At present we are concerned merely with the effect of the actual rules administered.

About fifteen years ago the supreme court, which then had dealt with the defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risks on precisely the same footing as the courts of other states, enunciated a doctrine.

The rulings based on the latter defense have been noted elsewhere. A case in which the servant was held unable, as a matter of law, to recover on the ground that he was negligent in continuing to work with knowledge of a breach of duty by the master, and without reporting it, is McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 87 Mo. 285, where it was held that the action was barred because the plaintiff knew of the incompetency of the vice principal whose act caused the injury. Two judges dissented, but the division seems to have been merely on the special ground that the delinquent servant was a vice principal, the contention on behalf of the plaintiff being that this circumstance took the case out of the operation of the rule which would otherwise have been applied, the effect of which, as a whole, was to deprive the master of the benefit of the latter defense, in cases where the risk was due to his breach of duty, and to make the servant's right to recover turn solely upon the question whether, in remaining in the employment, he had acted as a prudent man.

This doctrine was taken up and elaborated by Messrs. Shearman & Redfield in their well-known treatise on Negligence, 4th ed. 1888, § 211, 212.

Most of this passage has been altered as respects the language, or altogether excised, in the last edition of this treatise. But the authors evidently remain of the same opinion, as they lay it down that the true rule is that a servant can recover for an injury suffered from defects due to the master's fault of which he had notice, if, under all the circumstances, a servant of ordinary prudence, acting with such prudence, would, under similar conditions, have continued the work under the same risk, and not otherwise. If the "true rule" is the one sustained by the great weight of authority the present writer takes leave to demur very strongly to the correctness of this statement.

It may be asserted with confidence that outside of jurisdictions in which the theory of the learned authors themselves has been deliberately adopted, no decision has ever been rendered which supports their view that contributory negligence is the only defense available to the master under the circumstances supposed, though it may be conceded that more authority may be found for the doctrine that the negligence of the plaintiff is for the jury, even when the conditions and the resulting risks are both known. For instance, in McMahon v. Port Henry Iron Ore Co. (1881) 24 Hun, 48, which is given a prominent place among their citations, we find language to this effect, but it would be putting a strained construction on the words of the court to suppose that they imply that the defense of assumption of risks is excluded altogether where the risks are caused by the master's breach of duty. Even if this construction could be regarded as the correct one, the rule thus arrived at would now be of no authority whatever in view of later decisions of the New York court of appeals. See, especially, Knisley v. Pratt (1896) 148 N. Y. 372, 32 L. R. A. 867, 42 N. E. 986, a strong case, as the duty violated was statutory, and the plaintiff was a minor, and yet the risk was held to have been assumed. Moreover, it is only necessary to examine the recent cases to see that the doctrine of the assumption of known risks is applied as regularly and consistently as it ever was in the great majority of the states, and that judges have, with the few exceptions adverted to, declined to countenance the logical and juridical paradox that the question whether a contract shall be implied may depend upon whether a prudent person would have bound himself by it.

It is submitted, therefore, that the statement criticised is not the "true rule," either on principle or authority. For similar reasons, the clause which has been inserted in § 206 of the same treatise, limiting the cases in which a risk is assumed by the servant to those in which "ordinary prudence would require him to refuse to encounter it, cannot be conceded to be anything but a wholly unwarrantable attempt to qualify that doctrine by the addition of an irrelevant and incongruous element. Even in Missouri itself the doctrine of the learned authors has been so severely shaken by the latest decisions that it may fairly be doubted whether the earlier ones in which it was embodied are any longer to be regarded as good law. (See infra).

In two Missouri cases, decided after the publication of the passage we have been reviewing, its statement of principle was expressly approved: Hamilton v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 364, 18 S. W. 977, per Black, J.; Thorpe v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 89 Mo. 650, 58 Am. Rep. 120, 2 S. W. 3.

In Hamilton v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. Black, J., referring to earlier decisions, said: "The question, whether continuing in the service after knowledge of danger arising from a defective appliance will defeat the servant's action, is properly a question of contributory negligence, as the authorities before cited well show, and is to be determined by rules applicable in such cases."

The position of the court, as he pointed out, was that the doctrine by which a servant, who continues in the employment after knowledge of a defect in the appliance, thereby waives all objections to such defective instrumentality and takes upon himself all the risks, makes it the duty of the servant to abandon his contract of employment, because of a breach of duty on the part of the master, and is unjust and unreasonable.

In another case the same judge remarked that the qualification of the principles previously administered was "in accord with common fairness and the daily conduct of masters and servants." Devlin v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1885) 87 Mo. 545, per Black, J.

See also, as to the reasons of abstract justice which underly the rule, Thorpe v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 89 Mo. 650, 58 Am. Rep. 120, 2 S. W. 3; Hughes v. Fagin (1891) 46 Mo. App. 43.

In working out this theory the courts necessarily follow lines which, up to a certain point, are very similar to those which are traceable in the decisions in jurisdictions in which contributory negligence is treated as being a concurrent and alternative defense, and not an exclusive one. Thus, mere knowledge of a defect is held not to be enough, as a matter of law, to bar the servant's action. Mahaney v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 191, 18 S. W. 295 (defective track); Sullivan v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1891) 107 Mo. 66, 17 S. W. 748 (servant knew staging to be defective); Hamilton v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. (1891) 105 Mo. 364, 18 S. W. 977 (unblocked rail); Donahoe v. Kansas City (1897) 136 Mo. 657, 38 S. W. 571 (insufficient bracing of trench); Warner v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1895) 62 Mo. App. 184 (plaintiff's recovery not barred because a ladder which broke with him and caused the injury was a simple contrivance); Stoddard v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. (1877) 65 Mo. 520 (holding that, although the evidence tended to show that plaintiff had knowledge of a spring frog, and the lowness of the brake beam of a tender, and that two hands instead of four were undertaking to make up the train, the question whether the action of the plaintiff in making up the train while having this knowledge was of such a reckless character as to make it contributory negligence on his part); Hughes v. Fagin (1891) 46 Mo. App. 44 (incompetent fellow servant); Irmer v. St. Louis Brewing Co. (1896) 69 Mo. App. 17 (here the servant had only partial knowledge of the conditions); Lee v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1894) 57 Mo. App. 350 (same facts); and the cases cited infra.

An instruction to the effect that, "if the plaintiff had equal means of knowledge with the defendant, in ascertaining the alleged incompetency of . . . [a fellow servant], then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover," is erroneous. Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1891) 109 Mo. 475, 18 S. W. 1098.

But the language used to describe the circumstances under which the negligence of the servant still remains a question for the jury indicates that, not only is his knowledge of the danger not enough to bar the action, but that the servant may, without necessarily losing his right to an indemnity, go on working in the face of all but the more serious kinds of peril. To justify the court in determining that he was, as a matter of law, guilty of negligence, the instrumentality which caused the injury must have been so "glaringly defective" (Huhn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 92 Mo. 440, 4 S. W. 937; O'Mellia v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. R. Co. (1892) 115 Mo. 205, 21 S. W. 503), "so obviously and immediately dangerous,"—that a man of common prudence would refuse to use it. Settle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1895) 127 Mo. 336, 30 S. W. 125 (brakeman allowed to recover for injuries received through a defective handhold on a car); Waldhler v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 87 Mo. 37 (broken plate of frog, not such a "glaring and obvious" defect, as to operate as conclusive evidence that the place of work was necessarily dangerous).

Or one which it was not reasonable to suppose might be "safely used by the exercise of care and caution." Benham v. Taylor (1896) 49 L. R. A.

66 Mo. App. 308; Warner v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1895) 62 Mo. App. 192; Bullmaster v. St. Joseph (1897) 70 Mo. App. 60. If the defects or insufficiency in the appliances—which term embraces the men employed to do the work, as well as other instrumentalities employed—is so great that, obviously, with the use of great caution, the danger was imminent, then, as a matter of law, the servant who incurs the risk is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover. But if, upon this question, there is substantial doubt, the question is one of fact for the jury, and a nonsuit or demurrer to the evidence is not permissible. Thorpe v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 89 Mo. 650, 58 Am. Rep. 120, 2 S. W. 3. In the following cases, also, in which the culpability of the plaintiff was held to be a question for the jury, this aspect of the situation was emphasized: Soeder v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1890) 100 Mo. 673, 13 S. W. 714 (brakeman knew that track was rendered unsafe by a defective rail); Hamilton v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 364, 18 S. W. 977 (want of blocking between switch rails); McMullen v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1894) 60 Mo. App. 231 (inadequate number of servants).

Or "so far out of repair that it would be necessarily dangerous to the mind of a prudent person" to use it. Devlin v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1885) 87 Mo. 545 (defective track injured engineer).

Or one of which the danger was "apparent and threatening." Musick v. Jacob Bold Pkg. Co. (1894) 58 Mo. App. 322 (open and unguarded tank in a dark room held to be of this character).

Or the defect must have been one which "threatened immediate injury." Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888) 96 Mo. 207, 9 S. W. 589; Swadley v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1893) 118 Mo. 268, 24 S. W. 140; Huhn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 92 Mo. 440, 4 S. W. 937 (want of blocking on railway).

Or the "increased danger" must have been so "imminent and threatening as to require him to abandon the service." Reichle v. Gruensfelder (1892) 52 Mo. App. 43.

Or "so glaring and obvious that there could be no fair debate about the question whether a prudent man would assume the risk under the circumstances." Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (1890) 43 Mo. App. 398.

This doctrine has not obtained much foothold outside of Missouri.

The passage from Messrs. Shearman & Redfield's treatise which was quoted supra, has been cited with approval in Martin v. California C. R. Co. (1892) 94 Cal. 326, 20 Pac. 645, and Colorado C. R. Co. v. Ogden (1877) 3 Colo. 499.

The Missouri decisions are followed in Dwyer v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1892) 52 Fed. Rep. 87; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Finlayson (1884) 16 Neb. 578, 40 Am. Rep. 724, 20 N. W. 860; Lee v. Smart (1895) 45 Neb. 318, 63 N. W. 940; The Serapis (1891) 49 Fed. Rep. 393. Overruled in (1892) 8 U. S. App. 49, 51 Fed. Rep. 91, 2 C. C. A. 102.

It has been explicitly rejected in some states. In East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Duffield (1883) 12 Lea, 68, 47 Am. Rep. 319, the court remarked that this modification of the general rule was difficult to maintain on principle, as it virtually changed the rule as to the free agency of the servant, and required that the master should be more careful of the servant than the servant is of himself. It is, of course, wholly inconsistent with the great majority of the American cases illustrating the doctrine of an assumption of extraordinary risks.

Even in Missouri itself the ordinary doctrine of assumption of risks has never been entirely discarded for any great length of time, and within recent years the courts have shown a marked tendency to fall into line with those of other jurisdictions.

Passing over, as immaterial in the present discussion, the decisions of a date earlier than that at which the "glaring danger" doctrine first made its appearance, we find an explicit recognition of the doctrine of assumption of risks in Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 81, 18 S. W. 188. Reichla v. Gruensfelder (1892) 52 Mo. App. 43, seems to be another affirmation of the same principle. In the following year it was held that an instruction that the plaintiff's action is not barred, unless the danger is apparent and threatening, is misleading. Fugler v. Bothe (1890) 43 Mo. App. 44, per Rombauer, P. J., in a dissenting opinion which was adopted by the supreme court (1893) 117 Mo. 487, 22 S. W. 1113.

Countz v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1893) 115 Mo. 669, 22 S. W. 572 (defective car wheel), also seems to be argued in the assumption that, if the servant's knowledge should have been found by the jury, the servant's action would not have been maintainable.

Fugler v. Bothe, supra, was thought by the St. Louis court of appeals to have sounded the knell of the "immediate and threatening danger doctrine." Moore v. St. Louis Wire Mill Co. (1893) 55 Mo. App. 401, 495.

But Settle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1895) 127 Mo. 336, 30 S. W. 125, another emphatic indorsement of the supposedly doomed rule, was still deemed to be good law.

It was remarked in Marshall v. Kansas City Hay Press Co. (1897) 69 Mo. App. 256, that the doctrine of Fugler v. Bothe was "restored and vitalized" in Steinhauer v. Spraul (1895) 127 Mo. 541, 27 L. R. A. 441, 28 S. W. 620, 30 S. W. 102.

It is, perhaps, open to discussion whether the risk in that case was not held to be assumed on the ground that it was an ordinary one.

But in Nugent v. Kauffman Mill Co. (1895) 131 Mo. 241, 33 S. W. 428, we find a categorical enunciation of the doctrine of assumption of extraordinary risks, in the court's discussion of one of the theories of the evidence upon which the plaintiff relied, though the case really turned on the view that the danger was one incident to the work for which the servant was hired.

In two late cases the decision in Fugler v. Bothe (1893) 117 Mo. 487, 22 N. W. 1113, was followed by the court of appeals: Benham v. Taylor (1896) 66 Mo. App. 308 (structure close to track in mine); Wray v. Southwestern Electric Light & Water Power Co. (1897) 68 Mo. App. 380 (switch in headboard in electric-light establishment was out of repair).

But, singularly enough, in Irmer v. St. Louis Brewing Co. (1897) 69 Mo. App. 17, decided in the same year, the court cited, in support of its ruling, the decision of the court of appeals in Fugler v. Bothe, which, as already mentioned, was reversed by the supreme court.

It should be remarked, moreover, that the decisions in other states, which the courts of Missouri have cited in support of this doctrine,—for example, Perigo v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1880) 55 Iowa, 326, 7 N. W. 627; Hawley v. Northern C. R. Co. (1880) 82 N. Y. 370; Patterson v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. (1874) 76 Ia. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412; Snow v. Housatonic R. Co. (1864) 8 Allen, 441, 85 Am. Dec. 720,—and relied upon in Huhn v. Missouri P. & N. R. Co. (1887) 92 Mo. 440, 4 S. W. 937, are not fairly available as precedents, except to a limited extent. The mere fact that they emanate from jurisdictions in which the defenses both of assumption of risks and of contributory negligence are recognized as being appropriate to cases where the effect of the servant's continuance of work with knowledge of an unusual risk is in controversy, proves that they are not authorities for the principle that evidence of such knowledge raises a question of contributory negligence exclusively.

1. Failure of servant to report defect.

The duty of the servant to report or complain of the dangerous condition is quite frequently referred to in cases of the type now under review, as well as in those respecting the assumption of risks. From the language used in some of them it would seem that the failure to perform this duty was regarded merely as a supplementary and cumulative ground for barring his action, rather than as an indispensable ingredient of the defense. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh (1893) 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; McQueen v. Central Branch U. P. R. Co. (1883) 30 Kan. 691, 1 Pac. 139; Lawrence v. Hagemeyer & Co. (1892) 93 Ky. 591, 20 S. W. 704; Jones v. Roach (1876) 9 Jones & S. 248; Pollich v. Sellers (1890) 42 La. Ann. 623, 7 So. 786.

"If the engineer," said the court in Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 213, 224, 25 L. ed. 612, 617, "after discovering or recognizing the defective condition of the cow-catcher or pilot, had continued to use the engine without giving notice thereof to the proper officers of the company, he would undoubtedly have been guilty of such contributory negligence as to bar a recovery, so far as such defect was found to have been the efficient cause of the death. He would be held, in that case, to have himself risked the dangers which might result from the use of the engine in such defective condition."

But it has also been specifically laid down that the servant's continuance of work with knowledge of the risk is contributory negligence, as matter of law, only where the servant has failed to object or protest. Greenleaf v. Dubuque & S. City R. Co. (1871) 33 Iowa, 52.

And its essentiality to this extent appears to be recognized in other rulings. See, especially, the following Illinois cases: Camp Point Mfg. Co. v. Ballou (1874) 71 Ill. 417; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Eddy (1874) 72 Ill. 138; St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Britz (1874) 72 Ill. 256; Pennsylvania Co. v. Lynch (1878) 90 Ill. 333; Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend (1883) 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425; United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Wilder (1886) 116 Ill. 100, 5 N. E. 100; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Thompson (1884) 15 Ill. App. 117; Evans v. Chessmond (1890) 38 Ill. App. 615; St. Louis Press Brick Co. v. Kenyon (1893) 57 Ill. App. 640; Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Puckett (1893) 52 Ill. App. 223.

Other decisions, which are perhaps to the same effect, are McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 87 Mo. 285; Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. v. Ray (1883) 70 Ga. 674; McCharles v. Horn Silver Min. & Smelting Co. (1894) 10 Utah, 470, 37 Pac. 733 (recklessness of fellow servant to plaintiff); Coal & Min. Co. v. Clay (1894) 51 Ohio St. 542, sub nom. Consolidated Coal & Min. Co. v. Floyd, 25 L. R. A. 848, 38 N. E. 610; Frazier v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1860) 38 Pa. 104, 80 Am. Dec. 467; Bemis v. Roberts (1891) 143 Pa. 1, 21 Atl. 998; Lineoski v. Susquehanna Coal Co. (1893) 157 Pa. 133, 27 Atl. 577.

Under the characteristic Missouri doctrine reviewed in I. h., neither the failure to complain, nor the making of a complaint, is decisive. Thorpe v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 89 Mo. 652, 58 Am. Rep. 120, 2 S. W. 3.

If for any reason it has become the specific duty of the servant to inform the master of any defects which have come to his knowledge, it is clear that a dereliction of that duty constitutes contributive fault which will preclude recovery, as a matter of law, independently of the question whether such fault can be predicated of the continuance of work alone. Knoxville Iron Co. v. Smith (1887) 86 Tenn. 45, 3 S. E. 438 (held error for the court to refuse an instruction to the effect that a convict in a coal mine, who failed to report that a roof was dangerous as was required by an order promulgated by the penitentiary lessees, could not recover). See also the cases on this point under the various employers' liability acts.

1. Duty of the servant to quit the employment when he ascertains that he is exposed to an abnormal danger.

The doctrine that it is contributory negligence to continue working after the existence of an abnormal risk is ascertained obviously involves the corollary that there is a positive duty on the servant's part to withdraw from the dangerous environment altogether, within a reasonable time after he has, or ought to have, discovered its unsafety.

If the servant has notice of any defect from which injury may be reasonably apprehended, he should, generally speaking, quit the service for his own protection. Eureka Co. v. Bass (1886) 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152, 8 So. 216.

In Davis v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1893) 152 Pa. 314, 25 Atl. 498, the plaintiff knew that box cars were in common use on the rear of freight trains, and, if he did not think them reasonably safe with the exercise of reasonable care it was his own folly to ride on one.

If a servant, after notice of the extra risks occasioned by the incompetency of a fellow servant, continues in the master's service, it will be at his own peril, for the law in such case will presume that he intended to assume them; otherwise he would have quit the master's service. United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Wilder (1886) 116 Ill. 100, 5 N. E. 92. See also Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh (1892) 149 U. S. 405, 37 L. ed. 787, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Hjorman v. Fort Bragg Redwood Co. (1894) 104 Cal. 626, 38 Pac. 451; Camp Point Mfg. Co. v. Ballou (1874) 71 Ill. 417; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Munroe (1877) 85 Ill. 25; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Jones (1882) 11 Ill. App. 324; Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend (1883) 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425; Swift & Co. v. Rutkowski (1897) 167 Ill. 156, 47 N. E. 362; Smith v. Drake (1889) 125 Pa. 501, 17 Atl. 449; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Huber (1889) 128 Pa. 63, 5 L. R. A. 439, 18 Atl. 334; Lineoski v. Susquehanna Coal Co. (1893) 157 Pa. 153, 27 Atl. 577; Hawv v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1887; Pa.) 9 Cent. Rep. 786, 11 Atl. 459; Jackson v. Kansas City, L. & S. K. R. Co. (1884) 31 Kan. 761, 3 Pac. 501; Pittsburgh & W. Coal Co. v. Estievenard (1895) 53 Ohio St. 43, 40 N. E. 725; Coal & Min. Co. v. Clay (1894) 51 Ohio St. 542, sub nom. Consolidated Coal & Min. Co. v. Floyd, 25 L. R. A. 848, 38 N. E. 610. In Bannon v. Lutz (1893) 158 Pa. 166, 27 Atl. 890, the trial judge was asked by defendant to give the following instruction: "If the employee thinks that his employer is conducting his business in an unsafe way it is his duty to leave it, and he cannot recover for injuries received by reason of the kind of machinery, or 49 L. R. A.

mode of doing business which has been used and practised for several years, and with which the employee was familiar." The following remarks made by him in reply were approved, as a whole, by the supreme court: "In some particulars, it is, in my judgment, correct, and in others it is incorrect. In my judgment, if the employee thinks that his employer is conducting his business in an unsafe way, then it is his duty to quit it; he cannot, in other words, dictate to his employer how to conduct the business; but it is the duty of the employer to furnish proper machinery to conduct it. In other words, I make a distinction between a man conducting his business, and furnishing appliances with which to conduct it. He can conduct it as he thinks proper, and if the employee don't like that way he must leave it."

Or discontinue the use of the defective instrumentality,—particularly where he has it within his power to remedy the defect. Bemis v. Roberts (1891) 143 Pa. 1, 21 Atl. 998.

Or, where the peril is due to the incompetence of a fellow servant, refuse to work with him. Frazier v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1860) 38 Pa. 104, 80 Am. Dec. 467.

Where the doctrine prevails, that it is not, as matter of law, culpable to continue working with a knowledge of an extraordinary risk, these alternative courses are not viewed as being absolutely obligatory.

It is undoubtedly the duty of a master, where the servant is engaged in hazardous employments, to see that every reasonable caution on his part, to insure safety, is observed. The primary duty of the servant is obedience, and it is not to be expected that he will, upon mere imaginary danger, of which he may be conscious, assert his right to relinquish his employment. He naturally looks to his employer for the observance of all reasonable and proper precautions, and his continuance in the service when such precautions have not been observed is rather to be attributed to confidence reposed in those to whose superior judgment he yields. Keegan v. Kavanaugh (1876) 62 Mo. 232. See also the note to Dallemand v. Saalfeldt (Ill.) 48 L. R. A. 753, on injuries received in obeying specific orders.

One weighty reason of the considerations emphasized by the courts is the natural unwillingness of an employee to embark on a quest for other work, which may be extremely difficult to obtain.

In Harrison v. Denver & R. G. W. R. Co. (1891) 7 Utah, 523, 27 Pac. 728, the court, in upholding the correctness of a charge to the effect that a servant is not bound to set up his own judgment against that of his master as to the safety of the work, under peril of dismissal, where the work ordered to be done is not obviously dangerous, or of such a nature that he can see that it cannot be performed with safety, or where there may be a difference of opinion about it in the minds of reasonable and prudent persons, said: "An employee is not usually in a condition to abandon his employment for slight reason; for out of employment means often out of bread and meat for his family, and he will take unusual and hazardous risks to keep his place, and no employer ought to put him to the choice of peril, or loss of employment."

See also note to O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co. 47 L. R. A. 161, Volenti non fit injuria as a defense to actions by injured servants.

What period of grace shall be allowed the servant is a question upon which the decisions do not throw much light.

Where the servant has notified the master, or the master's representative, of the danger which he has discovered, the rule is that, if that danger is not imminent and obvious, he may continue to encounter it for what is described as a "short," or "reasonable," time with the expectation that the master will perform his duty by removing it. Rush v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 36 Kan. 120, 12 Pac. 582; Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. Peterson (1890) 30 Ill. App. 114 (miner apprehended that the roof of a drift was dangerous, but had demanded that the owner should, as he was bound to do by statute, supply material for propping it); Ross v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1881) 2 McCrary, 235, 8 Fed. Rep. 544 (jury charges that two or three weeks was not an unreasonable time to remain at work with an incompetent conservant whose unfitness the plaintiff had reported).

So, if he has justifiable grounds for believing that the master will remove the source of danger, whether his impression is the result of an explicit promise or not, he may continue working without culpability as long as the jury may consider it to be reasonable to retain that belief. Hoffman v. Dickinson (1888) 31 W. Va. 142, 6 S. E. 53.

The case of a railway servant stands upon a special footing, as he is deemed to owe a duty to the public as well as to his employers, and the effect of the decision, as a whole, is that he is justified in taking much greater risks than employees in other occupations, without necessarily forfeiting his right of action. Under ordinary circumstances, such a servant seems to be, at all events, entitled to remain at work until he obtains an opportunity of notifying the proper agent of the master as to the existence of the danger. Henlon v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1897) 51 U. S. App. 157, 79 Fed. Rep. 903, 25 C. C. A. 223 (injury to station master owing partly to the condition of a platform, and partly to the want of a proper system for regulating the approach of trains to the station).

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly (1894) 24 U. S. App. 103, 63 Fed. Rep. 407, 11 C. C. A. 260, it was held that the trial judge had properly refused a request for an instruction to the effect that, if the plaintiff knew that the deadwoods of the cars he was attempting to couple were out of repair, that there were holes and pitfalls in the roadbed, and that the fireman in charge of the engine was incompetent, and remained in the service of the company without making objection, and without receiving any promise that the causes of danger mentioned should be removed, he was not entitled to relief. If the defendant in error, "said the court of appeals," knew that the deadwoods were out of repair, he must, in all probability, have acquired the knowledge on the spot; and, consistently with the terms of the instruction, his supposed knowledge of the condition of the track, and of the incompetency of the fireman as an engineer, may have come to him so recently as to have afforded him no opportunity to make objection or complaint. Besides, even if he had the supposed knowledge, it was a question for the jury whether or not, under the circumstances, he ought to have attempted to make the coupling, and in so doing was himself negligent, or to be considered as having voluntarily assumed the risk of his act. The question was essentially one of contributory negligence, and the instruction should have been so framed as to leave it to the jury."

It is only in very extreme circumstances that he will not be warranted in remaining on a train until it reaches the next station.

The danger arising from the want of a step on one of the cars in a freight train over which a brakeman may have to pass is not so imminent as to subject him to the charge of recklessness in having remained at his post, where he is assured by the conductor that the car will be removed from the train when it reaches a station a few miles distant, if, upon examining his manifests, he finds that it does not contain perishable freight. Kane v. Northern C. R. Co. (1888) 128 U. S. 91, 32 L. ed. 339, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16.
49 L. R. A.

So it has been said, arguendo, that an engineer is not necessarily negligent because he does not abandon his engine between two stations when he first discovers it to be defective. Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1891) 89 Mich. 416, 50 N. Y. 1008. See also the remarks of Brewer, J., in O'Rourke v. Union P. R. Co. (1884) 22 Fed. Rep. 191.

Usually he may continue to operate the engine until he reaches a station where the defect can be cured or a new engine obtained, if the defect is such that he might reasonably believe that it could be safely operated by great care, and if the risk is not greater than persons of ordinary prudence would take. Fordyce v. Edwards (1895) 60 Ark. 438, 30 S. W. 758.

So, also, where the unfitness of a servant was ascertained for the first time on the trip, it was held correct to refuse to give the peremptory instructions asked for by the defendant, that if the plaintiff knew, or even had the opportunity of knowing, before he fell from the car in question, that the engineer was an unfit or unsafe man to run the engine, it was the plaintiff's duty absolutely to refuse to work with him any longer. The Supreme Court said: "The duty of the plaintiff, under such circumstances, is not to be determined by the single fact of his knowledge of the danger he incurred by continuing to serve with a coemployee known by him to be an unfit and incompetent person. It was enough for the court to say, as it did, that a failure on the part of the plaintiff to refuse to work, in view of that knowledge on his part, might be negligence on his part. The qualification was correct, that it was for the jury to say, from all the attending circumstances, whether his failure to do so was in fact contributory negligence. A suitable judgment on that question can only be reached by carefully weighing the probable consequences of both courses of conduct, and it might well happen that even at the risk of injury to himself, occasioned by the unskilfulness of his coemployee, the plaintiff might still reasonably be regarded as under a duty not suddenly and instantly to refuse to continue in the conduct of the business of his principal. Many cases might be conceived in which the latter course might even increase the danger to the plaintiff himself, and entail great injury and loss to others." Northern P. R. Co. v. Mares (1887) 123 U. S. 710, 31 L. ed. 296, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321.

A brakeman is not chargeable with negligence in attempting to use the brakes on cars so loaded as to make their use unsafe, when he first discovers the fact at a time when the cars are in rapid motion toward a standing car upon which others are at work and in imminent danger. Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1891) 89 Mich. 416, 50 N. W. 1008. To the same effect, see Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1895) 127 Mo. 658, 28 S. W. 842, affirmed in (1895) 30 S. W. 129 (switchman injured by incompetence of engineer, not bound to abandon service immediately); Groff v. Cincinnati & I. R. Co. (1871) 1 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep. 264 (defective bridge).

But the exigencies of railway traffic will not excuse the servant for running the risk of almost certain injury.

No recovery can be had by a fireman who remained, without protest, on a detached engine when he knew that it was about to be run without orders over a section of the road on which, as he was aware, the engineer had no right to take it without orders. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh (1893) 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914, Field, J., dissenting, but only on the ground of the fireman's knowledge of the conditions. The following remarks of the learned judge, made after the review of the evidence which led him to his conclusion as to the facts, are of sufficient general interest to be worth quoting: "His information as to what was known, and consequently directed or omitted, by the engineer on that subject was too imperfect for him to act upon it. His continuance as fireman on the locomotive after its movement to return to Bellaire was not sufficient knowledge of any failure of the engineer to give the proper orders as to a scheduled train to justify an abandonment of the locomotive. It was under the direction of the engineer, not of the fireman, and he may have felt confident that it could be run on a side track if necessary to avoid any possible collision with a train coming in the opposite direction, as was sometimes done. It would be a dangerous notion to put into the heads of firemen and other employees of a railroad company that if they had reason to believe, without positive information on the subject, that dangers attended the course pursued by the movements of the train under the direction of its conductors, they would be deemed to assume the risk of such movements if they did not expostulate with him, and, if he did not heed the expostulation, leave the train, even after it had commenced one of its regular trips. A strange set of legal questions would arise, more embarrassing to the courts than the fellow servant question, if such action should be deemed essential to the retention by the employee of the right to claim indemnity for injuries which might follow from the course pursued. If the employees could abandon a train after it had commenced one of its regular trips when they had reason to believe, without absolute information, that danger might attend their continuance on it, new strikes of employees would spring up to embarrass the commerce of the country and annoy the community, founded upon such alleged apprehensions. The circumstances attending the cases in which an employee has been held to have voluntarily assumed the risks of an irregular, improper, or ill-advised movement of a train, under directions of its conductor, are essentially different from those of the case before us."

An engineer is guilty of contributory negligence, where, of his own volition and without orders, he attempts to take his train across a bridge which he has reason, from his personal examination, to believe to have become unsafe through a flood, the waters of which are still rising. Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Bridges (1888) 86 Ala. 448, 5 So. 864.

II. Relation between the defenses of assumption of risks and contributory negligence.

a. Introductory.

As the conception underlying the servant's assumption of a known risk is essentially that of an implied agreement to accept the responsibility for any bodily hurt which may result from his exposure to that risk, and the theory upon which contributory negligence is held to preclude him from recovery is that he was guilty of imprudence in the premises, and that this imprudence was partially or entirely the cause of his injury (Wharton, Neg. § 300; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 63; 1 Beven, Neg. pp. 168 et seq.; Pollock, Torts, p. 374), the differentiation of the two defenses in practice would seem to present no great difficulties. But, as a matter of fact, the obvious distinction between them and the logical results of that distinction have, in a singularly large number of cases, been lost sight of, or treated as immaterial, or even denied to exist.

This remark is not intended to apply to cases in which the courts have laid down rules which are couched in such general terms that it is for practical purposes a mere paraphrase of the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria. (See note to O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co. (Mass.) 47 L. R. A. 161.) Such are the following:

When an employee, after having the opportunity of becoming acquainted with the risks of his situation, accepts them, he cannot complain if he is subsequently injured by such exposure. St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Britz (1874) 72 Ill. 257.

If the servant, after having knowledge of the defective machinery, apparatus, or material, remains in the service, and attempts to use the same, and is thereby injured, he cannot recover of the company for such injury. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Myers (1881) 55 Tex. 111, quoting Pierce, Railroads, p. 379, note 4.

If a servant wilfully encounters dangers which are known to him, or are notorious, the master is not responsible for an injury occasioned thereby. Berns v. Gaston Gas Coal Co. (1885) 27 W. Va. 285, 55 Am. Rep. 304.

Compare the passage quoted from Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Sentmeyer (1879) 92 Pa. 276, 37 Am. Rep. 684, infra.

See also Assop v. Yates (1858) 2 Hurlst. & N. 768, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 156, where recovery was denied simply on the ground of the servant's voluntary continuance at work, without any specific allusion to his assumption of the risk, or contributory negligence; McCharles v. Horn Silver Min. & Smelting Co. (1894) 10 Utah, 470, 37 Pac. 733 (verdict for the defendant should be directed where the plaintiff himself has testified that he continued, with knowledge of a fellow servant's unfitness, to expose himself to the dangers arising therefrom—but theory of the defense not explicitly stated).

Sometimes the practice of the court which decided the case to determine the servant's rights from the standpoint of contributory negligence renders it reasonable to infer that, although neither of the two defenses is explicitly mentioned, that was the one really relied on. Coal Run Coal Co. v. Jones (1889) 127 Ill. 379, 8 N. E. 865, 20 N. E. 89 (See, as to the rule in Illinois, e. infra).

Where the practice of the court varies in this respect, it is a mere matter of surmise which defense was intended to operate, nor is it a matter of much consequence, if, under the given circumstances, simple knowledge of the danger, would, as matter of law, warrant the inference of negligence as well as of an assumption of the risk. Sometimes each of the two defenses seems to have been present to the mind of the judge at different stages in the progress of the case. Thus, in one of the earlier English cases turning on the effect of the servant's knowledge, Chief Baron Pollock remarked during the argument of counsel that a servant "took the risk" if he went on working after the master himself had observed a defect and expressed his opinion about it, while, in the judgment of the court, delivered by Watson, B., the servant's right to recover was denied on the ground that he knew that the defective appliance was used, and, being "contributory of the injury," came under the principle stated by Lord Cranworth in Paterson v. Wallace (1854) 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 748, that a plaintiff must, as a condition precedent to recovery, establish that the injury arose from no "rashness of his own." Griffiths v. Gildow (1858) 3 Hurlst. & N. 648, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 404.

In Dynen v. Leach (1857) 26 L. J. Exch. N. S. 221, while the other judges rested their decision on the plaintiff's assumption of the risks, Channell, B., took the ground that, by continuing in the defendant's employ, he directly contributed to the accident.

It is most desirable, therefore, to obtain an adequate idea of the true relation between these defenses. Few lawyers, we imagine, realize the extent to which this department of the law has been unnecessarily obscured and complicated through the downright intellectual obliquity or the slovenliness of language by which the boundary line between them has been blurred or obliterated.

b. Logical independence of the two defenses.

The books contain fewer explicit allusions than might be expected to a distinction, of which the existence of two separate lines of decisions in which the servant's voluntary exposure of himself to a known risk is considered from the standpoints of an assumption of the risk and of contributory negligence in incurring that risk, constitutes a practical recognition. But several courts have adverted to the true logical situation in more or less formal language.

Carelessness is not the same thing as intelligent choice. Bowen, L. J., in Thomas v. Quartermaine (1887) L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 685, 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 340, 57 L. T. N. S. 537, 35 Week. Rep. 555, 51 J. P. 516. (The remainder of the passage of which this remark forms a part is quoted in note to O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co. 47 L. R. A. 161, Div. IX.)

In the same case Fry, L. J., said: "There are two matters which often arise for discussion in these cases of negligence, which are, I think, liable to be confused, and yet are inseparable in reason. The one is the willingness of the plaintiff to assume the danger; and this willingness, if assumed with full knowledge, may lessen or remove any duty of the employer to the employed, and may thus prevent the arising of any cause of action, though, in the discharge of the work undertaken, the workman may have been guilty of no negligence. The other is the negligence of the plaintiff, which may have placed him in circumstances of difficulty or danger, or which, when he is placed in such circumstances, may have contributed to the injury. Here there may have been no willingness to enter on the danger, but negligence when in it. In both these questions the knowledge of the plaintiff may be a material ingredient. But the questions are nevertheless distinct."

Assuming the risks of an employment is one thing and quite an essentially different thing from incurring an injury through contributory negligence. Mundle v. Hill Mfg. Co. (1894) 86 Me. 400, 30 Atl. 16, following Miner v. Connecticut River R. Co. (1891) 153 Mass. 398, 26 N. E. 994.

If with knowledge, or with means of knowledge, equal to his employer's of defects in the machinery, the servant, without remonstrance, voluntarily continues in the service, a waiver of his claim for damages is said to have taken place, or his conduct is regarded as negligence 49 L. R. A.

contributory to the resulting injury. Wells v. Coe (1886) 9 Colo. 159, 11 Pac. 50.

There is a clear and logical distinction between a defense resting on the assumption of risks, and that predicated on contributory negligence. Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 81, 18 S. W. 188.

The defenses of contributory negligence and of assumed risk are separate and distinct. The doctrines are applicable under different conditions. Contributory negligence, in a case of this kind, implies the existence of negligence on the part of an injured servant, co-operating with that of a master, and thus aiding in producing the injury.

The doctrine of assumed risks obtains without necessary reference to the existence of negligence. If the servant, with knowledge of a defect in the master's premises, and of a danger and risk incident thereto, continues in the service of the master without proper notice to the latter, he assumes the risk incident to the service and growing out of the existence of the defect, and this without regard to the degree of care which he may exercise in the performance of his labor. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Conroy (1892) 83 Tex. 214, 18 S. W. 609; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bryant (1894) 8 Tex. Civ. App. 134, 27 S. W. 825. See also Probert v. Phipps (1889) 149 Mass. 258, 21 N. E. 370; Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (1887) 122 U. S. 189, 30 L. ed. 1114, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1116; Southern P. Co. v. Seley (1894) 152 U. S. 145, 38 L. ed. 391, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Snedea v. Libera (1896) 65 Minn. 337, 68 N. W. 36; Anderson v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. (1896) 67 Minn. 79, 69 N. W. 630; Wuotilla v. Duluth Lumber Co. (1887) 37 Minn. 153, 33 N. W. 551; St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Irwin (1887) 37 Kan. 701, 16 Pac. 146; Pennsylvania Co. v. Witte (1896) 15 Ind. App. 583, 43 N. E. 320; and cases cited in II. c.

Not infrequently, also, the distinction emerges in statements, to the effect that evidence of the servant's having begun or continued work with a knowledge of the danger arising from the master's breach of duty raises both the questions whether he assumed that danger, and whether he was negligent. Donahue v. Drown (1891) 154 Mass. 21, 27 N. E. 675; DeLisle v. Ward (1897) 168 Mass. 579, 47 N. E. 436; Southern P. Co. v. Seley (1894) 152 U. S. 145, 38 L. ed. 391, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; McQueen v. Central Branch U. P. R. Co. (1883) 30 Kan. 691, 1 Pac. 139; Bailou v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1882) 54 Wis. 257, 41 Am. Rep. 31, 11 N. W. 559, quoted in Brossman v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (1886) 113 Pa. 490, 57 Am. Rep. 479, 6 Atl. 226; Bemisch v. Roberts (1891) 143 Pa. 1, 21 Atl. 998; Hanrahan v. Brooklyn Elev. R. Co. (1897) 17 App. Div. 588, 45 N. Y. Supp. 474; Cook v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1885) 34 Minn. 45, 24 N. W. 311 (a case of specific orders); Craver v. Christian (1887) 36 Minn. 413, 31 N. W. 457; McDonald v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1889) 41 Minn. 439, 43 N. W. 386; Smith v. E. W. Backus Lumber Co. (1896) 64 Minn. 447, 67 N. W. 358; Stone v. Oregon City Mfg. Co. (1870) 4 Or. 52.

In view of the fact that the defenses are alternative and concurrent, a statement like the following is too broad:

The law does not impute negligence to a servant for using the machinery of his master which he knows to be defective. He merely assumes the risk incident to such defect, and cannot recover damages for any injury which results from it. Green v. Cross (1890) 79 Tex. 130, 15 S. W. 220.

Negligence may clearly be imputed if the master chooses to rely on that defense. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Somers (1890) 78 Tex. 439, 14 S. W. 779.

c. Assumption of risk a conclusive defense irrespective of whether servant exercised due care.

It would seem that, in view of the contractual relations of the parties, the first question which, in a natural logical sequence, first demands settlement, is whether the risk which caused the injury was one of those accepted under an implied agreement; and that the question whether the servant's conduct was imprudent only becomes material after the conventional assumption of the risk has been negatived.

That this is the true logical sequence is implied in the remark of the supreme court of Massachusetts that, if the servant has not exercised such care as ordinary persons are accustomed to exercise under like circumstances, he cannot recover, even if he did not assume the risk voluntarily. Mahoney v. Dore (1892) 155 Mass. 520, 30 N. E. 366.

In a good many cases we find the essentially secondary and ulterior character of the second question fully recognized. Thus, courts have refused to consider the defense of contributory negligence where the evidence shows that the risk was assumed either as being ordinary (Northern C. R. Co. v. Husson (1882) 101 Pa. 1; McIntosh v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 58 Mo. App. 281; Jones v. Roberts (1894) 57 Ill. App. 56), or for the reason that the servant went on working with a full comprehension of its nature and extent.

In Carbine v. Bennington & R. R. Co. (1889) 61 Vt. 348, 17 Atl. 491, the court said, the employee having assumed the perils of his employment in respect to the bridge (low overhead) the question of contributory negligence was not in this case.

An assumption of the risks of the employment by a servant will bar recovery, independently of the principle of contributory negligence. Conley v. American Exp. Co. (1895) 87 Me. 352, 32 Atl. 965.

The master's liability arises from the fact that he subjects his servants to dangers which in good faith he ought to provide against, but he is not responsible for those dangers to which the servant voluntarily subjects himself, though he does so without carelessness or breach of duty. Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Sentmeyer (1879) 92 Pa. 276, 37 Am. Rep. 684.

The assumption of the risk will exonerate the master from liability, though the servant was himself free from negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr (1882) 84 Ind. 50.

An employee may not shield himself from the consequences of a conscious encountering of risk on the ground that he exercised prudence in the undertaking to which the risk attaches, and from which the injury results. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bryant (1894) 8 Tex. Civ. App. 134, 27 S. W. 825.

It matters not what care and caution a servant uses in the discharge of his duties, if his injuries are received on account of the hazards he has assumed,—those that he was acquainted with,—he cannot recover. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark (1882) 11 Ill. App. 104.

In Saxon v. Hawksworth (1872) 26 L. T. N. S. 851, Mellor, J., corrected counsel, who was proceeding to argue that there was no contributory negligence, by the remark: "You mean no acquiescence in the insufficient supply of hands."

In Perigo v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1879) 49 L. R. A.

52 Iowa, 276, 3 N. W. 43, the court after referring to decisions relating to the doctrine of assumption of risks, said: The doctrine of these cases is that the negligence of the defendant, in furnishing defective or improperly constructed machinery and implements, is waived by remaining in the employment without protest or promise of amendment. The waiver of the negligence of the defendant places the case in the same position as though the defendant had not been negligent, and without the negligence of the defendant there can be no recovery. This waiver cannot be affected by the particular situation in which the employee may be placed, or the rapidity and promptness with which he may be required to act at the time of the accident. These questions may, very properly, bear upon the question of the contributory negligence of the employee, but they can have no bearing upon the question whether the defendant has been guilty of negligence, about which the employee has a legal right to complain.

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Davis (1891) 54 Ark. 369, 15 S. W. 895, a case of an unblocked frog, the court said: "We think confusion has sometimes crept into cases like this, from the effort to determine them by the rules of contributory negligence. We do not think they necessarily furnish the correct criterion for determination, but that the contract of employment is a necessary element of consideration. It is an elemental principle that an employee, when he enters into service, agrees to assume all risks ordinarily incident to his employment, and if he is of mature years, experienced in the business undertaken, and knows what instrumentalities are to be used by him, he contracts that he will assume the risks incident to using that class of instrumentality, as well as any other risk incident to the business, and, if the master use proper care in providing the kind contemplated, the employee cannot complain, although some other kind would have been less dangerous; his contract hushes his complaint, regardless of the employer's negligence."

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bradford (1886) 66 Tex. 732, 59 Am. Rep. 739, 2 S. W. 595, the court remarks: "It has sometimes been held that, although the servant may have been aware of the defect, yet if a man of ordinary prudence on this account would not have refused to do the work, but would have continued in the service and have attempted to perform it, that then he may recover for an injury resulting from such defect. It seems to us that such a rule is unsound; for if the servant, acting as a prudent man would ordinarily act, would undertake to do the work with knowledge of the defect, this very test relieves the master from liability, for the obligations and duties of master and servant are correlative; each is held to that degree of care, in reference to all matters affecting the safety of the servant while in the master's employment, which men of ordinary prudence would or ought to exercise under the same circumstances. If the servant, with a knowledge of the defect, as a prudent man, may undertake the work, can it be said that the master has not exercised that degree of care required of him?" See also Feely v. Pearson Cordage Co. (1894) 161 Mass. 426, 37 N. E. 368; Conley v. American Exp. Co. (1895) 87 Me. 352, 32 Atl. 965; Morris v. Gleason (1877) 1 Ill. App. 517; Ames v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1893) 135 Ind. 363, 35 N. E. 117; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kemper (1897) 147 Ind. 561, 47 N. E. 214; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Sandford (1889) 117 Ind. 269, 19 N. E. 770; Wilson v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. (1887) 37 Minn. 327, 33 N. W. 908; Gulf, C.

& S. F. R. Co. v. Schwabbe (1892) 1 Tex. Civ. App. 373, 21 S. W. 708.

Under the strict rules of common-law pleading, an allegation that plaintiff was free from fault does not supply the lack of averments negating the voluntary assumption of the risk. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Corps (1890) 124 Ind. 429, 8 L. R. A. 638, 24 N. E. 1048.

The doctrine of comparative negligence has no application where an unwise or injudicious rule of the master, well known and understood by the servant, produces a hazard which he is presumed to incur voluntarily as an incident of his employment. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Neer (1887) 26 Ill. App. 356.

Accordingly, whenever the evidence suggests that the servant knew of the extraordinary risk which caused the accident, the jury should be instructed regarding the legal consequences of such knowledge, as justifying the inference both of an assumption of the risk and of contributory negligence. Texas & P. R. Co. v. French (1893) 86 Tex. 99, 23 S. W. 642. This requirement was held not to have been satisfied by the following instruction: "If it should appear that plaintiff knew that in performing said duty in the manner that he undertook to do so, or by the exercise of ordinary care might have known, that it was dangerous, and he still continued performing said work, then plaintiff cannot recover. It was the duty of the plaintiff, for his own safety, to exercise that degree of care that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised under the same circumstances; and if his injury resulted to him from a failure on his part to use such care, then you will find for the defendant, and that without regard to whether Collins had or had not failed to perform the duty required of him." The court said: "That the servant must use ordinary diligence to protect himself from danger, and that he is chargeable with notice of such defects as he might discover by the exercise of such diligence, is a different proposition from that embraced in the charge asked and refused. While the charge given is correct, yet the appellant was entitled to have both propositions submitted to the jury, since both issues arose upon the evidence and under the pleadings."

In Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Conroy (1892) 83 Tex. 216, 18 S. W. 609, the following charge was held incorrect: "If the goose-neck coupling apparatus was not more dangerous than an ordinary coupler, and if plaintiff knew of it being there, and did not use ordinary care as a man of ordinary care and skill should have used, under the circumstances and danger attending the making of such coupling, then the verdict should be for the defendant;" also: "The existence of either one of the facts referred to in the charge, connected by 'and,' would be sufficient to exempt defendant of liability, and each of them should have been given as separate defenses."

An instruction to the effect that continuance of work with actual or constructive knowledge of a defect increasing the dangers of one's employment tends to show contributory negligence has been considered to confound waiver with contributory negligence. Crabell v. Wapello Coal Co. (1886) 68 Iowa, 751, 28 N. W. 56.

The following passage, though not relating to an accident to a servant, may be usefully quoted in the present connection: Ordinarily, in actions to recover damages for injuries to person or property, an instruction as to the effect of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff will cover all that need be said to the jury upon this branch of the case. But 40 L. R. A.

the principle that one may be debarred from a recovery when he voluntarily assumes the risk is not identical with the principle on which the doctrine of contributory negligence rests, and in proper cases this ought to be explained to the jury. One may, with his eyes open, undertake to do a thing which he knows is attended with more or less peril, and he may, both in entering upon the undertaking and in carrying it out, use all the care he is capable of. But whether or not he thereby assumes the risk may depend on other circumstances. One may, without fault of his own, be in a situation where he must choose a perilous alternative. The degree of danger, the stress of circumstances, the expectation or hopes that others will fully perform the duties resting on them may all have to be considered. Miner v. Connecticut River R. Co. (1891) 153 Mass. 398, 26 N. E. 994.

Any instructions are erroneous which give the jury to understand that, although the servant possessed that knowledge, he is entitled to recover provided he was in the exercise of due care. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark (1882) 11 Ill. App. 104; Wink v. Weller (1891) 41 Ill. App. 342 (instead of instruction that, if the plaintiff used the defective appliance knowing it to be defective, then the jury should consider such fact in determining whether the plaintiff exercised due care); Mexican C. R. Co. v. Shean (1891; Tex.) 18 S. W. 151; Mundle v. Hill Mfg. Co. (1894) 86 Me. 400, 30 Atl. 18 (held error to give an instruction permitting the jury to find for the plaintiff if she was not negligent, where both the defense raised by the defendant, and the hypothetical state of facts on which the jury asked for instructions, raised the question whether the plaintiff had assumed the risks of the defect).

In Foley v. Jersey City Electric Light Co. (1892) 54 N. J. L. 411, 24 Atl. 487, the jury was directed to inquire whether the danger arising from the absence of a step on a lamp pole was of such imminent character that a person of ordinary prudence, having regard for his own safety, would have declined to use it. If so, they were told that the plaintiff could not recover; but if it were otherwise, if the peril was not so imminent and threatening but that he might with safety go up to the light and trim it and get back again by the exercise of extra care, he could recover. Under these instructions the jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff. A new trial was ordered, the court saying: "If the servant knows of the defect, and it is of such a nature that a prudent person will not abandon the service on account of it, then no negligence can be charged to the master for permitting the defect to continue. If the plaintiff was justified in concluding that he could ascend the pole and return with safety by using care, the defendant had the right to draw the same conclusion, and, in that event, the defendant was in no fault. If the peril was of such imminent character that it was imprudent on the part of the plaintiff to attempt to ascend the pole, then, under the rule laid down by the trial judge, the verdict is wrong. If the plaintiff acted as a prudent man in undertaking to ascend the pole, the injury must be ascribed to mere accident, the casual slipping of his foot. In that case neither he nor his employer is to be held guilty of a want of care. The servant and the master had equal means of forming a correct judgment. Therefore, whatever want of prudence in taking the risk is chargeable to the one must be imputed to the other. The attempt to engraft this exception upon the general rule introduces the element of the absence or presence of due prudence on the part of the servant into this discussion, which is a circumstance, in my judgment, wholly foreign to it. The immunity of the master rests upon the contract of hiring, and not upon the absence or presence of negligence in either party. The master says to the servant: You understand fully the nature of the employment and the danger attending it; will you enter upon it? The servant says: I accept it; and the law implies that he accepts it, with all the risk incident to it, without regard to the magnitude of the danger. The question is not whether it was prudent on his part to encounter the peril. In contemplation of law, his undertaking to assume the apparent risk of the work was general and unqualified. He might have restricted his assumption of danger by stipulating that he would take upon himself such liability to injury only as could be avoided by due care on his part. In the absence of such a term in the engagement, it cannot be introduced, by implication, without changing its purport, and importing into it a condition unfavorable to the master, and which has not his consent."

In Garety v. King (1896) 9 App. Div. 443, 448, 41 N. Y. Supp. 633, the question of the plaintiff's knowledge being raised by the defendant's counsel, the trial judge in his main charge instructed the jury "that, if the deceased did know of the existence of that window [in the roof], and nevertheless undertook to work there, he assumed the risk of the apparent danger;" and "it is for you, therefore, to say whether the decedent did know of the existence of that peril." But at a subsequent stage of the trial he retracted this instruction, and specifically charged the jury that it was an erroneous statement of the law; and that, even if the decedent did know of the existence of the skylight, but exercised due care to avoid accident, the plaintiff might recover. The appellate court said: "That instruction was tantamount to saying that, if the decedent were free from negligence, he did not assume the risk of working at a dangerous place, known to him to be dangerous; and it put the subject definitely before the jury in such a way as to authorize them to ignore altogether (if they found on the other issues in favor of the plaintiff), the question of the assumption by the decedent of the risks attendant upon his working in a known place of danger. The learned judge virtually eliminated from the case the entire question of the assumption of the risk, and made that issue identical with the one relating to contributory negligence, and thus inadvertently the jury were misled on that subject."

Instructions are also erroneous which give the jury to understand that the only defense predicable from the servant's knowledge is contributory negligence. Koehler v. New York Elev. R. Co. (1896) 9 App. Div. 449, 51 N. Y. Supp. 209.

It is equally erroneous, under such circumstances, to refuse instructions explaining the doctrine of assumption of risks. Woodell v. West Virginia Improv. Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 23, 17 S. E. 386. In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bryant (1894) 8 Tex. Civ. App. 134, 27 S. W. 825, where the servant was injured by a hole in a railway platform, the court refused to give an instruction, demanded by the defendant, which affirmatively invoked the defense of an assumption of the risk, and gave the following charge: "A railroad employee is bound to use, in caring for his own safety while in such employment, such care as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise, under like circumstances. In entering the service of a railroad company he assumes all the ordinary risks incident to his employment, among which is the risk of an injury that may result to him from working in a place which he knows to be in such an unsafe condition as would render it probable to a man of ordinary prudence that to work there would be attended with danger, and, should he go upon or into such a place, knowing it to be unsafe, he is bound to use all the care which a man of ordinary prudence would exercise under like circumstances, and prevent injury to himself." The court sustained the objection of the defendant to this construction, that it "confounded the distinction between an assumed risk and contributory negligence, to the prejudice of defendant, inasmuch as defendant's contention is, and was, that the hole in the platform was an obvious defect, and apparently dangerous, and that its defective condition was known to plaintiff so as to preclude recovery by him when he exposed himself to the danger, irrespective of any negligence on his part"; especially if it also laid down explicitly that the servant's knowledge merely casts upon him the duty of using greater care in the use of and in avoiding danger from such appliance. Peirce v. Clavin (1897) 53 U. S. App. 492, 82 Fed. Rep. 550, 27 C. C. A. 227.

But an instruction treating the employee's knowledge as affecting only the question of contributory negligence, while erroneous, is not ground for reversal, where other instructions treat his knowledge as affecting the assumption of the risk, and the jury find specially that the employee did not have knowledge of the increased peril. The instructions objected to here read thus: "The fact, if it is a fact, that Leyden had knowledge that the roof was in a dangerous condition does not necessarily preclude a recovery by the plaintiff. Knowledge is always an important matter for consideration, but it does not always establish contributory negligence. If one undertakes to pass a known danger so great that no person of ordinary prudence would voluntarily encounter it, then he is guilty of contributory negligence, for no person possessing knowledge of danger has a right to go into a place which ordinarily prudent men would avoid. If, however, the danger is known, but it is not of such a character as that prudent men would not decline to encounter it, then the attempt to pass it is not, in and of itself, such negligence as will defeat the action. But if he does not attempt it, he must exercise care proportioned to the known danger." Rogers v. Leyden (1890) 127 Ind. 50, 26 N. E. 210.

d. Contributory negligence in respect to risks assumed.

It must be admitted, however, that the books contain not a few cases in which the above principles are wholly ignored, or are not given their proper effect; as where the theory on which the plaintiff is denied recovery is contributory negligence, although the evidence shows that there was no breach of duty on the master's part. Jones v. Sutherland (1895) 91 Wis. 567, 65 N. W. 496 (servant familiar with saw mills stepped, without looking, on a slanting floor which was usual and necessary at the place, and, slipping, fell against a circular saw); Loring v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. (1895) 128 Mo. 349, 31 S. W. 6 (section hand familiar with the usages of yards and the dangers from passing trains, held negligent in crossing a track in front of an engine in motion without looking. But it was also found that the men in charge of the train were not negligent, and therefore there was no fault committed by anyone for whose conduct the company was responsible); Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Lee (1888) 84 Va. 642, 5 S. E. 579 (no duty to warn servant of approach of train drawn by engine which had an unusually loud exhaust discharge, a better signal than a bell,—servant also held negligent in uncoupling standing cars on an incline when loaded train was drawing near); Sheeler v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1885) 81 Va. 188, 50 Am. Rep. 654 (fireman held unable to recover, because, without any necessity, he leaned so far out of the engine that he was struck by the timbers of a bridge-truss of the usual width).

Or where it is laid down that if a servant is injured when obeying the orders of a superior in a branch of business for which he was "specially" employed, his knowledge of the danger will be considered in estimating the degree of care he should use to avoid it. Mann v. Oriental Print Works (1875) 11 R. I. 153. See also Crowe v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1893) 70 Hun, 37, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1100 (track repairer held unable to recover on the ground that, being familiar with the danger from cars constantly passing in a yard without warning, he stepped on a track without looking; yet, in another part of the opinion, that danger is spoken of as one of those assumed by such an employee).

The Chandos (1880) 6 Sawy. 554, Deady, J., held that a sailor who went on a crane-line (a rope subjected to a continual chafing), in the dark, without any precaution against its breaking, or observation as to its then condition, was negligent, and added: "The libellant assumed the ordinary risks of his employment, and the liability of the crane-line to part appears to be one of them. The negligence of the libellant was the proximate, if not the sole, cause of the injury."

Nor are these principles applied, where it was explicitly held, or the evidence warranted the inference, that the servant had assumed the risk, or was culpable, as a matter of law, in continuing to work; and yet the actual rationale of the decision is that he failed to take proper precautions to safeguard himself against that risk. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Lyons (1888) 119 Pa. 324, 13 Atl. 205 (flagman who attempted to board a moving engine with a defective step, the condition of which he knew, while his hands were encumbered with two lanterns, and he might have stopped the train, held negligent as a matter of law); Mansfield Coal & Coke Co. v. McEnery (1879) 91 Pa. 185, 36 Am. Rep. 662 (plaintiff, who knew that a bridge was defective, held negligent in driving his team on to it); Taylor v. Carew Mfg. Co. (1885) 140 Mass. 150, 3 N. E. 21 (held that appropriate precautions were not taken by a servant who walked quickly into a dark basement room, when the eyes afford practically no assistance, without attempting, either by hands or feet, to find a hole which he knew to be somewhere in the room, although he could not tell exactly where); Pingree v. Leyland (1883) 135 Mass. 398 (servant injured through his inadvertence in handling unboxed machinery, of the condition of which he was fully cognizant); Odell v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1890) 120 N. Y. 323, 24 N. E. 478 (servant injured by the unexpected starting of a sawing-machine while he was engaged in changing saws, was guilty of such contributory negligence as will prevent a recovery, if he knew that the machine was out of order when he placed his hand upon the saw); Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 81, 18 S. W. 188 (servant aware of the constant dangers caused by the wearing away of the blocking of frogs, but held unable to recover because he failed to use proper care in the manner of making the coupling); Clark v. St. Paul & S. City R. Co. (1881) 28 Minn. 131, 9 N. W. 581 (trackman knew of roof projecting over track and through his inattention was struck); Illick v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1886) 67 Mich. 632, 35 N. W. 708 (brakeman, knowing of position of bridge near track, swung himself out so far from a car that he came into contact with it—no call of duty to go upon the car till after the bridge was passed); Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Sentmeyer (1879) 92 Pa. 276, 37 Am. Rep. 684 (railroad servant rode on top of freight train without any call of duty, and was struck by a low bridge the position of which he knew); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall (1888) 87 Ala. 708, 4 L. R. A. 710, 6 So. 277 (brakeman, notified of low bridge, failed to take necessary steps to avoid being struck by it); Quibell v. Union P. R. Co. (1891) 7 Utah, 122, 25 Pac. 734 (servant failed to look out for coal-chute which he knew to be near the track); Stubbs v. Atlanta Cotton-Seed Oil Mills (1893) 92 Ga. 495, 17 S. E. 746 (servant while cleaning machinery carelessly exposed himself to an unseen danger which he had opportunities for discovering if he had kept his faculties on the alert while manipulating it); Paland v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. (1892) 44 La. Ann. 1003, 11 So. 707 (one employed as keeper of a building to prevent trespassers from dilapidating and stripping it is guilty of such contributory negligence as will prevent a recovery, where the building fell and killed him, owing partly to his failure to perform such duty, the possibility of an accident from this cause having been apparent for some time before its occurrence, so as to make the risk one of those incident to the service); Albert v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1894) 80 Hun, 152, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1126 (brakeman negligent in, seeing that a car is crippled, he does not take proper precautions to avoid the consequences of handling it in that condition); Ray v. Jeffries (1887) 86 Ky. 367, 5 S. W. 867 (servant injured by his careless handling of a compound of nitroglycerine the nature of which he understood); Evans v. Chessmond (1890) 38 Ill. App. 615 (servant worked under loose rock in mine, the condition of which was as well known to the servant as to the master, without making any examination, or asking the master to remove it); Way v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1888) 76 Iowa, 393, 41 N. W. 51 (car-repairer, who knew that the ground was slippery with ice, and who had complained of the absence of his assistant, attempted to raise a heavy draft-iron, and slipped); Wormell v. Maine C. R. Co. (1887) 79 Me. 397, 10 Atl. 49 (servant held to have carelessly put himself in the way of obvious peril); Nolan v. Shickle (1879) 60 Mo. 336 (unnecessarily going on obviously dangerous scaffold); Carroll v. Pennsylvania Coal Co. (1888) 22 W. N. C. 439, 15 Atl. 688 (men engaged in dumping coal from a track upon trestles, and knowing that the track was dangerous because the end of the track had become depressed, failed to take the obvious and simple precautions necessary to obviate accidents by using blocks to arrest the cars, or by raising the track at the end); Krafft v. Meyer (1896) 92 Wis. 252, 65 N. W. 1032 (stevedore fell down a scuttle which he should have known was left open while the vessel was loading); Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Donahue (1874) 75 Ill. 106 (yard switchman understanding that trains were constantly passing, unnecessarily stepped on a track and was run down by one of them); Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Puckett (1893) 52 Ill. App. 222 (brakeman who knows that there is a cattle-guard at a designated place bound to guard against it in performing his duties, although it is not properly constructed; instruction disapproved, which made right of recovery dependent on the "proper construction"; La Pierre v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (1894) 99 Mich. 212, 58 N. W. 60 (conditions known but ground of decision was that the accident might have been obviated by common prudence); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Law (1893) 14 Ky. L. Rep. 850, 21 S. W. 648 (negligence in coupling held a bar to the action of a brakeman, the danger of coupling being also said to be one of the ordinary risks of the employment); St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Mara (1891; Ark.) 16 S. W. 196 (displate fell from and derailed a hand-car which the plaintiff knew to be defective in such a way as to render it likely that objects would fall, he himself being the person who had supervised the loading).

The same failure to realize the supererogatory nature of the defense of contributory negligence in cases where an assumption of the risk is established seems to be apparent in the following extract:

Minor servants are held to assume, by their contract of employment, those ordinary risks of their service which are obvious to them, or have been pointed out in a manner suited to the comprehension of their youth and inexperience. They cannot ignore the dictates of common prudence or the instructions of their superiors to guard themselves from these apparent dangers, and charge the consequences upon their employers. Beckham v. Hillier (1885) 47 N. J. L. 12.

In view of the division of functions between court and jury under our system of procedure, it is manifest that a failure to raise the preliminary defenses of assumption of risks or of culpability in continuing to work may often be seriously prejudicial to the master, for although the circumstances may show that one or both of these defenses was available, it may be impossible to say, as a matter of law, that the servant did not act prudently in dealing with the known perils.

For an instance in which the master might have escaped liability, see Plank v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1875) 60 N. Y. 607, holding that a brakeman's knowledge of the existence of a trench across a railroad track was not sufficient to charge him with contributory negligence in failing to govern his conduct, while coupling cars, with due reference to the fact of the dangerous condition of the place of work, inasmuch as the act of coupling cars necessarily required his whole attention and thought.

Manifestly the correct method of dealing with cases in which both an assumption of the risks and contributory negligence are legitimate inferences from the facts disclosed is to differentiate the defenses clearly, and indicate by appropriate language that they are cumulative. This has sometimes been done. Woodley v. Metropolitan Dist. R. Co. (1877) L. R. 2 Exch. Div. 384, 46 L. J. Exch. N. S. 521 (servant held to have assumed the risks of the situation, and to have been guilty of a "want of particular care" in regard to the act which immediately preceded the accident); Marean v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. (1895) 167 Pa. 220, 31 Atl. 562 (car inspector, who had assumed risk of want of signal flag, held negligent in going under a car without inquiring about the movements of cars); Nuss v. Rafsnyder (1896) 178 Pa. 397, 35 Atl. 958 (risk of defective scaffold first declared to be assumed and then plaintiff held negligent in using it); Rumsey v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1892) 151 Pa. 74, 25 Atl. 37 (brakeman, who was declared to have assumed the risk of the want of a watchman at a crossing, was held negligent in being in a place of danger on the pilot of the engine); Kelly v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1887; Pa.) 10 Cent. Rep. 36, 10 Atl. 659 (servant injured by being caught between a building near the track and a car, while descending from the car, the location of the building being familiar to him, was nonsuited on the grounds, (1) that he assumed the risks arising from the situation of the building; (2) that he was negligent in not paying proper attention to the risk he was incurring in the performance of the act); Brossman v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (1886) 113 Pa. 490, 57 Am. Rep. 479, 6 Atl. 226 (servant knew of low bridge, but, his mind being on his work, he was paying no attention to the impending danger); Devitt v. Pacific R. Co. (1872) 50 Mo. 302 (servant knew of low bridge, and was caught while sitting on the brake in broad daylight with his face towards the bridge); Williams v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1889) 116 N. Y. 628, 22 N. E. 1117 (brakeman had constructive notice of the height of a low overhead bridge, and failed to stoop sufficiently); Owen v. New York R. Co. (1869) 1 Lans. 108 (same decision on like facts); Clark v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1884) 78 Va. 709, 49 Am. Rep. 394 (same decision on like facts); Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hafner (1894) 90 Va. 621, 19 S. E. 166 (brakeman raised his head too soon while passing under a low bridge which he knew to be dangerous); Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. McDonald (1891) 88 Va. 352, 13 S. E. 706 (mismatched couplings handled in an unnecessarily dangerous manner); McGrath v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1884) 14 R. I. 357 (1885) 15 R. I. 95, 22 Atl. 927 (recovery denied, where injured trackman rode in a hand car knowing that there were no general regulations as to warning train hands that cars were on the track, and was careless, like the other men on the car, in not seeing that special precautions were not taken to signal approaching trains).

Of course, under the Missouri doctrine, by which the rights of a servant who has continued work with knowledge of a risk are viewed entirely from the standpoint of contributory negligence, and such negligence is not inferable from the mere fact of such continuance, the servant's want of care in respect to taking appropriate precaution against the known danger may be the only theory on which the master can escape liability. See, for example, Gleeson v. Excelsior Mfg. Co. (1887) 94 Mo. 201, 7 S. W. 188 (watchman in building, knowing that hatchways were frequently left open, and charged with duty of closing them, fell into one, owing to his failure to look out).

Compare English v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1885) 24 Fed. Rep. 908, where Brewer, J., applying a doctrine practically the same as that of the Missouri courts, held the plaintiff's action not sustainable for the reason that he had not taken proper precautions against an obvious danger.

e. Defenses confused owing to inaccuracies of terminology.

Federal courts.

The ambiguity of the term "assume," which is so commonly used to describe the position of a servant with regard to a known risk which he continues to encounter, is responsible for a good deal of the confusion between the defenses which is traceable in many cases.

The same remark applies to such phrases as these:

"Continues work at his own risk." Lineoski v. Susquehanna Coal Co. (1893) 157 Pa. 153, 27 Atl. 577.

"Takes the risk." Griffiths v. Gidlow (1858) 3 Hurlst. & N. 648 (Pollock, C. B.); Taylor v. Carew Mfg. Co. (1885) 140 Mass. 150, 3 N. E. 21; Bunt v. Sierra Butte Gold Min. Co. (1891) 188 U. S. 485, 34 L. ed. 1032, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461.

There is also a want of precision about the statement that, "If the servant will engage in the hazardous undertaking, he must be considered as doing it at his peril." Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works (1876) 62 Mo. 35.

In the vast majority of the cases in which such knowledge has been held to bar the action, this term simply expresses a predicament resulting from an implied contract.

Mr. Beven (1 Negligence, 774) thinks the facts in this class of cases more often indicate election than agreement. The objection of the learned author is rather hypercritical, and opposed to the weight of authority. But, even if we suppose it to be well-founded, the legal relation created by an election must, primarily at least, be quasi contractual, and therefore quite distinct, in the aspect, from that which results from a tort like contributory negligence.

It does not express a predicament arising from the commission of a tortious breach of duty. This is the meaning attached to the phrases "assumption of risks" in the leading decision of Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. (1841) 4 Met. 40, 38 Am. Dec. 339, and there can be no question that this has always been its normal import ever since.

But it happens that the same word has also acquired, in popular parlance, a shade of meaning which implies that the person to whose conduct it is applied has been acting carelessly, and many courts, not being sufficiently alive to the importance of a scientifically exact terminology, have, unfortunately, allowed this loose and untechnical signification to insinuate itself into their judgments. The extraordinary prevalence of this phraseological error—for it can hardly be described otherwise, in view of the specialized meaning which the word has acquired,—will be apparent from the passages collected below. (The italics in every instance are ours.)

An employee is guilty of contributory negligence if he exposes himself to dangers "so obvious and threatening that a reasonably prudent man . . . would have avoided them."

He will be deemed in such case to have assumed the risks involved in such heedless exposure of himself to danger." Kane v. Northern C. R. Co. (1888) 128 U. S. 91, 32 L. ed. 339, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16.

The evidence would warrant no other conclusion than that he took the risks of the work, and that his negligence was the direct cause of his death. Bunt v. Sierra Butte Gold Min. Co. (1891) 138 U. S. 485, 34 L. ed. 1032, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461. See also Atkyn v. Wabash R. Co. (1889) 41 Fed. Rep. 193; The Serapis (1891) 40 Fed. Rep. 393; The Chandos (1880) 6 Sawy. 554; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley (1894) 25 U. App. 16, 63 Fed. Rep. 228, 12 C. C. A. 595.

Alabama.

A servant who "voluntarily undertakes to perform a duty not within the scope of his employment assumes the risk." Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hall (1894) 105 Ala. 599, 17 So. 176 (discussing the defense of contributory negligence).

Plaintiff was under no obligation to obey the order without assuming the risk himself, if, by so doing, he incurred the risks of obvious peril, such as a reasonably prudent man would regard as extra-hazardous. Davis v. Western 49 L. R. A.

Railway of Alabama (1894) 107 Ala. 626, 18 So. 173.

The duty of a brakeman requires him, at any time, to put on the brakes, and if it is necessary to traverse a car filled with coal in order to reach the brake, from a point where the brakeman properly is, we cannot say, as matter of law, he assumes the risk of a jerk or lurch of the train caused by the negligence of the engineer, if the jury so find, while walking across the car. If, however, the conductor or engineer directed the brakeman to remain at the first and second brakes, as some of the evidence tends to show, and if of his own accord he left and attempted to reach a third brake, we would say, under these circumstances, he assumed the risk of the venture, and, if the injury was in consequence of such disobedience of instructions, he would be guilty of contributory negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Woods (1894) 105 Ala. 561, 17 So. 41.

Where the servant fails to quit the service, after a reasonable time has elapsed for making promised repairs, "is it illogical to presume he agrees to incur the risk? And would he not thereby be guilty of proximate contributory negligence?" Woodward Iron Co. v. Jones (1885) 80 Ala. 123. See also Eureka Co. v. Bass (1886) 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152, 8 So. 216.

California.

If the servant "has knowledge of the circumstances, he is equally culpable, and he assumes the risk." McGlynn v. Brodie (1866) 31 Cal. 376.

In Goggin v. D. M. Osborne & Co. (1896) 115 Cal. 437, 4 Pac. 248, it was said to be a question for the jury whether the plaintiff knew of the danger of using an appliance, and so assumed the danger consequent upon such use, and, "what is much the same proposition, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that a person of ordinary prudence would have refused to use" the appliance.

Illinois.

If the master refuses to remedy the dangerous conditions after the servant has complained of them, the latter "will have no alternative but to quit the master's employ. If he does not, he will be deemed to have assumed the extra hazard of his position thus occasioned. The case suggested, it will be perceived, is one of mutual negligence. On the part of the master, it is negligence to retain the derelict servant in his employ. It is, on the other hand, negligence in the complaining servant to continue longer in the master's service, unless he intends to assume the extra risk himself; United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Wilder (1886) 116 Ill. 100, 5 N. E. 92.

The employer's breach of duty "furnishes no excuse for the conduct of an employee who voluntarily incurs a known danger." If he enters a service where he has to use defective agencies, he "assumes the risk, and must bear the consequences." Pennsylvania Co. v. Lynch (1878) 90 Ill. 333 (In the first part of his opinion Schofield, J., lays down the rule that the servant assumes the known risks of the service, and after stating the evidence, asks the question: "If appellant [the master] was negligent in not furnishing different platforms, in what respect does that negligence differ from appellee's negligence in continuing to use them, without objection, and without an effort to change or improve them?")

The general rule is that an employee who continues in the service of his employer after notice of a defect augmenting the danger of the service, assumes the risk, as increased by the defect. But this rule is subject to qualifications. The servant is not chargeable with contributory negligence, if he knows that defects exist, but does not know, or cannot know by the exercise of ordinary prudence, that risks exist. Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1896) 162 Ill. 459, 44 N. E. 876.

A party who voluntarily exposes himself to a danger that he knows, or by reasonable attention might know, assumes all the risks. Such voluntary exposure is necessarily incompatible with the exercise of ordinary care. Chicago & T. R. Co. v. Simmons (1882) 11 Ill. App. 147. See also Camp Point Mfg. Co. v. Ballou (1874) 71 Ill. 417; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark (1882) 11 Ill. App. 104; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Jones (1882) 11 Ill. App. 324; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Montgomery (1884) 15 Ill. App. 205.

Indiana.

If the employee had actual knowledge of the unsafe condition of the appliance, then it would be negligence to use it, and if, knowing the unsafe condition of the appliance, the employee attempted to use it, he would assume the extra hazard of so doing. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Percy (1890) 128 Ind. 197, 27 N. E. 479.

When an employee has within his own control the manner of using an obviously defective tool, and the means of securing safety if he choose to employ them, if he neglects the means of security to himself, he elects to take the risk. Jenney Electric Light & P. Co. v. Murphy (1888) 115 Ind. 570, 18 N. E. 30.

Speaking of the position of a servant who is injured in obeying a direct command of the master, the same court has used this language: "When the master orders a servant to do something which involves encountering a risk, not contemplated in his employment, although the risk is equally open to the observation of both, it does not necessarily follow that the servant either assumes the increased risk, or is negligent in obeying the order. If the apparent danger is such that a man of ordinary prudence would not take the risk the servant acts at his peril. But, unless the apparent danger is such as to deter a man of ordinary prudence from encountering it, the servant will not be compelled to abandon the service, or assume all additional risk, but may obey the order, using care in proportion to the risk apparently assumed." Nail v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. (1891) 129 Ind. 268, 271, 28 N. E. 183, 611 (repeated in Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet (1891) 129 Ind. 327, 336, 27 N. E. 741).

If the risk is great, or is such as a prudent person would not assume, then the person who does assume it is guilty of such contributory negligence as will preclude a recovery. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pinchin (1887) 112 Ind. 596, 13 N. E. 677.

In Sheets v. Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. (1894) 139 Ind. 682, 39 N. E. 154 (the court speaks of a plaintiff who had negligently placed himself in front of moving cars as having assumed all the dangers incident to such exposure).

In another case "assumption of a needless risk" is spoken of. Spencer v. Ohio & M. R. Co. (1892) 130 Ind. 181, 20 N. E. 915.

In the following passage the confusion of terms is particularly objectionable. The phrase "assume the risk" is used in different senses in sentences which are in immediate juxtaposition: "There is a class of cases where a man has no right to assume the risk. Society has an interest in the lives of its members, and no citizen has a right to knowingly and voluntarily place himself in a position of immediate and certain danger. . . . Where the danger is not immediate and certain, a man may assume the risk without violating the rule last stated, 49 L. R. A.

but, in doing so, he divests himself of a right to recover from his employer in cases where the danger is fully and seasonably brought to his knowledge, since the known danger becomes in such cases one of the risks he assumes as an incident of his service. He may not be guilty of contributory negligence in taking some risk, since he may be doing what other reasonably prudent men likewise do; but, like all the others in the common service in which he engages, he assumes all the risks arising from dangers of which he has full notice, by continuing in service after he obtains that knowledge." Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Sandford (1889) 117 Ind. 269, 19 N. E. 770.

The distinction between the two defenses is plainly intended to be noted here, and therefore precision in the use of words was especially necessary.

Kansas.

In Rush v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 36 Kan. 129, 12 Pac. 582, the court uses the phrase: "If the danger is such that an ordinarily prudent man could assume it without being guilty of negligence," etc.

Kentucky.

Undoubtedly, if the employee, after discovering the defective condition of machinery furnished to him for his use, continues to use it without complaint or giving notice to the employer, or the proper officers of a company, he will be guilty of such contributory negligence as will prevent a recovery for an injury arising from the defect. He will be injured as having assumed the risk of danger arising from its defective condition. Lawrence v. Hagemeyer & Co. (1892) 93 Ky. 591, 20 S. W. 704.

Louisiana.

Sufficient knowledge on the part of the deceased is not established to justify the assertion that he had assumed the risk of danger, and was consequently guilty of contributory negligence, whereby the defendants are exonerated. Erslew v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. (1897) 49 La. Ann. 86, 21 So. 153.

Even in the presence of a known danger, to constitute contributory negligence it must be shown that the plaintiff voluntarily and unnecessarily exposed himself to it, unless it is of that character that the plaintiff must assume the risk from the very nature of the danger to which he is exposed. Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. (1892) 44 La. Ann. 692, 697, 16 L. R. A. 43, 11 So. 51. See also Pollich v. Sellers (1890) 42 La. Ann. 623, 7 So. 786, where the defense was contributory negligence, but the plaintiff was said to have "assumed" the risk.

Maryland.

In State use of Hamelin v. Malster (1881) 57 Md. 287, the court denied the servant's right of recovery on the ground that, upon the undisputed facts, the servant directly contributed to his misfortune by his own want of caution, yet, after reviewing the evidence which showed that the servant fully understood the dangers of the situation, the opinion proceeds thus: "Now with this knowledge and this plainly apparent risk open to the senses of the deceased, upon which principle can the defendants be made liable for the accident that happened to the deceased in consequence of the risk thus knowingly assumed by him? The principle is perfectly well settled that an employee who contracts for the performance of hazardous duties assumes such risks as are incident to their discharge from causes open and obvious, the dangerous character of which causes he had opportunity to ascertain. And so, if a man chooses to accept an employment or continue in it with the knowledge of the danger, he must abide the consequences so far as any claim against the employer is concerned."

Massachusetts.

It is for the plaintiff to show, not merely that the place was unsafe, and that he was injured thereby, but that he himself was in the exercise of due care. His evidence fails to show this, if it appears that, knowing and appreciating the danger arising therefrom, he voluntarily exposes himself thereto. Business is sometimes carried on in buildings or places obviously unsafe, and if, with a knowledge that a business is thus conducted, the workman engages in it, he takes the risks which he must know are incident thereto. Where one capable of choosing and contracting for himself, with full notice of the risk he assumes, voluntarily uses a machine which, by reason of a known defect, exposes him to a particular and obvious danger, he is held to assume and take the risk of injury from that source. . . . In the case at bar the plaintiff knew of the defect [a well-hole], and he consented to incur the risk which he ran in passing along the floor, in the uncertain light, to examine and aid in putting on the belts. Taylor v. Carew Mfg. Co. (1885) 140 Mass. 151, 3 N. E. 21.

Under the decisions in this commonwealth, if he knew and appreciated this risk, and continued to work for the length of time and under the circumstances that appear in this case, he must be held voluntarily to have assumed it, so that his share in the responsibility for the accident charges him with negligence, and precludes him from recovery, if the use of the saw by the defendant constituted negligence. Tenanti v. Boston Mfg. Co. (1898) 170 Mass. 323, 49 N. E. 634.

Due care depends on what is reasonable under the circumstances, and is generally a question of fact for the jury. It cannot be said, we think, as matter of law, that the probability that Duckworth would leave an unexploded cartridge in one of the chambers was so great as to require the plaintiff to examine them himself, or that, by continuing in the defendant's employment after finding an unexploded cartridge in a revolver handed to him by the defendant James after testing it, he thereby assumed the risk from such unexploded cartridges as might be accidentally left in revolvers by said James. Anderson v. Duckworth (1894) 162 Mass. 251, 38 N. E. 510.

In Ferren v. Old Colony R. Co. (1887) 143 Mass. 197, 9 N. E. 608, the court, after declaring that, supposing certain inferences to be deducible from the evidence, they could not say, as matter of law, that the plaintiff assumed the risk, said that the evidence was sufficient to be submitted to the jury upon the question whether he was in the exercise of due care. It is not easy to say what the precise point of view is in the remark of Holmes, J., that even if the servant's conduct "was not negligent in the sense of culpable, still, as it involved danger manifest to him, he could not complain of the consequences." Boyle v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1890) 151 Mass. 102, 23 N. E. 827. Is not culpability an essential element of negligence?

Michigan.

A party entering upon a particular employment assumes the risk and perils usual thereto, when the usual and customary means to guard against accidents are adopted. If the servant with full knowledge of the danger, and understating the increased risk occasioned thereby, consents to enter into the employment, then he voluntarily incurs the risk, and, if he suffers damages in consequence of injury received thereby, he will be without remedy. The fact that he remains in the master's employment under such circumstances, and with such knowledge, is what constitutes contributory negligence on his part. In such a case the master, in permitting his machinery to be thus more than ordinarily dangerous, is guilty of negligence; but the servant, with full knowledge thereof, by remaining, contributes thereto, and hence he cannot recover if he has such knowledge. King v. Ford River Lumber Co. (1892) 93 Mich. 172, 182, 53 N. W. 10.

Missouri.

See II. f. infra.

Nebraska.

Where a servant, in obedience to the requirements of his master, incurs the risk of machinery or appliances which, although dangerous, are not of such character that they may not be safely used, by the exercise of reasonable skill and caution, he does not, as a matter of law, assume the risk of injury from accident resulting from the master's negligence. Lee v. Smart (1895) 45 Neb. 318, 63 N. W. 940 (syllabus by court).

New York.

In discussing the question whether the servant's knowledge of a defect rendered him chargeable with contributory negligence, the court remarked that it was "for the jury to say whether or not he voluntarily assumed the risks." Lanning v. New York C. R. Co. (1872) 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

It would seem to be unreasonable that one who has undertaken a service which, in itself, has some elements of danger, whenever he shall see that the danger has been increased through some negligence of his employer, must either stop his employment or be deemed to have accepted the increased risk. We do not think that this is the rule. And it seems to us that the plaintiff had a right to go to the jury on the question whether he was, under the circumstances, justified in going on with his work. McMahon v. Port Henry Iron Ore Co. (1881) 24 Hun, 48.

In Cullen v. Norton (1889) 52 Hun, 9, 4 N. Y. Supp. 774, it is urged that the deceased knew all about the facts, and voluntarily assumed the risks, and thus by his contributory negligence precluded recovery.

A servant does not assume the risks unless he can be properly charged with negligence arising from the master's negligence in accepting the place of labor assigned to him by his master. Heavey v. Hudson River Water Power & Paper Co. (1890) 57 Hun, 339, 10 N. Y. Supp. 585. See also Farley v. New York (1897) 152 N. Y. 222, 46 N. E. 506, Reversing (1896) 9 App. Div. 536, 41 N. Y. Supp. 622; Wallace v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1892) 43 N. Y. S. R. 639, 18 N. Y. Supp. 280.

North Carolina.

See also II. g. infra.

In Crutchfield v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1878) 78 N. C. 300, the court, while holding the plaintiff unable to recover on the ground of contributory negligence, speaks of his continuance at work with knowledge of the defect as being an "assumption of the risks." In discussing the negligence of the plaintiff, the court said that the circumstances "must be such as to show that the employee had full knowledge of the unusual risk, and deliberately assumed it." Sims v. Lindsay (1898) 122 N. C. 678, 30 S. E. 19.

Pennsylvania.

In Nuss v. Rafsnyder (1896) 178 Pa. 397, 33 Atl. 938, as applicable to the case, the court, after laying down the rule as the assumption of known risks, declared the plaintiff to be negligent in using the appliance under the circumstances.

In Davis v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1893) 152 Pa. 314, 25 Atl. 498, the court, after declaring the plaintiff negligent in using the appliance, summed up by saying that he accepted the risk of the employment.

The plaintiff "was under no obligation to continue working in a dangerous place or employment, and if he did so he assumed the risk. He could not excuse his own want of care by the allegation that someone else had promised to care for him." Reese v. Clark (1892) 146 Pa. 465, 23 Atl. 246.

The very fact of the plaintiff's youth and weakness is one of the elements that go to make up the charge of negligence on the part of the defendant in putting such a person upon such a service. It seems to us that the master, in such circumstances, and not the servant, must be held to have assumed the risks of the service. Kehler v. Schwenk (1892) 151 Pa. 505, 25 Atl. 130.

The sentence, "The plaintiff has no one but himself to blame," occurs in a case where the risk was said to be assumed. Beittemiller v. Bergner & E. Brewing Co. (1888) 22 W. N. C. 33, 12 Atl. 500.

South Carolina.

In Donahue v. Enterprise R. Co. (1890) 32 S. C. 299, 11 S. E. 95, it was said that a servant who continued to work with knowledge of the dangerous character of the appliances assumed the risks of the situation, and that his knowledge defeated his action on the ground that he had, by his negligence, contributed to his injury.

Texas.

When a servant remains in an employment known to be dangerous because of defective machinery, implements, or appliances not sufficient for the safe conduct of the business, he is said to assume the risks of the business thus conducted, and to be guilty of contributory negligence, if an injury occurs to him through their use. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brentford (1891) 79 Tex. 619, 15 S. W. 561.

West Virginia.

In Graham v. Newburg Orrel Coal & Coke Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 273, 18 S. E. 584, the phrase "assumption of risk" occurs in a discussion of the defense of contributory negligence.

Wisconsin.

See II. f, infra.

f. Doctrinal confusion between the defenses.

This inexactness of terminology is doubtless responsible for much of the doctrinal confusion between the two defenses which is disclosed by the arguments of judges. Thus, in some cases the reasoning is vitiated by the misconception that the servant's duty to use care may be referred to as a standard by which to test the fact of his assumption of the risks of the employment.

Where the employee undertakes to perform labor that is necessarily attended with danger to himself, he so far assumes the risks as to require the exercise of ordinary prudence and caution on his part. He is not bound to engage in work that places his life in peril; and when labor of that sort is voluntarily assumed, and an injury occurs, he cannot look to his employer for damages upon the ground of negligence. If, by the exercise of ordinary vigilance, he could have avoided the accident. Sullivan v. Louisville Bridge Co. (1872) 9 Bush, 81.

This statement is plainly a blunder either in phraseology or doctrine. It is erroneous on the former score, if it is intended to embody the principle that the master is not warranted in exposing the servant to any risks except 49 L. R. A.

those from which he can preserve himself by the exercise of due care. It is erroneous on the latter score, if the implication is that the servant's exercise or omission of such care can affect in any degree his rights as regards recovery for an injury resulting from a risk assumed.

Similar remarks are applicable to the statement that, if the servant knew of the defects, and, "without taking the necessary and proper precaution to guard against danger, continued to use them, he took upon himself the risk, and waived his right as against the company." Mad River & L. E. R. Co. v. Barber (1856) 5 Ohio St. 541, 565, 67 Am. Dec. 312.

Equally out of place is it, in a case where the defense allowed is contributory negligence, to introduce the consideration that the fact that alterations are being made in a building in the presence of the employees is notice to them of the possibility of danger of some sort, and of the necessity of exercising greater caution. Wanamaker v. Burke (1886) 111 Pa. 423. Notice of the possibility of the danger plainly concludes the case, quite apart from the question whether care was exercised in avoiding it.

See also Northern P. Coal Co. v. Richmond (1893) 15 U. S. App. 262, 58 Fed. Rep. 756, 7 C. C. A. 485, where the court, after declaring that the plaintiff, a minor, was not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence, remarked that he only assumed the risk of services which he contracted to perform, and not those which neither he nor his father had reason to believe that he would be required to encounter.

A still more serious error is the partial or complete obliteration of the boundary line between the defenses themselves. The mildest form of this logical heresy is the view that, although there may be a distinction between the two defenses, it often becomes too subtle to be of any practical importance. (McMullen v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1895) 60 Mo. App. 231), or that it is not of much practical value. Rush v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 36 Kan. 129, 12 Pac. 582.

A corollary drawn by one court from the immateriality of the distinction is that a trial judge is justified in refusing to grant the defendant's request for a specific charge on the issue of an assumption of the risk, when an instruction dealing with contributory negligence has already been given. Rittenhouse v. Wilmington Street R. Co. (1897) 120 N. C. 544, 26 S. E. 922. There the plea of volenti non fit injuria, which counsel seem to have regarded, though erroneously, as the equivalent of "assumption of risks," had been expressly relied on, and a request had been made to the defendant to submit to the jury this issue: "Did plaintiff's intestate voluntarily attempt to cross the railroad bridge, knowing the condition of track and car?" Clark, J., said: "It is true that in strict parlance, and logically, there is a distinction between contributory negligence of the intestate and his voluntarily taking a risk which he knew to be dangerous. . . . But upon the issue of contributory negligence both phases of the matter, negligence and voluntary assumption of risk, could be submitted to the jury, and the charge shows that the judge did so submit this case. The defendant was not cut off from presenting any phase of his defense, and it can serve no good purpose to more minutely divide the issues. . . . It would rather serve to confuse the jury. The jury readily comprehend that, by the issue of contributory negligence, they are asked to find whether the plaintiff's fault was the proximate cause of his injury, and

It is immaterial whether that fault was carelessness or reckless assumption of risk, provided the jury are given to understand (as they were in this case by the evidence, the argument of counsel, the prayers for instruction, and the charge of the court) that the issue was broad enough to cover both phases. Reckless assumption of risk has always been taken in our courts as being embraced in the issue of contributory negligence. Burgin v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1894) 115 N. C. 673, 20 S. E. 473; Doster v. Charlotte Street R. Co. (1895) 117 N. C. 651, 34 L. R. A. 481, 23 S. E. 449; Turner v. Goldsboro Lumber Co. (1896) 119 N. C. 387, 26 S. E. 23. No harm has come from this course, and there is no need of further refinement."

For the phrase "reckless assumption of risks" there is the respectable authority of the supreme court of Michigan, which in one case speaks of circumstances under which the servant cannot be said to have "either heedlessly or voluntarily assumed the risk." Schlacker v. Ashland Iron Min. Co. (1891) 89 Mich. 253, 50 N. W. 839.

But this eminent court, although it has used this phrase, arguendo, in a case where the addition of the antithetical word "voluntarily" at once indicates that the distinction between the two defenses was not forgotten, would scarcely have approved of the singular proceedings which are here described as taking place on the trial.

That the North Carolina court wholly misunderstood the true import and rationale of the request for the instruction refused is evident. The language used by Judge Clark presupposes that the only question requiring an answer was whether the plaintiff's injury was caused by his "fault," whereas the charge asked for presented an issue which was entirely independent of the culpability or nonculpability of the plaintiff. It was an attempt by counsel, in short, to induce the court to apply the doctrine of assumption of risks under circumstances in which, whether by accident or design, the plaintiff's rights had always, in North Carolina, been considered solely from the standpoint of contributory negligence.

It would be of deep psychological interest to learn precisely what ideas on the subject of assumption of risks and contributory negligence the jury carried with them to their consulting room, after "the argument of counsel, the prayer for instruction, and the charge of the court." The twelve boni et legales homines suffer many things from the perverse ingenuity with which verbose, hair-splitting instructions are accumulated in employer's liability cases, but they can rarely, we should imagine, have been reduced to profounder depths of mental perplexity than in this instance.

The transition between a theory which treats a distinction as immaterial, and one which ignores or does away with it altogether, is short and easy, as is shown by the argument in one of the cases just cited.

In Bush v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 36 Kan. 129, 12 Pac. 582, the court, after referring to the two principles, that where the danger is not obvious or imminent the servant may rightfully continue in the employment of the master without being chargeable with contributory negligence, and that, if the servant has full knowledge of the danger, and continues in the master's employment without complaint, receiving from the master full pay for his services, he assumes the risk himself of the known danger, and waives any negligence that might otherwise be imputable to the master, proceeded thus: "This distinction between contributory negligence on the part of the servant and the waiver of the 49 L. R. A.

master's negligence on the part of the servant has been recognized in some of the books; but while it may be admitted that there is ample room for such a distinction, still it is doubtful whether the distinction can be of much practical value. In all cases of contributory negligence the employee has in some sense waived the negligence of the master, for by encountering the danger he says in effect, 'there is no danger except such as I will wholly assume myself,' and in all cases of the waiver of the master's negligence, the servant has in some sense, by his own negligence, contributed to the resulting injury."

It will be remarked that the concluding sentence of the passage quoted below embodies a conception of the meaning of waiver for which it is safe to say there is no authority to be found outside the line of employer's liability cases which are now under review. That word is commonly understood to import a voluntary and intentional renunciation of a right of action. It is evident that there is an essential difference between the position of a person who deliberately abstains from claiming damages for an injury, and the position of a person whom the law declares to have forfeited, by his own breach of duty, the right to maintain an action for that injury.

Nor is this the sole flaw in the argument. The statement contained in the final clause of the same sentence is not correct, for there are many cases in which the servant is unable to recover damages for the master's negligence, although he be entirely free from negligence,—at least under the doctrine accepted by the vast majority of the states, including Kansas itself. But even if the statement were correct, the circumstance mentioned would merely furnish one more illustration of what is an extremely common situation in jurisprudence, viz., that the same set of facts is often susceptible of being considered under more than one juridical aspect. See the remarks of Bowen, L. J., in Thomas v. Quartermaine (1887) L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 685, 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 340, 57 L. T. N. S. 537, 35 Week. Rep. 555, 51 J. P. 516.

This, however, is very far from being an adequate reason for altogether throwing down the barrier between the fundamental logical conceptions upon which, according as the case is approached from one side or the other, the rights and liabilities of the parties depend.

Obvious and elementary as these considerations are, the authorities in favor of this theory as to the practical identity of the defenses are quite numerous.

The influence of the Kansas case just cited seems to be apparent in the opinion expressed by Brewer, J., when sitting as a circuit judge in the district of which Kansas forms a part, that there was some force in the doctrine that there was really no such thing as a separate and distinct defense of waiver, and that what was called waiver was simply one form of "contributory negligence;" that the difference between waiver and contributory negligence is the difference between passive and active negligence: that what was meant by waiver was passive negligence, in omitting to do a thing which the employee ought to have done. In the case before him, it would be said that the plaintiff omitted to call for a flag,—omitted to take precautions which he ought to have taken, and that this was nothing more nor less than passive negligence. O'Rourke v. Union P. R. Co. (1884) 22 Fed. Rep. 189.

The logical misapprehension is, however, even more serious here, for the learned judge, as the concluding reference to the concrete facts of the case indicates, has evidently failed to differentiate clearly in his mind the two separate questions, What inference should be drawn from the fact that the servant had gone on working in an environment known to be dangerous? and, what particular precautions a prudent man would have taken to protect himself while he remained in that environment.

Waiver and contributory negligence have also been treated as interchangeable concepts in Alabama.

For a servant to persist in exposing himself to danger on the faith of such a promise may often be a want of that ordinary prudence which the law exacts of him at every stage of his employment, according to the degree and nature of the danger. His continuance in the service for an unreasonable length of time after such promise is a waiver of the defects agreed to be remedied by his employer.

The risk, therefore, again becomes his own, and his conduct, as we have said, although not necessarily or per se negligent, may or may not become negligent, according to the circumstances of the particular case. Eureka Co. v. Bass (1886) 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152, 8 So. 216.

So, also, in Wisconsin the theory now accepted is that assumption of risks is "a form of contributory negligence." Nadau v. White River Lumber Co. (1890) 76 Wis. 120, 43 N. W. 1135; Darcey v. Farmers' Lumber Co. (1894) 57 Wis. 245, 58 N. W. 382; Hazen v. West Superior Lumber Co. (1895) 91 Wis. 208, 64 N. W. 837; Peterson v. Sherry Lumber Co. (1895) 90 Wis. 83, 62 N. W. 948; Krafft v. Meyer (1896) 92 Wis. 252, 65 N. W. 1032.

The theory of a large group of Missouri cases, though to some extent similar to that of the courts just referred to, is in other respects sui generis.

In one of these cases it was regarded as an open question, whether the defense of assumption of risks is based upon the doctrine of waiver, or upon the doctrine of contributory negligence, but it was considered immaterial what answer is given to that question, as "the facts which, in the one set of cases are held to show the waiver, are such, in effect, as are held to constitute the concurring negligence in the other."

Thorpe v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 89 Mo. 650, 58 Am. Rep. 120, 2 S. W. 3. "The question is," it was said, "whether the plaintiff, in remaining at work under these circumstances, must be held to have waived the discharge of defendant's duty to him in this behalf, and to have assumed the risk incident to the performance, . . . or, in other words, was his knowledge of the dangers and risks involved in his undertaking to carry on the work with the reduced force such as will necessarily charge him with negligence." Yet the opinion immediately afterwards notices the fact that recovery has been denied in other cases on the different grounds of waiver or assumption of the risk, and of contributory negligence.

In another case the phrase "contributory negligence," or, what is tantamount thereto, "waiver," occurs. Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 81, 18 S. W. 188. Yet the court recognizes the doctrine commonly applied, that the effect of the servant's knowledge of extraordinary risks is to convert them into ordinary risks, so far as the master's liability is concerned. This doctrine certainly does not rest on the contributory negligence of the servant. Compare Warrington v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1891) 46 Mo. App. 150, where, in the argument, the servant's assumption of the risk and waiver of claim for damages is spoken of 49 L. R. A.

while the action is finally declared to be barred on the ground of contributory negligence.

But the formal doctrine which has been evolved from this supposed identity seems to be peculiar to Missouri, and may be said to represent the high-water mark of the confusion between the defenses. Stated in its simplest form, that doctrine is that the servant does not, as matter of law, "assume a risk" due to a breach of duty on the master's part, unless it was such that no prudent man would have remained in an employment in which it was necessary to encounter it.

The following extract from Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works (1876) 62 Mo. 35, contains the earliest formulation of this doctrine: "Where the defect is so glaring that with the utmost care and skill the danger is still imminent, so that none but a reckless man would incur it, then, if the servant will engage in the hazardous undertaking, he must be considered as doing it at his peril. But if the defective machinery or appliances, though dangerous, are not of such a character that they may not be reasonably used by the exercise of skill and diligence, the servant does not assume the same risk. He is required to take, and will be held responsible for, the care incident to the situation in which he is placed, and whether he exercised that degree of caution is a fact for the determination of the jury." The timbers in the present case, though loose and not properly fastened, had been used and were still being used and the plaintiff might have supposed that by using care they would be entirely safe. Compare the ruling that an engineer is "not bound to quit the service, nor did he assume all risks from want of repair [in a track], unless the track was so far out of repair . . . that it would be necessarily dangerous, to the mind of a prudent person, to run an engine over it." Devlin v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1885) 87 Mo. 545.

Under former rulings of our supreme court, and of the courts of most other jurisdictions, if the defect in the fellow servant, or in the machine, was equally apparent to the servant and to the master, the servant was deemed, as matter of law, to accept the risks of injury from such defect, as one of the risks of his employment; and, if injured in consequence of it, he could not recover damages from the master. This rule declined to recognize any inequality in the situation of the master and the servant, but placed them on an equal footing. It was analogous to the well-known rule in respect of contributory negligence, under which any negligence on the part of the person injured, materially contributing to the injury, was a bar to a recovery of damages. But later decisions of our supreme court, and of other courts, seemingly recognizing the inequality in the situation of the master and the servant, and, proceeding upon conceptions more just and humane, are to the effect that the servant is not, as matter of law, deemed to accept the risks of injury from the unfitness of the fellow servant, the machine, or the appliance, unless such unfitness is so glaring and palpable that a prudent man would not remain in the service; and that, whether the servant does accept the risks by remaining in the service is ordinarily a question to be submitted to a jury. Hughes v. Fagin (1891) 46 Mo. App. 43. See also the majority opinion in Fugler v. Rothe (1890) 43 Mo. App. 44; McMullen v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1894) 80 Mo. App. 231.

If this statement be construed liberally, it must, according as the phrase "assume the risk" is taken in one or other of its two possible senses, either express the bald truism that the servant's action is not barred on the ground of contributory negligence unless he was imprudent, or amount to the assertion of a doctrine which would be an entirely novel addition to the law of contracts, since it would imply that the intention of the servant to include the given risk among those covered by his agreement may depend upon whether a prudent man would have accepted the risk under the circumstances. But what the court really means, as is shown by all the decisions embodying the doctrine in question, is simply that whenever the servant was imperiled by a breach of duty on the master's part the only ground on which his recovery can be barred is that his own want of care either in remaining in the employment, or in failing to take proper precautions at the time of the accident, was an efficient cause of the injury. See, among other cases, Blanton v. Dold (1891) 109 Mo. 75, 18 S. W. 1149; Settle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1895) 127 Mo. 336, 30 S. W. 125; Huhn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 92 Mo. 440, 4 S. W. 937; Soeder v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1890) 100 Mo. 673, 13 S. W. 714; O'Mellia v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1892) 115 Mo. 206, 21 S. W. 503; Mahaney v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 191, 18 S. W. 895.

In the formulation of this doctrine any reference to the conception of an assumption of the risk must obviously, if that phrase is to bear its usual technical significations, be wholly beside the mark. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to find in the books a more singular example of confused logic than that which has here resulted from this attempt to link together two wholly distinct ideas by means of an ambiguous phrase.

g. Concluding remarks.

The foregoing summary sets in a strong light two deplorable consequences sometimes amounting to a miscarriage of justice, which an inaccurate terminology and logical laxity have combined to produce, and shows that it is high time for every lawyer who attaches a proper value to clarity of thought and precision of language to devote special attention to seeing that, both in the conduct of trials, and in the examination of cases in courts of review, the defenses shall be properly differentiated. The present confusion is a state of affairs for which counsel seem to be mainly responsible, as a court is naturally apt to discuss a case solely upon the theory under which the record and the arguments present it. It is not too much to say that, in view of the very appreciable advantages which the master obtains in most instances by relying on the defense of assumption of risks, an advocate who does not take care that, whenever the evidence admits it, that defense is presented as an alternative and entirely separate ground for denying the right of action, is guilty of inexcusable remissness. Few courts, if any, are irrevocably and unreservedly committed to the doctrine that, where the master has been guilty of a breach of duty, the servant can be debarred from recovery only by his own negligence; and it may be doubted whether the peculiar theories which prevail in North Carolina as to the nonnecessity of differentiating the defenses in instructions to a jury will find much favor in other states. As long as both defenses remain open in the jurisdiction where the action is brought, counsel for a master ought always to insist that their client shall receive the benefit of a consideration of his rights with reference to each of them. There are doubtless cogent reasons of abstract justice and public policy in favor of what may be called the Missouri doctrine, that the servant's claim should be barred only by contributory negligence, and that this should not, except in the clearest cases, be inferred, as a matter of law, from mere knowledge of the dangerous conditions, and the present writer owns that he would be glad to see this doctrine everywhere accepted. But, until the day of that acceptance arrives, counsel are in duty bound to take every advantage of the more vigorous rule, and never to pass by an opportunity of utilizing it.

C. B. L.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Adele WAHL, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Mary E. FRANZ.

(100 Fed. Rep. 680.)

The probate of a will is not "a suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity," within the meaning of the corrected act of Congress of August 13, 1888, §§ 1, 2, and is therefore not removable into a Federal court under that statute either from a probate court or from a circuit court on appeal therefrom, under Sand. & H. (Ark.) Dig. § 1152, providing for trial de novo on such an appeal.

(Sanborn, Circuit Judge, dissents.)

(March 12, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding brought to set aside the probate of the will of Joseph H. Molen, deceased. Reversed.

Before Caldwell and Sanborn, Circuit Judges, and Rogers, District Judge.

Statement by Rogers, District Judge:

On the 9th day of December, 1895, Joseph Molen died at Hot Springs, Arkansas. On the 24th day of the same month Adele Wahl presented to the clerk of Garland county, Arkansas, a paper purporting to be the last will and testament of Joseph H. Molen, by the terms of which she became the sole devisee, after the payment of the debts and funeral charges. This will was proved before the clerk of the probate court, in vacation, and a certificate of probate granted to her, subject to the confirmation or rejection of NOTE.—In connection with the present decision on the nature of a proceeding to probate a will, see note to Martin v. Stovall (Tenn.) 48 L. R. A. 130, on the effect of the probate of a will in another state, including the conclusion of L. R. A.

consideration of the question whether such a proceeding falls within the constitutional provision requiring full faith and credit to be given in each state to the records and judicial proceedings of every other state.

the court, as provided by § 7422, Sandels & H. Dig. Stat. Ark. On the same day that the will was presented, Adele Wahl filed her petition in the probate court of Garland county, in which she stated the death of the deceased, the existence of a will, its probate before the clerk in vacation, and that no executor was provided for in the will, and that she was the sole devisee. She also alleged that no administrator had been appointed, and prayed the court for letters of administration with the will annexed. On the 28th day of the same month Mary E. Franz filed her petition in the probate court of Garland county, Arkansas, in which she set forth, among many other things, that she was a sister of Joseph H. Molen, and his sole heir at law, and denied that the instrument propounded by the said Adele Wahl was the last will and testament of the deceased, Joseph H. Molen. She alleged, also, that the said Joseph H. Molen was, at the time he signed the said pretended will, under the undue influence of the said Adele Wahl, whereby he was deprived of his volition, and for this, among other reasons, prayed that the will be set aside and rejected. On the 8th day of January Adele Wahl responded to this petition, denying the material allegations contained therein. The probate court, after hearing the testimony, confirmed the action of the clerk in vacation, and admitted the will to record, adjudging it to be the last will and testament of the said Joseph H. Molen, deceased. From this judgment of the court probating the will the said Mary E. Franz, in due form and in apt time, took an appeal to the circuit court of Garland county, Arkansas, as provided by the statutes of that state. While the cause was pending on appeal in said court, to wit, on the 12th day of May, 1897, Mary E. Franz filed her petition and bond in the circuit court of the United States for the western division of the eastern district of Arkansas to remove the cause into said court on the ground of local prejudice, alleging that by reason thereof she could not obtain justice in the circuit court of Garland county, or in any other state court to which, under the laws of the state of Arkansas, the cause might be removed. In her petition she avers that the suit or controversy is of a civil nature, involving more than $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is wholly between citizens of different states, and which can be fully determined as to them, to wit, a controversy between the said Mary E. Franz, who avers that at the time of the commencement of this proceeding she was, and still is, a resident of the state of Ohio, and that said Adele Wahl, proponent of said will, was then, and still is, a citizen of the state of Arkansas. She alleges that the said Adele Wahl is not legally entitled to inherit from the said deceased, but is the sole devisee in said will; and also that she (Mary E. Franz) is the sister and sole heir at law of the said deceased, who died without issue. She also sets up the proceedings had in the probate court of Garland county, her appeal therefrom to the circuit court, where the same was then pending, and that no order of court had been made directing an issue of deviseavit vel non to be submitted to a jury, and that the said Adele Wahl and herself are actually interested in said controversy. Adele Wahl appeared in said United States circuit court, and filed a response to the petition for removal. After hearing the same, the court adjudged that the cause was removable, and that the statute regulating removals had been complied with, and retained jurisdiction of the cause. A jury was called, and the case was tried upon its merits. The jury returned a verdict finding the issues for the contestant, and that the will was executed under undue influence, and thereupon a judgment was rendered that the instrument of writing was not the last will and testament of Joseph H. Molen; that the application to admit it to probate as such be denied, the judgment of the probate court of Garland county admitting it to probate be set aside and annulled, and that the contestant recover of the proponent all her costs in that behalf expended, and that a copy of the judgment be certified to the probate court of Garland county for action in pursuance thereof. Motions for a new trial and arrest of judgment were filed and overruled. A bill of exceptions was tendered in apt time, duly signed, a writ of error sued out, and the case is now before this court for review. Any other facts that may be necessary for the determination of this case will appear in the opinion.

Messrs. J. B. Wood and J. P. Henderson, for plaintiff in error:

The probating of a will is not a suit at common law or in equity.

Reed v. Reed, 31 Fed. Rep. 49; Re Cilley, 58 Fed. Rep. 977; Re Aspinwall, 83 Fed. Rep. 851; Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, sub nom. Kieley v. McGlynn, 22 L. ed. 599; Re Frazer, 18 Alb. L. J. 353, Fed. Cas. No. 5,068; Re Foley, 76 Fed. Rep. 390, 80 Fed. Rep. 949.

The jurisdiction of the United States circuit court on removal of an action to that court from a state court under § 2 of the act of March 3, 1887, as corrected by act of August 13, 1888, is limited to such a suit as might have been brought in such circuit court in the first instance.

Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Davidson, 157 U. S. 201, 39 L. ed. 672, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563; Yuba County v. Pioneer Gold Min. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 183.

There had been one trial of this case in the probate court of Garland county and judgment was rendered in said court upon such trial. It was too late to remove the cause after that trial.

Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Schuster, 52 U. S. App. 612, 86 Fed. Rep. 161, 29 C. C. A. 649; Re Frazer, 18 Alb. L. J. 353, Fed. Cas. No. 5,068; Nisk v. Henarie, 142 U. S. 459, 35 L. ed. 1079, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Tennessee v. Bank of Commerce, 152 U. S. 461, 38 L. ed. 514, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. 174, 9 L. ed. 91; Louvergny v. Municipality No. 2, 18 How 470, 15 L. ed. 399; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 27 L. ed. 1006, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327.

Messrs. U. M. Rose, W. E. Hemingway, G. B. Rose, and J. M. Harrell, for defendant in error:

Any person interested may appeal within one year, and in the circuit court for the first time all interested parties must be brought in, a jury trial may be demanded, the cause is tried de novo, and the decision is a bar to any further proceeding to call the probate or the rejection of the will into controversy.

The only remedy is by appeal to the circuit court.

Ouachita Baptist College v. Scott, 64 Ark. 349, 42 S. W. 536; Mitchell v. Rogers, 40 Ark. 91.

The proceeding in the circuit court is a suit within the meaning of the removal act.

Brodhead v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. Rep. 518, 11 L. R. A. 567; Richardson v. Green, 15 U. S. App. 488, 61 Fed. Rep. 423, 9 C. C. A. 565; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 23 L. ed. 524; Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. ed. 206.

The fact that the statutes give the probate court exclusive jurisdiction over matters relative to the probate of wills, and to hear and determine controversies respecting wills, cannot impair the right of the Federal court to exercise its powers, if they are in other respects properly invoked.

Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 19 L. ed. 260; Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 73, 28 L. ed. 927, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377.

The requirement that a cause to be removable be one of which the circuit court has original cognizance has no reference to limitations imposed by rules of procedure.

Re Stutsman County, 88 Fed. Rep. 337; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 27 L. ed. 1006, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327.

The proceeding on appeal in the circuit court under § 7421, Sandels & Hill's Digest, as construed by the supreme court of the state in Ouachita Baptist College v. Scott, 64 Ark. 349, 42 S. W. 536, is in every essential a suit at law, although called an appeal.

The fact that it is instituted by an appeal instead of by filing a complaint cannot deprive the Federal courts of jurisdiction.

Re Stutsman County, 88 Fed. Rep. 337; Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 19 L. ed. 260; Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 73, 28 L. ed. 927, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377.

Rogers, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

In Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Davidson, 157 U. S. 201, 39 L. ed. 672, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563, it was distinctly held that under § 2 of the act of March 3, 1887, as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433), the jurisdiction of a United States circuit court, on removal by the defendant from a state court, is limited to such suits as might have been originally brought in the United States circuit court by the plaintiff under the 1st section of that act. All the courts have followed that decision, which is 49 L. R. A.

now the settled law. It is also decided in the same case, that "the question is a question of jurisdiction, as such, and cannot be waived;" citing Capron v. Van Noorden, 2 Cranch, 126, 2 L. ed. 229; Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U. S. 379, 28 L. ed. 432, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510; Metcalf v. Watertown, 128 U. S. 586, 32 L. ed. 543, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173. The question, therefore, which arises on the very threshold of this case is, Was it removable from the Garland circuit court to the United States circuit court for the western division of the eastern district of Arkansas? The decision of that question turns upon the construction to be placed upon §§ 1 and 2 of the corrected act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433). The portions of those sections of that act defining the jurisdiction of district and circuit courts of the United States which bear on the question involved are as follows:

"Sec. 1. That the circuit courts of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of two thousand dollars. . . . in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different states," etc.

"Sec. 2. That any suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by the preceding section, which may now be pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any state court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the circuit court of the United States for the proper district. Any other suits of a civil nature, at law or in equity, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by the preceding section, and which are now pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any state court, may be removed into the circuit courts of the United States for the proper district, by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that state. . . . And where a suit is now pending, or may be hereafter brought, in any state court, in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the state in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another state, any defendant, being such citizen of another state, may remove such suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district, at any time before the trial thereof, when it shall be made to appear to said circuit court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such state court, or in any other state court to which the said defendant may, under the laws of the state, have the right, on account of such prejudice or local influence, to remove said cause."

By reading § 1 of the act it will be seen that to confer jurisdiction on a circuit court of the United States three things are necessary, and no others: (1) A suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity. (2) It must involve $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs. (3) It must arise between citizens of different states, or present one or the other conditions mentioned in the last part of § 1, which part of said section is not quoted because not involved in the questions under consideration. If the three things above-mentioned concur in a case, no methods of procedure prescribed by a state for its own courts can deprive circuit courts of the United States of original jurisdiction thereof. Colorado Midland R. Co. v. Jones, 29 Fed. Rep. 193; Re Jarnecke Ditch, 69 Fed. Rep. 161; Hyde v. Stone, 20 How. 170-175, 15 L. ed. 874, 875; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 497, 498, 27 L. ed. 1010, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327; Coules v. Mercer County, 7 Wall. 118, 19 L. ed. 86; Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 19 L. ed. 260; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 20 L. ed. 571.

Bearing in mind that the right to remove a case from a state to the Federal court depends upon whether the suit might have been originally brought in the Federal court, we have concluded that the question of removal in this case is narrowed down to this one proposition: Is the probate of a will "a suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity?" The decisions are in direct conflict, and I have found no decision on the precise question which is binding upon this court. Primarily, that the enactment of the act of August 13, 1888, was to restrict the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, has been repeatedly decided, and is now settled. Smith v. Lyon, 133 U. S. 315, 33 L. ed. 635, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Re Pennsylvania Co. 137 U. S. 451, 34 L. ed. 738, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; Fisk v. Henarie, 142 U. S. 459, 35 L. ed. 1080, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co. 145 U. S. 444, 36 L. ed. 768, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935; Hanrick v. Hanrick, 153 U. S. 192, 38 L. ed. 685, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 835; Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Davidson, 157 U. S. 208, 39 L. ed. 675, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563.

So far as we know, original jurisdiction to probate, or reject the probate, of a will was never entertained by any court of the United States under the original judiciary act or the act of 1875. It might well be inquired if to recognize jurisdiction under the act of 1888 is consistent with the universally recognized and established purpose for which that act was enacted. But there is also a radical difference between the provisions of both the original judiciary act and the act of 1875 and that of 1888 in relation to removal of cases from state courts. Under the original act, as well as that of 1875, the removal was not made to depend on the question as to whether the circuit court had original jurisdiction of the suit (Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Davidson, 157 U. S. 208, 39 L. ed. 675, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563); but, as we have seen, under the act of 1888 a case cannot be removed to the circuit court unless it might have been originally brought there. If, therefore, we treat the discussion of Mr. Justice Matthews in the case of Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 27 L. ed. 1006, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 49 L. R. A.

327, as indicating the tendency of the mind of the court as recognizing the right of a circuit court to take jurisdiction of the probate of a will under certain conditions specified (which is not conceded, but is denied), it must be remembered that the act of 1875 was then in force, under which, as already shown, the right of removal was not made to depend upon the existence of the right to bring the suit originally in the circuit court, as is the case now. That case should be read keeping in view the nature of the action and the issues decided. That case was heard on appeal from a decree dismissing the bill upon demurrer. Two things were sought by the bill: First. An accounting for rents and profits to realty which formerly belonged to defendant's testatrix. To secure this relief, a decree was sought adjudging the will, under which defendant held as sole devisee, to be null and void for incapacity to make it. Second. A decree for possession of realty held by the defendant as sole devisee under the will. The will sought to be annulled had been probated, and the administration closed. The court denied the right to recover the possession of the lands because the plaintiff's remedy at law was adequate. An accounting was denied, because, when ejectment was brought for the land, the court would direct an accounting as an incident in the cause. The court then proceeded to discuss the facts in the bill to see if they excepted the case from the principles stated. It is clear the object of this bill was primarily not to probate or vacate a will. It was to recover the real estate and rents and profits. In order to do this, the will stood in the way, and hence it was insisted that jurisdiction should be entertained for the purpose of canceling the will. The jurisdiction was denied. The court said: "It is well settled that no jurisdiction belongs to the circuit courts of the United States as courts of equity; for courts of equity, as such, by virtue of their general authority to enforce equitable rights and remedies, do not administer relief in such cases. The question in this aspect was thoroughly considered and finally settled by the decision of this court in the case of Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, sub nom. Kieley v. McGlynn, 22 L. ed. 599." Later, in the same opinion, in a somewhat historical discussion of the question, very elaborate, but not very satisfactory, this doubting passage occurs: "And where provision is made by the laws of a state, as is the case in many, for trying the question of the validity of a will, already admitted to probate, by a litigation between parties, in which that is the sole question, with the effect, if the judgment shall be in the negative, of rendering the probate void for all purposes as between the parties and those in privity with them. it may be that the courts of the United States have jurisdiction, under existing provisions of law, to administer the remedy and establish the right in a case where the controversy is wholly between citizens of different states." (Italics ours.)

And later, in the same opinion, the court said: "Jurisdiction as to wills, and their probate as such, is neither included in nor excepted out of the grant of judicial power to the courts of the United States. So far as it is ex parte, and merely administrative, it is not conferred, and it cannot be exercised by them at all until, in a case at law or in equity, its exercise becomes necessary to settle a controversy of which a court of the United States may take cognizance by reason of the citizenship of the parties."

This case is direct authority against the jurisdiction in cases like the one at bar, although the case is urged by learned counsel as establishing the contrary. The court then quotes approvingly from Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 23 L. ed. 524. In this connection it is important to examine briefly the nature of that case, and the precise points decided, for upon Ellis v. Davis and Gaines v. Fuentes, as we shall see later, is made to rest the decision of Judge Pardee in Brodhead v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. Rep. 518, 11 L. R. A. 567; and, if those cases do not support his decision in that case, then it is without any support other than the high standing of the judges delivering it. Gaines v. Fuentes is this sort of a case: Mrs. Gaines, the plaintiff in error, and the defendant in the court below, had probated in the second district court for the parish of Orleans the will of Daniel Clark; that court being vested with jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons and appointments necessary in the course of their administration. She afterwards brought several suits against the defendants in error to recover certain lands and properties, relying on the will as a muniment of title as "instituted heir" of Daniel Clark. Thereupon the defendants in error filed their original petition in the same court, alleging they were unable to contest the will until the decree of probate thereof was recalled, and stating as grounds for recalling it the falsity and insufficiency of the testimony upon which it was probated, and the status of the plaintiff in error incapacitating her to inherit under the will. Upon service being made upon the plaintiff in error, she applied, in proper form, with a tender of the necessary bond, for removal of the cause to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, under the 12th section of the judiciary act of 1789, on the ground of citizenship, and her application was denied. She then applied for a removal of the action under the act of March, 1867, on the ground of prejudice and local influence, and this application was also denied. Upon a hearing in the state court the will was annulled, and the case taken to the supreme court of the state of Louisiana, and from there, by writ of error, taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, which court reversed the case for error in the parish court in not removing the case to the United States circuit court for the district of Louisiana. The court in that case says: "The action is in form to annul the alleged will of 1813 of Daniel Clark, and to recall the decree by which it was probated; but, as the petitioners are not heirs of Clark, nor legatees, nor next of kin, and do not ask to be substituted in place of the plaintiff in error, the action cannot be treated as properly instituted for the revocation of the probate, but must be treated as brought against the devisee by strangers to the estate to annul the will as a muniment of title, and to restrain the enforcement of the decree by which its validity was established, so far as it affects their property. It is, in fact, an action between parties; and the question for determination is whether the Federal court can take jurisdiction of an action brought for the object mentioned, between citizens of different states, upon its removal from a state court." The court then says: "The suit in the parish court is not a proceeding to establish a will, but to annul it as a muniment of title, and to limit the operation of the decree admitting it to probate. It is, in all essential particulars, a suit for equitable relief,—to cancel an instrument alleged to be void, and to restrain the enforcement of a decree alleged to have been obtained upon false and insufficient testimony. There are no separate equity courts in Louisiana, and suits for special relief of the nature here sought are not there designated suits in equity. But they are none the less essentially such suits; and if, by the law obtaining in the state, customary or statutory, they can be maintained in a state court, whatever designation that court may bear, we think they may be maintained by original process in a Federal court, where the parties are, on the one side, citizens of Louisiana, and on the other citizens of other states. . . . In the case of Broderick's Will the doctrine is approved, which is established in both England and in this country, that by the general jurisdiction of courts of equity independent of statutes, a bill will not lie to set aside a will or its probate; and, whatever the cause of the establishment of this doctrine originally, there is ample reason for its maintenance in this country, from the full jurisdiction over the subject of wills vested in the probate courts, and the revisory power over their adjudications in the appellate courts. But that such jurisdiction may be vested in the state courts of equity by statute is there recognized, and that, when so vested, the Federal courts, sitting in the states where such statutes exist, will also entertain concurrent jurisdiction in a case between proper parties. There are, it is true, in several decisions of this court, expressions of opinion that the Federal courts have no probate jurisdiction, referring particularly to the establishment of wills; and such is undoubtedly the case under the existing legislation of Congress." (Italics ours.)

The two cases of Ellis v. Davis and Gaines v. Fuentes thus appear to rest precisely on the same ground,—one being a suit to recover lands and the rents and profits thereof, and praying the court to cancel a will in order that it might be done; and the other being a direct proceeding by a stranger, under the statutes of the state, to cancel a will already probated in order to defend the title to real estate held by the moving party. The question presented by the case at bar is totally different. The will is presented by the sole devisee for probate only. It is resisted by the sole heir at law. A judgment was rendered in the probate court probating the will, and from that judgment an appeal has been taken, and the same question is presented de novo in the circuit court. It is purely and simply a contest over the probate of the will, and not a mere incident—important, it may be—to the successful prosecution of another suit for relief of a wholly different character.

The defendant in error, to sustain the jurisdiction of the Federal court, has cited the decision of Brodhead v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. Rep. 518, 11 L. R. A. 567. That case was heard in the circuit court for the northern district of Georgia, Judges Pardee and Newman presiding, the opinion being delivered by the former. It must be conceded that this decision is in point, and sustains the jurisdiction contended for in this case. Judge Pardee does not discuss the question at all. He simply says: "From the statutes cited, and the record of the case as made, up to the time of removal, it appears perfectly clear that the proceeding pending in the superior court of Floyd county, Ga., taken in connection with the removal statutes of the United States, was a suit in which there was a controversy removable by the defendants to the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Georgia upon compliance with the conditions prescribed in said removal statutes; and it is within the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 23 L. ed. 524; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 27 L. ed. 1006, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327. See also Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. ed. 206; Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 75, 28 L. ed. 927, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377; Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 19 L. ed. 260; Mr. Justice Bradley's dissenting opinion in Rosenbaum v. Bauer, 120 U. S. 461, 30 L. ed. 743, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633."

We cannot assent to the conclusions reached by Judge Pardee. In the view we have taken, the case of Brodhead v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. Rep. 518, 11 L. R. A. 567, is not supported by Gaines v. Fuentes or Ellis v. Davis; and the other cases cited by Judge Pardee, in our opinion, have no relevancy or bearing whatever upon the real question at issue, namely, "whether the probate of a will is a suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity," within the meaning of the act of 1888. We are of the opinion that Judge Pardee totally misapprehended the question decided in Ellis v. Davis, and Gaines v. Fuentes, being led astray by expressions of the court which had no direct bearing upon the precise questions at issue. We prefer the reasoning found in Re Cilley, 58 Fed. Rep. 977, decided by District Judge Aldrich, and concurred in by Circuit Judge Colt, in the circuit court for the district of New Hampshire. This opinion is directly in conflict with the opinion in Brodhead v. Shoemaker, and arose in states where the statutes for probating wills are substantially the same. The opinion in the case of Re Cilley, 58 Fed. Rep. 977, shows exhaustive research, and was delivered after a reargument of that case. In Ellis v. Davis, the Supreme Court reaffirmed, what had frequently been decided before, that the terms "law" and "equity," as used in the Constitution, were intended to mark and fix a distinction between the two systems of jurisprudence as known and practised at the time of its adoption. It will not be seriously contended that the same terms used in the original judiciary act were not intended by Congress to have the same meaning, and the same is true of the acts of 1875 and 1888. In view of these decisions, it seems natural that the learned judge, in his able discussion of this question in the case of Re Cilley, 58 Fed. Rep. 977, should have begun with the inquiry as to what was meant by "suits of a civil nature at law or in equity" when the Constitution was adopted; or, to state it in another form, to ascertain whether those words, as then and previously understood in England and America, embraced the proceedings for the probate of wills. He demonstrates, by decisions in England and America (if anything can be demonstrated), that such was not the case in this country or in England, either at the time the Constitution was adopted or prior thereto, and that the terms used in the judiciary act, like those used in the Constitution, were not used in any local sense, but "in the broad common-law sense in which equity and common-law jurisdiction are understood in this country and in England." The opinion, in this regard, is both instructive and strong, and it seems to us conclusive; so much so that little can be added thereto. After citing various decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the circuit courts (Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, sub nom. Kieley v. McGlynn, 22 L. ed. 599; Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. 174, 9 L. ed. 91; Fowevergne v. Municipality No. 2, 18 How. 470, 15 L. ed. 399; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 27 L. ed. 1006, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327; Ball v. Tompkins, 41 Fed. Rep. 496; Reed v. Reed, 31 Fed. Rep. 49; Re Aspinwall, 83 Fed. Rep. 951; Re Frazer, 18 Alb. L. J. 353, Fed. Cas. No. 5,068; Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 34 L. ed. 1054, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369) in which the jurisdiction now asserted was disclaimed, he cites numerous decisions of the state courts to show that proceedings to establish wills are not commonly classed and known as suits at common law or in equity, and were not so classed or known in the early history of this country, and, therefore, were not suits removable to the Federal courts. He distinguishes cases like that at bar from such cases as Ellis v. Davis, Hess v. Reynolds, Gaines v. Fuentes, and that class of cases of which Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson is a sample, and pertinently suggests that when Congress intends to make so radical a change as to confer jurisdiction of the probate of wills on the Federal courts—a jurisdiction disclaimed by the courts from the foundation of the government, and a jurisdiction always exercised in England by the ecclesiastical courts, and in this country by probate courts created for that and kindred special purposes—it will not be left to doubtful construction, but will be provided for by definite and unmistakable language. The argument of the learned judge is well-nigh complete and conclusive, the authorities convincing, and we are content with the result reached in that case. It is precisely in point, and it is absolutely irreconcilable with Brodhead v. Shoemaker, which, in our opinion, is not only unsound, but is not supported by either authority or reasoning, nor does it give evidence of careful consideration or research. It could serve no wise purpose now to quote from the opinion in the case of Re Cilley, 58 Fed. Rep. 977. In Copeland v. Bruning, 72 Fed. Rep. 5, District Judge Baker, for the district of Indiana, in a very clear and well-considered opinion rendered in 1896, reviewing many cases, follows Re Cilley, 58 Fed. Rep. 977. That case is important in this: that in Indiana the probate of a will is had in the circuit court,—a court of general jurisdiction. Under the statute of that state, William H. Bruning presented for probate, in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of Jefferson county, Indiana, the alleged last will and testament of John F. Bruning. Clara Copeland, a child of the deceased, under the statute of the state, filed her objections to the probate of the will. Subsequently, under a statute of that state, she filed a complaint to contest the validity of her father's will, making William H. Bruning, one of the children and heirs at law of the decedent, and a devisee under the will, party defendant. Service was had upon the defendant. Thereupon he tendered a petition, accompanied by a proper bond, for the removal of the cause into the Federal court. The state court refused to make the order of removal. He then filed a transcript of the record in the Federal court, and the plaintiff, Clara Copeland, filed her motion to remand the same. The question now at bar was, therefore, squarely presented in that case. The learned judge in that case reviewed almost every case cited in this opinion, and, after the most careful consideration, remanded the case to the state court. In Oakley v. Taylor, 64 Fed. Rep. 245, District Judge Priest, of the eastern district of Missouri, in a strong and well-considered opinion, reached the same conclusion; and this case is also important because of the statutes of that state regulating the probate of wills. The case is directly in point, and justly entitled to much weight. In Everhart v. Everhart, 34 Fed. Rep. 85, District Judge Hill, of the southern district of Mississippi (though retaining jurisdiction of that case), recognized the same rule, and in that case, as in almost every case cited, Gaines v. Fuentes and Ellis v. Davis are cited to support the doctrine announced in that case, thus evidencing the well-nigh unanimous interpretation placed by the courts upon those cases. In Langdon v. Goddard, 2 Story. 267, Fed. Cas. No. 8,060, decided by Mr. Justice Story at circuit (district of New Hampshire), that learned justice said: "In respect to the wills and the codicils admitted to probate, the exclusive jurisdiction as to the probate thereof belongs to the state courts of probate, and we have no authority whatsoever to inquire into it, or examine the validity thereof." And the reporter of the Federal Cases cites, in a footnote to this opinion, the following cases: Armstrong v. Lear, 12 Wheat. 169, 6 L. ed. 589; King v. Netherseal, 4 T. R. 258; Price v. Dewhurst, 4 Myl. & C. 76, 80; Tompkins v. Tompkins, 1 Story, 547, Fed. Cas. No. 14,091. It may be added that it is remarkable, indeed, that if the jurisdiction of a suit, the object and purpose of which is to settle nothing but the validity or invalidity of a will as a preliminary step in determining whether its probate should be granted or denied, was so doubtful that it was never entertained by a Federal court so far as we have been able to ascertain, prior to the decision of Brodhead v. Shoemaker, that it should now be entertained under the act of 1888, which act was confessedly enacted for the specific purpose of curtailing the jurisdiction of the United States courts. (On the general question of the jurisdiction of Federal courts over the administration of estates of deceased persons, see notes to Barling v. Bank of British North America, 1 C. C. A. 510, 513, and Bedford Quarries Co. v. Tomlinson, 36 C. C. A. 272.)

It must be remembered that the question is not whether Congress has the power, under the Constitution, to confer that jurisdiction upon the Federal courts. The question is, Has it done so? And the action of the courts from the foundation of the government down to the passage of the act of 1888 should be accepted as an absolute denial thereof, and, unless it can be shown that by the act of 1888 the jurisdiction in respect of the subject-matter under consideration was enlarged, the courts should await future action upon the part of Congress before assuming jurisdiction of this new and novel class of cases hitherto confided, in England, to the ecclesiastical courts, and in this country to statutory courts adapted especially for their hearing.

The law of Arkansas, and the jurisdiction of its courts, touching the probate of wills, have been settled by its own supreme court. In Ouachita Baptist College v. Scott, 64 Ark. 350, 42 S. W. 537, the supreme court said: "It has been held by this court that a court of equity has no jurisdiction to hear and determine a contest of a will. Mitchell v. Rogers, 40 Ark. 91. It has also been held by this court that such a contest cannot be made by proceedings on a writ of certiorari, but that the only remedy is by appeal. Petty v. Ducker, 51 Ark. 281, 11 S. W. 2. It has also been determined by this court that the circuit court has no original jurisdiction now, as formerly, to try such a contest, since the Constitution confers original and exclusive jurisdiction of wills, etc., upon the probate court. Dowell v. Tucker, 46 Ark. 451. It follows that such a contest, if made at all, must be made originally in the probate court, or else, when that cannot be done, on appeal from the probate order of the probate court to the circuit court, accordingly as the will has been probated in the more solemn form or in the common form."

And it is expressly provided by statute that the trial in the circuit court shall be de novo. Sandels & H. Dig. § 1152. It is not therefore, an original proceeding instituted in the circuit court, but it is a continuation of the proceedings begun in the probate court. It is not a suit at law, nor is it a suit in equity, as understood either at common law or in equity, nor as recognized by the statutes and laws of the state. In its origin a proceeding to probate a will in the probate court, if the probate is sought in common form,—that is, without notice to parties interested,—it partakes very little of either. No complaint is filed, no pleadings are required, and no service had. It is in the nature of a proceeding in rem. If the probate is sought in the more solemn form (that is, after notice had to parties interested,—which may be done either in the probate court or on appeal in the circuit court), the proceeding is the same in both, with one exception. In the probate court there can be no jury impaneled; in the circuit court there may be, upon the demand of any one of the parties interested. The real contest of the will, in that event, may be made, as said in Ouachita Baptist College v. Scott, 64 Ark. 350, 42 S. W. 537, on the grounds set forth in the petition of the parties contesting the will, which, of course, will necessarily show the relationship of the parties to the deceased. The statute only provides that the case may be brought to the circuit court on appeal by simply filing the affidavit, and when in the circuit court, "upon the demand of any one of them, a jury shall be impaneled to try which or how much of any testamentary paper produced is or is not the last will of the testator." If no jury be demanded, the question is determined by the court, and the final decision is a bar to any other proceeding to call the probate or rejection of the will in question, subject to the right of appeal or writ of error to the supreme court as provided by the statute; but it is provided that nothing contained in the statute shall preclude a court of chancery from its jurisdiction to impeach such final decision for such reason as would give it jurisdiction over any other judgment at law. Sandels & H. Dig. § 7421. The contention of the defendant in error is not, therefore, advanced by anything found in the statutes of Arkansas, or the decisions of its courts. The conclusion is that, within the meaning of the first and second sections of the judiciary act of 1888, the proceeding for the probate of a will is not a "suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity," and therefore is not removable either from the probate court or from the circuit court into the Federal court.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Eastern District of Arkansas to remand the case to the Circuit Court of Garland county.

49 L. R. A.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

Let it be conceded: (1) That under the act of 1887, as corrected by the act of 1888, this case was not removable to the United States circuit court for the district of Arkansas unless at the time of its removal it was a suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity, within the meaning of that term as it had been interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States prior to 1887; and (2) that the United States circuit court had no original cognizance of a proceeding to probate a will as such. The question here is not, however, whether or not the Federal court has jurisdiction of a proceeding to probate a will. It is whether or not, after a will has been probated, and after a state has conferred upon its courts of law and its courts of equity jurisdiction to hear and determine in a suit between parties who are citizens of different states, and who claim property in that state, the crucial issue which determines the right to that property, the issue whether or not a will so probated which devises the property was procured by fraud and undue influence, a Federal court has concurrent jurisdiction of that suit. Let us refer to the statutes and the record for a moment, that the question at issue may be clear. The statutes of Arkansas as they are printed in Sandels & Hill's Digest, so far as they govern the proceedings in this case, provide that, when a will shall be exhibited for probate, the court of probate, or clerk thereof in vacation, shall receive the same, and grant a certificate of probate or of rejection, without summoning any party, but that this action shall be subject to the confirmation or rejection of the probate court (§ 7422); that wills may be proved and admitted to record by the court of probate (§ 1599); that they shall not be received in evidence until they have been allowed and admitted to record by the court of probate; that they shall be received in evidence thereafter; that the allowances of wills by the probate court shall be conclusive until the same shall be superseded or amended (§§ 7408, 7410, 7411); that an appeal shall lie from the allowance of a will by the court of probate to the circuit court of the state (§ 7409); that the circuit court of the state has jurisdiction of all actions for the enforcement of civil rights or the redress of civil wrongs except where exclusive jurisdiction is given to other courts; that its actions and proceedings are to be had according to the course, rules, and jurisdiction of the common law unless otherwise provided (§ 1114); that it has a superintending control and appellate jurisdiction over probate courts; that its appellate jurisdiction extends to errors of fact as well as of law (§§ 1120-1122); that on an appeal from the allowance of a will the circuit court shall proceed to try the case de novo (§ 1152); that all necessary parties shall be brought before the court; that upon the demand of any one of them a jury shall be impaneled to try which or how much of any testamentary paper produced is or is not the last will of the testator; that its decision shall be a bar to any other proceeding to call the probate or rejection of the will in question except by appeal to the supreme court of the state (§ 7421); and that any person who resides out of the state, who does not appear, and is not personally served with process, may, within three years after the final decision of the circuit court, impeach that decision, and have a retrial of the question devisavit vel non by an original suit upon a bill in chancery (§ 7423). Thus it will be seen that, while the state of Arkansas has conferred upon its probate court jurisdiction to allow or reject a will in the first instance when it is properly presented to it, it has granted to its court of general jurisdiction—to its circuit court—the right, and has imposed upon it the duty, to try de novo according to the course and practice at common law, in a suit instituted in that court by appeal from the probate court, every question of fact and of law involved in the issue, whether the probated writing is such a will or not, when the controversy has arisen over that issue between opposing parties, and that it has conferred upon its court of chancery jurisdiction to hear and determine all these questions de novo in every case in which an interested nonresident has not appeared or been personally served with process in the suit in the circuit court. Such are the statutes. What is the case that was removed and tried in the court below? Was it an application to the probate court to allow or reject the will? Not at all. That application had been heard and granted, and the probate court had no further power over or jurisdiction of the issue. It was not a proceeding to establish the will that was removed to the court below. It was the suit between Mary Franz and Adele Wahl, instituted in the circuit court of the state by the appeal of the former from the probate court for the purpose of avoiding the will and its probate, and of trying de novo the issues of fact and of law presented by the pleadings which these two parties had interposed, and nothing more, that was removed to the Federal court. When that removal took place, there were two parties, and two only, to the suit and to the issues in controversy. The determination of those issues was decisive of the question whether Mary E. Franz, a citizen of Ohio, or Adele Wahl, a citizen of Arkansas, was the owner of all the property of which the decedent died seised, which was of the alleged value of $20,000. Mary E. Franz was his sole heir, Adele Wahl his sole devisee under the alleged will, and it was the suit between these parties to determine the issues upon which the title to this property depended that was removed into the court below. The course of the proceedings through which this removal was secured was thus: Joseph H. Molen died on December 9, 1895. On December 24, 1895, the clerk of the probate court admitted to probate, in common form, without notice to anyone, his alleged will, which was propounded by Adele Wahl. On January 28, 1896, his sole heir, Mary E. Franz, filed in the probate court her petition, in which she averred that the writing presented was not the last will of Molen, that it had been revoked, that it was procured by undue influence, and that it had been falsely represented to be the will of Molen. These averments were denied by the devisee, and the question was presented and heard upon evidence in the probate court whether the certificate of allowance made by the clerk should be confirmed or rejected, and on June 10, 1896, the probate judge confirmed it. Thereupon Mary E. Franz appealed to the circuit court of the state, and thereafter, but before the trial of the case in that court, she removed it to the Federal court on the ground of local prejudice. The case was tried by a jury in the United States circuit court, and they found that the pretended will was procured by undue influence, and was void, and the court rendered a judgment accordingly. Thus it appears that the question here is not whether the United States circuit court has original or other cognizance of a proceeding to probate a will. No application to prove such a will was presented to that court. No application to remove such a proceeding was made, and no such proceeding was removed. What was removed was the suit between Mary E. Franz and Adele Wahl, instituted in the circuit court of the state by appeal, which was to be tried in that court de novo, according to the course and practice of the common law, which was to determine whether or not the writing challenged was procured by fraud and undue influence; and which, in determining that question, was to decide whether a citizen of Ohio or a citizen of Arkansas was the owner of $20,000 worth of property in that state.

The only question the case presents, therefore, is whether or not, when the state has conferred upon its courts of general jurisdiction at common law the right and power to hear and try de novo in a suit instituted by an appeal, and upon its courts of chancery the right to hear and try de novo in a suit commenced by original process, the question whether or not a writing that has been allowed as a will in the probate court of that state was procured by fraud and undue influence, a Federal court sitting in that state has concurrent jurisdiction to hear and try that issue where the property in controversy is of the value of $20,000, and the parties to the suit are citizens of different states. This question has been answered in the affirmative by the Supreme Court in Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 20, 23 L. ed. 524; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 496, 497, 27 L. ed. 1006, 1010, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327; and Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 610, 620, 621, 37 L. ed. 867, 868, 873, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; by the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit in Richardson v. Green, 15 U. S. App. 488, 61 Fed. Rep. 423, 429, 435, 9 C. C. A. 565; by Judges Pardee and Newman in the circuit court in Brodhead v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. Rep. 518, 11 L. R. A. 567; by Judge Hill in Everhart v. Everhart, 34 Fed. Rep. 82, 85; and by Judge Williams in this case in Franz v. Wahl, 81 Fed. Rep. 9; and in view of all the decisions upon the question the author of a leading text-book upon this subject has declared the rule to be that "while the probate of a will ex parte is in rem, and, not being between parties, cannot be removed to the Federal courts, yet, where such will is contested in pursuance of statutory provisions, and becomes a suit inter partes residing in different states, the Federal courts take jurisdiction as they would in any other controversy between the parties." 1 Woerner, American Law of Administration, 2d ed. § 156, *357.

The question has been answered in the negative by Judges Colt and Aldrich in the circuit court of appeals of the first circuit, in Re Cilley, 58 Fed. Rep. 977; by Judge Welker in Reed v. Reed, 31 Fed. Rep. 49; by Judge Swayne in Re Frazer, 18 Alb. L. J. 353, Fed. Cas. No. 5,068; by Judge Baker in Copeland v. Bruning, 72 Fed. Rep. 5; and by Judge Priest in Oakley v. Taylor, 64 Fed. Rep. 245. The cases of Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, sub nom. Kieley v. McGlynn, 22 L. ed. 599; Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. 174, 9 L. ed. 91; Fouevergne v. Municipality, No. 2, 18 How. 470, 15 L. ed. 399; and Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 34 L. ed. 1054, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369,—from the Supreme Court; and Re Aspinwall, 83 Fed. Rep. 851; Langdon v. Goddard, 2 Story, 267, Fed. Cas. No. 8,060; and Ball v. Tompkins, 41 Fed. Rep. 486, are cited in support of the negative answer, but they fail to meet the issue. The case of Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 34 L. ed. 1054, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369, does not touch the question. All the other cases from the Supreme Court, except Tarver v. Tarver, were commenced when the statutes of the states in which they were brought did not authorize the trial in the respective state courts of general jurisdiction of the questions whether the wills there in controversy were fraudulently procured or invalid at the times when the suits in the Federal courts were commenced. Moreover, these are the earlier cases in the Supreme Court, and, so far as the opinions rendered in them contain expressions at variance with the later decisions in Gaines v. Fuentes, Ellis v. Davis, and Byers v. McAuley, they must be deemed to be overruled.

In the case of Broderick's Will it was expressly admitted that, if a state by statute authorized the bringing of a suit to declare a will void in its courts of appeal or equity after its probate, such a suit could be maintained, in a proper case, in a Federal court. 21 Wall. 503, 520, sub nom. Kieley v. McGlynn, 22 L. ed. 599; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 21, 23 L. ed. 528.

In the case Re Aspinwall, 83 Fed. Rep. 851, the proceeding to be removed was an appeal from the register of wills to the orphans' court. The orphans' court was a special statutory court having probate jurisdiction, but without general jurisdiction to try suits at common law and in equity. The holding was that the proceeding before the orphans' court was not removable, and it was expressly declared in the opinion in that case that the decision there rendered was not at variance with the decisions in Gaines v. Fuentes and Ellis v. Davis that where, under the state practice, a suit could be brought in the court of general jurisdiction to annul a will and its probate after it was established; a like suit might be maintained in the Federal court.

In Gaines v. Fuentes the suit was commenced by petition in the parish court of New Orleans to annul a will probated years before, and to recall the decree by which it was established. That is the exact purpose of the appeal in the case in hand. Under the Code of Louisiana there was no suit in equity, and the Supreme Court divided upon the question whether or not the proceeding in that case fell within the term a "suit of a civil nature at law or in equity." The majority held that it did, that it was a suit, in equity, and that the Federal court had jurisdiction. The minority held that it was neither an action at law nor a suit in equity, and that the Federal court was without jurisdiction. Mr. Justice Field, who delivered the opinion of the majority, said of that proceeding, what is equally true of the suit instituted in the state court by appeal in this case: "The suit in the parish court is not a proceeding to establish a will, but to annul it as a muniment of title, and to limit the operation of the decree admitting it to probate. It is, in all essential particulars, a suit for equitable relief,—to cancel an instrument alleged to be void, and to restrain the enforcement of a decree alleged to have been obtained upon false and insufficient testimony." 92 U. S. 20, 23 L. ed. 528. He further said: "Whenever a controversy in a suit between such parties arises respecting the validity or construction of a will, or the enforcement of a decree admitting it to probate, there is no more reason why the Federal courts should not take jurisdiction of the case than there is that they should not take jurisdiction of any other controversy between the parties." 92 U. S. 22, 23 L. ed. 529.

The dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley follows the line of argument adopted by the circuit court of appeals in the first circuit in Re Cilley, 58 Fed. Rep. 977, and by the trial judges who have agreed with the opinion in that case that a suit to annul a will and avoid a decree allowing it is a proceeding to probate it, that a proceeding to probate a will is not a suit at common law or in equity, and that, therefore, a Federal court has no jurisdiction of it. This contention met the reprobation of the majority of the Supreme Court in Gaines v. Fuentes, and it finds no support in the subsequent decisions of that court. In Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 487, 27 L. ed. 1006, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327, that court held: (1) That, where the courts of general jurisdiction of a state are authorized to try the validity of a will in a suit involving the title to real property, the Federal court has like jurisdiction in cases in which the necessary amount in controversy and the diverse citizenship exist (page 496, 109 U. S., page 1009, 27 L. ed., and page 333, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep.); (2) that, conceding that the judicial power of the Federal courts embraces only such suits as arise "in law and equity," this does not necessarily exclude those which may involve the exercise of jurisdiction in reference to the proof of wills (page 497, 109 U. S., page 1010, 27 L. ed., and page 334, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep.; and (3) that the terms "law" and "equity" do not restrict the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to the rights and remedies which were employed and recognized in courts of law and equity when the national judicial system was adopted, but that they also embrace all rights and remedies newly created by the statutes of the states which may be administered according to the nature of the case in the courts of the United States. Ibid.

In Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 610, 620, 621, 37 L. ed. 867, 868, 873, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900, a distributee of an estate, who was a citizen of another state, brought a bill in the Federal court in Pennsylvania to avoid a will which had been probated there, and to recover his share of the property of the estate while it was yet in process of administration in the orphans' court; and obtained a decree that the writing which had been allowed as a will in that court was not a will, but was a mere declaration of trust, and that he was entitled to a certain share of the estate; and the Supreme Court sustained the jurisdiction and the decree so far as it determined the rights of citizens of different states.

In Brodhead v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. Rep. 518, 522, 11 L. R. A. 567, the contest of a will was first heard on pleadings in the court of ordinary, then appealed to the superior court of Floyd county, Georgia, where it was tried according to the practice at common law under the statutes of that state. Thereupon it was removed to the Federal court, and Judges Pardee and Newman held that it was an action at law, and removable under the act of 1887-88.

In Richardson v. Green, 15 U. S. App. 488, 61 Fed. Rep. 423, 429, 435, 9 C. C. A. 565, an original suit was brought in the Federal court in Oregon to avoid a will and the decree of the probate court allowing it on the ground that it was forged. There was a statute of the state of Oregon which permitted the maintenance of such a suit in its state courts of general jurisdiction. The circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit held that it was a suit in equity, and that the Federal court had jurisdiction. Judge McKenna, now Mr. Justice McKenna of the Supreme Court, said: "The nature of this suit is not precisely defined by the decisions, but it is certainly inter partes, and seems to be within the doctrine declared in Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 496, 497, 27 L. ed. 1009, 1010, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327. This remedy existing in the Oregon courts, it could be exercised by the United States court."

In Everhart v. Everhart, 34 Fed. Rep. 82, 85, a similar case, Judge Hill rendered a like decision.

In this state of the law the court below was right in maintaining the removal of this case, and for the following reasons: (1) Because upon the death of Molen, Mary E. Franz, a citizen of Ohio, his sole heir. became entitled to his property, which was of greater value than $2,000, and, under the Constitution and the acts of Congress, had the right to maintain a suit in equity in the Federal court against Adele Wahl, a citizen of Arkansas, to recover this property, and to enjoin the use of any fraudulent will to create a cloud upon the title of the real estate included within it, and no state legislation could curtail or destroy the jurisdiction of that court to hear and decide for itself every issue between these citizens which was determinative of their rights to this property. (2) Because the larger portion of the property devised by the will was real estate, and after its probate the Federal court sitting in equity had plenary jurisdiction, derived from the court of chancery in England, to entertain a suit in equity to avoid the devise of the real estate for forgery, fraud, or undue influence, and, upon the trial of the issue which it was empowered to frame and submit, to a jury, to set aside the will, and render futile the decree of probate. And (3) because the statutes of Arkansas gave to the contestant of a will the right to institute in its courts of general jurisdiction, and there to try de novo, a suit involving the question of the validity of the will after its probate; and under these statutes the Federal court had like jurisdiction of all suits involving the requisite amount between citizens of different states.
49 L. R. A.

1. When the owner of property dies, his estate is immediately impressed with a trust for the benefit of his creditors, heirs, and legatees. The court of chancery of England and the courts of equity of the United States have plenary jurisdiction, at the suit of any proper creditor, heir, or legatee, to enforce this trust against any occupants, executors, administrators, or parties into whose control any part of the estate may come. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 532, etc.; Atty. Gen. v. Cornthwaite, 2 Cox, Ch. Cas. 44; Comstock v. Herron, 6 U. S. App. 626, 627, 55 Fed. Rep. 803, 5 C. C. A. 266; Hagan v. Walker, 14 How. 29, 14 L. ed. 312; Adams, Eq. 257; Green v. Creighton, 23 How. 90, 93, sub nom. Kendall v. Creighton, 16 L. ed. 419; Borer v. Chapman, 119 U. S. 587, 598, 599, 30 L. ed. 532, 536, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 342. In suits between citizens of different states to enforce this trust this jurisdiction vests in the Federal courts, and, while statutes of the various states may provide for the appointment of administrators, the allowance of claims and the probate of wills as muniments of title and as prima facie evidence of their validity in their courts, they can make no valid provisions which will deprive the national courts of the right or the duty to determine for themselves, independently of these provisions, every issue which involves the rights of citizens of different states to the property of the decedent, when these rights are drawn in question in proper suits brought in apt time.

In Green v. Creighton, 23 How. 90, 93, sub nom. Kendall v. Creighton, 16 L. ed. 419,—a suit against a legatee by a creditor whose claim was barred under the statutes of the state by his failure to present it to commissioners,—Mr. Justice Campbell said, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court: "In the court of chancery, executors and administrators are considered as trustees, and that court exercises original jurisdiction over them in favor of creditors, legatees, and heirs in reference to the proper execution of their trust;" and the suit was maintained, notwithstanding the bar of the statutes of the state.

In Borer v. Chapman, 119 U. S. 587, 598, 599, 30 L. ed. 532, 536, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 348,—another suit against a legatee by a creditor of New York whose claim was barred by the laws of California, where the estate had been administered, through the failure of the creditor to present his claim within the time fixed by those laws,—Mr. Justice Matthews, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, and speaking of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts over suits in equity to administer estates of decedents, said: "As a part of the ancient and original jurisdiction of courts of equity it vested, by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Congress in pursuance thereof, in the Federal courts, to be administered by the circuit courts in controversies arising between citizens of different states. It is the familiar and well-settled doctrine of this court that this jurisdiction is independent of that conferred by the states upon their own courts, and cannot be affected by any legislation except that of the United States;" and the suit was maintained, and a decree for the complainant sustained over the objection that his claim was barred under the administration statutes of California.

Immediately after the death of Molen, then, this was the situation: Adele Wahl, a citizen of Arkansas, the devisee in the fraudulent will, was in the possession of the property of the decedent and of a fraudulent instrument under which she intended to acquire the title to it. Mary E. Franz, a citizen of Ohio, was the sole heir of the deceased, and had the right to all his property, and that property was held in trust for her by Adele Wahl, who was in possession of it. Under the Constitution and the acts of Congress she had the right to maintain a suit in equity in the Federal court in Arkansas against Adele Wahl to enforce that trust, and to have every claim of the latter under the fraudulent will or otherwise, and every issue involving her right to that property, tried and determined in that court. She also had the right to maintain a suit in equity in that court to restrain Adele Wahl from imposing the threatened cloud of that fraudulent will upon the title to the real estate of which Molen died seised, and to compel a surrender and cancellation of the instrument, and in this suit she had the right to have the question of the fraudulent character of the will tried in the Federal court. Could the legislature of Arkansas destroy these rights? Could the statutes of that state, by providing that this fraudulent will should be presented to, contested, and allowed, with or without notice, in its probate court, or in any of its other courts, and that, if there established, its validity should never be questioned elsewhere, deprive this citizen of Ohio of the right granted to her by the Constitution and laws of the United States to try in the Federal court the only issue involving her right to her property,—the issue whether or not this will was procured by fraud and undue influence? Could the statutes of Arkansas provide that a fraudulent deed should be presented to the register of deeds, or to any of its courts, and, if there allowed, deprive the citizens of other states of the right to contest its validity in a Federal court as against the citizens of Arkansas when its validity was determinative of their rights of property in that state? These questions are susceptible of but one answer. The proposition that no state legislation can destroy or impair the right of citizens of different states to maintain their suits for and to try their issues involving rights of property in the Federal courts is fundamental in the jurisprudence of the United States, and it is nowhere affirmed more decisively or illustrated more copiously than in the suits in the Federal courts by creditors and distributees for their shares of the estates of decedents. The statutes of the various states commonly provide that claims against the estates of decedents shall be presented to their probate courts, or surrogate courts, or orphans' courts, or to commissioners within a certain time after a published notice, and that, if disallowed by them, or if not presented within the time fixed, they shall be barred; that wills shall be presented for probate, and that all persons who fail to contest them in these courts shall be estopped to question their validity; that administrators' and executors' accounts shall be allowed by these courts, and that their allowances shall be conclusive upon all the world. But creditors, heirs, and legatees who are citizens of other states are not deprived of their right to maintain and try their suits in the Federal courts against administrators, executors, and all other parties who are citizens of the state of the decedent, to determine their rights in the property of the estate; nor are they barred of their original rights to maintain and to try these suits in the Federal courts by their failure to present their claims to the state courts, as provided by the administration statutes of the states. Snydam v. Broadnax, 14 Pet. 67, 74, 10 L. ed. 357; Union Bank v. Vaiden, 18 How. 503, 507, 15 L. ed. 472, 474; Borer v. Chapman, 119 U. S. 587–589, 30 L. ed. 532, 533, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 342; Lawrence v. Nelson, 143 U. S. 215, 224, 36 L. ed. 130, 134, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440; Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 430, 19 L. ed. 260, 261; Arrowsmith v. Gleason, 129 U. S. 86, 98, 32 L. ed. 630, 635, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 237; Johnson v. Waters, 111 U. S. 640, 667, 28 L. ed. 547, 556, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619; Hayes v. Pratt, 147 U. S. 557, 570, 37 L. ed. 279, 284, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 503; Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 621, 37 L. ed. 867, 873, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; Hyde v. Stone, 20 How. 170, 175, 15 L. ed. 874, 875;

Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 73, 76, 28 L. ed. 927, 928, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377.

In Union Bank v. Vaiden a creditor who had failed to present his claim against the estate before the probate court, as provided by the statutes of Alabama, and whose claim was by those statutes barred by such failure, brought a bill in equity against the administrators in the Federal court to enforce the trust in his favor, and to compel them to allow and pay his claim, and the Supreme Court sustained the bill, and said: "The law of a state limiting the remedies of its citizens in its own courts cannot be applied to prevent the citizens of other states from suing in the courts of the United States in that state for the recovery of any property or money to which they may be legally or equitably entitled."

In Lawrence v. Nelson, 143 U. S. 215, 224, 36 L. ed. 130, 134, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443, it was held that a statute of the state of Illinois which required all claims against the estate of a deceased person to be filed in the county court within two years, or be forever barred, did not cut off a claim of a citizen of another state, who failed to present his claim within the time, and afterwards sued the administrator in the Federal court, and the Supreme Court said: "The general equity jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States to administer as between citizens of different states the assets of deceased persons within its jurisdiction cannot be defeated or impaired by laws of a state undertaking to give exclusive jurisdiction to its own courts."

In Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 430, 19 L. ed. 260, one of the distributees of the estate of a deceased person brought a suit in equity in the Federal court against the administrator of the estate in Missouri, who was proceeding to administer the estate in the probate court under the laws of that state. Objection was made that the suit could not be maintained because the statutes of Missouri provided that the probate court should have exclusive jurisdiction over all disputes concerning the duties and accounts of administrators. But the Supreme Court sustained the bill, determined the rights of the distributees, and declared that no legislation of a state could oust the jurisdiction of the Federal court to determine a controversy between citizens of different states.

In Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 610, 620, 621, 37 L. ed. 867, 873, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906, a distributee of an estate which was in process of administration under a pretended will which had been probated as such before the register in Pennsylvania maintained a suit in equity in a Federal court to avoid the will, and to have a determination of his rights to a share in the estate, and obtained a decree that the instrument which had been probated as a will was not a will, and that determined his rights in the distribution of the estate.

The rational deduction from the decisions that have been cited and from the principle on which they rest is that immediately upon the death of Joseph Molen the Federal court 49 L. R. A.

had original jurisdiction of a civil suit in equity by Mary E. Franz against Adele Wahl to enforce the trust impressed upon the estate of the decedent in the latter's hands in favor of the former, and to enjoin the latter from using her fraudulent will to cloud the title of the real property which was the principal part of the estate; that Mary E. Franz had the right to the trial and determination of the crucial question whether or not the pretended will was fraudulent in that court; that the statutes of Arkansas could not deprive her of any of these rights; that the Federal court still has that jurisdiction; and that, since the suit she has instituted by appeal in the circuit court of the state was pending in a court of justice of general jurisdiction, is between these two parties, involves the same property and the same issues, she had the right to its removal.

2. As a part of the original jurisdiction exercised by courts of common law and equity in England to try and decide the question whether or not a devise of real estate was legally made after the will had been probated in the ecclesiastical court, the Federal court derived a like jurisdiction to hear and determine that question after the probate of this will in a suit brought for that purpose. It was long a disputed question in England, never finally put at rest until decided by a divided court in Allen v. M'Pherson, 1 H. L. Cas. 191, in 1847, whether or not the court of chancery had jurisdiction to avoid a will of personal property and the decree allowing it in the ecclesiastical court for forgery, fraud, or undue influence. The jurisdiction was repeatedly invoked and repeatedly maintained. Thynn v. Thynn, 1 Vern. 296; Segrave v. Kirwan, Beatty, 157; Marriot v. Marriot, 1 Strange, 666; Barnesly v. Powel, 1 Ves. Sr. 284. But it was finally refused in Allen v. M'Pherson. Under the English law a devise of real estate rested upon different grounds. Notwithstanding the probate of a will of both personal and real property in the ecclesiastical court, the jurisdiction of the court of chancery and of courts of law to try the issue whether or not the devise of the real estate was procured by fraud or undue influence was always conceded. Barnesly v. Powel, 1 Ves. Sr. 284, 285. A like jurisdiction vested in the Federal court below, and, as the bulk of the property covered by this will was real estate, it had jurisdiction of an original suit between these parties to set aside this will upon this ground. The statutes of Arkansas could not deprive it of this jurisdiction, and, as the suit removed was before a court of justice, and for the same purpose, it had jurisdiction of this suit.

3. If it is conceded, for the sake of argument merely, that the Federal court had no jurisdiction of an original suit to avoid this fraudulent will, and to render futile its probate upon the grounds that have now been considered, it still has jurisdiction of such a suit under the statutes of Arkansas, which gave the right to maintain it in its courts of general jurisdiction. Rights created and remedies provided by the statutes of a state to be pursued in its courts may be enforced and administered in the Federal courts, either at law, in equity, or in admiralty, as the nature of the new rights and remedies may require. Darragh v. H. Wetter Mfg. Co. 49 U. S. App. 1, 78 Fed. Rep. 7, 14, 23 C. C. A. 609; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 20, 23 L. ed. 524; Richardson v. Green, 15 U. S. App. 488, 61 Fed. Rep. 423, 429, 435, 9 C. C. A. 565; Brodhead v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. Rep. 518, 11 L. R. A. 567; Re Stutsman County, 88 Fed. Rep. 337, 341; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 497, 27 L. ed. 1006, 1010, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 278, 287, 20 L. ed. 571, 577; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439; Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 153, 157, 25 L. ed. 903, 904; Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Krumseig, 40 U. S. App. 620, 77 Fed. Rep. 32, 23 C. C. A. 1; Ex parte McNeil, 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624; Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, 520, sub nom. Kieley v. McGlynn, 22 L. ed. 599, 605; Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 15, 25, 28 L. ed. 52, 56, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 557, 30 L. ed. 1010, 1012, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1129; Reynolds v. Crawfordville First Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 405, sub nom. Reynolds v. First Nat. Bank, 28 L. ed. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, 170, 171, 29 L. ed. 83, 87, 88, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799; Gormley v. Clark, 134 U. S. 338, 348, 349, 33 L. ed. 909, 913, 914, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554; Bardon v. Land & River Improv. Co. 157 U. S. 327, 330, 39 L. ed. 719, 720, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; Cowley v. Northern P. R. Co. 159 U. S. 569, 583, 40 L. ed. 263, 267, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 221, 21 L. ed. 447, 453; Fleitas v. Richardson, 147 U. S. 538, 37 L. ed. 272, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429; Lincoln County v. Luning, 133 U. S. 529, 531, 33 L. ed. 766, 767, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363.

In Darragh v. H. Wetter Mfg. Co. 49 U. S. App. 1, 78 Fed. Rep. 7, 14, 23 C. C. A. 609, the state of Arkansas had enacted a statute which gave to a simple contract creditor of an insolvent corporation a suit in equity in its chancery court to wind up the affairs of such corporation, and to distribute its assets without the recovery of a judgment or the return of an execution. No such suit could have been maintained in the Federal court without this statute. But this court held that, inasmuch as that state had created this new right and remedy, and had provided for their enforcement in its court of chancery, an original suit in equity could be maintained in the Federal court for the same purpose.

In Ex parte McNeil, 13 Wall. 236, 243, 20 L. ed. 624, 626, a statute of New York had created a right to pilotage in certain cases. This right did not exist without the statute. A libel in admiralty was filed in the United States district court to enforce this right, and a decree for the libellant was rendered. An application was made to the Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition against the enforcement of the judgment because the court below had no jurisdiction. The Supreme Court denied the writ, and said: "This principle may be laid down as axiomatic in our national jurisprudence: A party forfeits nothing by going into a Federal tribunal."

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 286, 20 L. ed. 571, 576, and Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 18, 26 L. ed. 439, 441, it was held that state statutes creating causes of action for negligent killing, and providing for actions at law to enforce them in state courts, enabled the Federal courts to take jurisdiction of such actions, and to enforce the rights created by the state statutes, although no such actions could have been maintained in the absence of those statutes.

In Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 153, 157, 25 L. ed. 903, 904, the statutes of a state had given to property holders the right to enjoin the payment of an illegal tax, and in discussing the right of the complainant to maintain a suit in a national court for the same purpose the Supreme Court declared the holding of that court to be that, "where a statute of a state created a new right, or provided a new remedy, the Federal courts will enforce that right either on the common-law or equity side of its docket, as the nature of the new right or the new remedy requires."

These decisions, and those cited with them which we have not reviewed, conclusively establish the proposition that the meaning of the term "suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity," which was re-enacted by Congress in 1887-1888, is not to be discovered by a consideration alone of what actions at law or suits in equity might have been maintained when the national system of jurisprudence was established in 1789. They demonstrate the fact that it is not to be restricted to those suits at law and in equity which might then have been maintained, but that it includes every action at law, and every suit in equity which had been authorized to enforce rights created under state laws between 1789 and 1887. The broad interpretation and liberal construction which had been given to this term by the decisions of the Supreme Court to which reference has been made was by a familiar canon of construction adopted and confirmed by Congress when it re-enacted the same words without change in the act of 1887-1888. When, therefore, the statutes of Arkansas gave this defendant in error the right to institute and maintain a suit in its courts of general jurisdiction to try the validity of this will, and to avoid it and its probate on account of fraud, undue influence, or illegality, the jurisdiction of the Federal court in that state was thereby extended over that suit between citizens of different states.

It will not do to say that the proceeding here in hand was sui generis, and not a suit. Chief Justice Marshall conclusively answered that suggestion in Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 464, 7 L. ed. 481, 486. He said: "The term [suit] is certainly a very comprehensive one, and is understood to apply to any proceeding in a court of justice by which an individual pursues that remedy in a court of justice which the law affords him. The modes of proceeding may be various, but, if a right is litigated between the parties in a court of justice, the proceeding by which the decision of the court is sought is a suit."

When this case was pending in the circuit court of the state, the defendant in error was pursuing the remedy in that court of justice which the law afforded her. A right was being litigated in a court of justice between two, and only two, opposing parties, and the case was, therefore, a suit and a suit of a civil nature.

To the suggestion that it is neither a suit at common law nor in equity, the answer is that it is both. It is a suit of which a court of law and a court of equity have concurrent jurisdiction. The statute which authorizes it declares that the issues it involves may be joined and tried de novo according to the course and practice of the common law, and that the judgment it prescribes may be rendered by a court of law. It is accordingly an action at law. The same statute provides that the same issues may be framed and tried in an original suit in the court of chancery in case the complainant is a nonresident, and has not appeared, or been served with process, in the circuit court. Moreover, this suit has the essential attributes of a suit in equity. The enforcement of trusts, the undoing of frauds, the removal of void instruments, and the record of them from the title to real estate which they cloud are well-known heads of equity jurisprudence. This is a suit to enforce the trust impressed upon the estate of Molen at his death. It is a suit to undo the fraud perpetrated by the procurement of his will by undue influence. It is a suit to remove the cloud which has been imposed upon the title to the real estate of which he died seised by a void and fraudulent will. It has every essential attribute of, and it is, a suit in equity. Hayden v. Thompson, 36 U. S. App. 361, 367, 368, 71 Fed. Rep. 60, 62-64, 17 C. C. A. 592, 594, 595; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 21, 23 L. ed. 524.

Nor is the argument persuasive that this was not a suit at common law or in equity, and that the jurisdiction of the Federal court over it was withheld or restricted by the fact that under the Arkansas statute it was to be instituted in the state court of general jurisdiction by appeal, and not by the issue and service of original process. This contention sticks in the bark, and sacrifices substance to form, verity to technicality. This suit in the state circuit court would have been the same that it now is, in substance and in legal effect, if the statute of Arkansas had authorized its commencement in that court, and it had been brought there by original process after the establishment of the pretended will in the probate court. The nature and character of a suit or proceeding are to be determined by its essential attributes, not by the forms or means of its institution. These attributes are the court in which it is pending, the parties, the issues, the object of the suit, and the relief that may be rendered. The court in which the suit would have been pending, the parties to it, the purpose of the suit, the issues in it, and the relief that could have been granted, every essential attribute of it, would have been the same if it had been commenced in the circuit court of the state by original process that they now are, although it was instituted by appeal. The original jurisdiction of the Federal court over it could not be restricted, withheld, or determined by the mere mode by which it was commenced. Where a statute of a state authorizes a suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity of a nature of which a Federal court may take jurisdiction to be instituted in its courts of general jurisdiction by appeal, certiorari, notice, or other proceeding, the jurisdiction of the Federal court attaches; and a like suit between citizens of different states may be instituted in that court by original process, and maintained there. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 406, 407, 25 L. ed. 206, 208; Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 467, 474, 475, 34 L. ed. 196, 198, 199, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; Chicot County v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 529, 533, 37 L. ed. 546, 548, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695; Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 73, 76, 28 L. ed. 927, 928, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377; Brodhead v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. Rep. 518, 522, 11 L. R. A. 567; Re Stutsman County, 88 Fed. Rep. 337, 340; Re Foley, 76 Fed. Rep. 390.

In Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 407, 25 L. ed. 206, 208, the statutes of Minnesota provided for the exercise of the power of eminent domain by a proceeding in which the boom company filed a petition in the state court for the appointment of commissioners to assess the value of the land taken, upon evidence produced before them, and that the landowner might appeal from the award of the commissioners to the state court of general jurisdiction, and there have a trial de novo of the issue relative to the value of his land. The Supreme Court held that "the proceeding in the present case before the commissioners appointed to appraise the land was in the nature of an inquest to ascertain its value, and not a suit at law in the ordinary sense of those terms. But, when it was transferred to the district court by appeal from the award of the commissioners, it took under the statute of the state the form of a suit at law, and was thenceforth subject to the ordinary rules and incidents." Page 406. 98 U. S., and page 208, 25 L. ed.

It answered the argument that the Federal court had no jurisdiction of the suit because it was instituted in the state district court by an appeal from the commissioners, and not by original process, in these apt and decisive words: "The case would have been in no essential particular different had the state authorized the company by statute to appropriate the particular property in question and the owners to bring suit against the company in the courts of law for its value." Page 407, 98 U. S., and page 208, 25 L. ed.

This remark is equally true of the suit at bar. That there is no misconception here of the scope and effect of the holding of the Supreme Court in Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson will appear from an attentive reading of its later decisions in Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 73, 76, 28 L. ed. 927, 928, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377; Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. at pages 474-476, 34 L. ed. 199, 200, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653, where the decision in Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson is reviewed and affirmed; and Chicot County v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 529, 533, 37 L. ed. 546, 548, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695. In the last case a statute of Arkansas provided that all claims against counties in that state should be presented to the county court of the county for allowance or rejection; that any claimant might appeal from the judgment of the county court to the state circuit court, and there have a trial de novo; but that suits against the county could be commenced and maintained in no other way. The Supreme Court expressly held that the right to maintain the revisory trial in the state court of general jurisdiction was sufficient in itself to warrant the maintenance of a like suit by original process in the Federal court. These authorities, and those cited with them which have not been reviewed, are decisive of the proposition that under the statute of Arkansas, which allows the institution of this suit by appeal, the Federal court has jurisdiction of a suit brought by original process in that court for like relief; and, since it has jurisdiction of such an original suit, it has jurisdiction of this suit by its removal from the state court.

The deductions which should be drawn from the authorities in this country on the subjects which have been under consideration are these: The Federal courts, as a part of their original jurisdiction, derived from the court of chancery in England, have jurisdiction, as between citizens of different states, to determine their rights to the property of deceased persons in process of administration, to avoid fraudulent deeds, wills, and other instruments which threaten to cloud the title to the real estate of such estates, and to deprive the owners of their property. No state legislation can destroy or impair this jurisdiction, or deprive citizens of different states of their right to try in the Federal courts, in a proper suit, brought in apt time, every issue involving their right to a charge upon or a share in the property of the deceased person, whether that issue involves the validity of a deed, a mortgage, or a will. Federal courts have no jurisdiction of a proceeding to prove a will, or to appoint administrators of estates, or to allow claims against estates as such, in the absence of a suit at law or in equity in a court of justice between citizens of different states involving their rights of property. The statutes of the various states may lawfully provide for the proof of wills, the allowance of claims, and the appointment of administrators, and under these statutes wills may be established as muniments of title, and may become prima facie evidence of their validity, claims may be allowed and rejected, and administration of estates may proceed; but no state legislation regarding the administration of estates, and no administration under such legislation, can deprive the citizens of different states of their right to a trial de novo, and an independent decision by a Federal court of every issue which involves their right to a claim upon or interest in the property of the estates administered in a proper suit involving the requisite amount, and instituted in apt time, whether the issue it presents involves the validity of a will, of a debt, or of a claim of heirship. Where the statutes of a state create the right to institute in its courts of general jurisdiction, either by appeal or by original process, and to maintain and try according to the course and practice of the common law or according to the practice in equity, a suit between opposing parties to avoid a will and the probate thereof for fraud, undue influence, or illegality in its making, the Federal court in that state has original jurisdiction of a like suit between citizens of different states involving the necessary amount. A suit which involves more than $2,000, instituted pursuant to a state statute by a citizen of Ohio against a citizen of Arkansas, in a court of general jurisdiction of a state, by appeal from a decree of a probate court allowing a will, for the purpose of avoiding the will and its probate for fraud and undue influence in procuring it, is a suit of which the Federal court could have taken original jurisdiction by original process, either as a suit at law or in equity, and is therefore removable to the Federal court under the act of 1887-88. Since the case was removable, and as there was no substantial error in its trial, the judgment below ought to be affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, NINTH CIRCUIT.

DENVER & RIO GRANDE RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Katherine A. ROLLER et al.

(100 Fed. Rep. 738.)

1. A managing agent in charge of the business office of a railroad company of another state for the purpose of soliciting business, in transporting passengers and freight over its road situated in another state is a "managing or business agent," within the meaning of Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 411, authorizing the service of summons on such agents of foreign corporations.

NOTE.—As to liability for causing fright, see Smith v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. (Mass.) 47 L. R. A. 323, and footnote thereto.
49 L. R. A.

2. Courts in California have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action, by a passenger against a foreign railroad company for injuries sustained by collision on its railroad in another state, under the provisions of Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 395, providing for trial in any county which the plaintiff may designate, if the defendants do not reside in the state, and § 411, providing for service of summons on an agent of the corporation.

3. A railroad company is liable to a passenger for injuries caused by a collision on account of the negligence of the agents of a receiver who were jointly using the track under a lease.
4. Injuries caused by fright or shock resulting from a bodily injury in connection with a railroad collision, the accompanying explosion, fire, and wreck of cars, and the surrounding circumstances directly connected therewith and solely attributable thereto, may be included in a recovery of the damages sustained in the accident.
5. An opinion by a physician that the condition of a patient is the result of injury and shock of some sort is not incompetent when it is derived from his own knowledge, attendance, treatment, and examination of the patient, though based in part upon her statements and complaints, made at different times, as to her pains and sufferings.
6. A hypothetical question need not embrace or cover all the facts in the case, when it assumes the existence of a state of facts which the evidence directly, fairly, and reasonably tends to establish or justify, and does not transcend the range of evidence.
7. Evidence as to what was seen and heard after a passenger left a burning and wrecked car and climbed out of a deep trench up a steep embankment, where the passenger remained about thirty minutes while the cars were burning and injured persons were being brought up, is part of the res gestæ and competent evidence on the question of fright or nervous shock sustained by the passenger.
8. A passenger who has escaped from a wrecked and burning car is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to close her ears and shut her eyes as to everything that transpires resulting from the collision while remaining for about thirty minutes upon an embankment to which she has climbed out of a deep trench, although the horrors incident to the collision may thus increase the fright or nervous shock which she sustains.
9. Photographs of a railroad wreck are admissible for the purpose of enabling witnesses to explain their testimony as to the facts or to assist the jury in arriving at a better understanding of such testimony.
10. A fright and nervous shock sustained by a passenger on account of the horrors incident to a collision while remaining on a railroad embankment after climbing out of a deep trench must be deemed general and not special damages for which recovery may be had under general allegations as to bodily pain and mental anguish caused by the violence of the collision and by being forced to alight from the coach.
11. The refusal of instructions prepared by counsel, although they contain correct principles of law applicable to the case, is not erroneous if the charge of the court in its entirety fairly covers the legal proportions necessary to give instructions upon.

(February 5, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of California to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for injuries inflicted on the female plaintiff while a passenger on defendant's train. Affirmed.

Before McKenna, Circuit Justice, Gilbert, Circuit Judge, and Hawley, District Judge. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry T. Rogers, with Messrs. Stephen M. White and Charles Monroe, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Lynn Helm, for defendants in error:

Courts of general jurisdiction have power to hear and determine all personal actions for money or damages, regardless alike of the place where the cause of action arose, the residence of the parties, or their character as natural persons or foreign corporations.

Story, Conf. L. §§ 542, 543; Gould, Pl. chap. 5, § 10; Mostyn v. Fabrigas, 1 Cowp. 181, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 4th Am. ed. p. 357; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. ed. 354; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Wallace, 50 Miss. 244; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439; Block v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 529; McKenna v. Fisk, 1 How. 241, 11 L. ed. 117; Ackerson v. Erie R. Co. 31 N. J. L. 309; Curtis v. Bradford, 33 Wis. 190; Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. 94 Wis. 70, 34 L. R. A. 503, 68 N. W. 664; Great Western R. Co. v. Miller, 19 Mich. 312; Gardner v. Thomas, 14 Johns. 134, 7 Am. Dec. 445; United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 35.

Corporations act solely by means of agents, and those of one state are permitted only by comity to do business in other states; and it has been held that a corporation of one state could do business in another state only by the latter's consent, and that that consent might be accompanied by such conditions as that state should think it proper to impose.

Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 409, 15 L. ed. 453; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 222, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. ed. 354; Merchants' Mfg. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 21 Blatchf. 109, 13 Fed. Rep. 358; Libbey v. Hodgdon, 9 N. H. 394; Van Dresser v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 48 Fed. Rep. 202; Block v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 529.

Service may be had on a foreign corporation in a personal action by serving the agent doing business for such corporation, although the cause of action arose out of the state in which suit is instituted.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. ed. 354; Merchants' Mfg. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 21 Blatchf. 109, 13 Fed. Rep. 358; Van Dresser v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 48 Fed. Rep. 202; Block v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 529; United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 35; Tuchband v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 437, 22 N. E. 360; New York, J. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 37 L. ed. 292, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444; Eingartner

v. Illinois Steel Co. 94 Wis. 70, 34 L. R. A. 503, 68 N. W. 664.

It is not necessary that the business done should be the chief business for which the corporation is organized, nor that it should constitute the major part in volume of the entire business done by such corporation.

United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 17; Brewer v. George Knapp & Co. 82 Fed. Rep. 694; Palmer v. Chicago Evening Post, 70 Fed. Rep. 886; Palmer v. Pennsylvania Co. 35 Hun, 369; Tuchband v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 437, 22 N. E. 360; Foster v. Charles Betcher Lumber Co. 5 S. D. 57, 23 L. R. A. 490, 58 N. W. 9; Norton v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 61 Fed. Rep. 618.

A railroad company which permits another to make a joint use of its tracks is liable to a person injured by the negligence of the company to which the permission is granted.

Central Trust Co. v. Colorado Midland R. Co. 89 Fed. Rep. 560; 2 Elliott, Railroads, § 477; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 90, 18 L. ed. 591.

Recovery for injuries to health, as a reasonable and natural consequence of great fright and actually and proximately occasioned thereby, which great fright was the reasonable and natural consequence of the circumstances in which a passenger was placed by a collision caused by the negligence of a railroad company, with the ensuing wreckage, explosion, and conflagration, can be had, although no physical injury was sustained except a shock or injury to the nervous system.

Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111 Cal. 668, 32 L. R. A. 193, 44 Pac. 320; Bell v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 26 C. L. 428; 2 Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. p. 642; 1 Reven, Neg. pp. 77-81; Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 134, 16 L. R. A. 203, 50 N. W. 1034; Seger v. Barkhamsted, 22 Conn. 290; Mack v. South Bound R. Co. 52 S. C. 323, 40 L. R. A. 679, 29 S. E. 905; Mo-Keon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 94 Wis. 477, 35 L. R. A. 252, 69 N. W. 175; Mann Boudoir Car Co. v. Dupre, 13 U. S. App. 183, 21 L. R. A. 289, 64 Fed. Rep. 646, 4 C. C. A. 540.

For an injury to the person or the health an action may be maintained if it is caused by negligence.

Stutz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Wis. 147, 40 N. W. 653; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Lambertson, 59 N. J. L. 297, 36 Atl. 1000; Lehigh & H. R. R. Co. v. Marchant, 55 U. S. App. 427, 84 Fed. Rep. 870, 28 C. C. A. 544; Warren v. Boston & M. R. Co. 163 Mass. 484, 40 N. E. 895.

The question as to what is the proximate cause of an injury is one for the jury to determine, and their finding is conclusive.

Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 409, 24 L. ed. 256; Bott v. Pratt, 33 Minn. 324, 53 Am. Rep. 47, 23 N. W. 237; Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 241, 28 L. ed. 415, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; Crandall v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 11 Biss. 525, 16 Fed. 49 L. R. A.

Rep. 75; White v. Colorado C. R. Co. 5 Dill. 437, Fed. Cas. No. 17,543.

Where the injuries were of a permanent nature there may be a recovery for future sufferings.

Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, sub nom. Washington & G. R. Co. v. Tobriner, 37 L. ed. 284, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557; Koettler v. Manhattan R. Co. 36 N. Y. S. R. 611, 13 N. Y. Supp. 458, Affirmed in 129 N. Y. 668, 30 N. E. 65; Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Lacy, 86 Tex. 244, 24 S. W. 269.

There was no error in the circuit court admitting evidence as to what was seen by the plaintiff Katherine A. Roller after she left the train and immediately after she ascended the embankment. It was part of the res gestæ, and not too remote.

Greenl. Ev. § 108; 1 Wharton, Ev. § 259; Carter v. Buchannon, 3 Ga. 513; 1 Rice, Ev. § 212; Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. 41; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Kennelly, 170 Ill. 508, 48 N. E. 996; Hallahan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 194, 6 N. E. 287; Stutz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Wis. 147, 40 N. W. 653.

Hawley, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted to recover damages for injuries received by Katherine A. Roller, one of the defendants in error, on September 9, 1897, while a passenger on the railroad of plaintiff in error, in a wreck which occurred between a freight train of the Colorado Midland Company and the regular passenger train of the plaintiff in error, a corporation organized under the laws of Colorado. The Colorado Midland Railroad Company owned and operated a railroad extending from Colorado Springs to New Castle. From New Castle to Rifle Creek, it operated its trains over that portion of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad under a lease from that corporation. The trains of the respective roads were run by the employees of the respective companies under a time-card and rules for running trains prepared by the plaintiff in error. The record shows that the collision in question was caused by the negligence of the employees on the train of the Colorado Midland Railroad Company, and that the plaintiff in error and its employees were entirely free from any negligence in the matter. This action was brought in the superior court for Los Angeles county, state of California. Summons was issued and served upon W. J. Shotwell, who was the agent of the plaintiff in error at San Francisco, California, authorized to solicit and contract for passengers and freight to be carried from the state of California over other lines, and then over the railroad of the plaintiff in error in the state of Colorado, and the soliciting and contracting for passengers and freight to be carried from Eastern points through the state of Colorado to the state of California. The plaintiff in error does not own or operate any railroad in the state of California. The cause of action arose wholly within the state of Colorado. After the service of the summons the action was removed by the plaintiff in error from the state court to the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of California. A motion was then made to quash the summons and dismiss the action upon the ground that neither the circuit court nor the superior court of the state had, or have, any jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, or of the person of the corporation. The court denied this motion, and its ruling thereon is made the basis of an assignment of error.

1. Did the court err in refusing to quash the summons? In determining this question it becomes our duty to look prayerfully to the statute of California under which the service of the summons was made. The Code of Civil Procedure (§ 411), applicable to this case, provides that "the summons must be served by delivering a copy thereof, as follows: . . . (2) if the suit is against a foreign corporation, or a nonresident joint stock company or association, doing business and having a managing or business agent, cashier, or secretary within this state, to such agent, cashier, or secretary."

The plaintiff in error had an office in the city of San Francisco. Upon the windows of this office were signs which read, "Denver & Rio Grande R. R. Freight and Passenger Office." In a folder used and distributed by it for public information, giving the places of its offices and agents, is found the name of "W. J. Shotwell, Gen'l Agt. Pacific Coast, 314 California St., San Francisco." W. J. Shotwell, in his affidavit, says: "That he is the general agent for the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company, a defendant herein for the states of California and Nevada. . . . That it is true that in his office in San Francisco he and the clerks under him solicit passengers and freight to go over the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad. . . . This affiant endeavors to induce shippers of freight to send it from San Francisco, so that during its route east it will go over the Denver & Rio Grande road. . . . That he issues a shipping receipt or bill of lading for the goods to be shipped from San Francisco. . . . That his only employment is for the purpose of soliciting freight and passenger business, and in influencing shippers and passengers to ship their freight and to travel over the Denver & Rio Grande road in the state of Colorado."

It thus clearly appears that the plaintiff in error had a business office in the city of San Francisco, state of California, and a managing agent in charge of that office, for the purpose of soliciting business in transporting passengers and freight over its road, situated in the state of Colorado. Is not this sufficient to authorize a valid service of summons upon the authorized agent of the corporation? It will be noticed that, if there is no cashier or secretary upon whom service can be made, the Code does not specify the extent of the agency required in order to bind a nonresident corporation by service of summons, except that the person must be a "managing or business agent." It is obvious that this does not mean that it must be the general managing agent of the corporation. The object of the service is attained when the agent served is of sufficient rank and character as to make it reasonably certain that the corporation will be notified of the service, and the statute is complied with if he be a managing or business agent in any specified line of business transacted by the corporation in the state where the service is made. That Shotwell, upon whom the service was made, was such an agent, is manifest from the facts above stated.

In Tuchband v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 437, 440, 22 N. E. 361, the court said: "When the corporation has an office in this state, where a substantial portion of its business is transacted by a person designated by itself as a general agent, although followed by words indicating some one department, it may safely be assumed that the object of the statute will be accomplished. It, of course, intends a 'managing agent' in this state, and, where a corporation created by the laws of any other state does business in this state, the person who, as its agent, does that business, should be considered its managing agent; and more especially should that be so where the foreign corporation has an office or place of business in this state, and when that office is in charge of that person, and he there acts for the corporation. He is there doing business for it, and so manages its business. Such person is, in every sense of the words used in the statute, 'a managing agent.'"

In Merchants' Mfg. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 21 Blatchf. 109, 13 Fed. Rep. 358, the court said: "A corporation, although it cannot migrate beyond the limits of the sovereignty which has created it, may by comity exercise its franchises elsewhere. A foreign corporation can transact business here upon such conditions as may be imposed upon it by the laws of the state. It can be sued whenever the technical obstacles in the way of compelling its appearance do not exist. At common law, process must be served on its principal officer within the jurisdiction of the sovereignty where the corporate body exists. But it can waive this requirement, and consent to be served in a different manner, and when it does this it stands on the same footing with a natural person. When it avails itself of the privileges of doing business in a state whose laws authorize it to be sued there, by service of process upon an agent, its assent to that mode of service is implied. Accordingly it has been repeatedly held that a foreign corporation consents to be amendable to suit by such mode of service as the laws of the state provide, when it invokes the comity of the state for the transaction of its affairs. Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. ed. 451; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 81, 20 L. ed. 354; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 24 L. ed. 853. It waives the right to object to the mode of service of process which the state laws authorize." See also New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 596, 606, 37 L. ed. 292, 297, 300. 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444; Van Dresser v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 48

Fed. Rep. 202; Norton v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 61 Fed. Rep. 618; Palmer v. Chicago Herald Co. 70 Fed. Rep. 886; Foster v. Charles Betcher Lumber Co. 5 S. D. 57, 68, 23 L. R. A. 490, 58 N. W. 9; Palmer v. Pennsylvania Co. 35 Hun, 369; McNichol v. United States Mercantile Reporting Agency, 74 Mo. 457; Stone v. Traveler's Ins. Co. 78 Mo. 655, 658.

2. Did the courts in California have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this action? This question is dependent to a great extent upon the conclusions already reached as to the validity of the service of the summons. The Code of Civil Procedure of California, in treating of the place of trial of civil actions, specifies (1) certain civil actions that are to be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated; (2) of other actions, where the cause, or some part, arose in the county; (3) of the place of trial of actions against counties. Then comes § 395, as to the place of trial of other actions according to the residence of the parties. In this section we find that "if none of the defendants reside in the state . . . the same may be tried in any county which the plaintiff may designate in his complaint." It will be observed, by a careful reading of the statute, that actions of the nature and character of the one under consideration are not mentioned in the list of actions that must be tried where the subject of the action is situate, or where the cause of action arose. The contention of the plaintiff in error is that the statutes of California do not give jurisdiction, but simply provide in what county suits, over which the courts of California have jurisdiction, shall be brought, and how the service of summons may be made. Can this contention be sustained? There is no decision of the supreme court of California construing the various statutes we have cited with reference to the particular facts of this case. But in Thomas v. Placerville Gold Quartz Min. Co. 65 Cal. 600, 602, 4 Pac. 641, the court had under consideration a motion for a change of the place of trial. The defendant was an English corporation. It had never designated a person upon whom service of process could be had, but the summons was served upon its managing agent. One of the questions presented was whether a foreign corporation doing business in California had a residence in any particular county, such as contemplated by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the place of trial; and in the course of the opinion the court said: "A foreign corporation cannot do business here without subjecting itself to the jurisdiction of our courts, but it is not a necessary corollary that it is entitled to claim a 'residence' here. It cannot escape the consequences of an illegal act done by its agents, within the scope of the authority it has conferred upon them, by setting up an existence under a foreign government. People v. Central R. Co. 48 Barb. 478. It is liable to be sued here to the same extent as an individual or company incorporated under the laws of this state. Austin v. New York

& E. R. Co. 25 N. J. L. 383. It may be sued here, not because it resides here, but because it has chosen to do business here by its agents. Its home is in the country where alone it has its being. As it resides, if anywhere, out of the state, an action against it may be tried in any county designated by the plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. § 395.

The general drift and tendency of judicial decisions, state and national, is in the direction of placing corporations upon the same plane as natural persons, in regard to the jurisdiction of suits by or against them. The statutes of the different states and of the United States have, as a general rule, been liberally construed for the purpose of sustaining this view, although the decisions of the state courts upon the precise point under discussion are not entirely harmonious. We are of opinion that the decided weight of authority and of reason is in favor of the jurisdiction of the state court over the present action, under the provisions of the statutes of California above cited, and upon the facts disclosed by the record.

In New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 596, 606, 37 L. ed. 292, 297, 300, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444, the facts were in all essential respects similar to the case in hand. There two suits at law were brought against the railroad company which was incorporated under the laws of the state of New York, in the state court of Saline county, Missouri, to recover damages for injuries by the railroad company, through negligence, to live cattle. The cattle were being transported from Massachusetts to Missouri. The damage occurred from a collision which took place in Ohio. The summons was served in St. Louis, Missouri, on a city passenger agent of the railroad company in its business office there, who had charge of it at the time of the service. The company there, as here, appeared, and upon petition removed the actions to the circuit court of the United States, because of diverse citizenship, and thereafter in the circuit court moved to quash the writ of summons on the ground that it was void and conferred no jurisdiction over the railroad company. The circuit court overruled this motion. The supreme court, in considering the assignments of error based upon this ruling, following the decisions of the state court of Missouri, held that the state court acquired jurisdiction of the actions, under the provisions of subdiv. 4 of § 3489 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1879, and § 3481 of the same statutes. These sections are substantially the same as §§ 395 and 411 of the Code of California, heretofore cited. This is a transitory action, and could be tried in any state where jurisdiction could be obtained by proper service upon the corporation.

In Curtis v. Bradford, 33 Wis. 190, 192, in proceedings against a garnishee upon a judgment obtained against a railway company, where, as here, it was claimed that the court neither had jurisdiction of the defendant, nor of the subject-matter of the action, the court said: "It further appears that the principal suit was brought to recover for injuries done to the plaintiff's wife while attempting to get aboard the defendant's cars at a station in Michigan. It was doubtless an action sounding in tort, for an injury inflicted in another state, but still one transitory in its character, and triable by the courts of this state. This proposition is in accordance with reason, and is amply sustained by the authorities to which we are referred. . . . Those authorities establish the doctrine that courts of general jurisdiction entertain actions for personal injuries, even where the act complained of was committed in another state."

In New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Wallace, 50 Miss. 244, 248, the collision of the train of cars whereby Wallace, the plaintiff, was injured, occurred in the state of Louisiana. The suit was brought in the state court of Lawrence county, Mississippi. The supreme court said: "The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, and, as there is no objection to the service of process by which the plaintiffs in error are brought into court, . . . the court had jurisdiction of the plaintiffs in error; and, upon well-settled principles, the court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit and of the defendants can entertain the suit and try the cause. Corporations are artificial persons, existing only in contemplation of law. They must dwell in the place of their creation, and cannot migrate to another state. But they are liable to be sued like natural persons in transitory actions, arising ex contractu or ex delicto, in any state where legal service of process can be had. . . . In transitory actions, foreign private corporations, like natural persons, may be sued anywhere where the court can obtain jurisdiction of the corporation, either by legal service of process, or its appearance by attorney."

In addition to the authorities heretofore cited, see Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. 94 Wis. 70, 74, 80, 34 L. R. A. 503, 68 N. W. 664; Ackerson v. Erie R. Co. 31 N. J. L. 309; Steed v. Harvey, 18 Utah, 367, 54 Pac. 1011; Block v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 529.

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 83, 20 L. ed. 354, 358, the facts were that Harris, while traveling as a passenger on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, was injured in a collision in the state of Virginia. He brought an action for damages against the railroad company in the supreme court of the District of Columbia. It will be seen, by reading the opinion in that case, that the cause of action arose neither in the state of Maryland, where the railroad company was incorporated, nor in the District of Columbia, where the action was brought, but in the state of Virginia. The decision, in effect, declares that a corporation of one state, lawfully doing business in another state, and legally served with summons in the state where the suit is brought, is subject to the jurisdiction of the court in that state. This decision has been universally followed in the United States courts.

In Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 40 L. R. A.

U. S. 445, 448, 42 L. ed. 538, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106, the court said: "An action to recover damages for a tort is not local, but transitory, and can, as a general rule, be maintained wherever the wrongdoer can be found. Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439. It may well be that, where a purely statutory right is created, the special remedy provided by the statute for the enforcement of that right must be pursued; but, where the statute simply takes away a common-law obstacle to a recovery for an admitted tort, it would seem not unreasonable to hold that an action for that tort can be maintained in any state in which that common-law obstacle has been removed."

In Barrow S. S. Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S. 100, 112, 42 L. ed. 964, 908, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530, the court, among other things, said: "The present action was brought by a citizen and resident of the state of New Jersey, in a circuit court of the United States held within the state of New York, against a foreign corporation doing business in the latter state. It was for a personal tort committed abroad, such as would have been actionable if committed in the state of New York, or elsewhere in this country, and an action for which might be maintained in any circuit court of the United States which acquired jurisdiction of the defendant."

Numerous authorities might be cited to the same effect, but the above is deemed sufficient. The court did not err in refusing the motion of the plaintiff in error.

3. This brings us to the consideration of the questions raised at the trial of the case.

Did the court err in instructing the jury as follows:

"There is no controversy but that the pleadings and proofs show that a collision between the train of the defendant and that of the receiver of the Colorado Midland Railway Company occurred at the time, place, and in the manner alleged in the complaint, and that said collision resulted from the negligence of the employees of the receiver of the latter company, and that plaintiffs at the time of said collision were passengers on the said train of the defendant. The pleadings and proofs further show, beyond controversy, that the defendant owned the railroad track at the place of collision, and that at the time of the collision the receiver of the Colorado Midland Railway Company, under a lease from the defendant, was using said track jointly with the defendant. Upon the foregoing facts, as admitted and proved, concerning the ownership, lease, and use of said track, the court instructs you that the negligence of the employees of the receiver of the Colorado Midland Railway Company is imputable to the defendant, and that the defendant is accordingly responsible in law for said collision."

This instruction properly stated the law upon this subject. The plaintiff in error owed the defendants in error the duty of safe carriage. It had a direct responsibility to them. That responsibility and liability upon its part for damages, if any injuries occurred to them, it cannot avoid upon the ground that another company, to whom it had leased its road, was guilty of the negligence which caused the collision that resulted in the injuries complained of. This direct question was presented in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 90, 104, 18 L. ed. 591, 594. The court, in considering it, said: "It will be observed the defendants owned the road upon which they were running the car in which the deceased was a passenger at the time of the collision, and that the train in fault was running on the same road with their permission. The question is not whether the Michigan company is responsible, but whether the defendants, by giving to that company the privilege of using the road, have thereby, in the given case, relieved themselves from responsibility? The question has been settled, and we think rightly, in the courts of Illinois, holding the owner of the road liable. Chicago, St. P. & F. du L. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 20 Ill. 385, 71 Am. Dec. 285; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunbar, 20 Ill. 624, 71 Am. Dec. 291; Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. 105. The same principle has been affirmed in other states. Nelson v. Vermont & C. R. Co. 26 Vt. 717, 62 Am. Dec. 614; McElroy v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 4 Cush. 400, 50 Am. Dec. 794."

In Central Trust Co. v. Colorado Midland R. Co. 89 Fed. Rep. 560, 564, the question presented to the court arose upon exceptions to the report of the master fixing the liability for losses growing out of a collision between the trains of the respective railroad companies. The accident which was the foundation of the litigation took place, as here, between New Castle and Rifle Creek, in Colorado, under conditions precisely the same as are presented in this case. The court in the course of its opinion stated that the Denver Company, as a carrier of passengers, would be rightfully and primarily held responsible to the passengers on its train, for the injuries received in the collision. See also Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Meech, 163 Ill. 305, 308, 45 N. E. 290; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Phinazee, 93 Ga. 488, 21 S. E. 66; Ogdensburg Bank v. Parsons, 57 U. S. App. 136, 86 Fed. Rep. 398, 30 C. C. A. 133; Patterson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 54 Mich. 91, 98, 19 N. W. 761; Kinney v. North Carolina R. Co. 122 N. C. 961, 30 S. E. 313; Benton v. North Carolina R. Co. 122 N. C. 1007, 30 S. E. 333; Pierce v. North Carolina R. Co. 124 N. C. 83, 44 L. R. A. 316, 32 S. E. 399, 402; Central Trust Co. v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 97 Fed. Rep. 237, 242, 38 C. C. A. 143.

4. It is next claimed that the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "The only questions, therefore, which will require investigation at your hands, are: Was the plaintiff Katherine A. Roller injured by said collision? And, if she was so injured, what amount of damages will compensate for the injuries received? If the evidence fails to satisfy you that said plaintiff Katherine A. Roller was injured by said collision your verdicts will be for the defendant. If, however, you find that said plaintiff Katherine A. Roller was injured by said collision, then 49 L. R. A.

your verdict will be for the plaintiffs, and pursuant to the instructions hereinafter given, you will award such an amount of damages as will be a fair compensation for all the injuries so sustained by the said Katherine A. Roller. You are further instructed that, if great fright was a reasonable and natural consequence of the circumstances in which the collision aforesaid, with the ensuing wreckage, explosion, and conflagration, placed said plaintiff Katherine A. Roller, and that she was actually put in fright by those circumstances, and that injury to her health was a reasonable and natural consequence of such great fright, and was actually and proximately occasioned thereby, said injury is one for which damages are recoverable."

And, in connection with this part of the charge of the court, it is claimed that the court erred in refusing to give the following, among other, instructions asked for by the plaintiff in error: "No damages can be given for fright or mental suffering resulting from mere risk or peril, where no actual injury has been sustained; nor for the results of mental or nervous disturbances, where no bodily harm is sustained."

The charge of the court must be construed with reference to the facts elicited at the trial. It will therefore be necessary, in relation to these, as well as other points to be hereafter discussed, to refer generally to such facts.

The passenger train of the plaintiff in error was composed of an engine, mail car, baggage car, smoking car, day coach, tourist sleeper, Pullman sleeper, and a special car. The defendants in error occupied a lower berth in the Pullman sleeper. They had retired. Mrs. Roller was clad in her nightdress when the collision occurred, near New Castle, but was not asleep. The collision occurred just before midnight, and the results were serious. The engines of the respective trains were thrown upon each other with great force. The front cars were telescoped. Immediately following the collision there was an explosion, caused by the gas with which the passenger trains were lighted. The portion of the train in front of the Pullman sleeper caught fire and was destroyed in the ensuing conflagration. The testimony of Mrs. Roller, detailing the facts, as they appeared to her at the time, and her previous and subsequent condition of health, is as follows: "I was twenty-seven years old last October. . . . I was married to Dr. Roller . . . the 9th of October, 1895. . . . Prior to the time of my marriage, . . . I cannot recall any sickness, except about eight years ago I had the croup. I had no nervous trouble, and my mother had no nervous trouble nor any member of the family. . . . My mother was not of a nervous disposition. . . . When I left Palmer, the 1st of September, 1897, I weighed 135 pounds. I was in perfect health. . . . I was not fatigued with the journey at all. Felt no effects from the altitude. . . . I retired right away after we left Glenwood Springs. I had my night-dress and my stockings on. Dr. Roller occupied the same berth with me. We had not gone very far. I had not gotten asleep yet, when I was awakened with a terrible bump, and I was brought upright in my berth. My head was knocked onto my chest. Then my head fell back onto the board, and there was not anything there. The pillow that was there seemed to be down lower, on my back.

. . . I could see from the window a great light, and fire. When we went to bed the curtains were down almost all the way. When we were awakened they were up quite a bit. I heard what sounded like what we hear on the Fourth of July,—a cannon explosion. It was very distinct. I heard a noise right outside of my berth. Somebody said, "If we can get them out, all right; but I have my doubts about it." Then the noise went from my berth further up the car, and said, 'Get out, everybody, before you burn up.' I got up and ran for the door. I did not dress. I took out a serge skirt. I did not put it on.

. . . I went out the furthest door from the engine. When I got to the door the Pullman conductor passed me, and jumped out before me. I jumped out after him.

. . . The conductor got out on the same side, and did not help me off. I jumped off down to the ditch, quite a little distance. The next thing that happened, the doctor was trying to help me up on the embankment; and when I got up on the embankment I saw a man with his flesh all falling off, and I saw another man lying on the ground. I saw some people bringing back some more. It was light, and up in front the engines and cars were burning. . . .

There was another car behind ours, and I went back quite a distance further than that car. There I met General and Mrs. Weidner. It was not longer than five or ten minutes after I got up on the bank. My husband stayed with me all the time. While I was moving back (Dr. Roller went back to the car to get my clothes, and he helped to dress me. . . . Before I left the car, when my head was knocked up onto my chest, I had a severe pain in my back and the back of my head. After I got out of the car, and up on the embankment, I had great pain in my back, of the weight of my head. I have suffered a great deal of pain in the back of my head and neck and in my right side. I first felt it in my right side the morning after the accident. I was up there on the embankment for three quarters of an hour. I remained there until the conductor told me to get into the car. . . . We remained in the car until we got back to New Castle.

. . . During that day in New Castle there was a terrible itching sensation all over my body. It continued until some time in October, after the accident. It was the hives. I never had anything like it before. I never had any sensation of pain prior to the accident. These sensations of pain have not ceased. They have grown very much worse. . . . Since the accident I have had a great many spells of exhaustion. . . . Before I took this journey I never knew but that my memory was all right.

40 L. R. A.

Now, if I should read anything this afternoon, I could not remember very well to-night."

Upon all material facts testified to by her she was corroborated by the testimony of other witnesses. There were several passengers in the Pullman car, at the time of the collision, who testified at the trial that they did not hear any remarks made by the conductor about any difficulty of getting the passengers out, or any statement by anybody to hurry and get out before they burned up, or anything to that effect. Some of them stated that the conductor, in answer to inquiry as to what was the trouble, said: "I am going forward to find out," and that he soon returned and stated in a loud tone of voice that: "Passengers will get out and dress. There is a wreck ahead, and the cars are on fire, but you will have plenty of time to get out." It is apparent from the entire testimony that the injury to Mrs. Roller was real, not feigned. It will be observed that she did not testify that her injuries came from any fright. The injuries which she testified to were received from the effect of the collision while in her berth. Her testimony in this respect is uncontradicted. The character of the injuries she received was such as might not fully disclose the extent of them at once. She testified, however, she felt the pain in her head and neck. The next day she realized she had a pain in her right side. The truth is, as shown by the record, that she thereafter gradually declined in health, became nervous and subject to spells of exhaustion, and suffered great pain. In fact, it was admitted upon the oral argument that she had become a physical wreck, as compared with her general state of health previous to the injury. The sole contention of the plaintiff in error is that the instructions were erroneous, because the case was tried upon the theory that the injuries were the result of fright alone, and that there was no actual bodily injury, and that upon this point there was at least a conflict in the evidence. The record furnishes no facts to support this contention. It would have been error for the court, under the facts of this case, to have instructed the jury as requested by the plaintiff in error. The charge of the court, as given of its own motion, may be subject to criticism, but it is not erroneous. It will be noticed that the court, in its charge, said to the jury, "If the evidence fails to satisfy you that said plaintiff Katherine A. Roller was injured by said collision, your verdict will be for the defendant." Was not this explicit and clear? If there was no injury, that was the end of the case. In the briefs of counsel there is a lengthy discussion of the question whether fright or mental distress alone constitutes such an injury that the law will allow a recovery for it. This question is not involved in this case, and, for the purpose of this opinion, it may be conceded that any effect of a wrongful or negligent act which affects the mind alone without injury to the body, will not furnish a ground of action. Whatever the rule in such cases may be, en passant, we apprehend that it will depend upon the particular facts in each case. There is no conflict in the authorities upon the question that when, by the negligence of the defendant's acts, the plaintiff receives a bodily injury, he is entitled to recover damages, not only for such injury, but for all the injurious results which are a reasonable and natural consequence thereof, and were actually and proximately occasioned thereby. We all know, by common knowledge, that serious results may naturally follow from bodily injuries, without breaking an arm, or leg, or bones of the body. The body and mind are so intimately connected that the mind is very often directly and necessarily affected by physical injuries. A nervous shock, without a blow to the person, might, under some circumstances, be so great as to cause bodily injury. In estimating the amount of damages which the defendants in error were entitled to recover, the jury had the right to take into consideration all the testimony as to the surrounding facts and circumstances at the time of, and incident to, the collision, including the position and situation in which Mrs. Roller was placed thereby, in order to arrive at the truth as to the extent of the bodily injuries she received, and the character and extent of the fright or shock, if any, to her system, resulting from and directly attributable to the collision and injury. In a case like the present, the proximate damages which the person injured is entitled to recover are the ordinary and natural results of the collision and injury, and are such as might reasonably be expected would follow therefrom. This general principle, wherever discussed, is expressly recognized by all the authorities, which hold that damages cannot be recovered for mere fright alone, without any bodily injury. If there was any fright or shock which resulted from her bodily injury in connection with the collision, the accompanying explosion, fire and wreckage of the cars, and the surrounding circumstances directly connected therewith and solely attributable thereto, there is no substantial reason why she should not be allowed to recover all damages naturally and reasonably and approximately arising therefrom. The instruction under consideration was substantially taken from the opinion in Bell v. Great Northern R. Co. 1r. L. R. 26 C. L. 428, cited, reviewed, and held correct in Sedgw. Damages 640. In Consolidated Traction Co. v. Lambertson, 59 N. J. L. 297, 36 Atl. 100, it was expressly held that, where there is actual physical injury, damages resulting from the incidental fright may be recovered.

In Warren v. Boston & M. R. Co. 163 Mass. 484, 487, 40 N. E. 895, the plaintiff, while attempting to drive a buggy over the track at a railroad crossing, was, by the carelessness and negligence of the gate keeper, shut in between the gates; and a passing train hit the buggy, and he was thrown out upon the ground. The trial court instructed the jury: "If you should find that there was a tortious act on the part of the defendant, then you may take it into account, as part of the damage, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, if at all, for fright and mental suffering which he underwent, if he underwent any at all. It may be used to enhance damages,—fright caused by nervous shock." Replying to the criticism of the term "tortious act," the court said: "We think that the meaning of this phrase, in the connection in which it is used, is that if the defendant's train struck the carriage of the plaintiff, and he was thereby thrown out upon the ground, this would be a tortious act, if occasioned by the defendant's negligence, and that, if this act resulted in injury to the plaintiff, the defendant would be liable, if the plaintiff was in the exercise of due care, and that in estimating the damages the jury might take into account, not only the physical injury, but also the fright and nervous shock. This ruling, we think, was either correct, or sufficiently favorable to the defendant. It is a physical injury to the person to be thrown out of a wagon, or to be compelled to jump out, even although the harm done consists mainly of nervous shock."

In Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U.S. 469, 474, 24 L. ed. 256, 258, the court said: "The true rule is that what is the proximate cause of an injury is ordinarily a question for the jury. It is not a question of science or of legal knowledge. It is to be determined as a fact, in view of the circumstances of fact attending it. The primary cause may be the proximate cause of a disaster, though it may operate through successive instruments, as an article at the end of a chain may be moved by a force applied to the other end, that force being the proximate cause of the movement, or as in the oft-cited case of the squib thrown in the market place. Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892. The question always is, Was there an unbroken connection between the wrongful act and the injury,—a continuous operation? Did the facts constitute a continuous succession of events, so linked together as to make a natural whole, or was there some new and independent cause intervening between the wrong and the injury? It is admitted that the rule is difficult of application. But it is generally held that in order to warrant a finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances. . . . When there is no intermediate efficient cause, the original wrong must be considered as reaching to the effect, and proximate to it."

The following additional authorities sustain the views we have expressed, and support the conclusion above announced,—that the court did not err in its charge to the jury. Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111 Cal. 668, 680, 32 L. R. A. 193, 44 Pac. 320; Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 134, 137, 16 L. R. A. 203, 50 N. W.

1034; Lehigh & H. R. R. Co. v. Marchant, 55 U. S. App. 427, 84 Fed. Rep. 870, 872, 28 C. C. A. 544; Coy v. Indianapolis Gas Co. 146 Ind. 655, 36 L. R. A. 535, 46 N. E. 17, 20; Mack v. South Bound R. Co. 52 S. C. 323, 324, 40 L. R. A. 679 et seq.; 29 S. E. 905; Hamilton v. Great Falls Street R. Co. 17 Mont. 334, 347, 42 Pac. 800, 43 Pac. 713.

5. There are several other assignments of error that bear such a close relation to the last point as not to require any extended discussion, owing to the conclusions already reached:

(1) It is claimed that the court erred in the next portion of its charge, where, after informing the jury that exemplary or punitive damages could not be allowed, and that the damages, if any, which could be recovered, are compensatory damages,—such damages as would naturally flow directly from the injury, if any, occasioned to Mrs. Roller by said collision,—it added: "These compensatory damages embrace all damages for bodily and mental pain and suffering which have resulted to said Katherine A. Roller from said injuries, and if said injuries are permanent, or she has not recovered from them, such damages, also, as you may find from the evidence it is fair to believe she will suffer from said injury in the future."

This part of the charge was unquestionably correct. It is, of course, to be considered with reference to the facts, and to the previous portions of the charge. In District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 459, 34 L. ed. 472, 475, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 993, the court, in discussing this question, said: "The authorities all agree that in cases of this character much latitude must be given to juries in estimating the damages sustained by the person injured. Physical suffering resulting from such injuries is necessarily attended by mental suffering in a greater or less degree. And as said in Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 26, 27, 33 L. ed. 110, 112, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697: 'The action is for an injury to the person of an intelligent being; and when the injury, whether caused by wilfulness or negligence, produces mental as well as bodily anguish and suffering, it is impossible to exclude the mental suffering in estimating the extent of the personal injury for which compensation is to be awarded.' Illinois O. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 90, 105, 18 L. ed. 591, 595; Pennsylvania & O. Canal Co. v. Graham, 63 Pa. 290, 3 Am. Rep. 549; Smith v. Holcomb, 99 Mass. 552; Holyoke v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 N. H. 541; Stockton v. Frey, 4 Gill, 406, 45 Am. Dec. 138; Smith v. Overby, 30 Ga. 241; Cox v. Vanderkleed, 21 Ind. 164; Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577."

In Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 573, 584, sub nom. Washington & G. R. Co. v. Tobriner, 37 L. ed. 284, 286, 289, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 558, the court held that the following instruction was correct: "If the jury find for the plaintiff, they will find for him such an amount of damages as will fully compensate him for the suffering of mind and body inflicted upon 49 L. R. A.

him by his injury; for the personal inconvenience, the loss of time, and the expenses of cure that naturally and proximately resulted from the injury he suffered; and, if they find that the injuries sustained by the plaintiff are permanent, they will also find for him such damages as will fully compensate him for the suffering of mind and body, the personal inconvenience, and the loss of time that he will suffer in the future. In determining this as to the future, they will consider plaintiff's bodily vigor and age, as shown by the evidence adduced." See also Koetter v. Manhattan Elev. R. Co. 36 N. Y. S. R. 611, 13 N. Y. Supp. 459; Kenyon v. Mondovi, 98 Wis. 50, 54, 73 N. W. 314; Wilson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 132 Pa. 27, 33, 18 Atl. 1087; Saldana v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 862, 867; Stutz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Wis. 147, 151, 40 N. W. 653; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Martin, 111 Ill. 220, 227; Chicago City R. Co. v. Taylor, 170 Ill. 49, 57, 48 N. E. 831; Cameron v. Union Trunk Line, 10 Wash. 507, 512, 39 Pac. 128; Hamilton v. Great Falls Street R. Co. 17 Mont. 352, 42 Pac. 860, and 43 Pac. 713.

(2) It is argued that the court erred in allowing Dr. Brill to state his opinion as to the cause of Mrs. Roller's condition, and to answer the hypothetical question propounded to him. The latter objection was also made to the testimony of other physicians. No witnesses were introduced by the plaintiff in error to disprove the testimony and opinions of these physicians as to the extent or cause of her injuries, nor were any amendments to the hypothetical question proposed; but the objections were made to the opinions given, and exceptions taken to their admission. Dr. Brill testified that he first met Mrs. Roller September 28, 1897; that since that time he had been her family physician; that she complained at that time of pain in the back of the head and neck, in the right side and along the spine, and of the itching from the hives; that she was somewhat nervous in her appearance and bearing; that there was not at that time any external violence that he could discover at the back of the head or neck, but there was some tenderness along the spine and along the back of the neck; that he prescribed for her in the usual manner; that he saw her every few days; that about the 1st of January, 1898, she began to lose flesh and lost strength and became somewhat pale and anæmic, more nervous, and more timid and apprehensive; that her whole bearing was changed, her pulse became accelerated, ranging from 90 to 110 or 120, and that there was a slight elevation of temperature; that in the early part of the year 1898 these symptoms persisted, and became more and more noticeable; that by the last of May she had become quite emaciated, had lost a great deal of flesh, her memory was tardy and defective, and her mental action slow; that there were muscular cramps and twitching in the limbs and face; that she complained of being weak, of loss of strength, and being nervous, and of pain in the back of the head and neck, and over the right side of the body, and in the spine. He continued detailing her condition up to the time of the trial; showing, among other things, that her sense of pain had become greatly diminished over her entire body, and that at some points it seemed almost obliterated. At the close of his testimony the following questions were propounded to him, and answers given thereto:

Q. From your examination that you have made of her, and assuming that her condition is as you have testified upon the stand, as observed by you,—from the examination that you have made,—are you, as a physician and surgeon, and from your experience as such, able to form an opinion as to what is the cause of her present condition?

A. Yes; I am.

Q. What is that cause?

A. Her condition is the result of injury and shock of some sort.

(3) Thereafter a hypothetical question was propounded to Dr. Brill, substantially detailing at great length the condition of Mrs. Roller, as to her health previous to the collision and afterwards, as testified to by him and other witnesses, and of the fact of the collision and of all the circumstances connected therewith, substantially as testified to by Mrs. Roller, and other witnesses at the trial, and closing with the statement:

Assuming these facts to be as I have stated them, and the woman as I have described her, from your experience as a physician and surgeon are you able to form an opinion as to the cause of her present condition?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that opinion? . . . What would you say, then, was the cause of her present condition, assuming the facts as I have stated them?

A. The injury and shock due to the accident described.

The court did not err in permitting Dr. Brill to give his opinion as to the cause of Mrs. Roller's condition. The rule is well settled that a medical expert may form and express an opinion of the nature and cause of the bodily or mental condition of his patient,—her illness, symptoms, pains, and suffering,—derived from his own knowledge, from his attendance, treatment, and examinations, although based in part upon her statements and complaints made at different times as to her pains and sufferings, and, in this connection, to give his opinion whether her injuries are liable to be permanent, and whether her present condition is due to or caused by sickness, injury, accident, or violence. McClain v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 116 N. Y. 460, 468, 22 N. E. 1062; Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 545, 553, 570, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197; Turner v. Newburg, 109 N. Y. 301, 308, 16 N. E. 344; Johnson v. Northern P. R. Co. 47 Minn. 430, 432, 50 N. W. 473; Courvoisier v. Raymond, 23 Colo. 113, 117, 47 Pac. 49 L. R. A.

284; Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 204, 54 Am. Rep. 312, 3 N. E. 830; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Spilker, 134 Ind. 381, 391, 411, 33 N. E. 280, 34 N. E. 218; McKeon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 94 Wis. 477, 483, 35 L. R. A. 252, 69 N. W. 175; Bowen v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 89 Hun, 594, 597, 35 N. Y. Supp. 540; Perkins v. Concord R. Co. 44 N. H. 223, 225; Jackson v. Burnham, 20 Colo. 532, 39 Pac. 577, 578; Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 397, 404, 19 L. ed. 437, 440; Northern P. R. Co. v. Urlin, 158 U. S. 271, 275, 39 L. ed. 977, 981, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840.

In Turner v. Newburg, 109 N. Y. 301, 308, 16 N. E. 344, the court said: "The questions addressed to the physicians, calling for their opinions as to whether the physical condition in which they found the plaintiff to be, upon their examination of her, could have resulted from a fall, were not objectionable, and infringed upon no rules of evidence. We see no objection to the expression of opinions by competent medical experts upon an ascertained physical condition of suffering or bad health, as to whether that condition might have been caused by, or be the result of, a previous injury."

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Urlin, 158 U. S. 271, 275, 39 L. ed. 977, 981, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840, the court said: "As one of the principal questions in the case was whether the injuries of the defendant were of a permanent or of a temporary character, it was certainly competent to prove that during the two years which had elapsed between the happening of the accident and the trial there were several medical examinations into the condition of the plaintiff. Everyone knows that when injuries are internal, and not obvious to visual inspection, the surgeon has to largely depend on the responses and exclamations of the patient when subjected to examination. 'Whenever the bodily or mental feelings of an individual are material to be proved, the usual expressions of such feelings, made at the time in question, are also original evidence. If they were the natural language of the affection, whether of body or mind, they furnish satisfactory evidence, and often the only proof of its existence, and whether they were real or feigned is for the jury to determine. So, also, the representations by a sick person of the nature, symptoms, and effects of the malady under which he is suffering at the time are original evidence. If made to a medical attendant, they are of greater weight as evidence; but, if made to any other person, they are not, on that account, rejected.' 1 Greenl. Ev. 14th ed. § 102."

(4) The objections urged to the hypothetical question propounded to Dr. Brill and to other physicians are wholly untenable. The principal contention is that in detailing the circumstances in regard to the collision, and of Mrs. Roller's subsequent condition, some of the facts were misstated, and others exaggerated and assumed, without any warrant in the evidence. Let us see upon what foundation this claim is made:

(a) The question, in stating the facts at the time of the collision, assumes that Mrs. Roller "was asleep," whereas her testimony was that she "had not gotten asleep yet," when she was awakened with a terrible bump, etc. What influence could such a trifling discrepancy possibly have in controlling the answers of the physicians or the judgment of the jurors? None whatever. What difference did it make whether she was at the time dozing, sound asleep, or fully awake?

(b) The next alleged misstatement and exaggeration is that there "was a series of shocks . . . accompanied by explosions and loud detonations," whereas Mrs. Roller only testified that there was one explosion and detonation. Her words were that she "heard what sounded like what we hear on the Fourth of July,—a cannon explosion." But in framing the question the counsel is not to be confined to the testimony of Mrs. Roller, nor to the use of the exact and precise words of any witness. Its substance and true meaning need only be given.

Dr. Roller, in testifying upon the point under review, said: "We had a head to head collision. We were thrown forward in our berths. We had one concussion, and immediately after that we had another."

Peter Weidner testified: "We had a collision. I could not just tell what it was at the time it happened, but I found we had stopped very suddenly, and then drew back and had another concussion, and shook us up pretty well. Immediately after the collision there was a heavy explosion."

William C. St. Pierre, a passenger, called on behalf of the plaintiff, who was only affected slightly by the stopping of the train, testified: "I noticed a sudden jar in the car, and then another one. I suppose the first jar was the application of air brakes. The next jar came immediately afterwards. A short while after that there was an explosion. I cannot tell how much time elapsed between the last jar and the explosion. It was some little time."

If the identical language used by these witnesses had been inserted in the question, it would have conveyed to the physicians and jury, in substance, the same meaning as the language inserted in the question. There was more than one concussion, more than one detonation. It is manifest that the change in the language used could not have had any greater influence with the physicians and jury than if the actual words used by the witnesses had been given.

(c) The other portions claimed to be objectionable are that: "By the said collision she was thrown violently in the said berth, and against the head end of said berth, and the back of her head and back of her neck being impressed against the head end of said berth, and, in fear of her personal safety, was compelled, in her nightdress, . . . to alight from said train in the night-time, and . . . to descend into a deep trench . . . and ascend a steep embankment, and there to be exposed until her clothes would be brought to her, and 49 J. R. A.

there was exposed to her eight persons injured in said collision."

Counsel argue that the use of the words "violently" and "compelled" was absolutely erroneous and prejudicial, and wholly unwarranted by any evidence. In lieu of the word "violently," Mrs. Roller used the word "terrible," which, in its ordinary signification, means "frightful; adapted to excite terror; dreadful." It will be noticed that the word "compelled," as used, did not, and was not intended to, convey the idea that she was compelled by any command of the plaintiff in error or its agents to leave the train, but that she was compelled in fear of her personal safety. This is virtually what she testified to.

We have examined these questions for the purpose of showing that there was no substantial ground upon which to base any valid objection to the hypothetical question. The objections noticed are the most formidable made by counsel, and the others, being equally without merit, need not be noticed. In all that we have said, it must be distinctly understood that we do not deny the general proposition urged by counsel, but here expressly affirm the same,—that it would be reversible error to admit the answer of expert witnesses to hypothetical questions which assume the existence of facts upon which no evidence is offered. But when the question assumes the existence of any state of facts which the evidence directly, fairly, and reasonably tends to establish or justify, and does not transcend the range of evidence, it is proper to permit such questions to be answered, and it is not necessary that the questions shall embrace or cover all the facts in the case. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 545, 554, 570, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197; Stearns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 640; Powers v. Kansas City, 56 Mo. App. 573, 577; Meeker v. Meeker, 74 Iowa, 352, 357, 37 N. W. 773; Beuer v. Spangler, 93 Iowa, 576, 602, 61 N. W. 1072; Manatt v. Scott, 106 Iowa, 203, 76 N. W. 717, 720; Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. 112 Mo. 45, 48, 18 L. R. A. 823, 20 S. W. 472; Fullerton v. Fordyce, 144 Mo. 519, 44 S. W. 1053, 1058; Rogers, Expert Testimony, 2d ed. § 27; 8 Enc. Pl. & Fr. 757, 758, and authorities there cited.

6. It is with much vigor and earnestness argued that the court erred in permitting witnesses to testify to what they saw and heard while upon the embankment after Mrs. Roller had left the car, and in failing to instruct the jury that there could be no recovery for any injuries resulting from what she there saw. The substance of this testimony was that Mrs. Roller and other passengers, when they got upon the embankment, saw the front end of the train burning; that the cars were telescoped and were burning fiercely; that they heard people hollering and cattle bellowing; that they heard the cracking of the fire; that wounded persons were brought near them, moaning and complaining, and women crying; that they remained upon the embankment about thirty minutes. The objections are that all this testimony was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; that it did not tend to prove any of the issues raised by the pleadings; that it was not part of the res gestæ and too remote. It is contended, among other things, that, inasmuch as Mrs. Roller did not testify to having been frightened or injured by anything she there saw or heard, it was error to allow any testimony as to what there occurred. The truth is that there was no direct evidence that she was frightened at the time of the collision, either while in her berth in the sleeper, at the sight of the conflagration or the sound of the explosion, or at what she saw and heard after she left the car. Whether she received any fright or shock to her system was a matter of inference to be drawn by the jury from all the established facts, as well as from the opinion of the medical experts. The jury were not bound to accept such opinion unless they believed it was supported by the facts. The shock, if any, to her system, may have, for aught that appears from the testimony been solely from the effects of the terrible bump she received while in her berth, or from some other cause, or by all combined. The reasons given, why the testimony as to what occurred on the embankment should have been excluded, would apply with equal force against any testimony as to the explosion, conflagration, or general wreckage; and, there being no positive testimony that she was frightened by the injuries she actually received while in her berth, it would appear that evidence as to that injury, to show a fright to her, would likewise, under the views contended for by counsel, be objectionable. But the reasoning of counsel is unsound. To enable the jury to determine the reasonableness of the question whether Mrs. Roller was frightened or received a shock from the collision, all the facts and circumstances connected therewith were admissible, because, in the very nature of the case, they were not divisible. Mrs. Roller was not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to close her ears and shut her eyes as to everything that transpired, resulting from the collision. She had the right to observe what was going on, to use her faculties of sight and hearing, and to exercise the ordinary speed of locomotion in seeking a place of safety, and in so doing to act at the time upon the facts as they appeared to her, regardless of the question as to whether her injuries would have been as great had she remained in the car, and taken time to fully dress before she departed therefrom. Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 134, 138, 16 L. R. A. 203, 50 N. W. 1034; Townley v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. 69 N. Y. 158, 160, 25 Am. Rep. 162; Kleiber v. People's R. Co. 107 Mo. 240, 247, 14 L. R. A. 613, 17 S. W. 946; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Murray, 55 Ark. 248, 258, 16 L. R. A. 787, 18 S. W. 50; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet. 181, 191, 10 L. ed. 115, 121. It will be observed from the record that the testimony of the witnesses as to what they saw and heard while upon the embankment did not relate to any declarations of any officer or agent of the plaintiff in error as to how the accident occurred, upon which it was sought to hold the railroad company liable, nor to a narration of past events, upon which points counsel have industriously cited a vast number of authorities, but related almost exclusively to the facts which actually transpired at the time; the same being a part of, and directly connected with, the collision and wreck. How could the jury arrive at the truth without taking the facts into consideration, with all the surrounding circumstances of the collision incident thereto and connected therewith? The defendants in error had the right, although the seriousness of the collision was not denied, to have the actual condition of affairs photographed by the sworn testimony of all the witnesses; and here we may appropriately digress, and, answering another assignment of error, add that it was not error, in addition thereto, to have the wreck, with all its surroundings, photographed by an artist, and, upon proof of their correctness, submit them to the jury. These photographs (three in number) fully illustrate the facts as testified to by the witnesses. Everything except the explosion and loud detonations is presented and truthfully delineated. The admission of such photographs is always allowed, when proven to be correct, for the purpose of enabling the witnesses to explain their testimony as to the facts, or to assist the jury in arriving at a better understanding of the testimony of the witnesses. 1 Wharton, Ev. § 676; 1 Wharton, Crim. Ev. § 544; People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 212, 48 Pac. 75; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 539, and authorities there cited. Returning from this digression, we are of opinion that the area of events covered by the term "res gestæ" depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. No general definition applicable to all cases could be fully and fairly given within the limits of an ordinary opinion. The centralized thought is that the term presupposes a main fact or a principal transaction, and the "res gestæ" means the circumstances and facts which grow out of the main fact, are contemporaneous with it, and serve to illustrate its character. Applying the term to the present case, with reference to the main collision as the principal fact, it necessarily follows that the immediate and surrounding circumstances interblended with and directly resulting therefrom are to be considered as a part of the accident and injury, and inseparably connected with it. 1 Wharton, Ev. § 259; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 108; Carter v. Buchannon, 3 Ga. 513, 517; Hallahan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 194, 199, 6 N. E. 287; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Kennelly, 170 Ill. 508, 510, 48 N. E. 996; Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 397, 408, 19 L. ed. 437, 441.

In West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Kennelly, 170 Ill. 508, 510, 48 N. E. 996, the court said: "The question before the jury was how or in what manner the plaintiff was injured, but we think it was competent, as a part of the res gestæ, to show all that occurred, although in doing so it might appear that others were also injured. The injuries to others were a part and parcel of the same injury received by the plaintiff, and in describing the manner in which she was injured, the injuries received by the others being so closely connected, it would be almost impossible in an intelligent manner to give an account of one injury without at the same time disclosing the others."

In Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Spilker, 134 Ind. 380, 393, 411, 33 N. E. 280, 34 N. E. 218, the appellee received injuries in a collision which occurred at a railroad crossing between the train of appellant and a wagon in which Mrs. Spilker, her husband, David Casey, and others were seated. Certain evidence was objected to because it assumed that Casey was killed by the same collision, and it was argued in support of this objection that this allusion to Casey's death was calculated to prejudice the jury in favor of the appellee. The undisputed fact was that Casey was killed at the time the wagon was demolished by the collision. Upon these facts the court said: "His death was the principal circumstance connected with the accident, and we do not see how it was possible, even if proper, to keep the knowledge of this circumstance from the jury. One might almost as well object to making any remark concerning the demolition of the wagon. David Casey's death is mentioned by several of the witnesses; it was inseparably connected with the accident, and a reference to him and his death could hardly be avoided. But it was not necessary to avoid it."

With reference to the objection that the details of the collision, as given by the witnesses, while upon the embankment, were not put in issue by the pleadings, but little need be added to what we have already said in discussing other questions. The complaint alleged that: "Katherine A. Roller was by said collision, while she was in said passenger coach as aforesaid, violently and forcibly thrown down and against the sides, berths, seats, and partitions of such coach, and was in the night-time, and at the place of said collision, forced to alight from said passenger coach, and was by means of the premises greatly bruised, wounded, and injured, and also, by means of the premises, she became and was sick, sore, lame, and disordered, and so remained and continued for a long space of time, to wit, from thence hitherto, during all of which time the said plaintiff suffered and underwent great bodily pain and mental anguish, and was for a long period confined to her bed and was hindered and wholly unable to attend to the performance and transaction of her necessary duties and affairs, during all that time to be performed and transacted; and also, by means of the premises, the said plaintiff has been and will be permanently injured."

Under these allegations it was certainly competent, as we have before stated, to show any injury to her health which was the natural, probable, and reasonable result of the collision, and of her bodily injury received therefrom. This being true, it must follow that if, alarmed by the peril in which she was placed by the collision, but acting as a person of ordinary prudence would under like circumstances, she jumped from the car into a deep trench, and, in order to reach a place of safety, climbed up a steep embankment, and there saw the horrors incident to such a collision, and the fright or shock to her system, added to the injuries to her body, impaired her health, and was directly traceable to the collision, as its primary, proximate, and responsible cause, the damages resulting therefrom would be general, not special, and therefore need not have been specifically set forth in the complaint, because, in the eye of the law, there would not be any new or independent cause between the collision and the injuries. The obvious, probable, or natural effects of the injuries which Mrs. Roller received might be given in evidence under the general allegations of the complaint. It is only those damages which are not the probable or necessary result of the injury that are required to be specially alleged. The defendants in error were not required to set forth in their complaint all the physical injuries and mental sufferings which Mrs. Roller sustained, or which might have resulted from or been aggravated by the negligent acts of the plaintiff in error; nor were they required to aver each and every specific act and thing which occurred at the time of the collision which might or did contribute to her injuries. If such injuries and such acts could reasonably be traced to the main act complained of, and are such as might and did naturally follow from the collision, and were incident thereto, they need not be specially averred. The claim made, that the plaintiff in error was not advised by any of the allegations in the complaint that any damages were or would be claimed for any injury, fright, or shock which occurred after she left the car, cannot be sustained. When the plaintiff in error was informed by the pleading generally as to the effects produced by the collision, it was bound to anticipate evidence as to the extent of her injuries, the origin or aggravation of which could be reasonably traced to the negligent act complained of. Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 265, 277, 48 Am. Rep. 622; Chicago v. McLean, 133 Ill. 149, 153, 8 L. R. A. 765, 24 N. E. 527; Montgomery v. Lansing City Electric R. Co. 103 Mich. 47, 57, 29 L. R. A. 287, 61 N. W. 543; Snyder v. Albion, 113 Mich. 275, 71 N. W. 475; Crook v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 18 Utah, 311, 44 L. R. A. 285, 54 Pac. 985; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Hecht, 115 Ind. 444, 17 N. E. 297; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 608, 30 L. ed. 1146, 1148, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1286; Wade v. Leroy, 20 How. 34, 44, 15 L. ed. 813, 815; 5 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 746, 748, and authorities there cited.

In Smith v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 30 Minn. 169, 171, 14 N. W. 797, where the injuries to the plaintiff were received from a derailment of the cars of the defendant company, the facts were in some respects similar to the facts in the present case. The complaint did not allege anything about any-fright, and did not specify any more of the details of the injury than is set forth in the complaint in this action. The court, with reference thereto, said: "In the circumstances mentioned, the damages resulting directly and proximately to the person and health of plaintiff . . . from her fright and from her coming to the ground, whether by jumping or by any of the means before indicated, would be general, not special. 'General damages are such as the law implies or presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of.' 1 Chitty, Pl. 16th Am. ed. 515. They are frequently spoken of as necessarily resulting from the wrong. 1 Chitty, Pl. 16th Am. ed. 439, 515, 516; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 254. This, however, does not mean (as defendant's counsel appears to argue) that general damages are such only as must, a priori, inevitably and always result from a given wrong. It is enough if, in the particular instance, they do in fact result from the wrong, directly and proximately, and without reference to the special character, condition, or circumstances of the person wronged. The law, then, as a matter of course, implies or presumes them as the effect which in the particular instance necessarily results from the wrong."

7. Finally, it is claimed that the court erred in refusing to give forty instructions asked by the plaintiff in error. In Citizens' Gaslight & Heating Co. v. O'Brien, 19 Ill. App. 231, 234, the court said: "To launch such a mass of legal conundrums upon a court, which can never enlighten the jury, but are generally drawn with the real, if not avowed, purpose of getting error into the record, and entangling the court in some technical contradiction that may be used in a higher court, is a perversion of the law of instructing jurors. A few plain statements of the law governing the case would suffice. If the court in the hurry of trial did not sift this unreasonable number of instructions as carefully as appellant desired, we do not feel called upon to interfere, unless some palpable error has occurred, clearly affecting the justice of the case."

Specific exceptions were taken to each instruction refused. Several of them, relating to the duties and obligations of railroad companies to their passengers, were evidently prepared upon the theory that, because the Midland Company was alone to blame, the plaintiff in error was not guilty of any negligence, and could not be held liable. These were inapplicable to the facts in this case, and were properly refused. Some were drawn upon the theory that the jury had no right to consider anything that occurred after Mrs. Roller left the car. These have been sufficiently disposed of by the views expressed with reference to the admission of the testimony. Others assert the broad principle that Mrs. Roller ought to have remained in the car, or at least should have avoided the sights upon the embankment, by returning to the car or going elsewhere, where the effects of the wreck would not have been observed. Such a narrow and limited view of the case cannot be sustained. The instructions asked, covering the measure of damages that could or could not be recovered, may, for the purpose of this opinion, be conceded to be correct and applicable to this case. The objections urged to their exclusion are based upon the criticism of counsel directed to the charge of the court,—that it was not full, did not contain the necessary limitations and qualifications, and of itself did not cover the different views that might properly be taken of the case. Our examination of the charge has failed to convince us of the soundness of these objections. In drafting or orally giving a charge to a jury, terseness, accuracy of statement, clearness of expression, and care in covering all essential particulars are commendable qualities. They furnish safe guides for all wise judges to follow. But absolute perfection is not required. It would indeed be difficult, if not impossible, to so frame a charge as to prevent criticism by the eagle eye of vigilant and learned counsel, or even of the appellate court, with the opportunity afforded it of mature and deliberate consideration. Substantial accuracy of the legal principles is all that the law requires. If the charge of the court in its entirety fairly covers the legal propositions necessary to give instructions upon, and is substantially correct, it is not erroneous for the court to refuse the instructions prepared by counsel, although they contain correct principles of law applicable to the case. This, in substance, has been so often declared, especially by the national courts, as to render it unnecessary to cite authorities in its support. We cannot, however, refrain from quoting with approval what is said upon this subject in 11 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 288: "Instructions on points which have been sufficiently covered by other instructions may properly be refused, although they are correctly drawn and applicable to the evidence. This is so whether the instruction requested is covered by the general charge, or by special instructions granted at the request of either party, or whether the mode of expression is the same or different. The duty of the court is fully discharged if the instructions embrace all the points of the law arising in the case, in the court's own language. Indeed, the practice of taking the instructions requested, and formulating a general charge to the jury, embracing all the matters of law arising upon the pleadings and the evidence, has been specially commended. In this way the law is sufficiently declared and clearly presented to the jury, without the unnecessary repetition and verbose language which so often mar special instructions, whereby jurors are confused and confounded, rather than instructed and directed. Of course, such action requires great labor, thought, and prudence on the part of the trial judge, in order that the substance of all special instructions shall be given to the jury when the questions therein presented are pertinent to the case, and that no omission shall occur by which either of the parties may be prejudiced. But, if the trial judge is willing to undertake the additional labor, the jury, as a rule, will be better instructed in their duty than by hearing read the special instructions asked for on the part of the plaintiff and the defendant. The court should simplify its directions to the jury, and make every effort to render them as free from complexity as possible. . . . The reason for this is obvious. Repetition tends to encumber the record and to confuse and embarrass the minds of the jury, and it is also liable to give undue prominence to the proposition repeated."

A careful examination of the record in this case has brought us to the conclusion that no prejudicial error is shown therein.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed, with costs.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Charles L. RUNDELL, Admr., etc., of Edwin R. Rundell, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

COMPAGNIE GENERALE TRANSATLANTIQUE.

(100 Fed. Rep. 655.)

1. To make the law of the flag under which a ship was sailing applicable to an action for death of a passenger by drowning while upon the high seas, the drowning must be shown to have been upon the vessel.
2. The law of the place where the death occurred, and not where the accident happened, governs in an action for death by wrongful act.
3. A United States admiralty court will not enforce the local law of another country, in an action for negligent homicide occurring on the high seas, but such action must be governed by the general admiralty law, although the negligence occurred upon a vessel under the flag of such country.
4. By the general maritime law as administered by the admiralty courts, no recovery can be had for a death by wrongful act.

(March 22, 1900.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois dismissing a libel for damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

Before Woods, Circuit Judge, and Bunn and Allen, District Judges.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thomas S. McClelland and Charles A. Munroe, for appellant:

The judicial power of the United States extends to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.

U. S. Const. art. 3, § 2; Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 430; American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369.

The libellee is liable under the French Code.

See Libel, pp. 10-15; Resal v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 32 Chicago Legal News, 17, 18 Nat. Corp. Rep. 906; The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, sub nom. The Harris-

NOTE.—For right to proceed in admiralty for damages resulting from the death of a person, where by the law of the place where the casualty occurs there is a right of action for death by negligence, see also The Willamette (C. C. A. 9th C.) 31 L. R. A. 715.
49 L. R. A.

burg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140.

The district court has jurisdiction, the cause of action having arisen on the high seas.

American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369; Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 623, 21 L. ed. 436; Judiciary act, § 9.

The Federal courts will administer a foreign law when they obtain jurisdiction of the parties, and it is not against public policy.

The City of Mackinac, 43 U. S. App. 190, 73 Fed. Rep. 883, 20 C. C. A. 86; Boston & M. R. Co. v. McDuffey, 51 U. S. App. 111, 79 Fed. Rep. 934, 25 C. C. A. 247; Evey v. Mexican C. R. Co. 52 U. S. App. 118, 38 L. R. A. 387, 81 Fed. Rep. 294, 26 C. C. A. 407; Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105.

Liability for tort is determined by the law of the place where the alleged tortious act was committed.

The Scotia, 14 Wall. 170, sub nom. Sears v. The Scotia, 20 L. ed. 822; Sherlock v. Al-ling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819; McDonald v. Mallory, 77 N. Y. 546, 33 Am. Rep. 664; The Egyptian Monarch, 36 Fed. Rep. 773; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, sub nom. National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer, 26 L. ed. 1001; The Lamington, 87 Fed. Rep. 752; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978; Boston & M. R. Co. v. McDuffey, 51 U. S. App. 111, 79 Fed. Rep. 934, 25 C. C. A. 247; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitlow, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1931, 41 L. R. A. 614, 43 S. W. 711; The City of Mackinac, 43 U. S. App. 190, 73 Fed. Rep. 883, 20 C. C. A. 86; Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Evey v. Mexican C. R. Co. 52 U. S. App. 118, 38 L. R. A. 387, 81 Fed. Rep. 294, 26 C. C. A. 407.

The admiralty courts of the United States will entertain and enforce a libel in personam for damages for loss of life, where the cause of action survives.

The City of Mackinac, 43 U. S. App. 190, 73 Fed. Rep. 883, 20 C. C. A. 86; The Willamette, 44 U. S. App. 26, 31 L. R. A. 715, 70 Fed. Rep. 874, 18 C. C. A. 366; The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, sub nom. Barton v. Brown, 36 L. ed. 727, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 949; The City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. Rep. 98; The Clatsop Chief, 7 Sawy. 274, 8 Fed. Rep. 163; The City of Brussels, 6 Ben. 370, Fed. Cas.

No. 2,745; The Bernina, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 1.

Every vessel outside the jurisdiction of a foreign power is a detached floating portion of the territory of the country whose flag it flies and under whose laws it is registered.

The Scotia, 14 Wall. 170, sub nom. Scars v. The Scotia, 20 L. ed. 822; Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 430; Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 26 L. ed. 234; Re Moncan, 14 Fed. Rep. 44; Re Ah Sing, 13 Fed. Rep. 286; United States v. Bennett, 3 Hughes, 466, Fed. Cas. No. 14,574; McDonald v. Mallory, 77 N. Y. 546, 33 Am. Rep. 664; Wheaton, International Law, 157, § 106; 3 Wharton, International Law Dig. 228; Wharton, Conf. L. § 356; 1 Kent, Com. 28; Vattel, Law of Nations, Bk. I. chap. 19, § 216; 1 Calvo, 552; The Lamington, 87 Fed. Rep. 752; United States v. Rogers, 150 U. S. 249, 37 L. ed. 1071, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109. Messrs. Edward S. Isham, William G. Beale, and Gilbert E. Porter, for appellee:

Cases of tort arising upon the high seas between parties of different nationalities will, in the admiralty courts of the United States, be governed by the general maritime law as understood and administered in those courts.

The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, sub nom. National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer, 26 L. ed. 1001; The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355, sub nom. The Belgenland v. Jensen, 29 L. ed. 152, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860; The Brantford City, 29 Fed. Rep. 373.

The general maritime law, like the common law, gives no right of action for death by wrongful act.

The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, sub nom. The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; The Alaska, 130 U. S. 201, sub nom. Metcalfe v. The Alaska, 32 L. ed. 923, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461; Butler v. Boston & S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612.

There is nothing in the language of the French statute set forth in the libel, indicating that the French legislature intended it to have operation beyond the territorial limits of the French nation. The question as to the extraterritorial force of a statute is one of general and international law, upon which this court will exercise its own independent judgment.

Greaves v. Neal, 57 Fed. Rep. 816; Evey v. Mexican C. R. Co. 52 U. S. App. 118, 38 L. R. A. 387, 81 Fed. Rep. 294, 26 C. C. A. 407; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 33 L. ed. 1123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914.

In this country, statutes silent as to their territorial operation are construed to be limited in their effect to the territory over which the legislature had jurisdiction.

The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 362, 6 L. ed. 111; The E. B. Ward, 16 Fed. Rep. 255; Armstrong v. Beadle, 5 Sawy. 484, Fed. Cas. No. 541; Bigelow v. Anderson, 34 U. S. App. 261, sub nom. Bigelow v. Nickerson, 30 L. R. A. 336, 70 Fed. Rep. 113, 17 C. C. A. 1; Whit- ford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465; Lehman v. McBride, 15 Ohio St. 573.

The laws of one nation, so far as they operate beyond the reach of its territorial sovereignty, are not sovereign laws at all, and consequently are not, by any rule of international comity, entitled to recognition or force in the courts of another.

Story, Conf. L. §§ 21, 22; The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 362, 6 L. ed. 111; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, sub nom. National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer, 26 L. ed. 1001; The E. B. Ward, 16 Fed. Rep. 255; Carlson v. United New York Sandy Hook Pilots' Asso. 93 Fed. Rep. 468; Armstrong v. Beadle, 5 Sawy. 484, Fed. Cas. No. 541; Roth v. Roth, 104 Ill. 35, 44 Am. Rep. 81; Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465.

The doctrine respecting the "law of the flag" is one of limited application, and this case is outside of the limits.

The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, sub nom. National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer, 26 L. ed. 1001; Johnson v. 21 Bales, 2 Paine, 601, Fed. Cas. No. 7,417; The Brantford City, 29 Fed. Rep. 373; The Johann Friederich, 1 W. Rob. 35; The Leon, L. R. 6 Prob. Div. 148; Chartered Mercantile Bank v. Netherlands India Steam Nav. Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 521; Foote, Private International Jurisprudence, 486, 495; Woolsey, International Law, § 44, pp. 80, 81; Thomassen v. Whitwell, 9 Ben. 403, Fed. Cas. No. 13,929.

As between the place of the negligence and the place of the resulting damage, it is the latter place which is the locus of the tort.

The Plymouth, 3 Wall. 20, sub nom. Hough v. Western Transp. Co. 18 L. ed. 125; Leonard v. Decker, 22 Fed. Rep. 741; The City of Lincoln, 25 Fed. Rep. 835; Milwaukee v. The Curtis, The Camden & The Welcome, 37 Fed. Rep. 705, sub nom. The Curtis, The Camden & The Welcome, 3 L. R. A. 711; The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. Rep. 239; The Mary Garrett, 63 Fed. Rep. 1009; Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co. 69 Fed. Rep. 646.

Bunn, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree in admiralty dismissing a libel in personam for want of equity. 94 Fed. Rep. 366. The appellant, as administrator of the estate of Edwin R. Rundell, deceased, filed his bill in the district court to recover damages for the death of the deceased, for the use and benefit of a minor son. The libel sets forth that on July 2, 1898, Edwin R. Rundell, residing at Chicago, became a passenger on board the steamship La Bourgogne, being one of appellee's steamships, at the port of New York, and bound for the port of Havre, in France; that the ship set sail from New York on the 2d day of July, and so continued upon her voyage in the Atlantic ocean until the 4th day of July, when it collided with a ship called the Cromartyshire, an English sailing vessel, and in the collision was sunk and wholly lost, and Rundell was killed by being drowned, wholly through the fault and improper navigation of the steamship by its officers and crew; that said steamship was upon said voyage being operated by the appellee, a corporation organized under the laws of France and a citizen of that country; that said steamship was sunk upon the high seas, in the Atlantic ocean, about 60 miles south of Sable island, beyond the territorial jurisdiction of any nation, but was at the time flying the French flag. The libel further avers that certain sections of the statute law of France, which are set forth in hæc verba, gave a legal representative a right of action for the death of his intestate occurring through the negligence of another; and that by the decisions of some of the courts of France (which are not identified or set forth) said statute law is held to extend to and operate upon all persons, whether citizens or aliens, upon the high seas, in vessels flying the French flag; and that under those statutes and decisions a right of action for the death of said deceased, enforceable in the district court, arose and exists in favor of the libellant; and prays judgment for the sum of $50,000. Appellee, the defendant in the libel, filed exceptions to the libel, alleging points of insufficiency in substance as follows:

"First. The libel does not present or disclose any right of action in libellant against this defendant enforceable by said court in the exercise of its admiralty jurisdiction. Second. The libel is insufficient in law to enable libellant to recover from defendant in this cause, in this, that it is brought solely to recover damages for the death of Edwin R. Rundell, which is alleged to have occurred upon the high seas by reason of the negligence of the defendant, also occurring upon the high seas, when, as a matter of law, no right of action exists, and no action can be maintained in a court of admiralty of the United States, to recover damages for death by negligence occurring upon the high seas. Third. The libel is insufficient because it is brought solely to recover for death by negligence occurring on the high seas, and under the general maritime law as interpreted and enforced by the courts of the United States, which alone governs the case, no right of action arises or can be maintained in this court for death so occurring."

Other exceptions relating to the insufficiency of the libel in pleading the law of France it is not necessary here to set out.

We think there are two very substantial grounds upon which the decree of the district court should be sustained. The first is that it does not appear from the libel that the death of the deceased occurred upon the steamship La Bourgogne, the averments being merely that he lost his life by drowning as a result of a collision and consequent sinking of the vessel; second, that in cases arising in tort upon the high seas the United States district court, sitting in admiralty, cannot enforce the local law of France, even if in terms it applied to the case, which does not appear, but that such cases must be adjudged and governed by the general maritime and admiralty law as understood and administered by the United States courts.

49 L. R. A.

As stated, there is no allegation that the deceased was drowned while upon the appellee's ship, and there can be no implication to that effect. The implication is rather the other way, as the pleading must be construed most strongly against the pleader. The acts of negligence which caused the sinking of the vessel were committed upon the vessel, but these would be damnum absque injuria, unless it also appeared that the drowning of the deceased which constitutes the real damage and injury, was also upon the vessel. The drowning would not be in any sense under the French flag, unless it was upon the sinking vessel. It will not be claimed that the jurisdiction of the flag extended upon the high seas beyond the limits of the ship flying it. To make the local law of France, therefore, of any possible application, it should appear by clear averment that the drowning took place upon the steamship. The libel nowhere states that the deceased came to his death while upon the Bourgogne. The averments are merely that he lost his life by drowning as a result of a collision and sinking of the vessel. The plain implication, therefore, is that he was drowned upon the high seas, apart from the vessel. At least, there is nothing to show to the contrary. The locus of the tort, therefore, which must always be determined by the place where the injury and damage arise, rather than where the negligent act is committed, must be considered as being upon the high seas, rather than upon French territory, supposing that the flying of the French flag made the vessel French territory while upon the high seas, as is claimed. The place where the death occurred and the damage arose must be held to be the locus in quo. The damage is the substance and consummation of the injury, and from that alone springs the right of recovery. The Plymouth, 3 Wall. 20, sub nom. Hough v. Western Transp. Co. 18 L. ed. 125; Leonard v. Decker, 22 Fed. Rep. 741; The City of Lincoln, 25 Fed. Rep. 835; Milwaukee v. The Curtis, The Camden, & The Welcome, 37 Fed. Rep. 705, sub nom. The Curtis, The Camden, & The Welcome, 3 L. R. A. 711; The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. Rep. 239; The Mary Garrett, 63 Fed. Rep. 1009; Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co. 69 Fed. Rep. 646.

In the case of The Plymouth, 3 Wall. 20, sub nom. Hough v. Western Transp. Co. 18 L. ed. 125, opinion by Mr. Justice Nelson, it was held that, where the damage done is wholly upon land, the fact that the cause of the damage originated on water subject to the admiralty jurisdiction does not make the cause one for the admiralty. So that where a vessel lying at a wharf, on waters subject to admiralty jurisdiction, took fire, and the fire, spreading itself to certain storehouses on the wharf, consumed these and their stores, it was held not to be a case for admiralty proceeding. The court in the opinion used this language: "We can give, therefore, no particular weight or influence to the consideration that the injury in the present case originated from the negligence of the servants of the respondents on board of a vessel, except as evidence that it originated on navigable waters,—the Chicago river; and, as we have seen, the simple fact that it originated there, but the whole damage done upon land, the cause of action not being complete on navigable waters, affords no ground for the exercise of the admiralty jurisdiction. The negligence, of itself, furnishes no cause of action; it is damnum absque injuria. The case is not distinguishable from that of a person standing on a vessel or any other support in the river, and sending a rocket or torpedo into the city, by means of which buildings were set on fire and destroyed. That would be a direct act of trespass, but quite as efficient a cause of damage as if the fire had proceeded from negligence. Could the admiralty take jurisdiction? We suppose the strongest advocate for this jurisdiction would hardly contend for it. Yet the origin of the trespass is upon navigable waters, which are within its cognizance. The answer is, as already given: The whole, or at least the substantial, cause of action arising out of the wrong, must be complete within the locality upon which the jurisdiction depends,—on the high seas or navigable waters.”

Leonard v. Decker, 22 Fed. Rep. 741, arising in the southern district of New York, was a case in admiralty for tort, where the defendants, as lessees of a wharf, negligently permitted certain bolts to project from the wharf under water, whereby injury was caused to libellant's vessels mooring there. It was contended that, as the locality of the negligence was on land, the case was not of admiralty cognizance. But the court held that the place where the injury is consummated and the damage actually received is regarded as the locus of the tort, and in the opinion by Judge Brown, after citing many cases, the court says: “In all the above cases the decision is made to turn, not upon the place where the negligence as the cause of the damage originates, but upon the place where the injury is received and consummated. It must appear that the damage, as the substantial cause of action, arising out of the negligence, ‘is complete within the locality upon which the jurisdiction depends; namely, upon the high seas or navigable waters.’” The Plymouth, 3 Wall. 36, sub nom. Hough v. Western Transp. Co. 18 L. ed. 128. The canal boats in this case were moored alongside the wharf for the purpose of discharging their cargoes,—a work which is maritime, and one of the necessary incidents of navigation,—and the vessels were afloat upon navigable waters. The whole damage and injury were received by them in this situation; the locus of the damage was upon navigable waters. That was, therefore, the locus of the tort, and, as that tort was upon the water, it was within the admiralty jurisdiction, and the libellants are accordingly entitled to decrees, with costs.”

The City of Lincoln, 25 Fed. Rep. 835, by the same court, was a case where a wharf which had been loaded with steel blooms, which had been discharged from the steamship City of Lincoln, gave way beneath the 49 L. R. A.

weight, throwing the blooms into the water. On suit brought against the steamship and the wharfinger, the latter denied the jurisdiction of the admiralty court, on the ground that the negligence alleged was a tort committed upon the wharf; that is, upon the land. The court held that, in cases where negligence and the injury occur in different places, the criterion is the place where the substance and the consummation of the injury are effected; and that, as the injury was caused wholly by the water into which the blooms were thrown, if the breaking down of the wharf occurred through the wharfinger's negligence, such negligence was a marine tort, of which a court of admiralty has jurisdiction. The like rule was followed by Judge Jenkins in Milwaukee v. The Curtis, The Camden, & The Welcome, 37 Fed. Rep. 705, sub nom. The Curtis, The Camden, & The Welcome, 3 L. R. A. 711. The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. Rep. 239, was a libel to recover for personal injuries received by libellant, who was engaged in repairing a vessel lying at the wharf. While standing on a ladder resting at one end on the wharf and the other against the vessel, the negligent act of the master caused the ladder to fall, whereby libellant was thrown upon the wharf and injured. Brown, J., held that a court of admiralty had no jurisdiction, saying: “It has never been doubted since the case of The Plymouth, 3 Wall. 20, sub nom. Hough v. Western Transp. Co. 18 L. ed. 125, that to enable us to take cognizance of a maritime tort the injury must have been consummated and the damage received upon the water. The mere fact that the wrongful act was done upon a ship is insufficient. Subsequent adjudications have in no wise tended to limit or qualify this rule.”

So, in The Mary Garrett, 63 Fed. Rep. 1009, it was held that admiralty has no jurisdiction of an action for injury to a person on a wharf, caused by negligence originating on a ship; and it made no difference that the person was employed as a seaman on the same ship. And in the opinion by Judge Morrow the court says: “Nor does it make any difference whether the tort had its inception, its origin, upon water, if the consequential effects of the wrong—the consummation of the tort—happened on land. It is immaterial, so far as the admiralty jurisdiction is concerned, that the tort originated on water, if the injury happened on land.”

And in a similar case, that of Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co. 69 Fed. Rep. 646, the same judge, after reviewing the cases, arrived at the following conclusion: “I think that the only true and rational solution of the jurisdictional question, where the tort occurs partly on land and partly on water, is to ascertain the place of the consummation and substance of the injury. This latter element of the wrong is necessarily the only substantial cause of action, otherwise, it would be damnum absque injuria. . . . The central idea found running through all these cases is, so far as jurisdiction over torts is concerned, that the admiralty law looks to the place where the injury was suffered, and not to the locality of the agent causing the injury."

We think these cases abundant to show that if deceased came to his death, not in the vessel, but on the high seas outside the vessel, the local law of France, which it is only claimed extends to the vessel flying the French flag, can have no application to the case.

2. In regard to the second exception—that the libel is insufficient in law to enable the libellant to recover damages in an action of tort for the death of the deceased occurring upon the high seas by reason of the negligence of the defendant, because the general maritime law, by which the admiralty court in this country is governed, allows of no recovery in such a case,—we are of opinion that this exception was well taken, and that the decision of the district court was correct. See the opinion of the court below in 94 Fed. Rep. 366. The question is a very interesting one, and has never, so far as we can learn, been directly and in terms decided by our Supreme Court. We have examined it, however, with some care, and this is the conclusion we have reached. It is well settled that neither by the common law, nor by the general maritime law, nor by any law of Congress, will an action lie for death by a wrongful act. No such action can be sustained under any such law in the courts of the United States. Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 756, 24 L. ed. 580; The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, sub nom. The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; The Alaska, 130 U. S. 201, sub nom. Metcalfe v. The Alaska, 32 L. ed. 923, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461; Butler v. Boston & S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612. The same rule prevailed in England under the common law until the passage of Lord Campbell's act. The effect of the common law was so recited in that act. In The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, sub nom. The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140, the Supreme Court held that in the absence of an act of Congress, or a statute of a state giving a right of action therefor, a suit in admiralty cannot be maintained in the courts of the United States to recover damages for the death of a human being on the high seas, or on waters navigable from the seas, which is caused by negligence. That decision is perhaps in terms broad enough to cover the case at bar, except that the precise question here was not in that case, because it is certain and conceded that there is no law of Congress or of a state that professes to give the right, and by the general maritime law no such right ever existed. In The Alaska, 130 U. S. 201, sub nom. Metcalfe v. The Alaska, 32 L. ed. 923, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461, this decision was affirmed, and the same doctrine adhered to. In that case it was conceded by counsel, and concurred in by the court, that the statute of New York, on the subject of actions for death by negligence did not apply to that case, because the deaths did not occur within the state of New York or in waters subject to its jurisdiction, but upon the high seas. If the Federal court could not enforce the law of New York in such a case, it is difficult to see how it can enforce a law strictly foreign and local; for it must be conceded that the French law, allowing it to be all that is claimed for it, can only have operation within the territory and jurisdiction of France. The law of France can have no extraterritorial force. It is not within the jurisdiction of the legislative power of any one nation to make the maritime law for the whole world, so far as the courts of other countries are concerned. It can only make laws to be operative within its own territory and jurisdiction. It may undoubtedly make laws to bind its own subjects while abroad, if they should ever return, to be adjudged in the courts of their own country, but this right is not one that will always be respected by the courts of other countries. Story, Conf. L. §§ 21, 22; The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 362, 6 L. ed. 111; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, sub nom. National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer, 26 L. ed. 1001; The E. B. Ward, 16 Fed. Rep. 255; Carlson v. United New York Sandy Hook Pilots' Asso. 93 Fed. Rep. 468; Armstrong v. Beadle, 5 Sawy. 484, Fed. Cas. No. 541. Mr. Justice Story, in his Conflict of Laws (§ 22) says:

"Without entering upon this subject (which properly belongs to a general treatise upon public law), it may be truly said that no nation is bound to respect the laws of another nation made in regard to the subjects of the latter which are nonresidents. The obligatory force of such laws of any nation cannot extend beyond its own territories. . . . Whatever may be the intrinsic or obligatory force of such laws upon such persons if they should return to their native country, they can have none in other nations wherein they reside. Such laws may give rise to personal relations between the sovereign and subjects, to be enforced in his own domains; but they do not rightfully extend to other nations. . . . A state has just as much intrinsic right, and no more, to give to its own laws an extraterritorial force as to the property of its subjects situated abroad as it has in relation to the persons of its subjects domiciled abroad. That is, as sovereign laws, they have no obligation on either the person or the property. When, therefore, we speak of the right of a state to bind its own native subjects everywhere, we speak only of its own claim and exercise of sovereignty over them when they return within its own territorial jurisdiction, and not of its right to compel or require obedience to such laws on the part of other nations within their own territorial sovereignty."

The Supreme Court in The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, sub nom. National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer, 26 L. ed. 1001, says: "So far as they stand on general grounds of argument [certain English cases], the most important consideration seems to be this, that the British legislature cannot be supposed to have intended to prescribe regulations to bind the subjects of foreign states, or to make for them a law of the high sea; and that, if it had so intended, it could not have done it. This is very true. No nation has any such right. Each nation, however, may declare what it will accept, and by its courts enforce, as the law of the sea, when parties choose to resort to its forum for redress. And no persons subject to its jurisdiction or seeking justice in its courts can complain of the determination of their rights by that law, unless they can propound some other law by which they ought to be judged; and this they cannot do, except where both parties belong to the same foreign nation; in which case it is true they may well claim to have their controversy settled by their own law.

But where they belong to the country in whose forum the litigation is instituted, or to different countries having different systems of law, the court will administer the maritime law as accepted and used by its own sovereignty."

Armstrong v. Beadle, 5 Sawy. 484, Fed. Cas. No. 541, was an action at law, under the California statute, to recover for death upon the high seas of a passenger on board an Oregon vessel. Circuit Judge Sawyer, deciding upon the liability, in his opinion uses this language: "The first point presented is that the statute has no extraterritorial operation, and is limited to accidents occurring within the territorial jurisdiction of the state, and as the death occurred upon the high seas, beyond the legislative jurisdiction of the state, the statute is inapplicable. There was no liability at common law for the death of a party resulting under circumstances like those set out in the complaint, and, unless the statute in question gives the right of action, the plaintiff cannot recover. The statute undoubtedly creates a new right of action, and does not merely give a remedy for a right already existing. If it operates beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the state, then it becomes a universal law, applicable to all countries, and the legislature of California would be adopting a code of laws affecting the rights of parties arising out of acts done wholly in foreign countries, as well as upon the high seas. If California can pass laws of the kind, operating extraterritorially, then other states and countries can pass laws upon the same subject, operating upon the high seas, and these laws may be in conflict; but there is nothing in the statute to indicate that it was intended to operate beyond the limits of the state."

We think, also, that the evident tendency of the decisions and weight of authority is that cases of tort arising upon the high seas between parties of different nationalities will, in the admiralty courts of the United States, be governed by the law of the forum, which is the general maritime law as understood and administered in these courts. The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, sub nom. National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer, 26 L. ed. 1001; The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355, sub nom. 49 L. R. A.

The Belgenland v. Jensen, 29 L. ed. 152, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860; The Brantford City, 29 Fed. Rep. 373. In the case of The Scotland the Supreme Court decided that the courts of every country will administer justice according to its laws, unless a different law be shown to apply, and this rule applies to transactions taking place on the high seas. If a collision occur on the high seas between two vessels, controversies arising therefrom will be governed in the courts of this country by our laws, unless the two colliding ships belong to the same foreign country, or, perhaps, to different countries using the same law, when they will be governed by the laws of the country to which they belong. And in the opinion by Mr. Justice Bradley the following language, which seems quite applicable in principle to this case, is used: "In administering justice between parties, it is essential to know by what law, or code, or system of laws, their mutual rights are to be determined. When they arise in a particular country or state, they are generally to be determined by the laws of that state. Those laws pervade all transactions which take place where they prevail, and give them their color and legal effect. Hence, if a collision should occur in British waters, at least between British ships, and the injured party should seek relief in our courts, we would administer justice according to the British law, so far as the rights and liabilities of the parties were concerned, provided it were shown what that law was. If not shown, we would apply our own law to the case. In the French or Dutch tribunals they would do the same. But if a collision occurs on the high seas, where the law of no particular state has exclusive force, but all are equal, any forum called upon to settle the rights of the parties would prima facie determine them by its own law, as presumptively expressing the rules of justice; but, if the contesting vessels belonged to the same foreign nation, the court would assume that they were subject to the law of their nation, carried under their common flag, and would determine the controversy accordingly. If they belonged to different nations having different laws, since it would be unjust to apply the laws of either to the exclusion of the other, the law of the forum—that is, the maritime law as received and practised therein—would properly furnish the rule of decision. In all other cases, each nation will also administer justice according to its own laws. And it will do this without respect of persons, to the stranger as well as to the citizen."

In The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355, sub nom. The Belgenland v. Jensen, 29 L. ed. 152, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860, the Supreme Court affirmed a similar doctrine, and held that in a proceeding in admiralty against one foreign vessel for collision with another foreign vessel on the high seas, the general maritime law, as understood and administered in the courts of the country in which the litigation is prosecuted, is, in general, the law governing the case. We think upon principle these cases, though the facts are not the same, should determine the one at bar, and that the position taken by appellant's counsel as to the application of the local law of France to the case is quite irreconcilable with these decisions of our Supreme Court. If these decisions do not determine the case at bar, they indicate pretty clearly what the decision should be. We find no case where such a rule has ever been applied to an action arising in tort. In The Brantford City, 29 Fed. Rep. 373, where the subject was ably treated by Mr. Justice Brown, of the southern district of New York, in an opinion afterwards referred to with approval by the Supreme Court in Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469, the court states the rule very comprehensively in the following language: "But inasmuch as the high seas are the common ground of all nations, and not governed by the merely municipal laws of either, the quality of acts committed on the high seas, as between persons or ships belonging to different nations whose laws are different, is determined by the maritime law as accepted and administered in the forum where the suit is prosecuted. . . . The fact that in most of the cases cited the injury arose from collision is immaterial. The gravamen of the action is negligence. On that alone the action depends. It is negligence only that constitutes the tort. It is so in this case in its aspect as a tort; and, as this negligence, resulting in damage to libellants, occurred partly within our jurisdiction and partly upon the high seas, the law applicable to the case, as one of tortious negligence, would seem, upon the above authorities, to be our own law, as the law of the forum."

Any other rule would be likely to lead to much conflict and uncertainty. Nor can the fiction in regard to the law of the flag, now mainly exploded, have any force to extend the effect of the laws of any country upon the high seas or beyond that country's own territory, as will be seen by the cases following. It is merely a phrase to denote a simple fact, namely, the law of the country to which the ship belongs, and has no effect to extend the jurisdiction or add to the force of those laws in cases of tort. Johnson v. 21 Bales, 2 Paine, 601, Fed. Cas. No. 7417; Thomassen v. Whitwell, 9 Ben. 403, Fed. Cas. No. 13,929.

The decree of the District Court is affirmed.

CLEVELAND, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, &
ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY,

Appt.,

v.

James T. TARTT, Admr., etc., of Jesse H. Phillips, Sr.

(99 Fed. Rep. 369, 39 C. C. A. 568.)

1. No duty of care to avoid injury to trespassers by a railroad train arises until those in charge of the train have discovered their presence on or dangerously near the track, and have reasonable cause to believe that injury will result unless the progress of the train is arrested, although by the exercise of due care their presence might have been sooner discovered, and the train is running at an unlawful rate of speed.

NOTE.—As to duty of railroad company to trespasser on track, see Toomey v. Southern P. R. Co. (Cal.) 10 L. R. A. 139, and note; 49 L. R. A.

2. It is not the duty of trainmen to arrest the progress of a train as soon as they discover a trespasser on or dangerously near the track; but they have the right to proceed on the assumption that the trespasser, having a due regard for his own personal safety, will voluntarily withdraw from the track, and not remain in a place of known danger until he is injured or killed.

(January 25, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

Before Woods and Jenkins, Circuit Judges, and Baker, District Judge.

The statement of facts referred to in the opinion was as follows:

On July 7, 1891, the deceased, Jesse H. Phillips, Sr., the plaintiff's intestate, was killed by a collision with a train of the appellant (the defendant below) in the village of Venice, in the state of Illinois. The declaration, consisting of a single count, charges, in substance, that the defendant, on July 7, 1891, at a point within the incorporated village of Venice, killed the plaintiff's intestate, and avers that at the time of the collision, and immediately before his death, the deceased was on defendant's track, exercising all due care and diligence in seeking to rescue his minor son, aged eight years, who was in imminent peril from said train and engine, and that while exercising due care and diligence in that behalf he was killed; that there was in force in the village of Venice an ordinance by which it was provided that railroads should not run engines or trains within its limits at a greater rate of speed than 10 miles an hour; that, at the time of the killing of the deceased, the defendant's servants were running the engine and train at a rate of speed in excess of 10 miles an hour, to wit, at the speed of 60 miles an hour or thereabouts, in violation of said ordinance; that defendant's servants in charge of said engine and train saw the child upon the tracks in time to have enabled them, by the exercise of slight care, to have reduced the speed and averted the danger, "yet with gross and reckless and wanton negligence" they failed and neglected to reduce the speed until the collision occurred, and "with said gross and wanton negligence" they failed to give any signal or warning of the approach of said train, and that by reason of "said gross and wanton negligence" the deceased was killed; that the deceased left surviving him a widow and two minor children, who have suffered damage in the sum of $5,000. The pleas were the general issue, and that the deceased came to his death by his own negligence, to which latter plea there was a replication in denial.

Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.) 11 L. R. A. 385; Patton v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (Tenn.) 12 L. R. A. 184; Clark v.

The deceased had lived for about two months in a house located close to the railroad tracks. Every morning many trains passed his house, to and through the village of Venice, at a rapid rate of speed. The train which came into collision with him passed on the same track every morning at substantially the same rate of speed as on the morning of the fatal accident. The decedent either knew, or was chargeable with knowledge, of these facts. In going from his home to the village of Venice the deceased could take the wagon road, a public highway which passed near his house and led directly into the village, running parallel with and immediately adjoining the railway, or he could take the railroad track or right of way. He took his son, aged eight years, and started to walk down the railroad, and on its right of way, to the village of Venice, distant about 1 mile from his home. He was killed at a point about 2,400 feet distant from his house. The defendant's track was straight and level for a distance of about 2,400 feet from the point where the injury occurred in the direction from which the train was coming, and a person on the track at that place could have been seen for that distance before the train reached him. Neither Phillips nor his son was seen by the engineer or fireman until the train was under the Merchant's bridge, distant from the point of collision only 785 feet; that, when seen, the deceased was walking along the east side of the track, and his son was walking between the rails, a few steps behind the father. They were going in the same direction as the train, and did not appear to be giving any attention to avoid danger from approaching trains. As soon as they were seen, the danger signal was sounded, and the emergency air brakes applied, but the speed of the train was so great, being from 50 to 60 miles an hour, that it did not stop until it had reached a point some 1,700 feet beyond the point of collision. The decedent did not seem to have had any apprehension of the approach of the train until the danger signal was sounded, when he sprang to the rescue of his son, and, crossing the track from east to west, he caught the lad in his arms, and sought to carry him out of danger, but before he got off the track he was struck by the engine, and both were killed. The point of collision was 2,390 feet from the house of the deceased. On the trial of the cause, to support the issues on his behalf, the plaintiff offered in evidence a copy of an ordinance of the village of Venice prohibiting the running of trains through that village at a greater rate of speed than 10 miles an hour. A certificate was attached thereto, which, so far as material, reads thus: "I, A. L. Summers, hereby certify that the annexed and foregoing is a true copy of Ordinance No. 32 of the village of Venice, passed July 7, 1877, and duly published according to law." The defendant objected to the introduction of the copy of the ordinance in evidence on the ground that it did not appear that it had been published in any of the modes prescribed by law. The objection was overruled, and the copy read in evidence over the objection and exception of the defendant. The plaintiff also offered in evidence a copy of the ordinance in question, contained in a pamphlet copy of ordinances, whose sole authentication was as follows: Ordinances Adopted by the Board of Trustees of the Village of Venice, in Madison County and State of Illinois, John Haps, Printer, 1884,"—which authentication was printed on the cover of said pamphlet. The defendant objected to the admission of the printed copy of the ordinance in evidence on the ground that it did not purport to be published by authority of the board of trustees of said village. The objection was overruled, and the copy of the ordinance was read in evidence, to which the defendant saved an exception.

Mr. John T. Dye, with Mr. George F. McNulty, for appellant:

The court erred in allowing proof that the track was used by pedestrians. There is no averment charging this or knowledge of it.

Ebsery v. Chicago City R. Co. 164 Ill. 518, 45 N. E. 1017; Moss v. Johnson, 22 Ill. 640; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McKee, 43 Ill. 120; Bell v. Senneff, 83 Ill. 124; Wabash R. Co. v. Jones, 163 Ill. 170, 45 N. E. 50; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 71 Ill. 500, 22 Am. Rep. 112; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bodemer, 139 Ill. 596, 29 N. E. 692; Blanchard v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 126 Ill. 416, 18 N. E. 799; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Noble, 142 Ill. 578, 32 N. E. 684; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Phillips, 24 U. S. App. 489, 64 Fed. Rep. 823, 12 C. C. A. 622.

Deceased was guilty of contributory negligence by trespassing. Because of this the court should have directed a verdict.

Being a trespasser, defendant is only liable for wilfulness.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 71 Ill. 500, 22 Am. Rep. 112; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hetherington, 83 Ill. 510; Chicago & A. R. Co. v.

Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 14 L. R. A. 749; Parker v. Pennsylvania (Ind.) 23 L. R. A. 552; Ward v. Southern P. Co. (Or.) 23 L. R. A. 715; Raines v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.) 24 L. R. A. 228; Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (N. C.) 25 L. R. A. 287; Pickett v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 30 L. R. A. 257; and some cases in notes to Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Cooper (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 49 I. R. A.

243; and Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (Mass.) 13 L. R. A. 248.

As to duty to avoid injury to small children on track, see Bottoms v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. (N. C.) 25 L. R. A. 784, and note; Roth v. Union Depot Co. (Wash.) 31 L. R. A. 855; and Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.) 36 L. R. A. 575.

McKenna, 14 Ill. App. 472; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mehlsack, 131 Ill. 61, 22 N. E. 812; Blanchard v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 126 Ill. 423, 18 N. E. 799.

Use of the track by pedestrians does not change the relative rights of deceased or defendant.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hetherington, 83 Ill. 510; Blanchard v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 126 Ill. 423, 18 N. E. 799; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Phillips, 24 U. S. App. 489, 64 Fed. Rep. 823, 12 C. C. A. 621.

One who knowingly goes on a railroad track is held to have assumed all risks following his act.

4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 56, note 1; Goldstein v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 Wis. 404, 1 N. W. 37; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Clemens, 5 Ill. App. 77; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Depeu, 40 Ohio St. 121; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Collins, 87 Pa. 405, 30 Am. Rep. 371; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 619, 29 L. ed. 226, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125.

Where his trespass contributed to the injury, his contributory negligence prevents a recovery.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 52; Wharton, Neg. 2d ed. § 427.

The railroad did not have to anticipate children or adults on its track. Nor did it have to keep a lookout for them.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 41 Ill. App. 344; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Roath, 35 Ill. App. 349; Wabash R. Co. v. Jones, 163 Ill. 167, 45 N. E. 50; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 71 Ill. 500, 22 Am. Rep. 112.

An engineer, seeing a person on a track, does not have to slacken speed unless he has reason to believe the person cannot or will not get off the track.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Frelka, 9 Ill. App. 605; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Austin, 69 Ill. 426; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hall, 72 Ill. 224; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Modglin, 85 Ill. 481.

The act of the father in seeking to rescue the boy did not free him from his first negligence in leading the boy into danger.

Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Phillips, 24 U. S. App. 489, 64 Fed. Rep. 823, 12 C. C. A. 623; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. note 4, p. 395.

Mr. A. R. Taylor for appellee.

Baker, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This case has been before this court, when it was reversed and remanded, with instructions to grant a new trial, and to permit the declaration to be amended. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Phillips, 24 U. S. App. 489, 64 Fed. Rep. 823, 12 C. C. A. 618. On the return of the case a new trial was granted, and the declaration was amended by simply inserting the word "wilful" in three places next before the word "negligence." The evidence on the last trial differs in no essential particular from that on the former, except that upon the last trial evidence was introduced showing that the train could have been stopped within the distance of 2,000 feet, or thereabouts. The statement of facts found in the former report of this case, except the evidence in reference to the distance within which the train could have been stopped, is adopted as a substantially correct statement of the facts in the present case. To set out the numerous instructions given and refused to which exceptions were taken would needlessly protract this opinion. The record contains fifty-two assignments of error. The instructions are not entirely harmonious in their statement of the legal principles applicable to the case, and it is not apparent how the jury could have reached the verdict they did, if they had been governed by the instructions given. But, as the case ought to be reversed for error in refusing to direct a verdict for the plaintiff in error, a careful examination of the other errors assigned is unnecessary.

It was decided when the case was here before that the deceased was, at the time he was killed, a trespasser or mere naked licensee on the right of way of the plaintiff in error, and, as such, that it owed him no duty of care to provide against accidents to him. We also held that the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in error on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify a submission of the case to the jury. These rulings became the law of the case, and must control the decision on the present writ of error, unless the case made by the evidence differs in some material and controlling aspect from that made on the former trial. A careful study of the evidence which is in the record fails to disclose any material difference, except that in relation to the distance within which the train could have been stopped. That the deceased was a trespasser or mere naked licensee at the time he was killed is clearly shown, and is the settled law of the case; and as no new or additional evidence was produced, except as above stated, the court below, in obedience to the opinion of this court, ought to have sustained the request of the plaintiff in error to direct the jury to find a verdict in its favor. But, if this was the first time this case was before us, the result must be the same. The undisputed evidence shows that the deceased and his son were trespassers on the right of way of the plaintiff in error at the time he was killed. The evidence fails to show negligence on the part of the plaintiff in error or its servants which was the proximate cause of the death of the plaintiff's intestate. It is firmly settled that it is not the duty of the employees operating a railroad train to exercise care and diligence in looking for trespassers on the railway track, and that no duty of care in respect of such trespasser arises until he is seen upon or so near the railroad track as to show that he is liable to injury from the train moving thereon. Nor does it become the duty of the trainmen to arrest the progress of their train as soon as they discover a trespasser on or dangerously near the track. They have the right to proceed on the assumption that the trespasser, having a due regard for his own personal safety, will voluntarily withdraw from the track, and not remain in a place of known danger until he is injured or killed. It is only when it becomes apparent that such trespasser is either unaware of, or unable to avoid, impending danger, and when those in charge of the train have reasonable cause to apprehend that injury will probably result unless an effort is made to stop the train, that it becomes their duty to do so. As between the railway company and the trespasser, no duty of care to avoid injury arises until those in charge of the train have discovered his presence on or dangerously near the track, and have reasonable cause to believe that injury will result unless the progress of the train is arrested. Although the railway track may be level and straight, so that those in charge of the train by the exercise of due care might have seen the trespasser long before they did, still such negligent failure to discover his presence on or near the track will of itself constitute no actionable wrong of which he can complain. If the train is running at a high and dangerous rate of speed, in violation of an ordinance, it is mere negligence, of which the trespasser cannot successfully complain; nor in such a case would any special duty of care arise until the presence and apparent danger of the trespasser was actually discovered. Hence, even if those employed on the engine which killed the plaintiff's intestate could have seen him when he was 2,400 feet from the train, their failure to discover his presence or that of his son until the train was a little more than 700 feet from them would give no right of action. There was no evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiff below to prove that the employees on the train actually discovered the presence of the deceased or his son on or near the track until just before the accident happened. The evidence clearly shows that the presence of the deceased and his son on the track was not actually discovered by any of the trainmen until the train was within less than 800 feet from them, and that as soon as they were seen the danger signal was sounded, the emergency brakes applied, and everything was done which with due care for the safety of the train and its passengers could have been done in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, and that the train was actually stopped within 2,000 feet or thereabouts from the point where the train was when the deceased and his son were first seen upon or near the track. The case made by the evidence was such as made it the duty of the court to grant the request of the plaintiff in error to direct a verdict in its favor. Deciding, as we do, that the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict for the plaintiff in error, it becomes unnecessary, and would not be profitable, to consider the other fifty-one errors assigned.

Woods, Circuit Judge, concurring:

When this case was first here, our ruling was that "the declaration . . . counts upon negligence, and not upon wilful-
49 L. R. A.

ness, as the ground of action," and that it was therefore unnecessary to express an opinion whether, upon the facts disclosed, the action could be maintained for a wilful injury. Apparently for the purpose of raising that issue the declaration was amended by inserting the word "wilful" to qualify the alleged negligence, so that as amended the charge is that the defendant's servants, with gross, reckless, wanton, and wilful negligence, failed to reduce the speed of the engine, and to give any signal or warning to the deceased and his child of the approach of the train by which they were run down. Manifestly, the amendment did not affect the essential character of the charge. It is one thing to allege the wilful or intentional infliction of an injury, and quite another to allege the wilful doing or omitting to do something which caused, or contributed to the causing of, the injury. The defendant's servants, according to the amended averment, wilfully (that is to say, knowingly and purposely) failed to reduce the speed, and to give to the deceased any signal or warning of the approach of the train; but it is not alleged or implied that there was in the mind of the engineer or fireman any intention to inflict injury, or any perception that the deceased and his son were not properly regardful of the situation, and would avoid harm, as they might easily have done, by stepping aside. "Wilful or intentional injury," as we said before, "implies positive and aggressive conduct, and not the mere negligent omission of duty;" and the wilful omission to do something which duty requires, it is equally clear, does not of itself imply an intention to injure, and such intention should not be imputed unless directly proved, or, under the circumstances, that result must have been perceived to be probable. In other words, as a matter of pleading, it is the same whether an act or an omission to act be alleged to have been negligent or intentional. If it be sought to charge a wilful injury, the intention to inflict it must be directly and explicitly alleged. As a matter of proof, it may be enough to show negligence of such gross, wanton, or wilful character as to justify the inference of an intention or willingness to injure. It is easy to suppose circumstances or conditions which, if they did not in the particular case justify an omission to retard the speed of a train, or to sound the whistle sooner than it was sounded, would exclude all suspicion of bad faith. The engineer in this instance might have seen the deceased upon the track 2,000 feet away, instead of 700 feet, as he testified; and, disregarding his testimony, the jury may have inferred that he ought to have seen, and did sooner see, the deceased upon the track. But, that conceded, there is no evidence whatever to justify an inference that he entertained any purpose or had any thought of harming the deceased or his boy. The affirmative testimony of a number of witnesses is that the alarm whistle was sounded when the engine was near 700 feet from the point of collision, and against that is the testimony of a single witness that she heard neither bell nor whistle. The affirmative testimony, it is clear, ought not to be considered as overborne by the negative; but, whether the truth in this respect was one way or the other, the case was, at most, one of negligence only, against one whose position as a trespasser made a right of action on that ground alone impossible. That he was a trespasser upon the track of the defendant's road is conceded in the brief for the defendant in error. The trial proceeded throughout on that theory, and no question, it is admitted, was made upon the point; but it is insisted that the defendant's servants, notwithstanding the negligence of the deceased, could, after discovering the peril, have averted it by timely warning, or by slackening the speed of the train. On this point reference is made to Cahill v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 U. S. App. 85, 74 Fed. Rep. 285, 20 C. C. A. 184; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Morlay, 58 U. S. App. 528, 86 Fed. Rep. 240, 30 C. C. A. 6; Anderson v. Hopkins, 63 U. S. App. 533, 91 Fed. Rep. 77, 33 C. C. A. 346, and other cases, as overthrowing the doctrine that there can be no recovery for an injury to a person wrongfully upon a railroad track unless the injury was wilful or intentional. The Cahill Case is plainly distinguishable; and the doctrine of the Anderson and Morlay Cases is manifestly not applicable here, because in this case the deceased and his son were not perceived by the engineer to be in a position of peril from which they were not likely to escape by their own exertions.

The only tangible proof of negligence which went to the jury was that the train by which the deceased was killed was running at the rate of 50 to 60 miles an hour, in violation of an ordinance of the town which forbade a speed exceeding 10 miles an hour. The proof of that ordinance should have been withdrawn from the jury. It consisted of a copy of the ordinance, with a certificate of the town clerk attached, verifying the ordinance, and certifying that it was passed on July 7, 1877, and was duly published. This certificate was attached to the ordinance as found in a printed book of ordinances, which contained copies of other ordinances of the town of Venice; and it is claimed, on the statement of a witness, that a copy of that pamphlet was kept or preserved by the town board. The book, however, did not purport to be published by authority of the board of trustees or city council, and therefore was not admissible, under the statute, as evidence of the passage and publication of the ordinances found in it. Lindsay v. Chicago, 115 Ill. 120, 3 N. E. 443. And while, as shown by the opinion in that case, the certified copy of the ordinance was competent and prima facie evidence of the passage and publication of the ordinance, yet when it was shown, as it was, that in the original record there was no notation at the foot of the ordinance of the fact or date of publication, upon which the clerk could have based his certificate, and further was shown by the testimony of the clerk, who made the certificate, that he knew nothing of the fact, and did not intend to certify to the publication of the ordinance, but signed the certificate as prepared and presented to him by counsel for the defendant in error, the force of the certificate in that respect was destroyed, and there remained no adequate proof of the publication of the ordinance. But, if the publication of the ordinance were conceded, its violation by the defendant was, at most, evidence of negligence only, and afforded no ground for recovery for injury to a trespasser. The train by which the intestate was killed was running on time, and at its usual speed, as for two years or more it had been run, and as, to the knowledge of the deceased, it had been run for six weeks or more before the date of the accident. He probably had no knowledge of the ordinance, and certainly neither counted, nor had the right to count, upon the train being run in accordance with its requirement. The judgment below is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SIXTH CIRCUIT.

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Ethel M. KING.

(99 Fed. Rep. 251.)

1. If a passenger alights by direction or implied invitation of the carrier at a place where, in order to leave the carrier's premises, it is necessary to cross the carrier's track, there is an implied agreement that in using that mode of egress trains will not be so operated as to make the exit unnecessarily dangerous.

2. A passenger alighting from a train at a place where he must cross a track to reach the public highway may, in the absence of warning, presume that trains will not be so operated as to impose on him the same degree of care which he would be obliged to exercise if he were not a passenger.

3. Whether or not a passenger is negligent in failing to look and listen for approaching trains before crossing a track between the place where he alighted from the train and the public highway is a question for the jury.

NOTE.—For injury to passengers at stations by passing railroad trains, see also DeKay v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 4 L. R. A. 632; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Anderson (Md.) 8 L. R. A. 678; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shean (Colo.) 20 L. R. A. 729; Southern R. Co. v. Smith (C. C. A. 5th C.) 40 L. R. A. 746; Young v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Mass.) 41 L. R. A. 193; and Atlantic City R. Co. v. Goodin (N. J.) 45 L. R. A. 671.

(January 22, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Before Lurton and Day, Circuit Judges, and Thompson, District Judge.

Statement by Lurton, Circuit Judge:

Only the facts essential to the consideration of the single question upon which a reversal is sought need be stated. The plaintiff below, a young woman, sustained very serious injuries by collision with a railroad train while crossing a railway track which intervened between the station of the company at Central City, West Virginia, and the nearest public highway or street connecting the village and station. She had taken passage at Ashland, Kentucky, upon an accommodation train, for Central City, a station east of Ashland. Between Central City and Ashland the tracks are double, and about 7 feet apart. The track next the station is used only by east-bound trains, while the other, or northern, track is used only by trains going in the opposite direction. The village of Central City lies wholly north of the railroad tracks, while the station or depot is on the opposite or south side of the railroad. The streets of the town running at right angles with the railroad do not cross its tracks, but extend from them south to the Ohio river. This station house is situated between two streets extending from the railroad to the town, and is about 100 feet from Fourteenth street, which is the nearest of them. Fourteenth street is therefore the one used chiefly, if not altogether, by the travel between the depot and the town, and has a pavement or sidewalk only on its western side. The station consists of three connected rooms—a waiting room, a ticket office, and a freight room—extending along the track east and west for a distance of 50 feet. In front of this station is a wooden platform about 6 feet wide. Between this platform and the nearest track is a cinder path, also about 6 feet wide, which extends west beyond the station to a point 7 feet west of the eastern line of Fourteenth street. Persons going from the town to the station and from the station to the town were accustomed to cross the tracks at any point between the station and Fourteenth street, and this mode of going to and from the station, which was only 100 feet east of Fourteenth street, was well known to the railroad company, and was unobjected to. The plaintiff's train stopped as usual in front of the station, and she alighted, as was customary, on the cinder path next the station platform. Following this path to the rear of her train, which had come from the west, she crossed the most southerly track immediately behind the standing train, and diagonally in the direction of Fourteenth street, and continued this diagonal course across the space between the two tracks. This diagonal direction threw her back partly towards the direction from which a freight train was approaching. Just as she was crossing the second track, she was struck and seriously injured by a train rapidly passing in a direction opposite to that from which her own train had come. This train approached the station with all the usual and proper signals, and her danger was not observed until too late to avert the accident. The evidence made it clear that she could not have seen the train until after she came out from behind the standing train, and there was also evidence tending to show that the noise made by the standing engine, through escaping steam, was likely to deaden the effect of the signals given by the approaching train, as well as the noise made by its travel. Plaintiff testified that she neither heard nor saw the train which collided with her, and that she was looking from the time she started across these tracks. But it is clear that she did not look in the direction from which the colliding train approached, for it was broad daylight, and after she came out from behind the standing train the approach of a train on the other track from the east could have been seen for half a mile, if she had looked in that direction. There was a rule of the company that all "trains approaching a station where a passenger train is receiving or discharging passengers must be stopped before reaching the passenger train." There was evidence tending strongly to show that on this occasion this rule was not observed by the train which collided with the plaintiff, and that it passed the standing train, from which plaintiff alighted, while it was still receiving and discharging passengers, at a speed of from 10 to 12 miles per hour. At the conclusion of all the evidence the defendant below asked for a peremptory instruction against the plaintiff upon the ground of her contributory negligence. This was overruled, and is the principal error now assigned. The court submitted the case to the jury upon the theory that the plaintiff was still a passenger while making her egress from the station over the premises of the company to the nearest public highway, and therefore entitled to a reasonably safe way of exit, and only required to exercise ordinary care in avoiding danger from the movements of trains over tracks which she was obliged to cross in order to make her way to the public street. The charge of the court in respect to the continuance of the relation of a passenger, after safely alighting at the station, and the degree of care incident to such continued relation, was also excepted to, and presents the same question which arose upon the incontestable facts of the case by the motion for a peremptory instruction.

Messrs. Simral & Galvin, with Messrs. Wadsworth & Cochran, for plaintiff in error:

The question of care at railway crossings, as affecting the traveler, is no longer, as a rule, a question for the jury. The quantum of care is exactly prescribed as matter of law.

In attempting to cross, the traveler must listen for signals, notice signs put up as warnings, and look attentively up and down the track.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. pp. 180, 181; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 8 Fed. Rep. 488, 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125; Tucker v. Duncan, 4 Woods, 652, 9 Fed. Rep. 867; Horn v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 6 U. S. App. 381, 54 Fed. Rep. 301, 4 C. C. A. 346; Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson, 12 U. S. App. 254, 55 Fed. Rep. 940, 5 C. C. A. 338; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McClurg, 19 U. S. App. 346, 59 Fed. Rep. 860, 8 C. C. A. 322; Blount v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 21 U. S. App. 129, 61 Fed. Rep. 375, 9 C. C. A. 526; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sharp, 27 U. S. App. 334, 63 Fed. Rep. 532, 11 C. C. A. 337; Northern P. R. Co. v. Austin, 24 U. S. App. 336, 64 Fed. Rep. 211, 12 C. C. A. 97; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Farra, 31 U. S. App. 306, 66 Fed. Rep. 496, 13 C. C. A. 602; McGhee v. Kennedy, 31 U. S. App. 366, 66 Fed. Rep. 503, 13 C. C. A. 608; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Peebles, 28 U. S. App. 405, 67 Fed. Rep. 591, 14 C. C. A. 555; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Blessing, 35 U. S. App. 208, 67 Fed. Rep. 277, 14 C. C. A. 394; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Tripkosh, 32 U. S. App. 168, 406, 67 Fed. Rep. 665, 14 C. C. A. 615; Lynch v. Northern P. R. Co. 29 U. S. App. 664, 69 Fed. Rep. 86, 16 C. C. A. 151; Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. 32 U. S. App. 577, 29 L. R. A. 695, 69 Fed. Rep. 808, 16 C. C. A. 435; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Spalding, 30 U. S. App. 698, 72 Fed. Rep. 152, 18 C. C. A. 496; Canadian P. R. Co. v. Clark, 38 U. S. App. 573, 73 Fed. Rep. 76, 74 Fed. Rep. 362, 20 C. C. A. 447; Pyle v. Clark, 49 U. S. App. 260, 75 Fed. Rep. 644, 79 Fed. Rep. 744, 25 C. C. A. 190; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Barker, 40 U. S. App. 739, 77 Fed. Rep. 810, 23 C. C. A. 475; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cobleigh, 51 U. S. App. 15, 78 Fed. Rep. 784, 24 C. C. A. 342; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Pounds, 49 U. S. App. 476, 82 Fed. Rep. 217, 27 C. C. A. 112; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Steele, 54 U. S. App. 550, 84 Fed. Rep. 93, 29 C. C. A. 81; Continental Improv. Co. v. Stead, 95 U. S. 161, 24 L. ed. 403; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Converse, 139 U. S. 469, 35 L. ed. 213, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603, 40 L. ed. 274, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cody, 166 U. S. 606, 41 L. ed. 1132, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; Northern P. R. Co. v. Freeman, 174 U. S. 379, 43 L. ed. 1014, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 763.

A foot passenger is held to a more vigilant exercise of his senses of sight and hearing at a railway crossing than a vehicle traveler, and in cases where he is the plaintiff emphasis is put upon the fact that he was on foot.

Bannister v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 113 Mich. 530, 71 N. W. 861.
40 L. R. A.

When the crossing is especially dangerous because of obstruction to view and obstacle to hearing, it is the duty of the traveler to stop before attempting to cross.

Tucker v. Duncan, 4 Woods, 652, 9 Fed. Rep. 867; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sharp, 27 U. S. App. 334, 63 Fed. Rep. 532, 11 C. C. A. 337; Northern P. R. Co. v. Austin, 24 U. S. App. 336, 64 Fed. Rep. 211, 12 C. C. A. 97; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Farra, 31 U. S. App. 306, 66 Fed. Rep. 496, 13 C. C. A. 602; Canadian P. R. Co. v. Clark, 38 U. S. App. 573, 73 Fed. Rep. 76, 74 Fed. Rep. 362, 20 C. C. A. 447; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Barker, 40 U. S. App. 739, 77 Fed. Rep. 810, 23 C. C. A. 475; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Steele, 54 U. S. App. 550, 84 Fed. Rep. 93, 29 C. C. A. 81.

It is specially required that the highway traveler shall stop before attempting to cross where the obstruction to sight and hearing is temporary and will soon be removed.

Heaney v. Long Island R. Co. 112 N. Y. 122, 19 N. E. 422; Whalen v. New York O. & H. R. Co. 40 N. Y. S. R. 566, 15 N. Y. Supp. 941; Foran v. New York O. & H. R. Co. 64 Hun, 510, 19 N. Y. Supp. 417; McOrory v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 531; Marty v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 38 Minn. 108, 35 N. W. 670; Oleson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 143 Ind. 405, 32 L. R. A. 149, 42 N. E. 736; West Jersey R. Co. v. Ewan, 55 N. J. L. 574, 27 Atl. 1064; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pfuehl, 60 N. J. L. 278, 37 Atl. 1100.

A highway traveler is highly negligent if he unnecessarily goes behind an obstruction and from thence immediately onto the track in front of an engine without looking.

Kilbride v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 17 App. Div. 177, 45 N. Y. Supp. 302; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mosley, 12 U. S. App. 601, 57 Fed. Rep. 921, 6 C. C. A. 641.

The reason why the person crossing in passenger-crossing cases is not bound to look and listen while crossing does not lie in the fact that he has a right to cross; or in the fact that the railroad company owes him the positive duty of exercising care to prevent harm to him while crossing; or in the fact that it has invited him to cross, and assured him that he would be safe in crossing, because the same fact in highway-crossing cases does not have a similar effect.

The highway traveler is just as much entitled to the exercise of the care due him, and has as much right to expect that it will be exercised, as the passenger is entitled to the exercise of the care due him, and has the right to expect that it will be exercised.

That from which the invitation and assurance are implied is different in the two classes of cases. In highway-crossing cases they are implied from an omission—a failure to lower the gates or to give the proper signals.

In passenger-crossing cases they are implied from an act or acts performed under certain conditions.

The true explanation of the difference between the two classes of cases, as to the care required to be exercised by the person crossing the railroad while in the act of so doing, lies in the fact that when the passenger is in the act of crossing between station and train there is a constructive bailment. In highway-crossing cases no such relation exists actually or constructively.

Because the passenger, while crossing the railroad is in the constructive care of the railroad company, and the highway traveler is not, the railroad company is bound to exercise towards the passenger the utmost care, and towards the highway traveler only ordinary care, and because of this same thing the passenger is not bound to look or listen, and the highway traveler is bound so to do.

In all the passenger-crossing cases the passenger was in the act of crossing from the station to the train, or vice versa, and was, therefore, in the constructive care of the railroad company.

Warren v. Fitchburg R. Co. 8 Allen, 227, 85 Am. Dec. 700; Klein v. Jewett, 26 N. J. Eq. 474, 27 N. J. Eq. 550; Terry v. Jewett, 78 N. Y. 338; Brassell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 241; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Statc ex rel. Hauer, 60 Md. 449; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Anderson, 72 Md. 519, 8 L. R. A. 673, 20 Atl. 2; St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 59 Ark. 122, 26 S. W. 593; Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey, 173 Ill. 169, 50 N. E. 713; Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 339, 42 L. ed. 491, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shean, 18 Colo. 368, 20 L. R. A. 729, 33 Pac. 108; DeKay v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 41 Minn. 178, 4 L. R. A. 632, 43 N. W. 182; Chaffee v. Old Colony R. Co. 17 R. I. 658, 24 Atl. 141.

In no possible sense can it be said that plaintiff was in the care or under the charge or control of defendant when she was struck by its freight train. All care, charge, and control of her person ceased when she alighted on the cinder walk, clear of the cars and tracks.

The passenger does not remain in the constructive care of the railroad company at any moment of time after he has safely alighted from the train, clear of the cars and any intervening tracks between him and the station.

The rule imposing upon the carrier of passengers the highest degree of care has this limitation. It applies only to those means and measures of safety which the passenger of necessity must trust wholly to the carrier.

Thomp. Carr. § 209; Dodge v. Boston & B. S. S. Co. 148 Mass. 207, 2 L. R. A. 83, 19 N. E. 373; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Coggins, 60 U. S. App. 140, 88 Fed. Rep. 455, 32 C. C. A. 1; Kelly v. Manhattan R. Co. 112 N. Y. 443, 3 L. R. A. 74, 20 N. E. 383; Louisville R. Co. v. Park, 96 Ky. 580, 29 S. W. 455; Wood v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 177 Pa. 306, 35 L. R. A. 199, 35 Atl. 699; Conroy v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 96 Wis. 243, 38 L. R. A. 419, 70 N. W. 486; Kirby v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 20 App. Div. 473, 46 N. Y. Supp. 777; Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 104 Ind. 239, 3 N. E. 874; Texas & P. R. Co. 49 L. R. A.

v. Miller, 79 Tex. 78, 11 L. R. A. 395, 15 S. W. 264; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 521A.

There was nothing in the case which could be construed into an invitation to plaintiff to cross when and where she attempted to do so.

Because it permitted persons to pass there, it could not be said that it invited them so to do—particularly in the face of the invitation to follow the cinder walk.

Heiss v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 103 Iowa, 590, 72 N. W. 787; Connolly v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 158 Mass. 8, 32 N. E. 937.

The inference is conclusive that either she did not look or that she looked, and, seeing the train, tried to beat it across.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Freeman, 174 U. S. 379, 43 L. ed. 1014, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; Arts v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 34 Iowa, 153; Payne v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 136 Mo. 562, 38 S. W. 308; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pfuell, 60 N. J. L. 278, 37 Atl. 1100.

To attempt to cross the railroad tracks in a state of "self-absorption" is "gross negligence."

Blount v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 22 U. S. App. 129, 61 Fed. Rep. 375, 9 C. C. A. 520; Winslow v. Boston & M. R. Co. 165 Mass. 264, 42 N. E. 1133; Bancroft v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 97 Mass. 275.

Even where the passenger alights on the opposite side from the regular station, and is injured while crossing the track on that side and between him and a point outside of all tracks, the space between the two tracks may be such that the passenger may be considered, when he has reached it and before he attempts to cross the other track, as having safely alighted, and therefore bound to look and listen before attempting to cross.

Connolly v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 158 Mass. 8, 32 N. E. 937.

On petition for rehearing.

An intending passenger while going to and in the depot waiting for the arrival of his train, or a departing passenger while in or leaving the depot after having alighted from the train, is not, in fact, in charge of the railway company while so doing. The care due from such a company to such party under such circumstances is not of as high a degree as when the party is aboard the train or embarking on it or alighting from it.

4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1590.

Mr. D. W. Steele, Jr., for defendant in error:

One has a right to make use of the customary mode of alighting from a train of cars and of reaching his home.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Lowell, 151 U. S. 209, 38 L. ed. 131, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281.

Defendant in error was entitled to the care and protection of the railway company from the time she alighted at the depot until she had a reasonable time to get away by a clear and safe way from the depot and out of reach of danger.

Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 339, 42 L. ed. 491, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68; Terry v. Jewett, 78 N. Y. 344; Graven v.

MacLeod, 92 Fed. Rep. 846, 35 C. C. A. 47; Burnham v. Wabash Western R. Co. 91 Mich. 523, 52 N. W. 14; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 28 L. ed. 141; Burbank v. Illinois C. R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 1156, 11 L. R. A. 720, 8 So. 580; Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey, 173 Ill. 169, 60 N. E. 713.

The passenger, in attempting to pass from the depot to the cars, in the absence of all warning of danger, had a right to regard herself in a place of safety, where she might safely give her whole attention to the business in hand, and not bound to be on the lookout for extraordinary perils, created by the gross mismanagement of the persons in charge of the railway.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. 3d ed. § 144; Whitaker's Smith, Neg. ed. 1896, p. 389; 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 516; Gleeson v. Virginia Midland R. Co. 140 U. S. 435, 35 L. ed. 458, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 859.

Lorton, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This case must turn here, as it did below, upon the single question as to whether the defendant in error, at the time she was injured, stood in the relation of a passenger to the railroad company. The insistence of counsel for the company is that when Miss King alighted from the train on the cinder path, between her train and the depot platform, she was in a place of safety, and the relation of carrier and passenger at an end. It is true that when upon the cinder path there was no obstacle between her and the depot platform. But can it be said that she was clear of train and tracks when it was necessary to cross two tracks before she could get off of the company's premises and upon the public highway? The cinder path was on the company's right of way. She might have pursued that path until she reached a point opposite Fourteenth street, and then crossed. That was doubtless her safer course, for it would have given her a clear view of both tracks. But the evidence tended to show that passengers alighting where she did more usually crossed the tracks immediately in front of the depot, or crossed them obliquely in the direction of the head of Fourteenth street, and that any of these ways of going from the station were equally approved by the company. The question as to whether the company had provided a particular way of egress from its premises, or acquiesced in the crossing of its tracks at any point between the station and the head of the public street, was a question of fact submitted to the jury. If it was equally open to her to cross diagonally to Fourteenth street as she did, the question is whether the company was under any obligation to her to so operate its trains that that way off of the company's premises should not be unnecessarily dangerous. If, while making her way from the station to the public street, she was constructively still a passenger, then the company did come under a higher obligation to provide a reasonably safe mode of exit than if she was a mere traveler crossing at a public highway or elsewhere by license of the company. Did the relation of passenger and carrier continue while making her way across these tracks, or did it terminate when she alighted upon a path between which and the public street these tracks intervened? Upon this subject the learned circuit judge instructed the jury as follows: "But the defendant railway company owes more to a passenger than merely to provide a place to alight. It must provide a place reasonably adapted for alighting on its own grounds, from which there is access to some public highway. While passengers are upon its premises, using that convenient means of access which the company furnishes for passengers to alight and reach the highway, they continue passengers, provided they obey the rules of the company, and use that means of access to the highway from the place of alighting in the manner that the company intends and gives them reason to believe they are to use it." Upon the subject of the duty of the passenger to use the way of egress from its premises provided for that purpose, the court said: "Now, if you find that there was a way provided along the track running down to a place opposite Fourteenth street, and that that was the way which the company intended that their passengers should go, and that this crossing of the track where she did cross it was not with the permission of the company, then the company is not responsible for the accident which occurred by reason of her going a different way from that which was provided; because, you will observe, if she had gone down on the south side of the track to Fourteenth street she would have avoided the danger of crossing the track just behind a train in such a way that she could not have seen the train coming on the other track; but, if the company permitted another way, so that it was well recognized as the way for the passengers to leave the station, by crossing the track directly back of the train, and not going clear down to a point opposite Fourteenth street, then you would be justified in finding that this plaintiff was using a way which the company intended she should use, and was a passenger." On the same subject the court said: "Now, if you find that the company permitted the way to be used which was used by the plaintiff in reaching Fourteenth street, then I charge you that she was a passenger, and entitled to that care from the company which passengers under the law have a right to expect. That care is much higher than the care due to a mere traveler crossing the tracks, or to a trespasser on the track." In respect to the alleged contributory negligence of the defendant in error, the court said: "Now, was she negligent? Did she do something in crossing that track that a reasonably prudent person would not have done, and which, if she had not done, she would not have been injured? If so, she cannot recover. Of course, you would not have reached this point in the case without finding that she was a passenger. As a passenger she had a right to expect that the company would look after her welfare more than if she were a mere traveler, and so you must consider that relation that she bore to the company in determining whether she was guilty of negligence. How far she ought to have relied on the company to prevent her injury in this case is for you to determine. Of course, she cannot rely absolutely on that, otherwise she might thus just blindfold her eyes, and wander about there on the passageway provided for her without any regard whatever to whether she would be injured or not; but, on the other hand, it is an element which you are to consider that she had a right to put some reliance on the care of the company. The ordinary rule of a traveler crossing the track is that he must look and listen. That rule, in the case of a passenger crossing the track under these circumstances, is modified by the reliance which he or she is entitled to put upon the care the company will exercise to save him or her from injury. It is for you to judge how much she ought to have relied upon that in this case. If you find that she relied too much on it, and that she ought to have used her senses more, and that, if she had, she would have avoided the injury, then she cannot recover here."

49 L. R. A.

This was a clear and sound exposition of the law relating to the facts of this case, and is fully supported by Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Lovell, 151 U. S. 209, 38 L. ed. 131, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 339, 42 L. ed. 491, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68; Graven v. MacLeod, 92 Fed. Rep. 846, 35 C. C. A. 47; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Coggins, 60 U. S. App. 140, 88 Fed. Rep. 455, 32 C. C. A. 1; Brassell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 241; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Anderson, 72 Md. 519, 8 L. R. A. 673, 20 Atl. 2; St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 59 Ark. 122, 26 S. W. 593; Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey, 173 Ill. 169, 50 N. E. 713; and Burnham v. Wabash Western R. Co. 91 Mich. 523, 52 N. W. 14. The case is not distinguishable on principle and is clearly analogous in its facts to that of Graven v. MacLeod, decided by this court, and cited above. In that case, Graven, after alighting in safety upon a cinder path between two tracks, left that place of safety, and crossed the track intervening between that place and the street, which crossed both tracks some distance to the right of his point of alighting. It is true that when he had thus alighted he was not clear of train and track, because one track intervened between him and the public highway. Neither was the defendant in error clear of train and track, for two tracks intervened between her and the only highway by which she could leave the premises. If counsel for plaintiff in error is right in construing the Graven Case as one in which the facts showed that the "act of alighting was incomplete" until Graven reached the outside of the other track, and was clear of it, then the same condition existed in respect to the defendant in error. If a passenger alights by direction of the company, or by its implied invitation, at a place where, in order to leave the premises of the company it is necessary to cross an intervening track, there is an implied agreement that in using that mode of egress from the premises its trains shall not be so operated as to make the exit unnecessarily dangerous. This is the doctrine of the Lowell and Warner Cases, cited above, and is the principle which governed the Graven Case, and which was so well expressed in the charge of the circuit judge below. A passenger alighting under such conditions may, in the absence of circumstances of warning, be justified in presuming that the trains of the company will not be so operated as to impose on him the same high degree of care which he would be obliged to exercise if he were not a passenger. Neither is this reliance upon the care of the company dependent wholly upon a knowledge of a rule forbidding trains to pass another while receiving or discharging passengers. That rule is but an expression of that degree of care which a passenger would have a right to expect from a railroad company under such conditions. In Terry v. Jewett, 78 N. Y. 338-344, it was said that "it may be assumed that a railroad corporation, in the exercise of ordinary care, so regulates the running of its trains that the road is free from interruption or obstruction where passenger trains stop at a station to receive and deliver passengers. Any other system would be dangerous to human life, and impose great risks upon those who might have occasion to travel on the railroad."

This language was quoted and approved in Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. cited above, where it was said, in speaking of the implied invitation extended by a situation such as that shown in this case, that "the railroad, under such circumstances, in giving the invitation, must necessarily be presumed to have taken into view the state of mind and of conduct which would be engendered by the invitation; and the passenger, on the other hand, would have a right to presume that in giving the invitation the railroad itself had arranged for the operation of its trains with proper care."

The failure to look and listen before crossing a railway track is negligence per se in a traveler at a highway. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Converse, 139 U. S. 469, 35 L. ed. 213, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603, 40 L. ed. 274, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cody, 166 U. S. 608, 41 L. ed. 1132, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; Northern P. R. Co. v. Freeman, 174 U. S. 379, 43 L. ed. 1014, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 763; Blount v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 22 U. S. App. 129, 61 Fed. Rep. 375, 9 C. C. A. 526; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Farra, 31 U. S. App. 306, 66 Fed. Rep. 496, 13 C. C. A. 602. But there is a difference in the degree of care and caution demanded from a traveler crossing a railway at a public crossing and that demanded from a passenger in crossing tracks which intervene between the usual place of alighting from cars and the public highway. In the latter case the company should furnish the passenger with reasonable and adequate protection against accident in the exercise of the privilege of a safe exit from its premises. But such a passenger, in either going to or crossing from the cars, is not absolved from the duty of exercising care and caution in avoiding danger according to the circumstances. The failure of a passenger to look or listen under such circumstances may or may not be negligence, according to the peculiar facts, and is, as held in the cases of Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. and Graven v. MacLeod, cited above, ordinarily a question of fact for the jury.

It was not error to refuse the peremptory instruction asked by the plaintiff in error, and the judgment must be affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, NINTH CIRCUIT.

Henry SMITH, Plff. in Err.,
v.

J. G. DAY et al.

(100 Fed. Rep. 244.)

1. A passenger who goes upon a boat at a wharf and sits down and goes to sleep in the cabin, knowing that blasting is being done by contractors near by, assumes, as against such contractors, all risks necessarily incident to such work, if prosecuted with skill and reasonable care.
2. The contributory negligence of a person who goes upon a boat at a wharf and goes to sleep in the cabin, knowing that contractors are blasting near by, is a question for the jury.
3. Evidence that a navigation company had an agreement with contractors who were blasting near a wharf, under which it used the wharf at its own peril, is inadmissible in an action against the contractors by a person who was injured by the blasting while he was a passenger on a boat at the wharf.

(February 5, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Oregon to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendants' negligence. Reversed.

Before McKenna, Circuit Justice, and Ross and Morrow, Circuit Judges.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. W. Allen and A. S. Bennett, for plaintiff in error:

Even if the state railroad commission, in operating this portage, was licensee of the government, that could not possibly make the degree of care incumbent upon the defendants towards the passengers any less; but as long as the government permitted the state railroad commission to pass across this portage for the purpose of carrying passengers, the presence of the passengers was lawful, and the defendants, knowing their presence there, must use just as much care to prevent injury, so far as any affirmative action upon their part is concerned, as though they were passing across as a matter of absolute, irrevocable right.

Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 187; Connell v. Southern R. Co. 63 U. S. App. 429, 91 Fed. Rep. 466, 33 C. C. A. 633; Ca-hill v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 U. S. App. 85, 74 Fed. Rep. 285, 20 C. C. A. 184; Adams v. Southern R. Co. 52 U. S. App. 433, 84 Fed. Rep. 596, 28 C. C. A. 494; Smith v. Pittsburg & W. R. Co. 90 Fed. Rep. 783; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Wagley, 63 U. S. App. 728, 91 Fed. Rep. 860, 34 C. C. A. 114; Webb v. Portland & K. R. Co. 57 Me. 117; Booth-by v. Boston & M. R. Co. 90 Me. 313, 38 Atl. 155; Clampit v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 84 Iowa, 71, 60 N. W. 673; Seymour v. Central Vermont R. Co. 69 Vt. 555, 38 Atl. 236; Davis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 646, 46 Am. Rep. 667, 17 N. W. 406; Hansen v. Southern P. R. Co. 105 Cal. 379, 38 Pac. 957; Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11, 12 N. E. 451; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Dick, 91 Ky. 434, 15 S. W. 665; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Grablin, 38 Neb. 90, 56 N. W. 796, 57 N. W. 522; Virginia Midland R. Co. v. White, 84 Va. 498, 5 S. E. 573; LeMay v. Missouri P. R. Co. 105 Mo. 361, 16 S. W. 1049; Troy v. Cape Fear & Y. Valley R. Co. 99 N. C. 298, 8 S. E. 77; Swift v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 645, 25 N. E. 378; Taylor v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 113 Pa. 162, 8 Atl. 43.

The owner or possessor of premises must, in the operation of his work, observe the same care towards the licensee as he would towards a person there of absolute right.

Gallagher v. Humphrey, 6 L. T. N. S. 684; Connell v. Southern R. Co. 63 U. S. App. 429, 91 Fed. Rep. 466, 33 C. C. A. 633; Webb v. Portland & K. R. Co. 57 Me. 117; Seymour v. Central Vermont R. Co. 69 Vt. 555, 38 Atl. 236; Swift v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 645, 25 N. E. 378; Clampit v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 84 Iowa, 71, 50 N. W. 673.

If a party may relieve himself from the exercise of any measure of care and prudence, or the adoption of any safeguards or protection on the ground that if he takes such precautions he will not have time to comply with his contract, a contractor cannot avoid all liability simply by accepting a contract to do a given work under such circumstances and within such time that it is impossible to perform the terms of his contract, and at the same time prosecute the work with a cautious and prudent regard for the rights of others.

NOTE.—As to liability for negligence of independent contractor in blasting, see note to Hawver v. Whalen (Ohio) 14 L. R. A. on page 830; also Berg v. Parsons (N. Y.) 41 L. R. A. 391.

40 L. R. A.

Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co. 50 Mich. 163, 45 Am. Rep. 30, 15 N. W. 65; Eaton v. Cripps, 94 Iowa, 176, 62 N. W. 687; Roth v. Union Depot Co. 13 Wash. 525, 31 L. R. A. 855, 43 Pac. 644, 44 Pac. 253; Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 391, 39 L. ed. 464, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

There was absolutely no evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, and therefore this question should not have been submitted to the jury.

2 Thompson, Trials, § 2315, p. 1668; Winters v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 39 Mo. 468.

Messrs. Dolph, Mallory, Simon, & Gearin and Stott, Boise, & Stout, for defendants in error:

This plaintiff, from the time he entered the reservation at the upper cascades, was a mere naked licensee.

Licensees do not stand in the same position, and are not entitled to the same rights, as persons on the premises by virtue of some right or invitation which brings them there.

Berlin Mills Co. v. Oroteau, 50 U. S. App. 419, 88 Fed. Rep. 862; June v. Boston & A. R. Co. 153 Mass. 82, 26 N. E. 238; Stevens v. Nichols, 155 Mass. 475, 15 L. R. A. 459, 29 N. E. 1150; Reardon v. Thompson, 149 Mass. 267, 21 N. E. 369; Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 472; Redigan v. Boston & M. R. Co. 155 Mass. 47, 18 L. R. A. 276, 28 N. E. 1133; Sterger v. Van Sicken, 132 N. Y. 505, 16 L. R. A. 640, 30 N. E. 987; Cusick v. Adams, 115 N. Y. 59, 21 N. E. 726; Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 306, 27 L. R. A. 724, 39 N. E. 1068.

The licensor owes to the mere licensee no duty except that of abstaining from any positive wrongful act which may result in his injury, and the licensee takes all risks as to the safe condition of the premises upon which he enters.

Warruff v. Bowen, 136 Ind. 431, 22 L. R. A. 198, 34 N. E. 1117; Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 141, 98 Am. Dec. 317; Illinois O. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 71 Ill. 507, 22 Am. Rep. 112; Fitzpatrick v. Cumberland Glass Mfg. Co. 61 N. J. L. 378, 39 Atl. 675; Brehmer v. Lyman, 71 Vt. 98, 42 Atl. 613; Metcalf v. Cunard S. S. Co. 147 Mass. 66, 16 N. E. 701; Beehler v. Daniels, 18 R. I. 563, 27 L. R. A. 512, 29 Atl. 6; Ritz v. Wheeling, 45 W. Va. 262, 43 L. R. A. 148, 31 S. E. 993.

Ross, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

At the time of the injury for which the plaintiff in error brought this action, the defendants J. G. & I. N. Day were engaged, as contractors for the United States, in making rock excavations for the locks then in course of construction at the point on the Columbia river known as the "Cascade Locks." Their work was being carried on within the boundaries of the tract of land that had been theretofore acquired by the government by condemnation proceedings for the purposes of the work then under construction. Across this tract Congress had, by joint resolution, authorized the state of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a portage railroad, and to use in the construction of the same, and in the operation thereof, the government roads upon the land, provided that such occupation and use should not interfere with the government works at the Cascades, and should be under such restrictions and regulations as the secretary of war should prescribe. This grant the state of Oregon exercised and enjoyed by building a portage railway, and operating the same, through its state railway commission, for the transfer, in part, of passengers from the boat plying on the river above and below the locks. The railroad so constructed had afterwards to be given up by the state railway commission, after which the commission was allowed by the United States engineer in charge of the government work, and by the contractors Day, to use the tracks which were built by the government for use during the construction of the work, and which tracks were turned over to the defendants Day, when they took charge of it. Upon the execution of the contract between the government and the defendants Day, they were put in possession of the government property, and they had been engaged in the prosecution of the work for several years when the accident complained of occurred. They had a large force of men employed, and their practice was to fire off blasts at the noon hour, after the workmen had left their work for dinner, and in the evening, after the time arrived for stopping work for the day. The blasting at the point in question could only be done at the low stage of the water of the river, which continued only from the early part of November to the early part of January. At the time of the accident the plaintiff was a passenger of the Dalles, Portland, & Astoria Navigation Company, en route from The Dalles to Portland. Upon arriving at the upper lock he went, with other passengers, by means of the portage railway, to the lower wharf on the government reserve, near which point the work of blasting was being done. Upon reaching the lower wharf he went on board the boat of the navigation company, which lay alongside. When he got to the boat he heard blasting, and understood that it was being carried on. He went upon the boat, and was occupied for about fifteen minutes in playing a game of cards, after which he talked to the steward of the boat for a few minutes, and then sat down in the forward cabin and went to sleep. While sitting there in that condition he was struck by a rock thrown by one of the blasts, which broke through the upper deck of the boat, resulting in his serious injury. The negligence alleged against the defendants Day, in the complaint, is their failure to give notice or warning to the plaintiff and others that they were about to do the blasting that inflicted the injury, and were negligent in setting off the blast at the time they did, within such close proximity to the boat on which the plaintiff, with others, was a passenger. The blast that caused the injury was fired shortly after noon. The boat on which the plaintiff went as a passenger lay alongside of a floating wharf, and at a distance variously estimated by the witnesses at from 150 to 300 feet from the point where the blasting was being done. The boat sometimes arrived at the floating wharf before and sometimes after 12 o'clock, and was accustomed to lay there for periods ranging from forty-one minutes to two hours and fifty-one minutes. While several witnesses on the part of the plaintiff, who were upon the boat at the time of the accident, testified that they heard no warning of the blast given, there was testimony on the part of the defendants tending to show that warning was given by crying the word "Fire," which could have been and was heard by those on the boat who gave any attention to their surroundings; and the plaintiff himself testified, among other things, as follows: "That he came from The Dalles to the locks on the Regulator; that Mr. Mosher and Mr. Young and Mr. Kelly and other persons were with him; that when he got to Cascade Locks he got on the portage railway, and rode on the train down to the lower wharf, and then got on from there onto The Dalles City; that he went right along with the other passengers. Q. Well, when you got down to The Dalles City, go on and tell the jury just what happened. A. There was about twenty-five or thirty passengers going up the stream, and I was going down; and the time of the hubbub of the people getting off the boat—There was blasting at that time, so I understood. I heard some noise, and went in and sat down, and the people went up the river, and, after the passengers going up stream had got off the boat, we sat down and played a game of cards,—played a game of Pedro for about fifteen minutes; and then I went and sat down on the seat, and went to talking to the steward for a few minutes, and then I sat down in this kind of a seat, and the boat was rocking. It rocked me into a kind of dozing sleep, and the rock struck me on the head. I never knew what struck me."

We agree with the learned judge of the court below where he said, in ruling upon the plaintiff's motion for a new trial (86 Fed. Rep. 62), that "the plaintiff and his fellow passengers went upon the premises where the blasting was being done with their eyes open. Their right there, whether it was a right by sufferance or license, implied or otherwise, was subordinate to the right of the defendants to prosecute the work in 49 L. R. A.

which they were engaged. These passengers assumed all risks necessarily incident to such work prosecuted with skill and reasonable care,—such care as is usually employed under like circumstances. They had a right to expect, and are presumed to have relied upon, this degree of care."

We also agree, contrary to the contention of the plaintiff in error, that the facts and circumstances of the case were such as to make it proper for the court below to submit to the jury the question of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff; and, in the main, we think the instructions given by the court below to the jury were quite as favorable to the plaintiff as they should have been, and in one respect perhaps too much so, namely, in submitting to the jury the question as to whether the defendants were in duty bound to cover their blasts, or to await the departure of the boat before firing them. But there was one error committed in the trial, for which we feel bound to reverse the judgment. Against the objection of the plaintiff, one of the defendants Day, was permitted to testify to an agreement had between the defendants and the navigation company, by which that company used the wharf at which the plaintiff's injury occurred at its own peril; and the court below refused to instruct the jury, as requested by the plaintiff, that, if there was an arrangement between the navigation company and the defendants by which the former was permitted to use the landing where the accident occurred at its peril, this would not bind the plaintiff. That the plaintiff's rights were entirely unaffected by any contract or understanding between the defendants and the navigation company is very clear. Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 29 L. ed. 652, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361, and cases there cited. The refusal to give the instruction requested by the plaintiff, in view of the admission, over the objection of the plaintiff, of the testimony on the part of the defendants in respect to the arrangement between the defendants and the navigation company, constituted, in our opinion, error which was not overcome by any other instruction given by the court. The presumption of error arising from the erroneous admission of that testimony on the part of the defendants is strengthened by the refusal of the court to give the instruction requested by the plaintiff to which reference has been made.

For this error the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below for a new trial. It is so ordered.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

Perry GASTINEAU, Appt.,
v.
COMMONWEALTH of Kentucky.

(.....Ky.....)

A municipal ordinance making it a misdemeanor for a woman to go into any building where liquor is sold, or stand within 50 feet of such building, is void as an unnecessary interference with individual liberty.

(May 15, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Bell County convicting him of violating an ordinance forbidding the permitting of women to enter or loiter near a place where liquor is sold. Reversed.

NOTE.—Constitutionality of discrimination against women in police regulations.

- I. In granting licenses to sell liquors.
- II. In excluding women from employments and places of business.
- III. In restricting freedom, society, or right to live in locality.

The right to make police regulations which affect women only, or which discriminate against women by being more severe and burdensome, is one that has not been much discussed by the courts.

There are many ordinances aimed at the prevention of immorality, which apply to women only, but their constitutionality has rarely been attacked. They have usually been assumed to be valid; and when their validity has been tested it has usually been on some other ground than that of discrimination between the sexes.

But there are some ordinances and statutes which have been assailed on the ground that they make an unconstitutional discrimination against women. These fall into three classes, as shown by the headings above.

I. In granting licenses to sell liquors.

A discrimination against women in statutes providing for licenses to sell intoxicating liquors is doubtless based on the theory that there are reasons for excluding women from such occupations which do not apply to men. Whether such discrimination could be upheld, except when it is part of a police regulation, or not, it is plain that the sale of intoxicants is subject to such regulation, and that the immoral tendencies of a mingling of men and women in drinking places which have been clearly recognized by the courts, make abundant reason for prohibiting it.

A statute restricting the right to licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors to male inhabitants of the state is upheld in Welsh v. State, 126 Ind. 71, 9 L. R. A. 664, against the contention that it discriminates against citizens of other states, but the effect of the discrimination against women is not discussed.

Discrimination against women by limiting to males the right to take out licenses for the sale of intoxicants is held, in Blair v. Kilpatrick, 40 Ind. 312, not to be in violation of the guaranties of the state Constitution respecting the equality of privileges and immunities of citizens. 49 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.
Mr. G. W. Saulsberry for appellant.
Messrs. F. D. Goodwin and T. G. Anderson for the Commonwealth.

Guffy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The sole question presented for decision is whether or not the following ordinances are valid or constitutional. The appellant, having been convicted for a violation thereof, prosecuted an appeal to the circuit court, and, the circuit court having adjudged the ordinances valid, and rendered a judgment for costs against the appellant, he prosecutes an appeal from so much of the judgment as holds said ordinance to be valid. The ordinances read as follows: "Be it ordained by the board of council of the city of zens, notwithstanding the fact that women are citizens, since the right to sell intoxicants is not one of the privileges and immunities of citizens.

The validity of a statutory provision restricting licenses for the sale of liquors to male inhabitants of the state is also sustained in Woodford v. Hamilton, 189 Ind. 481, 39 N. E. 47, in an action against a woman engaged in the retail liquor business to recover the price of intoxicating liquors sold to her. Recovery was denied on the ground that she could not lawfully engage in the business, and her contract for the purchase of the liquors, being unlawful, could not be enforced against her by the seller, who knew that she was engaged in an unlawful business.

Discrimination against women and nonresidents by an ordinance providing for the granting of licenses to sell intoxicating liquors is held, in Wagner v. Garrett, 118 Ind. 114, 20 N. E. 706, to be an objection against the validity of the ordinance which cannot be urged by a male citizen. This is in accordance with the principle that the invasion of the rights of a certain class of persons can be complained of only by those who are injured by it.

That the right to sell intoxicating liquors is not one of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States is fully established by the Supreme Court of the United States in Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129, 21 L. ed. 929; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Glozza v. Tierman, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721.

That it is not one of the equal privileges and immunities of the citizens of a state is also established, in effect, by the numerous decisions which uphold license laws. The universal agreement in holding that the sale of intoxicants is a business that is subject to the police power is sufficient reason for refusing to permit all citizens to engage in it.

As to the validity of a statute denying a saloon license, or fixing higher rate in case women are employed there, see Foster v. Police Comrs. 102 Cal. 483, 37 Pac. 763, and Ex parte Felchlin, 96 Cal. 360, 31 Pac. 224, under II. infra.

II. In excluding women from employments and places of business.

Most of the cases respecting the exclusion of women from employments by police regulations

Middlesboro, Bell county, Ky.: (1) That it shall be unlawful for any woman to go in and out of any building where a saloon is kept offering for sale any spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors, or to frequent, loaf, or stand around said building within fifty feet thereof. (2) That it shall be unlawful for any saloon keeper or his clerk or employees to allow or permit any woman or women to come in or out of his building where spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors are sold or offered for sale, and it shall be the duty of said saloon keeper, clerk, or employees to immediately notify the officers that the first section of this ordinance had been violated, giving the name and color of the offender. (3) Any woman violating section No. 1 of this ordinance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not less than $1.00 nor more than $10.00 or confined in the city jail not less than ten days nor more than thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court. (4) Any saloon keeper, clerk, or employee of the saloon keeper violating section No. 2 of this ordinance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not less than $5.00 nor more than $10.00 for the first offense, and for the second offense it shall be good grounds for the revocation of said saloon keeper's license."

It is contended for appellee that the sole object of the ordinance is to regulate and control the sale of liquors by reason of the fact that very disreputable, low, and vile women congregate in and about saloons and places where liquor is sold, thereby causing affrays, fights, murder, and other crimes. It is claimed that under subsection 27 of § 59 of the Constitution the city council had au-relate to their employment in places where intoxicating liquors are sold. The only difficulty that the courts have found in upholding provisions of this kind has arisen under the California Constitution, which provides that no person shall, on account of sex, be disqualified from entering upon or pursuing any lawful business, vocation, or profession. The statutes and ordinances on this subject, while aimed at the same result, are somewhat different in their form and effect. Some of them prohibit the grant of a license to a person employing female waiters or assistants, or impose a higher license upon such persons, or prohibit the sale of liquors where women are employed, while others directly prohibit the employment of women at such places.

A statute making it unlawful to sell intoxicating liquors "in any room, hall, or other place where women or minors are employed, or are allowed to assemble for the purposes of the business therein carried on," was held valid in State ex rel. Marion v. Reynolds (1894) 14 Mont. 383, 36 Pac. 449. The contention that it was unconstitutional because it prohibited women from engaging in a lawful employment was rejected on the ground that the statute did not prohibit their employment, but did prohibit all persons from selling intoxicating liquors in a place where they were employed or assembled for the purposes of the business. The court said: "There appears to be wisdom and propriety in this provision as a police regulation, and we fail to find in it any infringement of any provision of our Constitution. The California court in cases cited on this point had under consideration constitutional provisions which are not found in the Constitution which also appear to have been greatly modified by revision of the California Constitution since the cases relied on were decided."

An ordinance prohibiting the sale of liquors or wines in dance cellars or other places where musical and theatrical entertainments are given, and where females attend as waitresses, is held, in Ex parte Hayes, 98 Cal. 556, 20 L. R. A. 701, 33 Pac. 337, to be within the general grant of power to make local, police, sanitary, and other regulations not in conflict with general laws, and not to be in conflict with the constitutional provision that no person shall, on account of sex, be disqualified from entering upon or pursuing any lawful business, vocation, or profession. As to this constitutional provision the court says: "This section does not, in our opinion, operate as a limitation upon the power of the state or its municipalities to prescribe the conditions upon which the business of retailing intoxicating liquors shall be permitted to be carried on, or in regulating the manner in which such business shall be conducted."

An ordinance fixing the amount of a saloon license at a higher rate where females are employed is upheld in Ex parte Feichlin, 96 Cal. 360, 31 Pac. 224, against the contention that it violates Cal. Const. art. 20, § 18, providing: "No person shall, on account of sex, be disqualified from entering upon or pursuing any lawful business, vocation, or profession." The court declared that such an ordinance was not open to any of the objections made in the case of Re McGuire (1881) 57 Cal. 604, 40 Am. Rep. 125, infra.

An ordinance which forbids the granting of a liquor license to any person employing females to wait on customers in carrying on the business of selling intoxicating liquors is held valid, also, in Foster v. Police Comrs. 102 Cal. 483, 37 Pac. 763, following Ex parte Hayes. The contention that the ordinance made an illegal discrimination was answered by saying that it "affects all persons of certain classes without discrimination, and as to them acts uniformly."

An ordinance making it unlawful to employ any girl or woman other than the wife of the proprietor in any "room or place wherein ale, beer, porter, wine, or liquors are sold," was held valid in Bergman v. Cleveland, 39 Ohio St. 651, in denial of the contention that it violated the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution. It was held to be within the power given by statute to "regulate" places where intoxicants are sold. In this case the question of discrimination against women was not expressly discussed.

An ordinance making it unlawful for any female to be, after 12 o'clock at night, in any public drinking saloon, beer cellar, or billiard room where intoxicating liquors are sold or given away to be drunk on the premises is sustained in Ex parte Smith (1869) 38 Cal. 702, where it was attacked on the ground that it violated constitutional provisions that "every law of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." The purpose of the ordinance was deemed to be to prevent the vicious and immoral tendency of the presence of females at such times and places, and the court held that the constitutional provision "was not intended to overturn the laws of nature or disturb the relations of cause and effect, or obliterate distinctions where from the very nature and necessity thority to enact the ordinances in question. It is insisted for appellant that in any event, the ordinance is too sweeping in its nature, and subjects every woman who may chance to be walking along the street and meet a friend, and stop within 50 feet of a saloon, or should go into a hotel where liquor is sold, to arrest and punishment. It seems to us that the ordinance in question is unreasonable, and an unnecessary interference with individual liberty, and tends to subject the vendor of liquors as well as citizens to unreasonable prosecutions. If the ordinance only included the persons mentioned in appellee's brief, we are not prepared to say that it would be invalid. But it might be that very good women would, for proper and legal purposes, find it necessary to go into a building where liquor was sold, or stop for a reasonable time within 50 feet of same; and, besides, we know of no rule of law which prohibits a well-behaved woman, for a lawful purpose, and in a lawful manner, from going into or near a saloon. It may be taken for granted that it is not often that such would be the case, but the ordinances in question make no exceptions. If the citizens of Middlesboro choose to have saloons established where liquor is sold, it follows that all orderly and well-behaved persons have a right in an orderly manner, and for a lawful purpose, to visit such saloons.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment appealed from is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the court below to adjudge the ordinances in question invalid and unconstitutional, and for proceedings consistent herewith.

of things distinctions must exist." The court added: "It was not intended that all differences founded upon class or sex should be ignored."

The provision of Cal. Const. art. 20, § 18, that "no person shall, on account of sex, be disqualified from entering upon or pursuing any lawful business, vocation, or profession," was held, in Re Maguire (1881) 57 Cal. 604, 40 Am. Rep. 125, to be violated by an ordinance making it a misdemeanor for a female to wait or in any manner attend on any person in any dance cellar, bar room, or in any place where malt, vinous, or spirituous liquors are used or sold. A woman arrested for violating the ordinance by waiting on persons in a bar room was discharged on habeas corpus. The court said: "The words employed in this ordinance incapacitate a woman from following the business for which the petitioner was fined, and disable her from doing so. This being so, she is disqualified by the ordinance under consideration from pursuing a business lawful for men. We are compelled to adopt this or admit that, while the legislature cannot disqualify a person on account of sex from following a lawful business by direct enactment, it may by indirection accomplish the same end, by forbidding under a penalty the prosecution of such business." The contention that the regulation was not made on account of sex, but because such employment of a woman is of a vicious tendency and hurtful to sound public morality, was made unsuccessfully. The court admitted that the object and design of the ordinance might be to prevent immorality, but said: "This object is aimed to be accomplished by an ordinance which precludes a woman from a lawful business," and that the preclusion and disqualification are on account of sex. For that reason the ordinance was held to be a clear violation of the Constitution. Two judges dissented, and one who concurred was unwilling to say that no discrimination could be made between men and women on account of sex in such regulations. He said: "I am not prepared to say, however, that the supervisors cannot, by proper legislation, prevent females from pursuing avocations which, although permissible to men, involve a propinquity of the sexes under such circumstances as may lead directly to immoral results, or to the desecration of the prudent reserve between members of the opposite sexes which it is the province of wise legislation to encourage." He contended that the prevention of such results is a proper exercise of the police power of the state, and that, when a man or woman is prohibited by such legislation from pursuing any lawful business, vocation, or profession, this is not on account of sex, but because of the immorality or indecency that would result. As an illustration, he suggested that a law prohibiting men from being employed as attendants at a bathing establishment to which women alone had admission, or prohibiting women from being attendants at public baths which were frequented by men only, would not be unconstitutional as prohibiting a vocation "on account of sex." His contention was summed up in general form as follows: "The Constitution does not, in my view, deny the power to enact such legislation as may prevent the intrusion of men into the conjoint pursuit with women of occupations which considerations of decency and morality require shall be carried on by the latter separately, and vice versa." He agreed that the ordinance was void in this case, but put his agreement on the ground that the ordinance was unreasonable, ambiguous, and not of uniform operation because of certain exceptions or exemptions that it contained. The court in this case made no reference to that of Ex parte Smith (1869) 38 Cal. 702, in which a similar ordinance was held valid under a constitutional provision requiring that "every law of a general nature shall have a uniform operation."

The court in Re Maguire declared that the Constitution did not preclude legislation to prevent practices hurtful to public morality, but merely directed that a law framed to accomplish that object by affecting or operating upon lawful callings shall affect both sexes alike.

If a reasonable police regulation for the prevention of immorality cannot be made without restricting the occupations of one of the sexes, it would not be within the spirit at least of this constitutional provision. The test of a violation of that provision might reasonably be held to be whether the restriction of an occupation was merely "on account of sex," or was on account of the immorality that would result if the restriction were not made.

The purpose of the California Constitution in providing that no person shall be disqualified on account of sex from engaging in any business was doubtless to secure equality of opportunity to both sexes. It does not seem probable that in the adoption of this provision there was any thought of prohibiting reasonable police regulations, even if their effect must be to limit in some degree the occupations of one sex or the other.

A statute providing that "no female person shall be employed in any capacity in any saloon, beer hall, bar room, theater, or place of

Joseph HECHINGER, Appt.,
 v.
 City of MAYSVILLE.
 (.....Ky.....)

An ordinance making it unlawful for any person to associate, escort, converse, or loiter with any female known as a common prostitute, either by day or by night, upon any of the streets or alleys of the city, except her husband, father, brother, or other male relative, is invalid, as there can be no good reason in exempting any other male relative than the husband, father, or brother from its provisions or for failing to give her mother and sister the same privilege allowed to the father or brother, while any person should be allowed to converse with her long enough to transact any necessary and legitimate business.

(June 20, 1900.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Mason County convicting him of violating a city ordinance amusement where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage," and providing for the punishment of any woman thus engaged and of the person employing her, is held constitutional in State v. Consadine, 16 Wash. 358, 47 Pac. 755. The claim that a woman's liberty to contract is abridged by the statute is answered by saying that liberty to contract was always limited to lawful contracts, and did not extend to contracts against public policy or good morals. The statute in question is said to have been evidently intended by the legislature for the maintenance of good morals and the prevention of a nuisance. It is also said that "the legislature is the supreme authority, within constitutional limitations, to determine what is and what is not an immoral business or a nuisance; and, when it has so determined, its enactment is valid unless the legislative act is clearly partial, arbitrary, and oppressive." The statute in question was held to extend to all female persons employed in the specified business, and not to be in violation of the guaranties of the state and Federal Constitutions against depriving a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or denying the equal privileges or immunities of citizens.

A statute prohibiting the employment of any female person in any capacity in any saloon, beer hall, bar room, theater, or place of amusement where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage was sustained in Re Consadine, 83 Fed. Rep. 157, against the contention that it was in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution as an abridgement of the privileges and immunities of citizens, or a denial of the equal protection of the laws. The court said: "The intent of the legislature is manifest to check the tendency towards immorality of the association of the sexes in places of resort where intoxicating beverages are sold, and where the worst passions are aroused." The statute is declared to be general in its scope, applying equally to all persons similarly situated, and not, therefore, in any sense partial or arbitrary, or enacted to do injury or work injustice. The statute is therefore held to be clearly within the police power of the state.

A statute prohibiting the employment or exhibition of girls under fourteen years of age as dancers, or in theatrical exhibitions, was sustained in People v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 120, 25 L. R. A. 794, 36 N. E. 4, as an exercise of the 49 L. R. A.

which he claimed to be illegal and void. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. N. Kehoe for appellant.

Mr. Thomas M. Wood for appellee.

Guffy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The sole question presented for decision is the validity or constitutionality of the following ordinance, being an ordinance of the city of Maysville, a fourth-class city. The ordinance reads as follows: "Be it ordained by the board of council of the city of Maysville that it shall be unlawful for person or persons other than the husband, father, brother, or male relative, to associate, escort, converse, or loiter with any female known as a common prostitute, either by day or by night, upon any of the streets or alleys of the city of Maysville, and any person or persons other than the said husband, father, brother, or other male relative, so offending shall, upon conviction thereof, be-power of the state as parens patrie to protect the physical, mental, and moral welfare of children. The court said: "The inalienable right of the child or adult to pursue a trade is indisputable; but it must be, not only one which is lawful, but which as to the child of immature years the state or sovereign, as parens patrie, recognizes as proper and safe." The ground of attack upon this statute was that it was an unreasonable interference with the right of the child to earn a livelihood. The discrimination between the sexes was not discussed, though it is made by the statute.

The right of any citizen to engage in any ordinary occupation not needing any police regulation or any special permit or license must certainly be one of the "equal privileges and immunities" which many state Constitutions guarantee to their citizens, whether it is within the scope of the Federal Constitution or not.

Under such a provision in a state Constitution, it would be quite clearly beyond the power of the legislature to prohibit women from engaging in the ordinary occupations in which multitudes of them are now engaged. Being unquestionably citizens, their "equal privileges and immunities" must certainly extend to the right to earn a livelihood by any ordinary, lawful occupation. When excluded from any profession or occupation it must be because of reasons which are not equally applicable to men. When that is the case there is, of course, a proper basis for classification by which men may be included in one class and women in another.

The doctrine that classification to relieve a statute from the reach of the equality clause of the Fourteenth Amendment must be based upon some reasonable ground, some difference which bears just and proper relation to the attempted classification, and must not be a mere arbitrary selection, is declared in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255, and in many other cases.

Classification based upon reasonable differences between the classes created is never regarded as a violation of the constitutional guaranties of equal privileges and immunities. Classification is unconstitutional only when it is arbitrary and not based upon any essential differences. The classification of citizens into the two great classes of men and women is fore the police court in said city, be fined not less than $5.00 nor more than $20.00." The appellant was fined under the ordinance in question, and prosecuted an appeal to the circuit court for the purpose of testing the validity of the ordinance, as provided by law. The circuit court adjudged the ordinance valid, and to reverse that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

We have carefully considered the very able briefs filed by counsel for appellant and appellee. In the main, the arguments are sound; but the question is whether the authorities cited by either counsel sustain his contention. Manifestly, the ordinance was intended to accomplish a proper and laudable object. But it seems to us that it is not properly guarded. It will be seen that, in addition to the husband, father, or brother, any male relative may escort, converse, loiter, or associate with the objectionable character mentioned. There can be no good reason in exempting any male relative from the operation of the ordinance except a husband, father, or brother. It would also seem that a mother or sister should be allowed the same privilege as allowed to the father or brother. Any person should be allowed to converse with such a female long enough to transact any necessary and legitimate business, and no one should be punished for a violation of an ordinance such as the one under consideration unless the party so offending had knowledge or information of the character of the disreputable person with whom he was associating. We are, however, inclined to the opinion that under the ordinance in question no person could be legally fined unless he had knowledge or information of the disreputable character of such female. We think the ordinance as it stands is invalid, but one conforming to the views herein indicated would be clearly within the police power of the city council, and would be a proper and commendable exercise of the police power.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter a judgment adjudging the ordinance in question invalid, and for proceedings consistent herewith.

made by nature, and its recognition by law does not seem to be unreasonable, or to constitute any unjust discrimination when it is made only in respect to matters in which the sex of the individual is a material factor. In police regulations to prevent disorder and sexual immorality it can hardly be wrong for the legislators to take into account the facts of common knowledge respecting the differences between the relations of men and women to the evil to be remedied or prevented, but restricting women from common and lawful occupations which need no police regulations would certainly seem to deny them the equal privileges and immunities of citizens which are guaranteed by many state Constitutions, and also deprive them of liberty without due process of law.

III. In restricting freedom, society, or right to live in locality.

Most of the cases under this division have not discussed the question of discrimination against women, but have turned upon the right to personal liberty, which would have been involved in the same way if the police regulations had been applicable both to men and to women. Nevertheless, there was an actual discrimination made by the police regulations, and the question of the constitutionality of such discrimination might have been raised and decided.

A statute conferring upon a private corporation the power to receive and retain inebriate women in custody when they voluntarily surrender themselves is held, in People ex rel. Ordway v. St. Saviour's Sanitarium, 34 App. Div. 363, 56 N. Y. Supp. 431, to constitute no justification for the detention against her will of an inebriate woman who had voluntarily surrendered herself to the institution. Such detention is held to be in violation of the constitutional guaranties of due process of law. No question was raised, however, in this case as to any discrimination between women and men, although the statutory provision in question was by its terms applicable only to inebriate women.

A statute authorizing "dependent girls" to be sent to an industrial school was held in Re Ferrier, 103 Ill. 367, 42 Am. Rep. 10, to constitute no infringement of personal liberty. No question of discrimination against girls was made. Possibly the greater danger to girls might justify more stringent regulations for them than would be necessary for boys.

An ordinance providing for the punishment of "all women of disreputable character, commonly known as street walkers," found loitering upon the streets at night, was held, in Braddy v. Milledgeville, 74 Ga. 516, 58 Am. Rep. 443, to be a valid regulation for the preservation of public decency, and not subject to objection as class legislation.

An ordinance prohibiting any prostitute from being on the streets or alleys of a city between the hours of seven o'clock P. M. and four o'clock A. M. is upheld in Dunn v. Com. use of Catlettsburg, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1649, 43 L. R. A. 701, 49 S. W. 813, as a valid exercise of the police power under a statute authorizing the city council to pass ordinances, not in conflict with the Constitution or laws of the state or of the United States, for certain purposes, expressly including the purpose "to restrain and punish vagrants, prostitutes, rakes, and whoremongers." Here the court does not go into any discussion of the discrimination between men and women by the ordinances, although, while the statute authorizes ordinances to restrain both sexes, the ordinance itself seems to have been limited to women. The ordinance was attacked on the ground that it was not a valid exercise of the police power, but was an infringement on the constitutional guaranties of life and liberty. But the court said: "Social and conventional rights, however, are subject to such reasonable limitations in their enjoyment as will prevent them from being dangerous and hurtful to the body politic." Also: "We think this is a reasonable restraint, and it does not unreasonably abridge their personal liberty. By the terms of the ordinance they are allowed to go upon the streets if there is a reasonable necessity for it. During the fifteen hours of the twenty-four these habitual offenders against the moral, social, and penal laws are permitted to go wherever they please upon the streets and alleys of the city, which affords them ample opportunity for healthful exercise and of attending to their reasonable wants." The court remarks on the novelty of the case, and says:

"Our attention has not been called to any case involving the exact question involved in this case."

But in the cases following the ordinances went beyond reasonable regulation of conduct, and attempted practically to proscribe, outlaw, or exile all women known to be disreputable.

An ordinance authorized by statute, providing that the mayor might fine all "vagrant, loose, and disorderly persons, lewd women, keepers of bawdy houses, and persons having no visible means of livelihood who may be found within the corporate limits of the town" was upheld in Shafer v. Mumma, 17 Md. 381, 79 Am. Dec. 656, as against a prostitute who was not shown to have ever made any disturbance. There was no question of discrimination raised in this case, but the decision turned on the right of the mayor to exercise judicial power.

An ordinance against "knowingly associating with persons having the reputation of being thieves and prostitutes" was considered in St. Louis v. Fitz, 53 Mo. 582, where a conviction was reversed on the ground of misleading instructions to the jury, which failed to make it clear that the ordinance did not apply to mere casual association or an association for honest purposes. Without deciding, the court expressed doubt as to the power of the legislature to make such a law. It said: "So long as the power and right of locomotion is conceded, and a citizen has the right of selecting his associates, it is difficult to see how the legislature can interfere upon the mere ground of correcting the morals of the person concerned." One judge, who concurred in the judgment, insisted that the ordinance was absolutely void.

This case of St. Louis v. Fitz was overruled by the later decisions reported in St. Louis v. Roche, 128 Mo. 541, 31 S. W. 915, and Ex parte Smith, 135 Mo. 223, 33 L. R. A. 606, 36 S. W. 628, which held that an ordinance forbidding association with thieves is an unconstitutional invasion of the right of personal liberty.

An ordinance providing for the imposition of a fine upon "any person whose known character is that of a prostitute" was held void in Buell v. State, 45 Ark. 336, on the ground that the legislature had not conferred expressly or by implication any authority to enact such an ordinance, but the court proceeded to say: "It may be doubted whether it is competent for the legislature to authorize a town council to proscribe any particular class of people against whom no overt act is charged."

The power of a municipality to make it unlawful for a prostitute to return to that town is denied in Paralee v. Camden, 49 Ark. 165, 4 S. W. 654. The court says that the municipality cannot make her mere presence in the town a crime.

An ordinance making it unlawful to rent "any premises or place within the city limits to any prostitute or lewd woman" was held void in Milliken v. Weatherford, 54 Tex. 388, 38 Am. Rep. 629. The court said: "That unfortunate and degraded class against whom the ordinance was mainly intended, however far they may have fallen beneath the true mission of women, which it is one of our highest duties to foster and protect in social and domestic life, are still human beings entitled to shelter and the protection of the law; and the council did not have power to so far proscribe them as a class as to make it a penal offense for anyone to rent them a habitation, without regard to its use."

The decisions in these cases fully establish the unconstitutionality of provisions which amount to an outlawry or a denial of the right to life and liberty to any class of women, however abandoned, except so far as it may be in punishment of a specific offense. That is to say, women cannot be denied the right to occupy property and engage in lawful business by reason of any general bad character. But they may be subject to such police regulations as are reasonably necessary.

B. A. R.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SIXTH CIRCUIT.

STANDARD LIFE & ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Lee THORNTON, Admr., etc., of Stephen P. Locke, Deceased.

(100 Fed. Rep. 582.)

1. The death of a passenger on a sleeping car is not so palpably one of suicide as to compel the jury to reach that conclusion, where he disappeared from the car during the night and was found the next morning, with his overcoat on, on the railroad track, between the rails, face down, with head towards the direction in which the train was going, with his arms stretched above his head and feet between the cross ties, while there was an injury upon his skull, sufficient to produce death, and a small quantity of blood on the cross ties between the rails, although there was evidence that he had, some months before, resigned his position under charges affecting his character, and some conflict in the evidence as to whether he was despondent or not, but was in good credit and not in danger of want.

2. The presumption against suicide will stand and be decisive of the case until overcome by testimony which shall outweigh the presumption, where a passenger on a sleeping car disappears from it in the night, and is found the next morning dead upon the track, between the rails, with his overcoat on, and the facts exclude every hypothesis except suicide or accident.

3. A temporary occupation of the platform of a car by a passenger for a necessary or proper purpose is not a "riding" thereon, within the meaning of a clause in an accident policy which contains a condition against riding on a car platform.

(March 19, 1900.)

NOTE.—As to presumption in respect to suicide of insured person, see also Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Wiswell (Kan.) 35 L. R. A. 258, and note on page 263; also Johns v. Northwestern Mut. Relief Asso. (Wis.) 41 L. R. A. 587, 49 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an accident insurance policy. Affirmed.

Before Lurton and Day, Circuit Judges, and Clarke, District Judge.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Watson & Fitzhugh, for plaintiff in error:

The case was palpably for the defendant, for the reason that the conclusion deducible from all the evidence was clear and convincing that the death of the insured was not caused by his being accidentally thrown from a train of cars, but whether his death was accidental or suicidal it was unquestionably caused directly or indirectly while the insured was riding on the platform or steps of a railway car, in violation of the provisions of the contract sued on, and, in either event, defendant was entitled to a peremptory instruction.

Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 47 U. S. App. 260, 78 Fed. Rep. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Selden, 42 U. S. App. 253, 78 Fed. Rep. 285, 24 C. C. A. 92; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 473, 27 L. ed. 1003, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; Metropolitan R. Co. v. Moore, 121 U. S. 558, 30 L. ed. 1022, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1334; Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 51, 39 L. ed. 343, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

A rebuttable presumption of law being contested by proof of facts which show otherwise, which are not controverted, the presumption loses its value.

Lawson, Presumptive Evidence, 660.

Presumptions must give place when in conflict with clear and convincing proof.

Whitaker v. Morrison, 1 Fla. 29, 44 Am. Dec. 627; Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 364, 21 L. ed. 962; Somerville v. Knights Templars & Masons' Life Indemnity Asso. 11 App. D. C. 417; Merrett v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acci. Asso. 98 Mich. 338, 57 N. W. 169; Inghram v. National Union, 103 Iowa, 395, 72 N. W. 559; Johns v. Northwestern Mut. Relief Asso. 90 Wis. 332, 41 L. R. A. 587, 63 N. W. 276.

It was physically impossible for the insured to have fallen from any other part of the train, and to have struck his head against a cross-tie, in the very center of the track, on a trestle where his body was found the next morning.

There is no just reason why parties or courts should be ingenious or eager to add to, subtract from, or search out curious and hidden meanings in the plain terms of their compact.

Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Fred J. Kiesel & Co. v. Sun Ins. Office, 60 U. S. App. 10, 88 Fed. Rep. 243, 31 C. C. A. 518.

Where the policy contains a proviso excluding liability for injuries or death happening while the insured is standing or riding or being on the platform or, or entering or leaving, a moving steam vehicle, the condition is valid, and protects the insurer in case of accident so happening.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 312; Hull v. Equitable Acci. Asso. 41 Minn. 231, 42 N. W. 936; Miller v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 39 Minn. 548, 40 N. W. 839; Sawtelle v. 49 L. R. A.

Railway Passenger Assur. Co. 15 Blatchf. 216, Fed. Cas. No. 12,392; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 47 U. S. App. 260, 78 Fed. Rep. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305; Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Vandecar, 57 U. S. App. 446, 86 Fed. Rep. 282, 30 C. C. A. 48.

The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the death of the insured was caused solely by accidental means, and particularly by his being accidentally thrown from a train of cars, as alleged in the declaration; but in making out his case the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the legal presumption against suicide.

This presumption, however, does not relieve the plaintiff of the necessity of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the death was the result of accidental means, within the terms of the contract; it only assists him to discharge this burden.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 40; McGlothter v. Provident Mut. Acci. Co. 60 U. S. App. 705, 89 Fed. Rep. 685, 32 C. C. A. 320; Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Vandecar, 57 U. S. App. 446, 86 Fed. Rep. 282, 30 C. C. A. 48; Whitlatch v. Fidelity & C. Co. 149 N. Y. 45, 43 N. E. 405; Carnes v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso. 106 Iowa, 281, 76 N. W. 683; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 22 U. S. App. 102, 60 Fed. Rep. 993, 9 C. C. A. 314; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360; Merrett v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acci. Asso. 98 Mich. 338, 57 N. W. 160.

Messrs. William M. Randolph, George Randolph, and Henry F. Dix, for defendant in error:

The case should be left to the jury, unless the conclusion follows, as a matter of law, that no recovery can be had upon any view which can be properly taken of the facts which the evidence tends to establish.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Woodson, 134 U. S. 614, 33 L. ed. 1032, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Mylcr v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 63 U. S. App. 352, 92 Fed. Rep. 861, 35 C. C. A. 55; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547, 27 L. R. A. 629, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 12 C. C. A. 544; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

In view of the state of the proof, it was a question of fact peculiarly within the province of the jury to say how the accident happened, and determine the question whether it was suicide or from riding on the platform.

Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 54, 7 Am. Rep. 410; Anthony v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Asso. 162 Mass. 355, 26 L. R. A. 406, 38 N. E. 973; Badenfeld v. Massachusetts Mut. Acci. Asso. 154 Mass. 77, 13 L. R. A. 293, 27 N. E. 769; Freeman v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 573, 12 N. E. 372; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360; Manufacturers' Acci. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 16 U. S. App. 290, 22 L. R. A. 620, 58 Fed. Rep. 945, 7 C. C. A. 581; Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 16 S. W. 723; Home Benefit Asso. v. Sargent, 142 U. S. 693, 35 L. ed.

1163, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 352; Leman v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 46 La. Ann. 1189, 24 L. R. A. 589, 15 So. 388; Meadows v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 129 Mo. 76, 31 S. W. 578.

The defenses of exceptions in the policy were set up in special pleas, and the burden of proof was on plaintiff in error to prove the truth of the facts set up.

Travellers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360; Home Benefit Assn. v. Sargent, 142 U. S. 691, 35 L. ed. 1160, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 332; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 47 U. S. App. 260, 78 Fed. Rep. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305; Freeman v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 572, 12 N. E. 372; Badenfeld v. Massachusetts Mut. Acci. Assn. 154 Mass. 77, 13 L. R. A. 263, 27 N. E. 769; Anthony v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Assn. 162 Mass. 354, 26 L. R. A. 406, 38 N. E. 973; Cronkhite v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 75 Wis. 116, 43 N. W. 731; Coburn v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 145 Mass. 227, 13 N. E. 604; Piedmont & A. L. Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377, 23 L. ed. 610; 2 Biddle, Ins. ¶¶ 1310-1315; Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434, 10 So. 530; May, Ins. 2d ed. ¶¶ 589, 591; Bliss, L. Ins. 1st ed. § 374.

Before the court can give a peremptory instruction it must have tangible facts which are undisputed from which the conclusion claimed follows as a matter of law.

1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 44, 48, 49; Mylar v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 63 U. S. App. 352, 92 Fed. Rep. 861, 35 C. C. A. 55; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547, 27 L. R. A. 629, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 12 C. C. A. 544; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Woodson, 134 U. S. 614, 33 L. ed. 1032, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628.

It was against permanent occupancy of the platform for the purpose of travel that the provision in the policy was inserted, and it did not refer to that necessary occupancy of the platform which is only temporary in its character.

Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 121 Cal. 453, 41 L. R. A. 467, 53 Pac. 918; Hull v. Equitable Acci. Assn. 41 Minn. 232, 42 N. W. 936; Anthony v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Assn. 162 Mass. 354, 26 L. R. A. 406, 38 N. E. 973; Savotelle v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 15 Blatchf. 216, Fed. Cas. No. 12,392.

Exceptions of this kind are to be most strongly construed against the insurer and liberally in favor of the insured.

May, Ins. 3d ed. § 175; Travellers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 666, 32 L. ed. 310, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360; American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552.

Where the terms of a policy permit of more than one construction, that will be adopted which supports its validity.

Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 121 Cal. 453, 41 L. R. A. 467, 53 Pac. 918; Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 116 N. Y. 537, 6 L. R. A. 495, 22 N. E. 1093; Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 30 L. ed. 740, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 685; Equitable Acci. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 90 Ala. 201, 13 L. R. A. 267, 9 So. 869; Lowenstein v. Fidelity & C. Co. 88 Fed. 49 L. R. A.

Rep. 474; Berger v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 88 Fed. Rep. 241; Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Assn. v. Fulton, 45 U. S. App. 578, 79 Fed. Rep. 423, 24 C. C. A. 654; DeLoy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 171 Pa. 1, 32 Atl. 1108; London & L. F. Ins. Co. v. Fischer, 92 Fed. Rep. 500, 34 C. C. A. 503.

It is not necessary for the plaintiff to show how the accident happened, nor to prove that it was not suicide.

Travellers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360; Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410; Manufacturers' Acci. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 16 U. S. App. 290, 22 L. R. A. 620, 58 Fed. Rep. 945, 7 C. C. A. 581; Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 16 S. W. 723; Home Benefit Assn. v. Sargent, 142 U. S. 693, 35 L. ed. 1163, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 332; Leman v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 46 La. Ann. 1189, 24 L. R. A. 589, 15 So. 388; Meadows v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 129 Mo. 76, 31 S. W. 578; Piedmont & A. L. Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377, 23 L. ed. 610; Freeman v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 572, 12 N. E. 372; Coburn v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 145 Mass. 226, 13 N. E. 604; Badenfeld v. Massachusetts Mut. Acci. Assn. 154 Mass. 77, 13 L. R. A. 263, 27 N. E. 769; Anthony v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Assn. 162 Mass. 354, 26 L. R. A. 406, 38 N. E. 973; Cronkhite v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 75 Wis. 116, 43 N. W. 731.

The burden of proof was upon the plaintiff in error to show that Locke committed suicide, or that the accident happened while he was riding upon the platform or steps of a railway train.

Home Benefit Assn. v. Sargent, 142 U. S. 691, 35 L. ed. 1160, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360; Travellers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 663, 32 L. ed. 309, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 47 U. S. App. 260, 78 Fed. Rep. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305; Freeman v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 573, 12 N. E. 372; Badenfeld v. Massachusetts Mut. Acci. Assn. 154 Mass. 77, 13 L. R. A. 263, 27 N. E. 769; Anthony v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Assn. 162 Mass. 355, 26 L. R. A. 406, 38 N. E. 973; Piedmont & A. L. Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377, 23 L. ed. 610; Coburn v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 145 Mass. 227, 13 N. E. 604; Chattanooga Cotton Oil Co. v. Shamblin, 101 Tenn. 263, 47 S. W. 496; Cronkhite v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 75 Wis. 116, 43 N. W. 731; 2 Biddle, Ins. ¶¶ 1310-1315; Sutherland v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 37 Iowa, 505, 54 N. W. 453; Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434, 10 So. 530; Redman v. Fina Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 431, 4 N. W. 591; Cassacia v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 28 Cal. 628; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521; May, Ins. 2d ed. ¶¶ 589, 591; Bliss, L. Ins. 1st ed. §§ 374 et seq.

The presumption is always against suicide and in favor of accident.

This presumption always arises when there is uncertainty as to how death happened.

If the proof is evenly balanced so that it is impossible to tell whether the death was the result of accident or suicide, the presumption that it was not suicide steps in and is controlling.

Continental Ins. Co. v. Delpeuch, 82 Pa. 235; 2 Wharton, Ev. § 1247; 1 Rice, Ev. p. 75, subs. E; Travellers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360; Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410; Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 16 S. W. 723; Leman v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 46 La. Ann. 1189, 24 L. R. A. 589, 15 So. 388.

Day, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover on a contract of accident insurance evidenced by a ticket issued to Stephen P. Locke on the 28th day of December, 1897. The insurance was in the sum of $3,000, against immediate, continuous, or entire disability or death caused by bodily injuries inflicted solely by external, violent, and accidental means. Certain agreements and conditions are attached to the contract as conditions of the insurance, —among others, that the contract did not cover disappearance nor suicide, sane or insane; nor death nor disability resulting wholly or partly, directly or indirectly, from certain causes, conditions, and actions, —among others, voluntary and unnecessary exposure to danger, entering or trying to enter or leave a moving conveyance using steam as a motor, or while riding on the platform or steps of any railway car. The declaration was in the usual form, averring the issue of the accident ticket containing the terms above set forth; that complainant had kept and complied with the conditions and terms of the contract; and that on the 29th day of December, about 4 A. M., traveling as a passenger, in the regular and usual way, on a car attached to a train of cars passing along the railroad of the company known as the Kansas City, Memphis, & Birmingham Railroad Company, from the city of Memphis, in the state of Tennessee, to the town of Jasper, in the state of Alabama, and, at a point near the said town of Jasper, Locke was externally, violently, and accidentally thrown from the said train of cars, and thereby instantly killed. The answer, after pleading the general issue, sets up certain special pleas, in which it is averred: First. That the insured was not accidentally thrown from a train of cars, and that his injuries and death were not accidental. Second. That the contract expressly provided that it did not cover, and should not be enforceable in the event said Locke should commit, suicide, sane or insane; and avers that said Locke did commit suicide on the 29th day of December, 1897, by voluntarily, and with intent to destroy his life, jumping or falling off a train of cars of the Kansas City, Memphis, & Birmingham Railroad Company, he being then a passenger on said train, and said train at the time running at a high rate of speed. Third. That, in violation of the terms of said contract, said plaintiff's intestate came to his death in consequence of riding on the platform or steps of said train. Said train was at the time running at a high rate of speed between the city of Memphis and Jasper. Avers that the injuries were caused wholly or partly, directly or indirectly, while the said Locke was riding on the platform or steps of said railway car in express violation of the conditions of the contract. Fourth. Avers that said Locke came to his death because of a violation of the conditions of said contract, providing for no liability in case the assured should voluntarily and unnecessarily expose himself to danger. A replication was filed, taking issue on these several pleas, and the case went to trial to a jury, resulting in a recovery upon the policy.

Upon conclusion of the evidence a motion was made by the defendant to arrest the case from the jury, and to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant. The court, however, submitted the case to the jury, and afterwards overruled the motion for a new trial. In this court, upon this branch of the case, the only proper inquiry is, Should the court have directed a verdict? The practice in this respect is too well settled to need extended discussion. It was held in the case of Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 47 U. S. App. 260, 78 Fed. Rep. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305, in which the opinion was written by Mr. Justice Harlan, that "the jury should be permitted to return a verdict according to its own views of the facts, unless, upon a survey of the whole evidence, and giving effect to every inference to be fairly or reasonably drawn from it, the case is palpably for the party asking a peremptory instruction. . . . On the other hand, a case cannot properly be withdrawn from the consideration of the jury simply because, in the judgment of the court, there is a preponderance of evidence in favor of the party asking a peremptory instruction."

The learned justice cites with approbation the opinion of Judge Lurton upon the same subject in the case of Mount Adams & E. P. Inolined R. Co. v. Lourey, 43 U. S. App. 408, 74 Fed. Rep. 463, 20 C. C. A. 596.

How stands the present case? Was it palpably with the defendant, and could the jury fairly draw no other inference from the testimony than that the decedent came to his death with suicidal intent? A careful examination of the facts disclosed in the record convinces us that, giving effect to the presumption of law against self-destruction, the case was not so palpably one of suicide as to justify this court in interfering with the action of the court below. The exact manner of decedent's death is left in great doubt from the testimony. Locke was a man about fifty years of age, of good character and habits, in good health, and with a family to whom he was devoted. It appears that upon the evening in question he remarked to a friend that he was going to Jasper, Alabama, to get some money, and took passage from his home, the city of Memphis, to Jasper; purchasing before starting the accident ticket now sued upon, and one in the Travellers' Insurance Company for $6,000, both of which he mailed to his wife.

This, however, appears to have been in accordance with his custom, as the testimony shows that he had been in the habit of buying such tickets and mailing them to his wife. Taking passage about 9 o'clock P. M., he went aboard the sleeping car, in which he had purchased a lower berth. He sat in the smoking room, conversing, until nearly 11 o'clock. About this time he went to his berth. The conductor of the Pullman testifies that about 12 o'clock he came in contact with the feet of a man sitting on the berth supposed to be occupied by Mr. Locke. It does appear that his berth was only occupied by lying down thereon. The porter had been instructed to call Mr. Locke before the train reached Jasper, and after it left Carbonhill. The train was due at Jasper at 4:02 A. M., and at Carbonhill at 3:25 A. M. The train was on time, running at about the rate of 32 miles an hour; and, after it left Carbonhill, the porter having ascertained that no one was in the berth assigned to Locke, a search was made for the missing passenger. The passengers and Pullman conductors and porter made a pretty thorough search of the car and train. There is some conflict in the proof as to whether they looked upon the rear platform, but it appears that Locke might have been seen, had he been on the platform at the time of the search. The search failed to discover his presence, and at Jasper the conductor reported to the master of transportation at Birmingham the loss of a passenger. The car upon which Locke took passage was supplied with vestibule appliances, and with a gate something over 3 feet high, and which the testimony tends to show was fastened when the car left Memphis, and was found secure when the car reached Birmingham. On the early morning after Locke had started upon his journey, his body was found on a trestle of the railroad $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Jasper. It was lying upon the cross-ties, between the rails of the track, with head towards Jasper, face down, arms stretched above head, and feet between the cross-ties. Near the top, in the back part of the head, was a cut, and on one of the cross-ties between the rails there was a small quantity of blood. The body had on the overcoat, as Locke had when last seen before he went to his berth in the sleeper. Upon examination it was found that his right arm was broken at the elbow, and that several ribs were broken, and it is testified that the injury upon the skull was sufficient to produce death. It seems that Locke had had some difficulty with the Cole Manufacturing Company in the July preceding the accident. He had long been connected with that company, and in July of 1897 a charge was made before the board of directors which Mr. Locke regarded as affecting his character, and which caused him to immediately tender his resignation, which was as promptly accepted. He did not have other employment up to the time of his decease, and had been engaged in the attempt to organize another company, but had not succeeded in doing so. There is a difference in the testimony of witnesses as to whether he was despondent or not, but the weight of the evidence is that he was not. While out of employment he was in good credit, and not in danger of immediate want. He is said to have been a man of unusual business qualifications, reticent about his affairs, and having no very close or confidential relations with others. Just how he came by his death is a matter of conjecture. On the one hand, it is argued that he could not have severed connection with the car except at the rear platform, where the vestibule doors would have prevented his getting off the train, except by throwing himself over the iron gate. On the other hand, it is claimed that he may have been thrown from the train, either from this car or from some of the connecting day coaches, which were not provided with vestibules, or may have gone to the rear platform of the train, to ascertain how far he was from his station, and have been suddenly thrown against the rear gate, which, if not fastened, would have given away. These are matters of conjecture. It is very probable that he left the train from the rear in some way. There is nothing in the testimony to warrant the court, in our judgment,—even the trial court,—in interfering with the conclusion reached by the jury. They may well have reached the determination that the testimony did not warrant the inference of suicide, and, though unable to find exactly the manner in which decedent was taken off, the facts could have been reconciled with the theory of accident more readily than that of suicide, giving the plaintiff the benefit of the presumption against self-destruction. The case, however, was sufficiently close to require at the hands of the court careful instruction to the jury as to the proper rules of law in weighing the testimony.

49 L. R. A.

It is argued that the court erred in charging the jury that the burden of proof was upon the defendant to establish by the weight of the testimony that the decedent came to his death with suicidal intent. It is claimed that death by suicide is not within the terms of the policy considered without the exception subsequently incorporated into it; that, while there might be a presumption that the decedent did not commit suicide, still this does not place the burden of proof to establish suicide upon the defendant, but, giving the plaintiff the benefit of that presumption, the burden is still with him to make out a death within the terms of the policy. This position is not wanting in authority for its support. We think, however, that the question is settled for this court by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Travellers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360. In that case, as in this, the action was upon an accident policy, so far as the present question is concerned, like the one under consideration, and containing the same provision of nonliability in case of death by suicide. The answer set up the general issue, and alleged that the death was caused by suicide, and by intentional injury inflicted either by the insured or other persons. At the trial the court charged the jury that evidence of the fact that the insured was found dead during the life of the policy, from a pistol shot, was sufficient evidence that the insured met death by external and violent means, and said: "It is manifest that self-destruction cannot be presumed. So strong is the instinctive love of life in the human breast, and so uniform the efforts of men to preserve their existence, that suicide cannot be presumed. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to recover unless the defendant has by competent evidence overcome this presumption, and satisfied the jury by a preponderance of evidence that the injuries which caused the death of the insured were intentional on his part."

Again, the court below in that case charged: "The burden of proving this allegation by a preponderance of evidence rests on the defendant. The presumption is that the death was not voluntary, and the defendant, in order to sustain the issue of suicide on his part, must overcome this presumption, and satisfy the jury that the death was voluntary."

This charge, approved by the Supreme Court, clearly told the jury that the burden of proof was upon the defendant to make out a case of suicide. Applying the principle of that case to the one at bar, we think it was sufficient for the plaintiff, in the first instance, to establish the death of Locke by external, violent, and accidental means. As Mr. Justice Harlan said, the principal facts to be established were external violence and accidental means producing death. The burden of proof was upon the plaintiff below to establish these facts.

The learned judge in the present case charged the jury that: "The plaintiff, by the very terms of the contract, must prove by a preponderance of the proof, three things: (1) That death was by external means; (2) that it was violent; (3) that it was accidental. He assumed the burden of proving these three things by bringing the suit, and the burden of proving them has stayed with him, and is with him now, and continues always with him until you end the case by your verdict. That the death was external and violent seems to be admitted, but that it was accidental is denied. Therefore the plaintiff must prove it, and, unless you believe on the whole proof that it was accidental, he cannot recover."

And again: "If the jury believe from the evidence that Stephen P. Locke was a passenger on the train of cars of the Kansas City, Memphis, & Birmingham Railroad company leaving Memphis about 9 P. M. on the 28th day of December, 1897, and scheduled in the regular time-table of the company to arrive at Jasper, Alabama, about 4:02 A. M. of December 29, 1897, and that the train traveled on time, and that his dead body was found next morning, about 7 A. M., lying upon the cross-ties, with his head to the east and his feet to the west, between the rails of the same railroad, upon or near the west end of a trestle constructed in part of sawed square cross-ties, with sharp edges, extending over a common road about 3½ or 4 miles west from Jasper, Alabama; that the night was cold, and frost had settled around the body when discovered; that when found he was lying upon his face; that there was a cut or fracture in the rear part of his head or skull, sufficient of itself to produce death; that when found both arms and several ribs were broken; that there was a pool of blood on the ground under or near where the body was found, and the mark or evidence of hair and blood on the sharp edge of one of the cross-ties of the trestle corresponding to the wound on the head,—then these facts, if proven, in the absence of proof to the contrary sufficient to overcome them, authorize the jury to find that the said Stephen P. Locke, within the twenty-four hours covered by the contract contained in the ticket of insurance sued on, came to his death by external, violent, and accidental means, within the contract, and authorize a verdict for the plaintiff on that issue."

We think this charge was correct. The death, under such circumstances, was by violent and external means, and the facts exclude every hypothesis except suicide or accident. This charge was in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, above quoted. As is well said in Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 52, 54, 7 Am. Rep. 410, quoted by Mr. Justice Harlan in McConkey Case, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360: "The presumption is against the latter [suicide]. It is contrary to the general conduct of mankind. It shows gross moral turpitude in a sane person."

This presumption must stand in the case, and be decisive of it, until overcome by testimony which shall outweigh the presumption. It casts upon the defendant who claims that the death was intentional the burden of establishing it by a preponderance of testimony. Upon this subject the court charged the jury, in substance, that the burden of proving that he died by suicide was on the defendant, and, if the testimony was so evenly balanced that the jury could not decide by a preponderance of testimony, the plaintiff must recover.

It is also provided in the policy that it shall not cover death resulting wholly or partly, directly or indirectly, from certain causes, conditions, and acts,—among others, from injuries resulting from riding on the platform or steps of a railway car. It is claimed in this case that the proof was that Locke was riding on the rear platform of the sleeping car, and that his death was a result thereof. This policy was likely drawn, having in view riding on platforms of cars not protected by doors such as are now in use on vestibule trains. It is not necessary, however, to decide whether this clause would have effect, as regards such inclosed platforms. Assuming that there was some testimony to show that Locke, just before meeting a violent death, was riding on the platform, and that this risk was not assumed by the defendant, it might also be inferred that he was there for a temporary purpose. In view of the testimony, and the conflicting inferences which might be drawn therefrom, it became necessary to charge the jury upon this point, and the court said: "What is meant by the phrase 'while riding on the platform or steps of any railway car?' The very literalism of the words would cover every possible injury or death which did not take place wholly inside the car, and away from any platform or steps, while the car is in motion. It seems to be conceded, however, by the defendant's counsel, that it was not intended to have this rigid meaning, when they admitted in argument that it permitted a passenger to pass across a platform from one car to another. But in the special requests that have been made for instruction since the argument concluded, and especially by request 22, it is now claimed that 'riding on the platform or steps of a railway car' means that, 'if any injury or death results to the insured while he is on a platform of any railway car, the company is not liable.' The court does not think that the phrase could have been intended to bear that construction, and defendant's request 22 is therefore refused. We have the authority of several cases used in the argument that the phrase 'standing, being, or riding on a platform or steps,' which is obviously a broader phrase than 'riding on the platform or steps,' will not be so rigidly construed as defendant's request 22 would construe the language under consideration. Because, says Judge Wallace, 'these words do not fairly refer to a transitory occupation of the platform.' Sawtelle v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 15 Blatchf. 216, Fed. Cas. No. 12,392. Nor would being on the platform, for relief, when one was suffering from car sickness or nausea, be held to be 'a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger,' or 'riding on a platform,' as held in Marr v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 321. These are examples of cases construing this phrase, which seem to establish the principle of reasonable interpretation that, although the insurance company has ample power to make its contract what it pleases, in the absence of express and ambiguous words, it will not be understood to have forbidden that temporary, transitory, and necessary occupation of the platforms which a traveler must risk in the use of the cars and trains, for the convenient prosecution of his journey. He may not occupy the platforms or steps for the purposes of 'riding' on the train as one would occupy a seat, or as one might occupy by standing in the aisles on the inside of the car for riding on the train; but for any necessary purpose, certainly, and for any reasonably convenient purpose, probably, which only required a momentary or temporary or transitory 'being' or 'standing' or 'riding' on the platform or steps, the traveler may be on the platform without violating this condition in the policy. For example, if one standing on a platform, waiting to enter the door while the crowd before him were entering and being seated, as might be the case in a rush for the dining car,—to use a suggestion made by one of the jurors to counsel in progress of the argument,—should be injured or killed, it could hardly be said that this condition of the policy was violated because he was literally riding on the platform. Or, if one, having to look out for himself, should momentarily step to the platform to see if he had reached his station, could it be said that he was riding on the platform? These would be necessary purposes, in any fair sense of the words 'riding on the platform.' It would be mere literalism to hold such a temporary occupation to be 'riding on the platform,' although it is not impossible that such a situation might be covered by a prohibition from 'standing' or 'being' on a platform, as in the Minnesota case it was held that a waiting on the platform until the train should stop was within the broader phrase. I am not willing to say to you that any temporary occupation of the platform for the simple convenience of the traveler would be permitted by the condition of this policy, or that the liability of the company would exist where the injury or death took place during such convenient occupation of the platform; but, without the least hesitation, the court may say to you that any necessary occupation of the platform which is temporary in its character, and does not amount to that more permanent occupation which might just as well be had inside the car as on the platform, so far as the traveler's convenience is concerned, would not be within the prohibition. The rule of law is that such an ambiguous expression as 'riding on the platform' or 'steps' will be construed most liberally for the holder of the ticket, and against the insurance company. Wherefore the word 'riding' must be limited to its ordinary sense of a more permanent occupation than merely standing or being on the platform for a temporary, but a necessary, purpose. And it is worth observation that, in the immediately succeeding prohibition about the right of way, the word 'being' is used in the phraseology as above quoted, thus, 'while walking or being in the right of way, etc. This shows that the company, while drafting the conditions, was careful of its phraseology; and inasmuch as the familiar expression in similar policies theretofore existing used the language 'standing, being, or riding,' there is some significance in the omission of the words 'standing or being,' in favor of the interpretation the court is now giving to the word 'riding.' I conclude the subject of the interpretation of the conditions about riding on the platform by saying to you: If you believe from all the testimony in this case that immediately before and at the moment Locke's body, designedly or undesignedly, left the train, he was occupying the platform, in the sense of 'riding' on it, as above defined, his administrator cannot recover; but if you believe from all the evidence that at that moment he was upon the platform temporarily only, and for any necessary purpose, and not sufficiently prolonged in the occupancy to amount to 'riding' on it, such temporary occupancy would not be within the prohibition of the policy."

We perceive no error in this charge. Applied to the testimony in this case, the jury should have found for the defendant, had they reached the conclusion that the deceased was occupying the platform for the purpose of riding thereon, but that a temporary occupation of the platform, for a necessary or proper purpose, did not mean riding upon it in the sense of the policy. We think this is the true rule. We think the charge in this respect was as liberal as the defendant could properly require.

Various exceptions are taken to certain phraseology in the charge, which we do not consider it necessary to review. The defendant, to have avoided a recovery in this case, in the light of the testimony, must have established either that death was the result of suicidal intent of the decedent at the time of his injury, or was the result of riding on the platform in violation of the terms of the policy. We do not discover any testimony in the case tending to show that he voluntarily exposed himself to any known danger, unless it was in his occupation of the platform. The charge is unusually ample, and we think the questions involved were submitted to the jury in accordance with the rules of law.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed, with costs.

TRAVELERS' INSURANCE COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,

v.

Mayor of JOHNSON CITY.

(99 Fed. Rep. 663.)

An action for money had and received will not lie against a municipality in favor of a bona fide purchaser of its bonds issued without authority to a railroad corporation of another state in payment of a stock subscription which it had no power to make, although the proceeds of the bonds were used in constructing tracks and depot in the municipality, and it has received the stock certificates, while it might have issued such bonds to a domestic corporation in payment of a subscription to stock.

(February 12, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to recover the amount which plaintiff had paid for bonds issued by defendant. Affirmed.

Before Taft, Lurton, and Day, Circuit Judges.

Statement by Taft, Circuit Judge:

This was a suit at law by the Travelers' Insurance Company to recover from the mayor and aldermen of Johnson City $50,000

NOTE.—For implied agreement to pay for benefits received, see also Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Bensley (C. C. A. 6th C.) 19 L. R. A. 796, and Parsley v. Third M. E. Church (N. Y.) 30 L. R. A. 574.

49 L. R. A.

and interest from January 5, 1892, as money had and received to the use of the defendants. The case made in the declaration was: That under the act of the general assembly of the state of Tennessee, providing: "That any county, incorporated city, or town, may become a stockholder in any railroad company incorporated under the general laws of this state, to an amount not exceeding, in the aggregate, one tenth of its taxable property, by complying with the requirements of this act" (Laws 1887, chap. 3, § 1), and which provided in its 12th section: "That when such subscription shall become due and payable, as provided in section eleven of this act, the county, or city, or town making the subscription shall make and execute its coupon bonds for the amount of such subscription, payable not more than twenty years after date, and bearing interest at such rate as may be agreed upon, not exceeding six per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and deliver the same to the railroad company, provided, that such county, city, or town may pay such subscription in cash at maturity, if it shall so elect,"—the Charleston, Cincinnati, & Chicago Railroad Company, on December 30, 1890, applied to the defendant in error to subscribe $75,000 to the capital stock of said railroad company, the subscription to be paid in the coupon bonds of the defendant. That an election was held on January 30, 1890, pursuant to law, and under orders of the mayor and board of aldermen. That the sheriff made his return, showing that more than three fourths of the electors voting voted for the subscription, and that thereupon the defendant made the subscription accordingly, and resolved that it be paid in coupon bonds of the town. That the bonds issued were in the form following:

State of Tennessee, County of Washington, Corporation of Johnson City:

Know all men by these presents, that the corporation of Johnson City, in the county of Washington, state of Tennessee, acknowledges itself indebted and firmly bound to the Charleston, Cincinnati, & Chicago Railroad Company, or bearer, in the sum of one thousand dollars, lawful money of the United States of America, and for value received hereby promises to pay to said company, or bearer, the sum of one thousand dollars at the National Bank of Deposit in the city of New York, state of New York, in twenty years after date, with interest thereon from date hereof at the rate of six per cent per annum, payable semiannually, on the first days of May and November in each and every year, on presentation and delivery of coupons hereto annexed, and duly signed by the recorder of Johnson City; for the performance of all which the taxable property of said Johnson City is irrevocably pledged, pursuant to an act of the general assembly of the state of Tennessee, entitled 'An Act to Enable the Counties and Incorporated Cities and Towns to Subscribe to the Capital Stock of Any Railroad Company Incorporated under the General Laws of This Stat' in the Mode Prescribed Therein, and to Provide for the Payment of Such Subscriptions, approved February 17, 1887, and also an act passed February 28, 1887, approved March 2, 1887, authorizing Johnson City to issue bonds to an amount not exceeding seventy-five thousand dollars. This bond is one of a series of seventy-five bonds of like tenor, date, and amount herewith, issued by virtue of said above-named statutes, and in issuing same all of the provisions and requirements of each of said statutes have been strictly fulfilled and complied with. In witness whereof the mayor and the recorder of the corporation of Johnson City, Tennessee, have hereunto signed their names, and the same has been countersigned by the board of trustees of the sinking fund of said town, at said Johnson City, on the first day of May, A. D. 1890.

_____,
Mayor.

_____,
Recorder.

_____,
_____,
_____,
Board of Trustees of the Sinking Fund.

That by the contract of subscription the bonds were to be deposited in the First National Bank in escrow, to be delivered to the railroad company, or its order, upon presentation of a certificate signed by the mayor of the city and the chief engineer of the railroad company. That the three conditions of the subscription, which were the delivery of the stock, the construction of the railroad, and the erection of a railway station, had been complied with. That the railroad and station were completed, and the stock issued in accordance with the contract, and the bonds were delivered to the railroad company upon proper certificate. That the stock issued to the amount of $75,000 has ever since been held by the defendants. That, soon after the delivery of the bonds by the city to the railroad company, the same were put by the railroad company upon the market for sale, and the plaintiff, relying upon the representations made on the face of the bonds that all the requirements of law had been strictly complied with in their issue, purchased $50,000 of the bonds, and paid $50,000 in lawful money for the same without notice of any infirmity in the bonds.

The declaration further shows that, after paying the interest coupons on these bonds for several years, the defendants filed a bill in the chancery court of Washington county, Tennessee, against the railroad company and the plaintiffs and others, in which it sought to have the bonds declared void on the various grounds therein set up; that upon a final hearing of the cause the chancellor entered a decree, on March 13, 1895, adjudging the bonds to be void in the hands of bona fide purchasers, upon the ground that the Charleston, Cincinnati, & Chicago Railroad Company was not a corporation under the laws of the state of Tennessee, but was a South Carolina corporation; and that $75,- 000 exceeded one tenth of the taxable property of Johnson City, in violation of the terms of said statutes authorizing the subscription. On appeal this was affirmed by the court of chancery appeals. Plaintiff then appealed to the supreme court of Tennessee, which also affirmed the decree of the chancellor (100 Tenn. 138, 44 S. W. 670), adjudging that said bonds were invalid and void upon the grounds stated, and enjoining their collection. The declaration avers further that the corporation to which this subscription was made was a Tennessee corporation, and not a corporation of South Carolina; that in fact there were two corporations, and that the application made by the railroad company for the subscription was made in the name of the Tennessee corporation. The bill further avers that the defendants were estopped by their recitals to deny that this was a Tennessee corporation, or that the statutory limit of indebtedness had been exceeded. The prayer of the bill is for the amount paid by plaintiff for the bonds, on the ground that the defendants have received this amount in value to their benefit. The declaration was demurred to on the ground that it did not state a cause of action, and the demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff not wishing to plead further, judgment was entered for the defendants, and that judgment is now here for review.

Mr. T. S. Webb for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Isaac Harr for defendant in error.

Taft, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The averments of the declaration that the railroad company whose stock was subscribed for by the defendants was a Tennessee corporation, and that the plaintiff was a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice of any infirmity in the bonds, and that the defendants were estopped by the recitals in their bonds from denying that the railroad company was a Tennessee corporation, lend no legal force to it, in the face of its other averments, which show that those very questions of fact and law were decided adversely to the plaintiff in an action to which the plaintiff and defendants were adversary parties, and in which the question of the validity of these bonds was the sole matter at issue. The question for our consideration here is, therefore, whether one who, for full value, purchases in the market negotiable bonds payable to bearer, and undorsed, issued by a municipal corporation to a railroad company of another state, to whom it has no power to issue the bonds, in payment of a subscription to the company's stock to which it has no power to make a subscription, after the railroad has been built, and the depot has been constructed on the company's ground, and the certificates for the stock subscribed for have been delivered to the municipal corporation, all in accordance with the condition of the subscription agreement, may recover from the municipal corporation the money paid by it in open market for the bonds, on the ground that that amount has been expended in conferring upon the city the benefit of the railroad and the depot and the stock, when it further appears that the corporation has power to make subscriptions for the stock of a domestic corporation, and to pay for the same in its bonds. We think the question must be answered in the negative. The cause of action is for money had and received to the use of the city. Such an action is based, not on an express or implied contract, but upon an obligation which the law supplies from the circumstances, because, ex æquo et bono, the defendant should pay for the benefit which he has derived at the expense of the plaintiff. It is an obligation which the law supplies, because, otherwise, it would result in the unjust enrichment of the defendant at the cost of the plaintiff. It is an obligation which arises only when the defendant has received money or property from the plaintiff and appropriated the same to his own use, either when he might have elected not to take it, or, having the power to do so, might return the benefit thus conferred to the plaintiff, and fails to do so. In this case the three benefits conferred on the plaintiff are: (1) The issuing of the stock; (2) the construction of the railroad; and (3) the building of the depot. As to the first, it has been conclusively adjudged by the supreme court of Tennessee in the case of Johnson City v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. 100 Tenn. 138, 44 S. W. 670, in which the plaintiff and the defendants were adversary parties, that the city had no power to subscribe to the stock of the railroad company. This being so, the city did not become a stockholder in the railroad company, and did not receive the benefit of the stock purporting to be issued. The contract of subscription was utterly void, and the certificate was but waste paper. It imposed no obligation upon the railroad company or its stockholders; it conferred no benefit upon the city. The case of California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 362, 42 L. ed. 198, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831, leaves no doubt on this point. There a national bank, without power to do so under the national banking laws, purchased stock in a savings bank of the state of California. It was held that, in the absence of power to own the stock, the national bank did not become a stockholder, and was not liable to pay the assessment upon the stock for the benefit of creditors, although in that case it had received, and had not returned, dividends issued to it as a stockholder. The other benefits said to have been conferred upon the city were the construction of the railroad and the building of the depot. As the railroad and the depot were constructed on the land of the railroad company, they did not go into the possession of the city as its property. Had the railroad company, without any subscription by the city, built its railroad through the city, and erected its station there, it certainly could not be claimed that this would have given the railroad company a right of action against the city for the value of the benefits conferred on the city by such construction, however great those benefits might have been in adding to the prosperity of the city and its inhabitants. In the absence of an express agreement to pay for such a benefit, no tacit agreement to do so can be inferred. Where the conferring of the benefits was induced by an express agreement which is void, the law will not supply an obligation to pay on the ground of unjust enrichment as a quasi contract, unless, in the absence of the express agreement, a real, but tacit, contract could have been inferred from the circumstances. The benefit indirectly conferred on one man's property by the improvement of the land of another is not an unjust enrichment of the other. Hence, ex æquo et bono, no obligation in law to pay for it arises. The case in hand is not distinguishable in principle from that of Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Bensley, 6 U. S. App. 115, 19 L. R. A. 796, 2 C. C. A. 480, 51 Fed. Rep. 738, decided by this court, in which Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion. In that case the owners of lots in Chicago in close proximity to the lot on which it was proposed to construct the Chicago Board of Trade Building entered into a written contract with the owner of the lot by which they agreed that, if he would sell the lot to the board of trade at a low price, so as to induce the board of trade to buy it, and if the board of trade should construct its building thereon within a certain time, they would pay the owner of the lot, each of them, a certain sum of money. The owner of the lot accordingly sold it to the board of trade at the price named in the agreement, but the building was not constructed within the time fixed by the agreement. Suit was brought by the owner to recover from the contractors the amounts stipulated to be paid in the contract after the building had been constructed. The court held that time was of the essence of the contract, and was made a condition precedent to the obligation to pay, and that, therefore, no recovery could be had under the contract. The plaintiff then sought to recover on a quantum valebat, and it was held that the benefit conferred was not one which created an obligation on the part of the lot owners to pay, even though it appeared that, owing to the erection of the Board of Trade Building, they had been enabled to sell their land at a largely increased price. The court said: "Had the defendant received a benefit from the performance of this contract to which he would not have been entitled had the contract not been made, the result might have been different, but, as a matter of fact, it received no benefit from the erection of this building, which did not accrue to other owners of neighboring property who did not sign the contract or subscribe in aid of the purchase of the lot, and as to such persons it would not be claimed that a liability arises. Its acquiescence in the completion of the building is immaterial, since it had no right to interfere. It is, then, only upon the basis of the special contract to pay that an action will lie, and this contract not having been performed by the plaintiff, there can be no recovery."

Mr. Justice Brown mentioned, as a most satisfactory case upon this point, Memphis, K. & C. R. Co. v. Thompson, 24 Kan. 170, and said:

"This was an action upon certain bonds issued by the city of Parsons in aid of the construction of the plaintiff's road, and subject to a condition that the plaintiff should 'have its road constructed and in operation on or before the 1st day of July, 1878.' It was held that time was of the essence of this contract, and that the failure of the plaintiff to complete the road by the day named was fatal to a recovery, notwithstanding the road was completed shortly after that, and the city received the benefit of it. In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Brewer, now of the Supreme Court of the United States, observed: 'Nor is this a case of part performance by one party and the acceptance by the other of the proceeds of such performance. The work done by the company was upon its own grounds. It owns the road absolutely and entirely. It has parted with nothing which the city has received. The city has accepted and appropriated none of its labor and none of its materials. It has received the benefit of the work in no other sense than every individual in the community, and in no other way than of one person receiving benefit from his neighbor's improvement of his own property.'"

While these were cases in which the plaintiff failed to recover on the express contract, not because it was ultra vires and void, but because the plaintiff failed to comply with a condition precedent in such contract, the principle upon which they were placed is entirely applicable to the case at bar. This is made apparent by the language of Mr. Justice Jackson in delivering the opinion in Hedges v. Dixon County, 150 U. S. 182-186, 37 L. ed. 1044, 1046, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71. There a county had issued bonds in aid of a railroad in excess of its authority, and the holders of the bonds filed a bill in which they asked from the court the relief of cutting down the obligation of the bonds proportionately so as to bring it within the lawful amount. The Supreme Court held that the relief could not be granted, and, referring to the cases of Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 294, 26 L. ed. 153, and Read v. Plattsmouth, 107 U. S. 568, 27 L. ed. 414, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208, in which it had been permitted to bondholders of bonds issued without authority to recover from the municipal corporation issuing the bonds the amount of money received by it and expended by it for lawful purposes as money had and received to its use, the court said: "The circumstances and conditions which gave the holders of the bonds an equitable right in those cases to recover from the municipality the money which the bonds represented do not exist in the case under consideration, where the county received no part of the proceeds of the bonds, and no direct money benefit, but merely derived an incidental advantage arising from the construction of the railroad, upon which advantage it would be impossible for the court to place a pecuniary estimate, or to say that it would be equal to such portion of the bonds in question as the county could lawfully have issued."

For these reasons we think that there is no ground upon which to base a recovery for money had and received to the use of Johnson City.

The cases relied upon by the plaintiff are Read v. Plattsmouth, 107 U. S. 568, 27 L. ed. 414, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; Chapman v. Douglas County, 107 U. S. 348, 27 L. ed. 378, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62; Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 27 L. ed. 238, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 442; Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 294, 26 L. ed. 153; Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 341, 24 L. ed. 659. It is contended that they sustain the view that money paid for the benefit of the city on the faith of the issue of invalid bonds may be recovered in an action for money had and received. It will be found that, in every case cited but one, the city or county or municipal corporation which issued the bonds received the money or labor or material furnished, and that it was expended in improving the property of the city or other corporation in a manner in which the city had power to improve its own property. In Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 341, 24 L. ed. 659, the benefit conferred upon the city was the building of sidewalks, which the city had the right to build and pay for, but which, it was found, it had no right to pay by issuing bonds. In Louisiana v. Wood the money received for the bonds was used partly by the city in payment and redemption of matured bonds and coupons and warrants of the city, lawfully issued, and part of it was deposited in the city treasury. In Parkersburg v. Brown, which is the exception, the money which was received for the bonds was used to purchase land and to erect a manufacturing establishment, the operation of which it was supposed would benefit the city. The bonds were declared void for want of power in the city to aid private manufacturing establishments. The relief granted by the court was, not to hold the city as for money had and received, but to follow the property into which the money had been put, and to sell the property, and distribute the net proceeds thereof to those with whose money the property had been purchased and improved. In Chapman v. Douglas County, 107 U. S. 348, 27 L. ed. 378, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62, a county in Nebraska bought land upon which to erect a poor house and farm and in payment therefor issued notes for four equal annual instalments of the purchase price, and gave a mortgage to secure the payment of the notes. It was decided by the supreme court of the state that the county could not bind itself to pay the purchase money by notes, or to secure it by mortgage upon the property, but its power was limited to a payment in cash, and the levy of an annual tax to create a fund wherewith to pay the residue. It was held that, the contract being unauthorized only so far as it related to the time and mode of paying the purchase money, and the title to the land having passed by the conveyance, the county held the title as trustee for the benefit of the vendor, and that, unless the sum due on the purchase money was paid within a reasonable time, the county might be required to execute a deed releasing to the vendor all the title acquired under his deed. In Read v. Plattsmouth the money paid for the bonds was used by the city of Plattsmouth in the construction of a high-school building. The power of the city to issue bonds to build a high school was questioned, and by a subsequent act the bonds issued were validated by the legislature. At the time the bonds were issued it could not lawfully issue them in the amount in which they were issued. It was held that the city, having taken the money and put it into a schoolhouse, which it owned, was bound by the force of the transaction to repay to the purchaser of its void bonds the consideration received and used by it, or its lawful equivalent, and that, therefore, the enabling act validating the bonds only recognized an existing moral and legal obligation, and was valid. It thus appears that in each of the cases, except Parkersburg v. Brown, the benefit received by the municipal corporation was money paid to it or property delivered into its actual possession under such circumstances that, had no express contract been attempted, a tacit contract might have been inferred. In Parkersburg v. Brown the money paid was followed, as in rem, into the thing bought with it.

It follows that the judgment of the court was correct, and it must be affirmed, with costs.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, NINTH CIRCUIT.

MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

George E. HILL et al.

(97 Fed. Rep. 263, 38 C. C. A. 159.)

1. The United States courts take judicial notice of all the public statutes of the several states.
2. Permitting a recovery in an action upon a policy of insurance on the ground that there had been no forfeiture for failure to pay premiums because the requisite statutory notice of their accrual had not been given, which fact does not appear in the complaint, does not contravene the rule against departure in pleading, since forfeiture is a matter of defense which the plaintiff is not bound to anticipate.
3. Notice of accrual of premium as required by N. Y. Laws 1877, chap. 321, is necessary to a forfeiture of a policy for nonpayment of premium, in the absence of which forfeiture cannot be effected by agreement of the parties.
4. Beneficiaries of a life-insurance policy, subject to the operation of the New NOTE.—The decision in the above case was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of certiorari in 178 U. S. 347, 44 L. ed. —, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914, without deciding whether the laws of New York governed or not in respect to the necessity of giving notice before forfeiting the policy for nonpayment of premium. The decision is based on the fact that both parties, with knowledge of all the facts, had agreed to abandon the contract.

For a case similar to this, see Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Dingley (C. C. A. 9th C.) post, 132.

For necessity of notice before forfeiting an insurance policy, see also Baxter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 293; Eury v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. (Tenn.) 10 L. R. A. 534; Heinlein v. Imperial L. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 25 L. R. A. 627; Buchanan v. Supreme Conclave Improved Order of Heptasoph (Pa.) 34 L. R. A. 436; and Rosenplanter v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. (C. C. A. 6th C.) 46 L. R. A. 473.

49 L. R. A.

York laws requiring notice of accrual of premium before forfeiture for nonpayment, will not be bound, in the absence of such notice, by statements of the insured to the company, that he cannot pay premiums, and that the company may consider the policy forfeited.

(October 2, 1899.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern Division of the District of Washington to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due on a life-insurance policy. Affirmed.

Before Gilbert and Ross, Circuit Judges, and Hawley, District Judge.

Statement by Hawley, District Judge:

This action was brought by the children of George Dana Hill, in their own name where of age, and by their guardian where under age, to recover the amount of a policy of insurance upon the life of their deceased father. The amended complaint alleged that on April 29, 1886, in consideration of the sum of $814 paid by George Dana Hill, the insurance company (plaintiff in error herein) made and delivered to him, in the city of New York, a policy upon his life; the insurance to be paid to his wife, if living at his death, or, in case of her death before that time, to their children. This policy of insurance is set forth in the complaint, and reads as follows: "In consideration of the application for this policy, which is hereby made a part of this contract, the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York promises to pay at its home office, in the city of New York, unto Ellen Kellogg Hill, wife of George Dana Hill, of Seattle, in the county of King, Washington territory, for her sole use, if living, in conformity with the statute, and, if not living, to such of the children of their bodies as shall be living at the death of the said wife, or to their guardian, for their use, twenty thousand ($20,- 000), upon acceptance of satisfactory proofs at its said office of the death of the said George Dana Hill during the continuance of this policy, upon the following condition, and subject to the provisions, requirements, and benefits stated on the back of this policy, which are hereby referred to and made part hereof. The annual premium of eight hundred and fourteen dollars ($814) shall be paid in advance on the delivery of this policy, and thereafter to the company, at its home office, in the city of New York, on the twenty-ninth day of April in every year during the continuance of this contract.

... "Upon the back of this policy are provisions to the effect that, while the payments are due and payable at the home office, they will be accepted elsewhere, when made in exchange for the company's properly signed receipt, that notice that each and every such payment is due at the date named in the policy is given and accepted by the delivery and acceptance of this policy, and that any further notice required by any statute is expressly waived. It is alleged in the complaint that the application for insurance contained the following agreement: "It is agreed that there shall be no contract of insurance until a policy shall have been delivered and issued by said company, and the first premium thereon paid, while the person proposed for insurance is in the same condition of health described in this application." It is further alleged in the complaint: "That on the 23d day of December, 1890, the defendant was notified of the death of said George Dana Hill, and requested to furnish plaintiffs necessary blanks, in order that plaintiffs might furnish proofs of death as required by the rules and regulations of defendant company; that on the 3d day of February, 1891, said defendant, in reply thereto, informed and declared to said plaintiffs that said contract or policy of insurance above set forth had been forfeited by the nonpayment of a premium; that said defendant thereby waived the right to claim any other, or any, proofs of the death of said George Dana Hill: that said George Dana Hill during his lifetime duly performed all the conditions of said contract necessary by him to be performed; that the defendant has wholly failed to pay to plaintiffs said policy of insurance, or said sum of twenty thousand dollars ($20,000), or any part thereof."

The answer to the amended complaint admits the issuance of the policy, but denies that it was delivered in the city of New York, or any place outside of the state of Washington. It denies all allegations of performance of the conditions of the contract on the part of the insured. Three affirmative defenses are pleaded to the amended complaint. The first alleges that the insurance company was transacting its business, at the time the policy was issued, in the state of Washington, having its principal office at Seattle, in said state; that it had complied with the laws of the state relative to foreign corporations transacting business in it; that before the time of and subsequent to the taking out of the insurance,

George Dana Hill was a citizen and resident of the territory and state of Washington; that at Seattle he made his application for the insurance; that this application was transmitted to the agent of the insurance company at San Francisco, and by him to the insurance company in the city of New York; that the insurance company, pursuant to the application, made the policy mentioned in the amended complaint, and sent it to the agent at San Francisco, who afterwards transmitted it to the agent in Seattle, and that there the first premium was paid, and the policy delivered to the insured; that there became due on the policy April 29, 1887, a premium of $814, which has never been paid, but both the insured and the beneficiary refused to make payment of any part of it, and from that time forth until the death of the insured nothing whatever had been paid on account of any of the premiums; that the policy became void upon such default and refusal. The second affirmative defense alleged that at a time more than one year from the time of the issuance of the policy mentioned in the complaint, and during the lifetime of the said George Dana Hill, it was mutually agreed between the defendant and the said George Dana Hill that the said contract of insurance should be waived, abandoned, and rescinded, and the said George Dana Hill and the defendant then by mutual consent waived, abandoned, and rescinded the same accordingly, and all their mutual rights and obligations therein and thereunder. The third affirmative defense, after stating the provisions of the contract, alleged that the plaintiffs and each of them should be and are estopped from and should not be permitted to allege or prove that defendant did not mail, or cause to be mailed, or otherwise give to said George Dana Hill, a notice stating the amount of premium due on said policy on April 29, 1887, or at any other time, with the place where the same should be paid, the person to whom the same is payable, and stating that, unless the premium then due should be paid to the company or its agents within thirty days after the mailing of such notice, the policy and all payments made thereon should become forfeited, or any other notice prescribed by any statute or statutes of the state of New York, or any other notice than that hereinafter mentioned, for that shortly prior to and after and on said 29th day of April, 1887, said defendant, in writing, and also personally, notified and informed the said George Dana Hill, at said city of Seattle, that the premium of $814 necessary to be paid on said policy for the continuance of this policy of insurance was due and payable; that said defendant duly demanded payment of said premium in said sum, and at the same time and place tendered the receipt of the defendant therefor, duly signed by its president and secretary; that the said Hill, being fully so informed and advised in the premises, refused to make payment of this premium, or any part thereof, and then and there, intending and for the purpose of inducing the defendant to rely upon the same, informed the defendant that he, the said George Dana Hill, was unable to pay such premium, and did not intend to make payment thereof, or of any premium thereafter to accrue on said policy of insurance, but, on the contrary, he intended to allow the said policy to lapse and become forfeited for want of payment of said premium, or any future premium accruing on said policy; that the said defendant, then and there and ever since, relying upon the said representation and conduct on part of the said George Dana Hill, was thereby induced to, and did, declare the said policy and contract of insurance forfeited and abandoned; and that, in good faith relying upon said conduct and representations on the part of the said George Dana Hill, defendant was induced to, and did, fail and abstain from giving or mailing any notice, whether prescribed by statute or otherwise, to the said George Dana Hill, or to any person interested in said policy, concerning the payment of any premium thereon.

A demurrer was interposed to each of these defenses on the ground that each of them failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to plaintiffs' amended complaint. Upon argument, each of these demurrers was sustained, and exceptions taken by the defendant. The plaintiff in error elected to stand upon its pleadings, and declined to plead further. Thereupon the defendants in error moved the court for judgment, and the court granted the motion, against the exceptions of the plaintiff in error, and rendered a judgment against the insurance company for $24,086.61, with interest from the date of the judgment, and costs.

The statute of New York regulating the forfeitures of life insurance policies, as amended May 23, 1877, provides as follows:

"Sec. 1. No life insurance company doing business in the state of New York shall have power to declare forfeited or lapsed any policy hereafter issued or renewed by reason of nonpayment of any annual premium or interest, or any portion thereof, except as hereinafter provided. Whenever any premium or interest due upon any such policy shall remain unpaid when due, a written or printed notice stating the amount of such premium or interest due on such policy, the place where said premium or interest should be paid, and the person to whom the same is payable, shall be duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is assured, or the assignee of the policy, if notice of the assignment has been given to the company, at his or her last known postoffice address, postage paid by the company, or by an agent of such company, or person appointed by it to collect such premium. Such notice shall further state that unless the said premium or interest then due shall be paid to the company or to a duly appointed agent or other person authorized to collect such premium within thirty days after the mailing of such notice, the said policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void. In case the payment demanded by such notice shall be made within the thirty days limited therefor, the same shall be taken to be in full compliance with the requirements of the policy in respect to the payment of said premium or interest, anything therein contained to the contrary notwithstanding; but no such policy shall in any case be forfeited or declared forfeited or lapsed until the expiration of thirty days after the mailing of such notice. Provided, however, that a notice stating when the premium will fall due and that if not paid the policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void, served in the manner hereinbefore provided, at least thirty and not more than sixty days prior to the day when the premium is payable, shall have the same effect as the service of the notice hereinbefore provided for.

"Sec. 2. The affidavit of anyone authorized by section one to mail such notice, that the same was duly addressed to the person whose life is assured by the policy, or to the assignee of the policy, if notice of the assignment has been given to the company, in pursuance of said section, shall be presumptive evidence of such notice having been given." Laws 1877, chap. 321.

Messrs. Struve, Allen, Hughes, & McMicken and Strudwick & Peters, with Mr. Edward Lyman Short, for plaintiff in error:

The wording of the statute is in harmony with its obvious intent to limit its application to the state of New York.

It is not within the competency of the legislature of the state to enact rules of evidence for another state or government.

Wharton, Conf. L. 2d ed. § 752; 2 Parsons, Contr. 7th ed. p. 718.

The law is a local regulation confined to business transacted in the state of New York, and the notice prescribed does not apply, except to parties within the state of New York.

Rosenplaenter v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 91 Fed. Rep. 728.

The failure and refusal of the insured to pay premiums defeated the policy.

Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, sub nom. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Pettus, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236; Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. ed. 682, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408; Gross v. United States Mortg. Co. 108 U. S. 477, 27 L. ed. 795, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 940.

The policy against fraud and misrepresentation, and against rewarding parties for their own demerits and delinquencies, is the policy of the common law, operative wherever rules of good conscience are enforced, and whenever courts of justice close their doors against parties who seek to take advantage of their own wrong.

The policy of the state of New York cannot be transported to the courts of Washir ton to override a policy so universal and controlling.

Jones v. Alliance Mut. F. Ins. Co. 174 Pa. 438, 34 Atl. 198.

Although the notice may not have been in accordance with the requirements of the statute of New York, when it was actually brought home to the insured, and accepted for all the purposes for which the statutory notice could be given, and when it is conceded he received the information, not only of the due date of the premium, but of its amount, and in addition declared himself possessed of all the knowledge the statute could impart, and stated further that he not only was not able, but that he was unwilling, either to pay the due premium or any subsequent premiums, and that it was his fixed purpose to end the policy, then neither he nor any legal representative should be heard, in a court of justice, to say that an insufficient notice had been given, or that there was a lack of statutory compliance in the notice.

Johnson v. Oppenheim, 55 N. Y. 280; Bryant v. Goodnow, 5 Pick. 228; Farlow v. Ellis, 156 Gray, 231; Weymouth v. Gorham, 22 Me. 385; York v. Penobscot, 2 Me. 1.

The case stands baldly and singly upon a contract.

The allegation of performance of the condition was directly put in issue.

Loud v. Pomona Land & Water Co. 153 U. S. 564, 38 L. ed. 822, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 928; Phillips & C. Constr. Co. v. Seymour, 91 U. S. 646, 23 L. ed. 341; 4 Joyce, Ins. § 3674; Perry v. Phoenix Assur. Co. 8 Fed. Rep. 643; Edgerly v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 43 Iowa, 587; Thompson v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 252, 26 L. ed. 765; Hartford Life Annuity Ins. Co. v. Unsell, 144 U. S. 439, 36 L. ed. 496, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671.

Had noncompliance with the statute of New York on the part of plaintiff in error been relied upon as an excuse for nonperformance of the conditions of the contract on the part of the deceased, then defendants in error were required to plead the statute of New York, and noncompliance with its provisions on the part of the insurance company.

Oakley v. Morton, 11 N. Y. 25, 62 Am. Dec. 49; Hudson v. McCartney, 33 Wis. 331; Lumbert v. Palmer, 29 Iowa, 104; Woolsey v. Williams, 34 Iowa, 413; Hand v. National Live-Stock Ins. Co. 57 Minn. 519, 59 N. W. 538; Evans v. Queen Ins. Co. 5 Ind. App. 198, 31 N. E. 843; Trainor v. Worman, 34 Minn. 237, 25 N. W. 401; Mosness v. German-American Ins. Co. 50 Minn. 341, 52 N. W. 932; East Texas F. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 82 Tex. 631, 18 S. W. 713.

Where one seeks to maintain a right under the statute, his pleading must state specifically every requisite to enable the court to charge, whether he has a cause of action, or has any under the statute.

Austin v. Goodrich, 49 N. Y. 266; Churchill v. Onderdonk, 59 N. Y. 134; Chicago & V. F. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 Mich. 538, 7 N. W. 213.

A fatal departure from law to law was 49 L. R. A.

made in rendering the judgment sought to be reviewed, because there are no pleadings for such a judgment to be based upon.

Rosenplauter v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 91 Fed. Rep. 728; Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877.

Mr. Eben Smith, with Mr. Stanton Warburton, for defendants in error.

Hawley, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought upon a policy of insurance issued by the plaintiff in error, April 29, 1886, insuring the life of George Dana Hill for $20,000, upon which the first annual premium of $814 was paid when the policy was delivered. No other premiums were ever paid or tendered upon this policy. No notice was ever given by the insurance company to the insured as required by the laws of the state of New York to the effect, among other things, that, unless the said premium or interest due on said policy shall be paid the company within thirty days after the mailing of such notice, "the said policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void." On December 4, 1890, George Dana Hill died. His surviving beneficiaries under the policy are defendants in error. Judgment was entered in their favor upon the pleadings on January 18, 1899, for $24,086.61, with interest and costs. The policy of insurance, and all the circumstances in relation thereto and in connection therewith, and all the facts concerning the action of the court in sustaining the demurrer of the defendants in error and ordering judgment, are set forth in the statement of the case. There is no controversy as to the facts. The determination of the case rests solely upon the principles of law that are to be applied to the facts. These are important, and deserving of careful, painstaking, and deliberate consideration.

It is contended by the plaintiff in error that the court erred in holding that the contract is to be governed by the statute of the state of New York. This question is not a new one in this court. It has been twice before presented, discussed, considered, and decided. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Redding, 48 U. S. App. 565, 83 Fed. Rep. 85, 27 C. C. A. 404. After due deliberation upon the facts, and careful examination of the authorities, this court arrived at the conclusion that the contract there in question—which, in so far as the legal principles are involved, cannot be distinguished from the facts of this case—was a New York contract; citing in support thereof Wagman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 48, 6 L. ed. 264; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 136, 141, 27 L. ed. 104, 108, 110, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 206, 32 L. ed. 370, 375, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41; Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co. 142 U. S. 101, 109, 35 L. ed. 951, 954, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150; Hall v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 116, 120, 35 L. ed. 956, 959, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154.

In Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, as in this case, it was contended that the statement made by the insured, when requested to pay the premium due upon the policy, that he did not intend to keep the policy in force, amounted in law to a waiver on the part of both the insured and the company, of the notice required to be given by the statute of New York. Replying to this contention, the court said: "That the statute of New York prescribes the condition upon which a policy may be forfeited for the non-payment of a premium. The statute is mandatory, and controls the contract. Its provisions are not subject to be set aside or waived either by the company or by the insured, or by both together. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, 233, subnom. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Pettus, 35 L. ed. 497, 500, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Rae v. National L. Ins. Co. 20 U. S. App. 410, 60 Fed. Rep. 690, 9 C. C. A. 215; Griffith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 117; Warner v. National Life Asso. 100 Mich. 157, 58 N. W. 667."

Entertaining no doubt of the correctness of the conclusions therein reached, we respectfully decline to further discuss the same identical questions. It is enough to say that we adhere to the views therein expressed.

It is next contended by the plaintiff in error that the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed because it is rendered, not upon the cause of action alleged in the amended complaint, but upon a cause of action entirely different, in its scope, effect, and meaning, from the one alleged in the complaint; that, in point of fact, the right of the plaintiffs in the action to recover must be determined by the allegations of their complaint; that courts should not permit them to allege one ground of recovery in their complaint, and then afterwards to rely upon another ground; that to permit such a course constitutes a departure not recognized by the law; that it is equally a departure where the plaintiffs bring an action relying upon the common or general law, and then attempt to recover by virtue of a statute; that the one is a departure from fact to fact, the other a departure from law to law. To quote from counsel's brief: "A party who pleads a specific contract, and performance on his part of its conditions, as his right to recover, is not permitted, after performance has been controverted, to confess his noncompliance, and shift his right of recovery to an unpleaded statute of a foreign state, and assert noncompliance with its provisions on the part of defendant, and adopt the defendant's noncompliance with the unpleaded statute as his own excuse for noncompliance with the conditions of the contract alleged in his complaint. The right of action alleged and abandoned is the act of the party; that not alleged, but relied upon, is the act of the legislature of New York. With performance of the conditions alleged, the right of action is perfect, regardless of the New York statute. Without performance of the conditions alleged, there is no right of action whatever, unless it can be established through the statute of New York. If the statute of New York, instead of performance of the conditions of the contract by defendant in error, affords the ground of recovery, then pleading of the statute is indispensable."
49 L. R. A.

In line with this contention, it is also argued by the plaintiff in error that the defendants in error were not entitled to judgment after the demurrer had been sustained to the affirmative answers and defenses, because issue was joined upon the allegations of performance of the conditions precedent on the part of the insured, entitling defendants in error to a recovery. Of course, the complaint should allege the actual performance of every condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of property. The rights of the parties must be determined upon the facts which are put in issue by the pleadings. There is always a departure when a party quits or departs from the case which he first made, and has recourse to another, and the court is not justified in rendering judgment in favor of a plaintiff not warranted by the facts set forth in his pleadings. The general principles of law contended for by counsel are undoubtedly correct. But, in so far as it is sought to apply them to the case in hand, it becomes our duty to carefully consider the allegations of the complaint, and therefrom, in connection with the affirmative defenses set up in the answer, determine whether or not the court erred in rendering judgment upon the pleadings.

In the first place, the cases cited and relied upon by the plaintiff in error are clearly distinguishable in their facts from the case at bar, in this: that the plaintiffs' right of recovery therein rested solely upon another separate and distinct cause of action from the one stated in their complaint. In the present case the right of the defendants in error to recover is based exclusively upon the contract set out in their complaint, to wit, the policy of insurance. The cause of action set out in the complaint was based upon the identical facts upon which the court gave judgment. There was, therefore, no departure in this case either from fact to fact, or from law to law, and hence the principle contended for has no application to this case. There was no necessity for the defendants in error to plead the statute of New York. The United States courts take judicial notice of all the public statutes of the several states. Moreover, the question of forfeiture was solely a matter of defense. It is not considered good pleading to anticipate matters of defense.

In the second place, the complaint did not allege that the insured had, during his lifetime, complied with each and every covenant on his part to be performed. The allegation is "that said George Dana Hill during his lifetime duly performed all the conditions of said contract necessary by him to be performed." The natural effect and legal conclusion to be drawn from this averment are that he had only done those things which he was required to do in order to keep the policy alive, of binding force and effect, and to show that it was an existing, valid contract at the time of Hill's death, and that he had not during his lifetime done any act, or failed to perform any act, that forfeited his rights under said policy, or which would in any manner deprive the beneficiaries of their rights thereunder. There is no allegation in the complaint that the insured paid any other than the first premium. The position taken by the defendants in error was that it was only necessary for them to show this fact in order to entitle them to recover. They never made any departure from this position. They never claimed that they had any right to recover upon any other ground. They recovered upon that ground alone. This was their first, last, and only contention.

The affirmative matters alleged in the answer constituted no defense to the cause of action alleged in the complaint. The contract of insurance became complete upon the payment of the first premium. It was kept alive by the provisions of the statute of New York, because the contingency of forfeiture, as therein provided for, had not happened. The contract is to be read in the light of the statute, the same as if the statute had literally been incorporated in the policy. It was not essential to the right of recovery herein that the defendants in error should have paid, or tendered payment of, the premiums due on the policy before commencing the action. When Hill died the relation of debtor and creditors existed between the insurance company and the beneficiaries named in the policy. The unpaid premiums, with legal interest from the date they became payable, constituted a claim on behalf of the insurance company to be deducted when the company paid the amount due on the policy; thus leaving it in precisely the same situation in which it would have been if the premiums had been paid when they became due. The complaint stated a good and complete cause of action. There could not be any forfeiture of the policy unless the insurance company in its answer alleged, and, if a trial was had, proved, nonpayment of a premium due, after regular service of the notice of nonpayment as required by the statute. Carter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 16, 17 N. E. 396; Phelan v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 113 N. Y. 147, 20 N. E. 827; Baxter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 119 N. Y. 450, 7 L. R. A. 293, 23 N. E. 1048; De Frece v. National L. Ins. Co. 136 N. Y. 144, 32 N. E. 556; Griesemer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 10 Wash. 203, 38 Pac. 1031; Griffith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Cal. 627, 642, 36 Pac. 113; Osborne v. Home Ins. Co. 123 Cal. 610, 56 Pac. 616; Rae v. National L. Ins. Co. 20 U. S. App. 410, 60 Fed. Rep. 690, 692, 9 C. C. A. 215; Mullen v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 89 Tex. 259, 34 S. W. 605.

The plea of estoppel, as set forth in the third affirmative defense, is but another name for waiver. There is no question concerning the plea of estoppel that can be distinguished from the question as to the plea of waiver. As the parties could not waive the requirements of the statute as to the manner in which the policy could be forfeited, how could the beneficiaries, who had vested rights therein, be divested of such rights, except in the manner provided by law? They certainly could not be bound by any declarations which their father may have made in his lifetime to any agent or officer of the insurance company as to his inability to pay the premium then due upon the policy, or that he did not intend to pay that or any future premium, or that the insurance company might consider the policy forfeited without giving the notice specified in the statute. To so hold would entirely abrogate the provisions of the statute and of the policy. As was said by the court in Baxter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co.: "When the provisions of this statute are adopted in a contract of insurance, for the purpose of modifying the forfeiture clause and the other strict conditions contained therein, then the clause and these conditions should be so construed as to give to the assured the full benefit contemplated, without altering any other provision of the policy, if this can be done without violating any rule of law."

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed, with costs.

MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY of New York, Plff. in Err.,

Frank E. DINGLEY, Admr., etc., of Walter Frederick Dingley, Deceased.

(100 Fed. Rep. 408.)

1. A general denial by an insurer that the insured has performed all or any of the conditions of his contract, when coupled with a specific averment of particulars in which he has failed to perform, will not permit proof of failure in other particulars.
2. A Federal court in which an action is brought will take judicial notice of all the statutes of the several states of the Union.
3. A judgment sustaining a cause of action on an insurance policy does not depart from the cause of action pleaded because it holds that there has not been any forfeiture of the policy by nonpayment of premiums for the reason that the insurer has not given notices required by a statute, although that statute is not pleaded by either party.
4. Policies of insurance made and executed in New York, reciting that they are payable there, and that premiums are to be paid there, and containing a waiver of the service of notices required by statute, which reference is to a New York statute, are to be governed by the laws of that state, where the applications therefor recite that they are subject to the laws of New York, although they are made in another state where the applicant resides, and where the policies are delivered to him by an agent of the insurer upon payment of premiums.

NOTE.—As to necessity of notice of nonpayment of premium, see preceding case of Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill (C. C. A. 9th C.) ante, 127, and other cases cited in footnote thereto.

5. Oral statements by an insured, recognizing the forfeiture of his policies, and refusing to continue them, when made without any consideration, will not be sufficient to annul the express provisions of a statute prohibiting a forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums without the giving of specified notice.
6. An equitable estoppel to assert a claim on an insurance policy will not arise from the default of the assured in the payment of premiums, or his acquiescence in the claim that the policy had lapsed, when the relation of the parties had not been changed thereby, and the insurer had not done or refrained from doing any act to its injury, in reliance thereon.
7. Policies issued and delivered by a New York company in another state are subject to the terms of N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 690, § 92, providing that "no life insurance company doing business in this state" shall declare a policy forfeited without having given prescribed notice.

(February 5, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern Division of the District of Washington to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amounts alleged to be due on certain policies of life insurance. Affirmed.

Before Gilbert, Ross, and Morrow, Circuit Judges.

Statement by Gilbert, Circuit Judge:

This writ of error is brought to review the decision of the circuit court in rendering judgment for the defendant in error upon the pleadings filed in an action at law to recover upon four several policies of life insurance. The complaint alleged: That the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, the defendant in the action, is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New York, and has its home office in the city of New York. That on May 24, 1892, it issued to plaintiff's intestate three several policies of insurance, the first and second of which were for $10,000 each, and the third for $5,000, upon each of which policies there was paid the premium for the first fifteen months, and that on November 7, 1892, it issued a fourth policy for $50,000, upon which one year's premium was paid. The form of the policy in each case is the same, and is set forth in the complaint in full. It is recited therein that it is issued in consideration of the application therefor, which is made a part of the contract. It promises to pay at the home office of the company, in the city of New York, the amount of insurance covered thereby, upon acceptance of satisfactory proofs at the home office of the death of the insured. It provides that the annual premium shall be paid to the company at its home office, in the city of New York, on August 24th in every year, for twenty years. It contains the recital that the company has caused the policy to be executed at its office, in the city of New York, state of New York. Concerning the payment of premiums, there are also the following provisions: "Each premium is payable at the office of the company, in the city of New York. Notice that each payment is due at the date named in the policy is given and accepted by the delivery and acceptance of the policy, and any further notice required by any statute is expressly waived." The complaint further alleges the death of the insured at Seattle on November 12, 1896, the appointment of the plaintiff as the administrator of his estate, and that on May 28, 1897, the defendant in error furnished due proofs of the death of the insured, which were accepted by the company as satisfactory; and it contains the allegation that the insured and the administrator "each duly performed all conditions of said policy on their part." To this complaint the insurance company made answer, admitting the allegations of the complaint as to its creation under the laws of New York, the location of its principal place of business in that state, the execution of the policies and the payment of premiums, but alleged that the policies were delivered in the city of Seattle, and not in the city of New York. It admitted the making and acceptance of satisfactory proofs of death of the insured, but denied the performance of the conditions of the policy on the part of the defendant in error or his intestate. It set up an affirmative defense, alleging: That its chief office for the transaction of business in the state of Washington was in the city of Seattle. That the applications were signed at Seattle, and were a part of the policy and of the contract of insurance. That the application recited the stipulation that the policy should not take effect until the first premium should have been paid and the policy delivered. That the agent of plaintiff in error in Seattle transmitted said application to the general agent in San Francisco, by whom it was transmitted to the insurance company in New York. That the insurance company executed its policies, and transmitted the same to its general agent in San Francisco, who transmitted the same to its agent in Seattle, to be there delivered upon the payment of the first premium, and that there the insured paid the first premium and received the policies. That it was provided in said policies that "each premium is due and payable at the home office of the company, in the city of New York, but will be accepted elsewhere, when duly paid in exchange for the company's receipt, signed by the president or secretary. Notice that each and every such payment is due at the date named in the policy is given and accepted by the delivery and acceptance of this policy. Any further notice required by any statute is thereby expressly waived." That from the date of said policies to the time of his death the insured resided in Seattle, and transacted business there, and was a man of general information and experience in business affairs. That he knew and was fully informed of the date when the second annual premiums on said policies became due, in the year 1893, and the amounts thereof, and that with full knowledge of the premises he did elect to make and did make further payment thereon, and elected to allow, and allowed, the said policies to lapse and become void for want of payment of premiums, because he did not further desire to continue said insurance, and that from that time he knew that the insurance company had written off said policy from its books, and treated the same as lapsed. That until the time of his death the insured elected to make no further payment of premium or premiums. That by reason of said facts his administrator is estopped to assert that the policies are existing contracts. By stipulation, the several applications were made part of the pleadings. The defendant in error filed a demurrer to each of the affirmative defenses, for want of facts sufficient to constitute a defense, and filed a general demurrer to the answer as a whole. The demurrers were sustained. The plaintiff in error declining to amend its answer or plead further, judgment was rendered for the defendant in error for the sum of $71,954.15, with interest and costs.

Messrs. Struve, Allen, Hughes, & McMicken, and Strudwick & Peters, with Mr. Edward Lyman Short, for plaintiff in error:

The judgment herein should be reversed because it is rendered, not upon the cause of action alleged in the complaint, but upon one not alleged and which differs essentially therefrom.

Saunders, Pl. & Ev. pp. 806, 807; Stephen, Pl. pp. 412, 413; Gould, Pl. pp. 423, 424; Clark v. Sherman, 5 Wash. 681, 32 Pac. 771; Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 Mich. 538, 7 N. W. 213.

The wording of the statute is in harmony with its obvious intent to limit its application to the state of New York.

Wharton, Conf. L. 2d ed. § 752; 2 Parsons, Contr. 7th ed. 718; Rosenplaenter v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 91 Fed. Rep. 728.

The failure and refusal of the insured to pay premiums defeated the policy.

Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, sub nom. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Pettus, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236; Excell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. ed. 682, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408; Gross v. United States Mortg. Co. 108 U. S. 477, 27 L. ed. 795, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 940.

Defendant in error was not entitled to judgment because issue was joined upon the allegations of performance of the conditions precedent on the part of the insured entitling defendant in error to a recovery.

Loud v. Pomona Land & Water Co. 153 U. S. 564, 38 L. ed. 822, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 928; Phillips & C. Constr. Co. v. Seymour, 91 U. S. 646, 23 L. ed. 341; 4 Joyce, Ins. § 3674; Perry v. Phoenix Assur. Co. 8 Fed. Rep. 643; Edgerly v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 43 Iowa, 587; 49 L. R. A.

Thompson v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 252, 26 L. ed. 765; Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. v. Unsell, 144 U. S. 439, 36 L. ed. 496, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671.

Had noncompliance with the statute of New York on the part of plaintiff in error been relied upon as an excuse for nonperformance of the conditions of the contract on the part of the deceased, then defendant in error was required to plead the statute of New York and noncompliance with its provisions on the part of the insurance company.

Oakley v. Morton, 11 N. Y. 25, 52 Am. Rep. 49; Hudson v. McCartney, 33 Wis. 331; Lumbert v. Palmer, 29 Iowa, 104; Woolsey v. Williams, 34 Iowa, 413; Hand v. National Live-Stock Ins. Co. 57 Minn. 519, 59 N. W. 538; Evans v. Queen Ins. Co. 5 Ind. App. 198, 31 N. E. 843; Trainor v. Worman, 34 Minn. 237, 25 N. W. 401; Mosness v. German-American Ins. Co. 50 Minn. 341, 52 N. W. 932; East Texas F. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 82 Tex. 631, 18 S. W. 713; Austin v. Goodrich, 49 N. Y. 266; Churchill v. Onderdonk, 59 N. Y. 134; Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 Mich. 538, 7 N. W. 213.

Messrs. Preston, Carr, & Gilman, McCutcheon & Gilham, and Stanton Warburton, for defendant in error:

The mere general denial of a general statement that plaintiff's husband in his lifetime fully complied with all the requirements and performed all the conditions of his contract with the defendant raises no issue, and according to the rules of pleading all the facts well pleaded in the complaint are admitted.

Selby v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 67 Fed. Rep. 490; Kahnweiler v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 32 U. S. App. 230, 67 Fed. Rep. 483, 14 C. C. A. 485; Philip Schneider Breuwing Co. v. American Ice Mach. Co. 40 U. S. App. 382, 77 Fed. Rep. 138, 23 C. C. A. 89; Preston v. Roberts, 12 Bush, 570.

There can be no doubt from the reading of the application, prepared in its own interest by the company, that it was the company's intention to bring the contract under the laws of the state of New York.

Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Redding, 48 U. S. App. 565, 83 Fed. Rep. 85, 27 C. C. A. 404; Phinney v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 67 Fed. Rep. 493; Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co. 142 U. S. 101, 35 L. ed. 951, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150; Hall v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 116, 35 L. ed. 956, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 32 L. ed. 370, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469; Penn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank & T. Co. 37 U. S. App. 692, 38 L. R. A. 33, 19 C. C. A. 286, 72 Fed. Rep. 413; Hyde v. Goodnow, 3 N. Y. 266; Griffith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 113; Goodwin v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Asso. 97 Iowa, 226, 32 L. R. A. 473, 66 N. W. 157; Massachusetts Benefit Life

Asso. v. Hale, 96 Ga. 802, 23 S. E. 849; Mullen v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 89 Tex. 259, 34 S. W. 605; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Pollard, 94 Va. 146, 36 L. R. A. 271, 26 S. E. 422; Richardson v. Rowland, 40 Conn. 565; Bennett v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 177 Pa. 233, 34 L. R. A. 595, 35 Atl. 684; London Assur. Co. v. Companhia De Moagens Do Barreiro, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785; Canton Ins. Office v. Woodside, 61 U. S. App. 214, 90 Fed. Rep. 301, 33 C. C. A. 63; Griesemer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 10 Wash. 202, 38 Pac. 1034.

Having pleaded a contract of which the general laws of the state of New York were made a part by the terms of the contract, either party to the action was at liberty to claim upon demurrer, or at any other stage in the case, or by any other method, the benefit of any New York statute which was to his advantage.

Merchants' Exch. Bank v. McGraw, 15 U. S. App. 332, 59 Fed. Rep. 972, 8 C. C. A. 420; Gormley v. Bunyan, 138 U. S. 623, 34 L. ed. 1086, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Brooklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 535, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242; Lamar v. Micou, 114 U. S. 218, 29 L. ed. 94, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; Junction R. Co. v. Bank of Ashland, 12 Wall. 226, 20 L. ed. 385; L'Engle v. Gates, 74 Fed. Rep. 513; Baxter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 119 N. Y. 450, 7 L. R. A. 293, 23 N. E. 1048; De Free v. National L. Ins. Co. 136 N. Y. 144, 32 N. E. 556; Pennington v. Gibson, 16 How. 65, 14 L. ed. 847.

The duration and validity of the policy are not dependent upon payment of the premium on the day named in the policy, but upon payment within thirty days after the statutory notice has been mailed; and the condition upon which the policy can be forfeited, or in any way impaired as a subsisting contract of insurance, is a failure on the part of the insured to pay the premium within thirty days after notice; and in the absence of proof on the part of the defendant as to the service of the notice, it is to be taken as true that the notice was not given and no default occurred; and therefore these contracts were valid and subsisting contracts at the time of the death of Dingley.

Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Redding, 48 U. S. App. 565, 83 Fed. Rep. 85, 27 C. C. A. 404; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Dingley, 93 Fed. Rep. 153, 35 C. C. A. 245; Osborne v. Home L. Ins. Co. 123 Cal. 610, 56 Pac. 616; Griffith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 113; Mullen v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 89 Tex. 259, 34 S. W. 605; Warner v. National L. Ins. Co. 100 Mich. 157, 58 N. W. 667.

An agreement of rescission, like any other agreement, must be based upon a sufficient consideration.

This oral agreement, whereby it is claimed that the statutory notice was waived, can certainly be of no greater force or validity 49 L. R. A.

than the express written waiver contained in the policy itself.

Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Griffith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 113; Osborne v. Home L. Ins. Co. 123 Cal. 610, 56 Pac. 616; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Pollard, 94 Va. 146, 36 L. R. A. 271, 26 S. E. 421; Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Ficklin, 74 Md. 172, 21 Atl. 680, on rehearing, 23 Atl. 167; Herman v. Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. 151 Pa. 17, 24 Atl. 1064; Reilly v. Franklin Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 449, 28 Am. Rep. 552; Emery v. Piscataqua F. & M. Ins. Co. 52 Me. 322; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. 680; Wall v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 32 Fed. Rep. 273; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, sub nom. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Pettus, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822.

This alleged agreement of forfeiture is void as being beyond the power of the corporation to make.

Griffith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 113; Osborne v. Home L. Ins. Co. 123 Cal. 610, 56 Pac. 616; Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Ficklin, 74 Md. 172, 21 Atl. 680, on rehearing, 23 Atl. 167; Rue v. Missouri P. R. Co. 74 Tex. 476, 8 S. W. 533; Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 27 L. ed. 1020, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363; Kelfe v. Rundle, 103 U. S. 222, sub nom. Life Asso. of America v. Rundle, 26 L. ed. 337; Hebb v. Kittanning Ins. Co. 138 Pa. 174, 20 Atl. 837; Roice v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 16 Misc. 323, 38 N. Y. Supp. 621.

As this pretended agreement of forfeiture was in contravention of the statute of the state from the law of which the plaintiff in error derives its existence, it is without effect.

Hyde v. Goodnow, 3 N. Y. 266; Andrews v. Pond, 13 Pet. 65, 10 L. ed. 61; Story, Conf. L. 7th ed. § 224; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. pp. 555, 556, and cases cited.

The New York statute should not be limited to business done in the state of New York, and to policies issued and delivered in that state to citizens of that state.

Griesemer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 10 Wash. 202, 38 Pac. 1034; Phinney v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 67 Fed. Rep. 493; Hebb v. Kittanning Ins. Co. 138 Pa. 174, 20 Atl. 837; Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Ficklin, 74 Md. 172, 21 Atl. 680; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Fields (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 280.

Gilbert, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

It is contended that, after the demurrer to the affirmative matter alleged in the answer was sustained, there still remained in the answer a denial of one of the essential averments of the complaint,—a denial of the allegation that the insured had performed the conditions of the contracts. It was a denial in general terms that the insured or the plaintiff duly or at all performed all or any of the conditions in said policies on their part. Whether this general denial standing by itself, and unaided by the fu ther averments of the answer, would be sufficient to put in issue the allegation of the complaint, it is unnecessary to decide. It was coupled with a specific averment of the particulars where the insurance company claimed that the insured had failed to perform the terms of the contracts. When the defendant in an action thus makes specific the items wherein he contends that the plaintiff has failed to perform, he must in his proof be held to the particular matter so pleaded, and will not be permitted to avail himself of a general denial for the purpose of proving that the plaintiff has failed in some other particular not named. Philip Schneider Brewing Co. v. American Ice Mach. Co. 40 U. S. App. 382, 77 Fed. Rep. 138, 143, 23 C. C. A. 89; Kahnweiler v. Phenix Ins. Co. 32 U. S. App. 230, 67 Fed. Rep. 483, 485, 14 C. C. A. 485; Preston v. Roberts, 12 Bush, 570, 582. The general allegation of performance on the part of the plaintiff, as the same was set forth in the complaint, is permitted under the Washington Code. "In pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it shall not be necessary to state the facts showing such performance, but it may be stated, generally, that the party duly performed all the conditions on his part; and, if such allegation be controverted, the party pleading shall be bound to establish on the trial the facts showing such performance." 2 Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 4934. As the insurance company in its denial specified wherein it alleged that the insured had failed to perform, and those matters so alleged were found by the court insufficient to raise an issue, there remained nothing in the answer whereby the averment of the complaint was put in issue.

It is contended that the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed because it is rendered, not upon the cause of action alleged in the complaint, but upon one not alleged and which differs essentially therefrom. It is said that the cause of action set up in the complaint, as to each of the policies sued upon, is based strictly and solely upon the rights created by the execution and delivery of the policies, coupled with the averment that the insured had performed all the conditions thereof; but that the judgment is rendered, not upon the facts so pleaded, but upon a liability created by a statute of the state of New York,—a statute which was not alluded to in the pleadings, and not declared upon in the complaint, as the source of the defendant's liability, and that by virtue of that statute the policies were held to be subsisting contracts, in the face of the admission in the pleadings that the insured never did perform the conditions of the contracts of insurance, but, on the contrary, made default in the payment of premiums which were essential conditions to their subsistence, and for which default the policies, according to their terms, became lapsed. It is argued that in so giving effect to the statute of New York, and so rendering judgment, the court made an unwarranted departure from the causes of action pleaded in the complaint. To sustain this contention the plaintiff in error cites Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877, a case in which Wyler commenced an action in the state court of Missouri to recover for personal injury suffered while working for the railway company in Kansas, alleging that the injury occurred through the company's negligence in employing a fellow servant who was known to be incompetent. A Kansas statute in force at that time made every railway company liable for injury done an employee in consequence of the negligence of such fellow servant. The case was removed to the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri, and there an amended petition was filed changing the cause of action, alleging the negligence of the plaintiff's fellow servant, and charging that the railway company was liable therefor by virtue of the provisions of the Kansas statute. To the amended petition the railway company pleaded the statute of limitations of Missouri. The court decided that the amended petition set up a different cause of action from that alleged in the original petition, and that the commencement of the new action was to be regarded as dating from the filing of the amended petition. The points which distinguish that case from the case before the court are apparent. The present case was begun in a court of the United States,—a court which takes judicial notice of all the statutes of the several states of the Union. Gormley v. Bunyan, 138 U. S. 623, 34 L. ed. 1086, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453; Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 535, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242; Merchants' Exch. Bank v. McGraw, 15 U. S. App. 332, 59 Fed. Rep. 972, 8 C. C. A. 420. The complaint sets forth causes of action based upon contracts of insurance. It alleges the execution of the contracts, the delivery of the policies to the insured, and the performance by the insured of the conditions thereof. The insurance company made no denial of these allegations except to deny in general terms that the insured had performed the conditions of the contracts. The insurance company then proceeded to set up in its answer its affirmative defenses, one of which was the failure of the insured to pay subsequent premiums which fell due. It alleged that thereby, under the terms of the policies, the contracts of insurance lapsed and became forfeited. To these defenses the defendant in error demurred. The question for the court to determine was whether or not facts were stated which were sufficient to constitute a defense. To the facts so alleged in the answer the court was required to apply the law, which determined the question of their sufficiency, and it was immaterial whether or not the statute of New York was pleaded by either party, since, as we have seen, the court was bound to take judicial notice of it. The statute (N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 600, § 92) provided as follows: "No Forfeiture of Policy without Notice. No life insurance corporation doing business in this state shall declare forfeited or lapsed any policy hereafter issued or renewed, and not issued upon the payment of monthly or weekly premiums, or unless the same is a term-insurance contract for one year or less, nor shall any such policy be forfeited or lapsed by reason of nonpayment, when due, of any premium, interest, or instalment or any portion thereof, required by the terms of the policy to be paid, unless a written or printed notice stating the amount of such premium, interest, instalment, or portion thereof due on such policy, the place where it should be paid, and the person to whom the same is payable, shall be duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is insured, or the assignee of the policy, if notice of the assignment has been given to the corporation, at his or her last known postoffice address, postage paid by the corporation, or by an officer thereof, or person appointed by it to collect such premium, at least fifteen, and not more than forty-five, days prior to the day when the same is payable. The notice shall also state that unless such premium, interest, instalment, or portion thereof, then due, shall be paid to the corporation, or to a duly appointed agent or person authorized to collect such premium, by or before the day it falls due, the policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void, except as to the right to a surrender value, or paid-up policy, as in this chapter provided. If the payment demanded by such notice shall be made within its time limited therefor, it shall be taken to be in full compliance with the requirements of the policy in respect to the time of such payment; and no such policy shall in any case be forfeited or declared forfeited or lapsed until the expiration of thirty days after the mailing of such notice. The affidavit of any officer, clerk, or agent of the corporation, or of anyone authorized to mail such notice, that the notice required by this section has been duly addressed and mailed by the corporation issuing such policy, shall be presumptive evidence that such notice has been duly given."

It will be seen from the terms of the statute that the insurance company could declare the contracts of insurance forfeited for nonpayment of premiums only by giving the notice therein specified. This was an essential ingredient of the defense which it attempted to make. There was no allegation in the answer that the notice had been given. Measured by the statute, the facts pleaded were insufficient to constitute a defense, and the court so decided. The demurrer being sustained, there was no answer to the complaint. The case stood with all the allegations of the complaint admitted to be true, and upon such admission the court properly entered judgment. No question of departure is presented. The complaint was not amended. No change was made in the cause of action. The judgment was rendered upon the facts, which were set forth in the complaint. The defendant in error declared upon a liability created by contract, and alleged performance of the terms of the contract. Upon that declaration, uncontro-verted, as it was, by the insurance company, the judgment was rendered. He did not allege one cause of action, and sustain his complaint by evidence of a different cause of action. The case was decided upon the pleadings,—upon the untraversed allegations of the complaint. It was no answer to the case made in the complaint to say that the insured had failed to pay premiums, and that thereby his policies were forfeited, for the law attached no such result to that default.

The plaintiff in error contends that the contracts were made and entered into in the state of Washington, and for that reason are not subject to the provisions of the New York statute. It is true that the insured resided in the state of Washington, and there made application for his insurance, but the applications recited that they were made "subject to the charter of the company and the laws of the state of New York." The applications were sent to the office of the company at New York, and there were approved, and there the policies were made out and executed. The policies were then sent to the company's agent at Seattle, where they were delivered to the insured upon the payment of the premiums. Each policy provides in terms, as well as do the applications, that the application is a part of the policy and of the contract of insurance. Each policy also recites that it is payable at the city of New York upon acceptance there of satisfactory proofs of death, that the annual premiums are to be paid there, and that the policy is executed there. The company inserted in the policies a waiver in terms of the service of any notice of the due date of premiums required by statute. That reference must have been to the New York statute, for there was no Washington statute applicable. It is clear that the state of New York was the place of performance of the contracts, and that by the laws of that state the contracts are governed. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Redding, 48 U. S. App. 565, 83 Fed. Rep. 85, 27 C. C. A. 404; Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co. 142 U. S. 101, 35 L. ed. 591, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150; Hall v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 116, 35 L. ed. 956, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; London Assur. Co. v. Companhia De Moagens Do Barreiro, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785.

It is contended that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the affirmative matter of the answer, which alleged that the insured informed the insurance company that he recognized that the contracts of insurance were lapsed, and that he refused to continue his policies, and that it was then mutually agreed between the contracting parties that the policies were lapsed and terminated. It is not asserted that the contracts of insurance were declared forfeited by an instrument under seal, or that any consideration passed to the insured for the cancellation thereof. The matters so pleaded evidently rested in parol. Such oral statements could be of no more binding effect than the express written waiver which was contained in the policies. We have already decided that the parties to an insurance contract cannot be permitted by parol agreement to annul the express provisions of the statute (Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Redding, 48 U. S. App. 565, 83 Fed. Rep. 85, 27 C. C. A. 404; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620); and further consideration only confirms our conviction of the correctness of that view. In the Nixon Case it was said: "The statute of New York prescribes the condition upon which a policy may be forfeited for the nonpayment of a premium. The statute is mandatory, and controls the contract. Its provisions are not subject to be set aside or waived either by the company, or by the insured, or by both together."

Nor can any ground of equitable estoppel arise from the default of the assured in the payment of premiums or any of the facts set forth in the answer. It is not shown that the relation of either party to the contracts was changed, or that the insurance company did, or refrained from doing, any act to its injury in reliance upon such parol statement of the insured.

It is contended, further, that the New York statute is limited in its application to business done in the state of New York, and applies only to policies issued and delivered in that state to the citizens thereof. The language of the statute is broader than this. It reads: "No life insurance company doing business in the state of New York shall have power," etc. The company was a New York company, doing business in that state, and comes within the precise words of the statute. If it had been the intention to restrict the benefits and protection of the statute to the citizens and residents of the state of New York, it is reasonable to presume that that intention would have been expressed. It must have been known to the lawmakers that certain of the life insurance companies of New York were doing an extensive insurance business with residents of other states. The language of the statute extends to all business done by such companies. Its very terms preclude a narrow construction. Hebb v. Kittanning Ins. Co. 138 Pa. 174, 20 Atl. 837; New Era Life Assn. v. Musser, 120 Pa. 384, 14 Atl. 155; Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. v. Ficklin, 74 Md. 172, 21 Atl. 680, 23 Atl. 197; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Fields (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 280.

We find no error for which the judgment should be reversed. It is accordingly affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Re Estate of Olive Jane WICKES, Deceased.

(.....Cal.....)

Placing her husband in a home for incurables, with his expenses for life and for burial paid, does not entitle a woman to acquire a separate domicile which will give jurisdiction to a probate court, notwithstanding a statutory provision that in actions for divorce the presumption of law that the domicile of the husband is that of the wife does not apply.

(March 31, 1900.)

A PPEAL by proponent from an order of the Superior Court for Alameda County refusing to admit to probate the will of Olive Jane Wickes, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Z. N. Goldsby, P. F. Dunne, and B. H. Griffins for appellant.

Messrs. Otto Tum Suden and George D. Squires for respondent.

Temple, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The will of Olive Jane Wickes was refused probate by the superior court of Alameda county on the ground that the testatrix at NOTE.—For domicile of man under guardianship, see Talbot v. Chamberlain (Mass.) 3 L. R. A. 234.

As to domicile of wife for purpose of divorce suit, see Loker v. Gerald (Mass.) 16 L. R. A. 497, and note.

49 L. R. A.

the time of her death did not reside in that county, and this appeal is from that order. The will was contested by the surviving husband of the testatrix on many grounds. He also contended that the testatrix at the time of her death resided in San Francisco. This last contention was sustained by the court. At the trial some of the facts were agreed upon as follows: "That in October, 1894, and for many years prior thereto, Olive Jane Wickes and Alfred M. Wickes, her husband, lived and resided in the city of San Francisco, California. That about that time the husband of deceased, Olive Jane Wickes, being afflicted with an incurable disease (paralysis), bedridden and unable to assist himself in any manner whatever, was by the said Olive Jane Wickes, and with the consent of Alfred M. Wickes, removed from the then home of the parties, and placed in an institution for incurables, known as the 'King's Daughters' Home for Incurables,' which is located in said city of San Francisco. That his entrance fee, entitling him to remain for life, was paid, and he did so remain continuously until he died, on December 24, 1898. The said Alfred M. Wickes never did reside in Alameda county. The said Olive Jane Wickes was never admitted as an inmate or otherwise of said home. That at the time said Alfred M. Wickes was placed in said home he required personal care and attention, and that by reason of ill health Olive Jane Wickes was unable to render the same to him personally. That provision was made for him at said home for life, and for his burial, by the payment of a stipulated sum of money, and a contract entered into accordingly. That after October, 1894, said Alfred M. Wickes never had, or claimed to have, any place of residence, save as an inmate of said home, and that from and after October, 1894, Alfred M. Wickes and Olive Jane Wickes never lived together as husband and wife, but lived separate and apart, by reason of the foregoing circumstances, but not by reason of any agreement of separation, or by reason of any decree of court. That about April, 1895, Olive Jane Wickes sold her then home in San Francisco, and moved to the city of Oakland, said Alameda county, and thereupon purchased a lot in said city, erected a house thereon, and resided therein until November, 1897, when she sold the same, and thereafter lived in said city in rented houses until about July, 1898, when, after stopping in several places in said city of Oakland, she went to Fabiola Hospital, in said city, where she died on November 5, 1898." Additional testimony was given by the contestant, some of which tended to show that, at one time during her stay in Oakland, Mrs. Wickes contemplated returning to San Francisco, and even applied for admission to the same hospital in which her husband was being treated. The court found that Mrs. Wickes was not a resident or domiciled in Alameda county at the time of her death, but that her residence and domicile was in the city and county of San Francisco.

There being no controversy as to any material fact, the question is purely a matter of law. Upon this subject we find in Dicey's work on Domicil: "Rule 9. The domicil of every dependent person is the same as, and changes, if at all, with the domicil of the person on whom he is, as regards his domicil, dependent." "Subrule 2. The domicil of a married woman is, during coverture, the same as, and changes with, her husband's." Under this subrule it is said: "The fact that a wife actually lives apart from her husband (Warrender v. Warrender, 2 Clark & F. 488), that they have separated by agreement (Dolphin v. Robins, 7 H. L. Cas. 390), that the husband has been guilty of misconduct such as would furnish defense to a suit by him for restitution of conjugal rights (Yelverton v. Yelverton, 1 Swabey & T. 574), does not enable the wife to acquire a separate domicil." Rule 10 is, "A domicil cannot be acquired by a dependent person through his own act." Under this rule an illustration is given of a German woman married to an Englishman, who, after living for a time with her husband in England, returns to Germany, to remain for the balance of her life. She may have her home in Germany, but her domicil will remain in England, if her husband continues to reside there. The above rules have application only to the case where husband and wife have separate actual residences. Of course, they can be rebutted only by proof that the case is within some exception to the rule. In our Code it is said: "In actions for di-voice the presumption of law that the domicil of the husband is the domicil of the wife does not apply." Civil Code, § 129. Counsel say this rule is only a presumption of evidence, and since it is not included in the presumptions mentioned in § 1962, Code Civ. Proc., it may be rebutted by evidence. But the law that the domicil, or, more accurately, the forum, of the wife is where the husband is domiciled, although she is actually living in a different place, is not a rule of evidence. It is a law to which there are some exceptions, and the presumption as to a particular case is that it is controlled by the general rule, unless it is shown that it is within some exception. There are certain well-ascertained exceptions to the rule, but, plainly, this case is not within any of them. The common law is the rule of decision in this state, where no positive law, state or national, obtains. It is certain that in England, at least prior to the present century, there was no exception whatever to the rule of law that the domicil of the husband is the legal domicil of the wife, and that she can under no circumstances, during coverture, acquire a legal domicil for herself.

The matter was elaborately considered in the House of Lords in 1835, in the case of Warrender v. Warrender, 2 Clark & F. 488. Warrender was a Scotchman, who, holding certain high offices actually lived for a portion of the time in England. He married an Englishwoman in England. They went to his estates in Scotland for a short time, and then returned to England, where they resided some two years, when a formal separation was agreed to. They agreed to live apart from each other, and the husband, in writing, agreed that the wife could go and reside wherever she pleased. In pursuance of this she lived in France, and some fourteen years afterwards he sued for a divorce in Scotland. The service of process upon the wife was such as could only be made upon a person whose legal domicil was in Scotland. Whether that was the legal domicil of Lady Warrender was the principal point involved on the appeal. It was held that the plaintiff was still domiciled in Scotland, and that his domicil was the legal domicil of the wife. Speaking of the fact that the wife's actual residence was in France, with the consent of her husband, the lord chancellor said: "For actual residence—residence in point of fact—signifies nothing in the case of a married woman, and shall not, in ordinary circumstances, be set up against the presumption of law that she resides with her husband. . . . Nay, had the parties lived in different places, from a mutual understanding which prevailed between them, the case would still be the same. The law could take no notice of the fact, but must proceed upon its own conclusive presumption, and hold her domiciled where she ought to be, and where in all ordinary circumstances she would be,—with her husband." And again: "In other words, no fact and no contract, no matter in pais, and no deed executed, can rebut the overruling presumption of the law that the married persons live together, or, which is the same thing, that they have one residence,—one domicile." These citations show both what the common law of England upon the subject was, and the nature of the presumption, if it can be so called. The rule is absolute. The case of Dolphin v. Robins, 7 H. L. Cas. 390, is interesting from the fact that Lord Cranworth, in rendering the opinion of the court, mildly protested against the universality of the rule which denied the right of the wife to establish a domicile different from that of her husband in any case. In that case an Englishwoman having been divorced, as she supposed, married a Frenchman, and lived with him many years in France, where she died, having made a will, which was valid if she was then lawfully domiciled in France. There had been a legal separation between the parties before the divorce. The fact that the testatrix was a married woman did not affect the question, except by determining her domicile. The court held the divorce void and, although there was also the agreement to live in separation, that she could not acquire another domicile for testamentary purposes. A still later case, in 1876, was decided by Sir R. J. Phillimore. Le Sueur v. Le Sueur, L. R. 1 Prob. Div. 139. The action was for a divorce. The parties were married in the Island of Jersey, where the husband deserted the wife, and then went to America, where he continued to reside. The wife removed to England, where she commenced the action for divorce. The judge said the husband deserted the wife, and it might well be claimed that this fact entitled her to acquire a domicile for herself, but he says: "I am not aware that any judicial decision has as yet gone to this length, but there is much to be said in favor of the proposition, both on principle and analogy;" and he concludes the decision with the statement that he thinks, in case of desertion, the wife can acquire a domicile which would enable her to bring the action, and says: "In coming to that conclusion, I am aware that I am going a step further than judicial decisions have as yet gone." The court refused to take jurisdiction on other grounds, and the remarks were obiter, but are high authority for the proposition that the appellant has no support in the rules of the common law.

In the United States the cases are at variance as to whether, for the purposes of maintaining an action for a divorce, a wife can acquire a domicile by her own act. In the majority of the states the rule is as declared by our own statute. But this rule only allows that she may acquire a domicile for the purposes of the divorce (Jacob, Domicil, § 226), and that is really the effect of our statute. In actions for divorce the presumption that the domicile of the husband is the domicile of the wife does not prevail. Of course, for all other purposes her forum is where her husband has his domicile. This consideration would be sufficient to dispose of this case; for, although there are other exceptions to the rule which must be recognized in our state, this case is not within any of 49 L. R. A.

them. It may be admitted, not only as claimed, that a wife may have a different forum whenever it is necessary for her protection that she should have, but that she may by her own act acquire a domicile for herself whenever our statutory provisions justify a separate residence for her. I find no authority in the decisions for this last proposition, save one from New Hampshire, to be presently noticed; but, admitting such to be the rule, this case is not within it. We must not, in this connection, confound the right to a separate home or actual residence with the question of domicile. At common law the right of the wife to a separate home was often recognized and secured, but that fact did not, nor did even a judicial separation, enable her to acquire another and different legal domicile. To a large extent, it is a question as to the forum in which the wife shall assert her legal rights. Counsel cites the case of Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604, where Justice Swayne says in regard to the domicile acquired by a wife for the purposes of divorce: "The rule is that she may acquire a separate domicile whenever it is necessary or proper that she should do so." Supposing this rule to apply to a domicile for other purposes than divorce, this case is still not within it.

The stipulation recites that for many years prior to October, 1894, the parties had resided in San Francisco, where the husband, who is, or was, contestant here, being "afflicted with an incurable disease (paralysis), bedridden, and unable to assist himself in any manner whatever," was by his wife, who was apparently possessed of property, removed to a home for incurables, with his consent. "Provision was made for him at said home for life, and for his burial, by payment of a stipulated sum of money, and a contract entered into accordingly." Having done this, it is contended, she was at liberty to leave him and seek another domicile for herself. I think not. It was her duty to stay with him and minister to him in his last sickness. The fact that he required nursing, and that he was placed in a hospital that he might receive proper care, did not release her from her duty to comfort him, if possible, in this trying period. Her duty as a wife was to stay with him to the last, and to give him Christian burial. She should not have contracted for his care during life for a stated sum, making it for the interest of those in charge to do as little as possible for him, and that he should die as soon as possible. She should have been at hand to furnish such relief as his miserable condition permitted, from day to day, so far as her means would justify. And it was not wisely to contract for his burial in her absence in that mode. Never was it more imperatively her duty to make his domicile her domicile than at that time. Perhaps, because of his helplessness, she could have changed the family domicile, but she was not entitled to a separate domicile. It does not appear that Mrs. Wickes had any necessity for a different forum or domicile. So far as it appears, she had no litigation of any kind.

The only case cited by the appellant, the language of which would seem to support his contention, is Shute v. Sargent, 67 N. H. 305, 36 Atl. 282. The decision is based upon the statutes of New Hampshire, and for that reason is not authority here, where the common law of England is made the rule of decision. But some of our statutes resemble some in New Hampshire. The court assumed that the common-law rule of domicile was founded upon the proposition that during coverture the personality of the wife is merged in that of the husband, and concludes that now, when she is in all respects before the law on an equality with her husband, and may vote, there is no good reason why she should not be able to acquire a separate domicile for any purpose. The court does not say under all circumstances. I am ready to concede that, so far as our statutes authorize the wife to live apart from her husband, the rule may be relaxed. These are exceptions to the law, but in other cases the law still prevails. The subjection of the wife to the husband was not the only reason for the rule. Parties marrying contract to live together. The husband obligates himself to furnish a proper home for his wife, and to maintain her there in a degree of comfort authorized by his circumstances, and they mutually agree to live there together. It is a matter of great public concern that this should be so. In this association there can be no majority vote, and the law leaves the ultimate decision to the husband. For the protection of the wife, she is allowed a different forum, when necessary in legal proceedings against her husband. In reality, this is not giving her a new domicile, but she is allowed to bring these suits where she actually resides, though that be not her legal domicile. I think the case is not very well reasoned. The general question in England and in this country has importance in regard to the settlement of paupers, and also as to the residence of voters and for testamentary and other purposes. There are dependent persons other than married women who may not select their own domicile,—minors, for instance, and all under guardianship. The rule has practical bearings on many things, and should not be lightly changed, and there is no sort of temptation to disregard the law here.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Henshaw, J.

Arthur L. BEGBIE, Respt.,
v.

Alice E. BEGBIE, Appt.

(.....Cal.....)

The abatement of a divorce proceeding by the death of appellant pending an appeal terminates the power of the court over costs,

NOTE.—As to the abatement of an appeal by death, see also O'Sullivan v. People (Ill.) 20 L. R. A. 148.
49 L. R. A.

under a statute making costs dependent upon a judicial determination of the action.

(March 20, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco denying a motion for a new trial of a divorce proceeding in which plaintiff recovered judgment. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. K. Bonestell for respondent.

Mr. George A. Rankin for appellant.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A judgment of divorce was entered in the superior court in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant June 25, 1897. No judgment was rendered for costs, nor is any question of property involved in the action. An order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial was made and entered November 9, 1897. January 4, 1898, the defendant appealed from this judgment and order. The appeal from the judgment was taken more than six months after its entry, and for that reason the judgment is not open to review. After the transcript on appeal had been filed and before the appeal was heard in this court, the defendant died. The action being solely for the purpose of determining her personal status, it abated upon her death, and the court is deprived of all authority to review the proceedings of the superior court. We held in Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 Pac. 1064, that in an action for divorce the death of the wife subsequent to the entry of judgment deprived the superior court of all power to review its action for the purpose of determining her right to a divorce, and, upon the same principles, her death, pending an appeal from the judgment, takes from the appellate court the right to review the action of the superior court. See also Barney v. Barney, 14 Iowa, 189; Downer v. Howard, 44 Wis. 82; Maskall v. Maskall, 3 Sneed, 208. The appellant does not controvert this proposition, so far as the action affects her personal status as a wife, but insists that the personal representatives of the wife have the right to have the appeal heard, in order that, if it shall be determined that the superior court erred, they may recover from the respondent the costs incurred by them in taking the appeal. The right to recover costs exists solely by virtue of statutory provision (see Downing v. Marshall, 37 N. Y. 380, where a history of the subject is given); and their recovery is governed by the statute in force at the time the right to have them taxed accrued (Onondaga Supers. v. Briggs, 3 Denio, 174; Jackett v. Judd, 18 How. Pr. 385). Under §§ 1021 et seq., Code Civ. Proc., costs are not taxable or recoverable until a judicial determination is had in the action in which they have been incurred. There can be no judgment for costs except as a part of the judgment upon the issues in the action. They are but incident to the judgment, and, if the court loses power to render a judgment between the parties upon the issues before it, it is equally powerless to render a judgment for the costs incurred therein. When a suit abates by the death of a party, there can be no judgment for costs in favor of the survivor. Ryder v. Robinson, 2 Me. 127; Cutts v. Haskins, 11 Mass. 56. The rule is the same when the action abates after judgment and pending an appeal. Upon the abatement each party must bear his own costs incurred prior thereto. Harvey v. Harvey, 87 Ill. 54. In Travis v. Waters, 12 Johns. 500, it was said to be "an established rule in equity that, where there has been no decree for costs, and the suit abates by the death of the party, the right to costs up to the time is extinguished unless the costs are payable out of a particular fund, or are connected with a duty towards the party claiming costs. In Johnson v. Thomas, 2 Paige, 383, the chancellor said: "If the whole grounds of the suit have been removed by the death of the complainant, it would be against the settled practice of the court to hear an argument of the original merits of the cause merely for the purpose of determining a question of costs between the parties." Upon the foregoing authorities we must hold that the abatement of the suit has deprived the court of all authority to hear the appeal.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: Garçotte, J.; Van Dyke, J.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Emily J. ALLEN, Appt.,
v.

Moses D. ALLEN.

George H. BARBER, Appt.,
v.

Belle Bemis BARBER.

(.....Conn.....)

Evidence of the intemperate habits or condition of defendant subsequent to the commencement of the action is admissible for the defense in an action for divorce on the ground of habitual intemperance, since a divorce concerns the state as well as the parties, and the condition justifying it must be found to exist at the very time when the divorce is granted.

(May 22, 1900.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court for Hartford County admitting in evidence habits of defendant subsequent to the beginning of the action in a proceeding to obtain a divorce on the ground of habitual intemperance. Affirmed.

Statement by Andrews, Ch. J.:

These cases present but one question. The complaint in each case claims a divorce on the ground of habitual intemperance. Upon the trial, in each case the superior court admitted evidence respecting habits and practices of the defendant as to intemperance subsequent to the beginning of the action and up to the time of the trial; and in each case dismissed the complaint. The plaintiff in each case has appealed. The error assigned in the first case was that the court erred in admitting such evidence; "that the plaintiff's right to a divorce depends upon the facts as they existed prior to the time of the commencement of the action."

In the second case the error is assigned in this way: "Because the superior court erred in admitting at the trial of said cause evidence as to the defendant's habits in respect to the use of intoxicating liquors, and her condition from such use since the date of the complaint in said case."

Mr. Charles A. Safford, for appellant Allen:

The facts found at and prior to the commencement of this action constitute habitual intemperance within the meaning of the statute.

The purpose of the act was not primarily to promote temperance or reform the offender, but to preserve the peace, comfort, safety, and happiness of the non-offending party.

Dennis v. Dennis, 68 Conn. 192, 34 L. R. A. 449, 36 Atl. 34; Tirrell v. Tirrell, 72 Conn. 567, 47 L. R. A. 750, 45 Atl. 153.

Intemperance so long continued that a fixed habit renders the party incapable of performing the duties of the marriage relation is sufficient ground.

Morehouse v. Morehouse, 70 Conn. 427, 39 Atl. 516; Dennis v. Dennis, 68 Conn. 186, 34 L. R. A. 449, 36 Atl. 34.

The habit need not render the party at all times incapable of attending to business. It may be that the drunkard is able to attend to business during the usual hours, and yet be drunk at home so as to become an habitual drunkard.

Nelson, Div. & Sep. § 351.

The reason why the law makes habitual intemperance a ground for a divorce is not alone because it disqualifies the party from attending to business, but in part, if not

NOTE.—The above case makes a clear distinction between divorce cases and other cases in respect to the right to consider facts arising during the pendency of the action as bearing upon the existence of a right of action. The fact of public interest in a divorce case, making the state in some sense a party to the proceeding, seems clearly to justify the declaration that the right to a divorce must exist at the very time when the decree is to be rendered, and not merely at the commencement of the suit.

mainly, because it renders him unfit for the duties of the marital relation.

Richards v. Richards, 19 Ill. App. 465.

Any defense arising after the commencement of the action requires to be pleaded in divorce suits as in other cases.

Steele v. Steele, 35 Conn. 54; Fuller v. Fuller, 41 N. J. Eq. 198, 3 Atl. 409; Strong v. Strong, 3 Robt. 669.

The judgment must be based upon the pleadings.

Powers v. Mulvey, 51 Conn. 432; Atwood v. Welton, 57 Conn. 523, 18 Atl. 322.

The facts upon which the court found the judgment, not having been averred, could not be made a basis for a judgment.

Atwood v. Welton, 57 Conn. 514, 18 Atl. 322; Daly v. New Haven, 69 Conn. 646, 38 Atl. 397; Atchison v. Atchison, 67 Conn. 40, 34 Atl. 761; Taylor v. Keeler, 50 Conn. 346.

Facts found that are not within the issue are to be treated as a nullity.

Gaylord v. Couch, 5 Day, 230; Sanford v. Thorp, 45 Conn. 241.

The decree in divorce proceedings should be based upon the pleadings, and not upon issues erroneously raised by the pleadings.

Nelson, Div. & Sep. § 748; Haltenhof v. Haltenhof, 25 Ill. App. 236; Ward v. Ward, 20 Wis. 253; Devoe v. Devoe, 51 Cal. 543.

In desertion as a ground for divorce, the offer to return must be made within the statutory period.

But after the lapse of the statutory period the injured party has a cause of divorce.

Nelson, Div. & Sep. § 75; Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 467; Cargill v. Cargill, 1 Swabey & T. 235; Mino v. Mino, 6 Scotch Sess. Cas. 4th Ser. 353.

Mr. Arthur Perkins for appellant Barber.

Messrs. Bill & Tuttle, for appellee Allen:

The question of habitual intemperance, being one of fact, is not subject to review by this court unless the trier has violated some rule of law in arriving at his conclusions.

Styles v. Tyler, 64 Conn. 461, 30 Atl. 165; O'Neil v. East Windsor, 63 Conn. 154, 27 Atl. 237.

Proof of a confirmed habit of drunkenness prior to the period defined in the complaint is admissible as evidence bearing upon the issue.

Reynolds v. Reynolds, 44 Minn. 132, 46 N. W. 236; Mack v. Handy, 39 La. Ann. 491, 2 So. 181; Williams v. Goss, 43 La. Ann. 868, 9 So. 750; Walton v. Walton, 34 Kan. 195, 8 Pac. 110; Burns v. Burns, 13 Fla. 369; Magahay v. Magahay, 35 Mich. 210; Richards v. Richards, 19 Ill. App. 465; Gourlay v. Gourlay, 16 R. I. 705, 19 Atl. 142; Blaney v. Blaney, 126 Mass. 205; McBee v. McBee, 22 Or. 329, 29 Pac. 887.

Evidence of intemperance since the filing of a suit for divorce on that ground is admissible, not to show a substantive cause but a continuing habit.

Mack v. Handy, 39 La. Ann. 491, 2 So. 181; Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 110, 100 Am. Dec. 110.

Mr. Jacob P. Goodhart for appellee Barber.

49 L. R. A.

Andrews, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Marriage is that ceremony or process by which the relationship of husband and wife is constituted. The consent of the parties is everywhere deemed an essential condition to the forming of this relation. To this extent it is a contract. But when the relation is constituted then all its incidents, as well as the rights and duties of the parties resulting from the relation, are absolutely fixed by law. Hence, after a marriage is entered into the relation becomes a status, and is no longer one resting merely on contract. It is the relation fixed by law in which the married parties stand to each other, towards all other persons, and to the state. And it is a relation from which the persons cannot separate themselves by their own agreement, or by their own misconduct. This status can only be dissolved between living parties by the assent of the state which is ordinarily indicated by the judgment of a competent court. When an attempt is made through the courts to undo a marriage the state becomes in a sense a party to the proceedings, not necessarily to oppose, but to make sure that the attempt will not prevail without sufficient and lawful cause shown by the real facts of the case, nor unless those conditions are found to exist at the time the decree is made upon which the state permits a divorce to be granted. The state has an interest in the maintenance of the marriage ties which neither the collusion nor the negligence of the parties can impair: Dennis v. Dennis, 68 Conn. 186, 34 L. R. A. 449, 36 Atl. 34; Gould v. Gould, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 180; Opinion of the Justices, 16 Me. 480; Whittington v. Whittington, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 64; Hall v. Hall, 3 Swabey & T. 349, Lord Penzance.

There can be no such thing as a "legal right" to a divorce vested in any married person. "The state does not favor divorces and only permits a divorce to be granted when those conditions are found to exist in respect to one or the other of the married parties which seem to the legislature to make it probable that the interests of society will be better served, and that parties will be happier, and so the better citizens, separate than if compelled to remain together. The state allows divorces, not as a punishment to the offending party, nor as a favor to the innocent party, but because the state believes its own prosperity will thereby be promoted." Obviously this condition must be found to exist at the very time when the divorce is granted, otherwise the divorce should be refused. And to this end "all courts possessing divorce jurisdiction are vested with a discretion. A wise discretion should always be exercised in administering the law of divorce, lest its spirit be disobeyed by a too narrow adherence to its letter." Dennis v. Dennis, 68 Conn. 186, 34 L. R. A. 449, 36 Atl. 34.

There is no error in either of the cases.

In this opinion the other Judges concurred.

Phebe E. BROWN'S APPEAL from Probate.

Ester MACDONALD'S APPEAL from Probate.

(72 Conn. 148.)

The right to dower, which a former wife "divorced" without alimony, where she is the innocent party," is given by Gen. Stat. § 618, does not exist in favor of any former wife of a man who had another lawful wife at the time of his death, since that section gives the right first to a woman "living with her husband at the time of his death," and the provision for the divorced wife, when construed in connection with § 2803, permitting both parties to marry again, and § 630, providing for the shares of husband and wife in the distribution of intestate estates, shows the intent to give dower to the lawful wife surviving, if any, and to no one else.

(August 1, 1899.)

RESERVATION by the Superior Court for New London County for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Errors of questions arising upon appeals by claimants from decrees of the Probate Court denying their rights to dower out of the estate of Lucius D. Brown, deceased. Probate decrees affirmed.

Statement by Hammersley, J.:

These cases were argued as one. Each appellant claimed dower upon the following state of facts: Lucius D. Brown, the decedent, had his domicile in North Stonington, New London county. He died April 9, 1897, possessed of a large amount of land situated in said town and other towns in this state. He was lawfully married to the appellant Phebe E. Brown, November 13, 1858, and was divorced from her, she being the innocent party, on January 20, 1863. On September 2, 1864, said Phebe Brown married one W. B. Brown, with whom she is now living, and by whom she has six children. On April 16, 1864, the decedent, Lucius D. Brown, was lawfully married in this state to the appellant Esther Pierce (whose maiden name was Spink, and who had previously been married and divorced from one Edward Pierce), from whom, on February 21, 1866, he was divorced by the superior court of the state of Rhode Island, she being the innocent party. Said Esther, on March 18, 1882, married one Macdonald, with whom she lived until October 10, 1897, when he died. Neither of the appellants had received any provision by way of jointure, nor had either of them entered into a contract with said Lucius D. Brown, under the statute of 1877, in respect to their property rights, nor received alimony, nor in any way forfeited a right to NOTE.—For effect of divorce on right of dower, see Adams v. Storey (Ill.) 11 L. R. A. 790, and note.

For divorce in other state as affecting dower, see Van Cleaf v. Burns (N. Y.) 15 L. R. A. 542, and note.

49 L. R. A.

dower, if such right exists under the facts stated. The decedent, Lucius D. Brown, on December 25, 1867, lawfully married Mary Gray, with whom he lived until his death. He left a will, by which he gives his whole estate to his wife, Mary Gray, for life, and upon her death to his brothers and sisters. Prior to his marriage with Mary Gray, the decedent had not been the owner of any property of value. All his real estate was acquired after March 10, 1875, and the greater part of it after March 18, 1882. All persons interested in the estate of Lucius D. Brown were, by order of court, made parties to these appeals.

Messrs. Frank T. Brown and Albert B. Crafts for petitioners.

Messrs. Solomon Lucas and H. A. Hull, for respondent:

The claim that a wife is entitled to protection and support from her husband cannot avail the claimant in this case, because, by divorce, she elected to abandon that claim and right; and, from the moment of divorce, she had no further claim of that character upon the decedent.

Re Ensign, 103 N. Y. 284, 57 Am. Rep. 717, 8 N. E. 544.

The expression "where she is the innocent party," if claimant's rights continue to exist after the divorce so that she is entitled to dower in exchange for support lost or abandoned, would necessarily continue the obligation upon this claimant to remain the innocent party.

The peculiar language employed in this statute was evidently intended for the purpose merely of changing the time when the right of dower should vest from the date of the marriage or acquiring of real estate by the husband to the date of his death, for the purpose of allowing him to freely dispose of his property.

Stewart v. Stewart, 5 Conn. 321.

This claimant at the time of obtaining her divorce, by failing to claim alimony, abandoned no rights, because there was no property out of which alimony could be taken.

Lord v. Lord, 23 Conn. 330.

The proper construction of this statute must adopt the common-law meaning of alimony and dower; and by that construction this claimant is entitled only to dower in one-third part of the real estate of which her husband died possessed in his own right, and which he so possessed during the coverture.

Adams v. Storey, 135 Ill. 448, 11 L. R. A. 790; Boykin v. Rain, 28 Ala. 332, 65 Am. Dec. 358; Leavenworth v. Marshall, 19 Conn. 4; Bridgeport v. Hubbell, 5 Conn. 243; Richmondville Mfg. Co. v. Prall, 9 Conn. 495; Stilson v. Stilson, 46 Conn. 19; Seesley's Appeal, 56 Conn. 202, 14 Atl. 291.

No case can be found where dower was ever set out in property acquired by the husband after the granting of the divorce.

9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 857; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 31 L. ed. 654, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 723; Barrett v. Failing, 111 U. S. 523, 28 L. ed. 505, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 598.

Hamersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 618 of the General Statutes,* providing for dower, should be read in connection with § 630,† providing for distribution and § 2803, permitting both parties to a divorce to marry again. The appellants read § 618 as if it stood alone, and construe its language, without reference to its history, as if it gave an absolute right to a life estate in one third of his land, not only to a man's widow, but, in addition, to each surviving woman who may have been divorced from him through his fault. Such a construction leads to results absurd and impracticable, which the legislature could not have intended. This of itself is sufficient to mark the construction as wrong. The letter of a statute cannot prevail against the plainly indicated intent of the legislature. Bridgeport v. Hubbell, 5 Conn. 237, 243; Richmondville Mfg. Co. v. Prall, 9 Conn. 487, 495; Raeson v. State, 19 Conn. 292, 299. We think, however, that the letter of the statute and the intention of the legislature may readily be reconciled. Did our law, like that of many states, recognize a right of dower as to all lands possessed during coverture, originating in marriage, and consummate on its termination, and permit this right to be enforced on the termination of marriage by a divorce, the difficulties presented by the language would be less apparent. But in these respects our law is wholly different. Section 618, in its essential features, first appears in the revision of 1672. The language referring to a divorced wife has never acquired a practical construction, nor has its meaning been determined, by any utterance of this court. The meaning of the language must therefore be that attached to it as used in the act of 1672. Hale's Appeal, 69 Conn. 611, 618, 38 Atl. 392. In order to appreciate the meaning of this act, it is necessary to remember our peculiar law of divorce, of inheritance, and of distribution at the time the act was passed. When the "jurisdiction of Connecticut" was organized, in 1639, the law of the land, as recognized by the settlers, consisted in the orders of the general court, and, in case of the defect of a law, in the Word of God. Educated as Englishmen, and subjects of the British Crown, our ancestors were mainly influenced in their laws and customs by the English law; but their government was both unauthorized (in its beginnings), and practically independent. They never formally adopted the common law of England. But one attempt in that direction was made, and that was abandoned without action. 4 Col. Rec. 261. As our jurisprudence developed, the courts applied the principles of the common law to the decision of causes, so far as they seemed applicable to our social conditions (Baldwin v. Walker, 21 Conn. 168, 181); but in many respects, especially in the law of marriage, divorce, land, descent, and distribution, there was a wide departure from the English law.

In England the common law, following the canon law, prohibited absolute divorce for any cause arising after a valid marriage. 1 Bl. Com. 441; Foliamb's Case, 3 Salk. 138. The early reformers were opposed to this law. They believed the Scriptures authorized a release from the marriage covenant to the injured party in certain cases. A commission to inquire into this subject was authorized in the reign of Henry VIII., and another in the reign of Edward VI. The work of the latter commission was completed, but the King died before it received royal confirmation. It was, however, published during the reign of Elizabeth under the title of "Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum." It provided that in cases of adultery and malicious desertion the injured party might have liberty to marry again. Pending the work of this commission, it was decided in the case of the Marquis of Northampton, by a special tribunal appointed by the King, that by the Word of God a man divorced for the adultery of his wife might marry again. Possibly, before the accession of Mary, this precedent was followed in other cases. 3 Reeve, History of English Law, pp. 495, 498, 499. This view of marriage and divorce was held by the first settlers of Connecticut. Accepting the Word of God as law in matters not touched by any special ordinance, their courts began at once to decree a separation on what they deemed the scriptural grounds of adultery (citing Matt. xix. 9) and malicious desertion (citing 1

*Sec. 618. Every woman married prior to April twentieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, and living with her husband at the time of his death, or absent by his consent, or by his default, or by accident, or who has been divorced without alimony, where she is the innocent party, shall have right of dower, during her life, in one-third part of the real estate of which her husband died possessed in his own right, unless a suitable provision for her support was made before the marriage by way of jointure, etc.

†Sec. 630. The distribution of intestate estates shall be as follows, that is to say: 1. To the wife of the intestate, whose marriage took place prior to April twentieth, 1877, and who, during the marriage, did not contract with her husband in manner and form, and for the purposes provided in section 624, there shall be distributed and set out one-third part of the personal estate of the intestate forever, and if there be no children of the intestate or any legal representative of them, one half of the personal estate forever, and if she shall not have been otherwise endowed before marriage, one-third part of the real estate to her during life as provided in sections 618 and 619. 2. To the husband or wife of the intestate, whose marriage took place on or subsequently to April twentieth, 1877, or who, having been married before that day, did, during the marriage, enter into a contract with each other in manner and form and for the purposes provided in section 624, and cause the same to be recorded as in said section is provided, there shall be distributed or set out such portion or share of the estate of the intestate as such husband or wife will be entitled to under the provisions of section 623. 3. All the residue of the real and personal estate shall be distributed in equal proportions, according to its value at the time of distribution, among the children and the legal representatives of any of them who may be dead, etc.

Cor. vii. 15); ordering a provision by way of alimony where it seemed equitable, and granting permission to the injured party to marry again. 1 Col. Rec. pp. 276, 301, 362, 379; 2 Col. Rec. pp. 129, 292, 293, 322, 326-328; 3 Col. Rec. p. 23; 4 Col. Rec. p. 59; 10 Col. Rec. p. 168; 14 Col. Rec. pp. 223, 387. These divorces, though granted by the general court, which possessed supreme legislative and judicial power, were not legislative, but purely judicial. This appears (among other reasons) from the fact that when this jurisdiction was first exercised the conception of a legislative divorce had not developed. The first parliamentary divorce was in 1669. All the divorces were based on the scriptural—i. e. common-law—right of the injured party to be released from his conjugal tie, and to be permitted to marry again. This permission was special to the injured party. As phrased in one of the decrees: "In case the said S. T. shall have opportunity to join herself in marriage with another man, she is left at liberty so to do without offense to the law or this court." 2 Col. Rec. p. 293. In 1677 a statute was passed defining the grounds of divorce, and authorizing the court of assistants as well as the general court to grant bills of divorce "to the aggrieved party, who may then lawfully marry or be married to another." Id. p. 328. This law remained unchanged until 1849, when the court was authorized to "declare the petitioner to be single and unmarried; and the parties divorced may then marry again." Revision 1849, p. 274. When, therefore, the act of 1672 was passed, a husband divorced for his own fault had not permission to marry again. By the Connecticut law the English law of prohibition was removed as to the innocent party.

Our land law also was, from the beginning, different from that of England. The rule of descent was substantially that of personal property, and realty and personalty were subject to the same law of distribution. In 1639 it was ordered that the court "shall divide intestate estate to wife, children, or kindred, as in equity they shall see meet." 1 Col. Rec. p. 38. Distributions were made by the magistrates of the general court, and under their rulings a practice grew up of dividing the land and personal property indifferently, one third to the widow and two thirds to the children, modified at times to meet the equities of particular cases. Sometimes, when the main portion of the personal property was given to the widow, she would receive one third of the land for life. Id. p. 446. The tenancy by dower was unknown to our early law. The widow's interest in the land as well as the personal property of her husband was through distribution. As our law gave her one third of all her husband's estate, subject to the discretion of the court in distribution, there was no occasion for dower, except to meet the case where a husband by will should divert his whole property; and it was mainly to meet this emergency (that in such case "there may be suitable provision made for the maintenance and comfortable support of widows after the decease of their husbands") that the act of 1672 was passed. It was, in effect, an amendment to the law of descent and distribution, and provided that every woman upon the death of her husband shall have "by way of dower" one third of his land for her natural life, and that "the remainder of the estate shall be disposed of according to the will of the deceased, and, where there is no will, according to law." See Revision of 1750, p. 43. The use of the words "by way of dower" may determine to a certain extent the incidents of this life estate. The estate, however, does not arise from the English law of land, but from a statute in aid of the Connecticut law of descent and distribution. This statute practically extends and modifies the widow's right to a share of her deceased husband's estate, realty as well as personalty. In this it differs from the provisions of the New Haven Laws of 1656, and the Massachusetts act of 1641. Both these colonies adopted the English law of dower, giving to the wife a right of dower in any land of which the husband might be seised during coverture. Connecticut extended and modified the right of a wife to share in all the estate her husband might leave at his death. The act was so regarded by other legislation relative to the same subject. When the common law of descent and distribution was first formulated into a statute, in 1696, it was ordered that when a man dies intestate "his widow, if any be, shall have, besides the third part of his real estate during her life, a part also of his personal estate," etc. 4 Col. Rec. p. 167. And the statute of descent and distribution of 1699, being substantially the same as the one now in force, provides that the court of probate shall distribute the estate as follows: "One third part of the personal estate to the wife of the intestate (if any be) forever, besides her dower or thirds in the housing and land during life, where such wife shall not be otherwise endowed before marriage, and all the residue of the real and personal estate, by equal portions, to and among his children," etc. Id. p. 307. And in 1736 it was provided that the court of probate should assign the dower in case of will as well as of intestacy, and such is the present law. Gen. Stat. §§ 619, 630. This view of the origin of the widow's right in the land of her deceased husband is acted upon in Stewart v. Stewart, 5 Conn. 317, 320. Such being the existing law of divorce, descent, and distribution in 1672, the act in question was passed, as follows: "That every married woman (living with her husband in this colony or elsewhere absent from him with his consent or through his mere default, or inevitable providence, or in case of divorce where she is the innocent party) that shall not before marriage be estated by way of jointure in some houses, lands, tenements, hereditaments for term of life, or with some other estate in lieu thereof, shall, immediately after the death of her husband, have right and interest by way of dower in and to one third part of the real estate to her deceased husband's lands," etc., "to be to her during her natural life." 8

Col. Rec. p. 56. Reading this language in view of the conditions it was framed to meet, it is certain that this right of dower, like the right to a distributive share of personal property, cannot exist before a husband's death, and affects only the estate left by him; that in no event can more than one third of the real estate be assigned for dower; and that the person entitled to dower is the wife living with the deceased at the time of his death, unless her separation at that time is due to his faults or accident, or a divorce, that leaves her free and the man so far her husband that he has no other conjugal tie. It is certain that a woman divorced is admitted to dower only because she represents, and no other is, the wife living with her husband, or separate through his fault. As was said in Stilson v. Stilson, 46 Conn. 15, 19, her right to dower is "precisely the same as that of a woman living with her husband at the time of his death." When a woman lives with her husband at his death, she possesses the right, and the same right can then belong to no other. When the act of 1849 expressly authorized the marriage of a man divorced for his fault, it did not enact a different law for such marriages. It gave to the wife the full rights of a wife, and, among them, the right to share her husband's estate by way of dower as well as of distribution in the same manner as every other wife; and to that extent it modifies the operation of the statute of dower. The present statute enables a woman divorced for her husband's fault to be treated as so far his wife that she may share his estate by way of dower, so long as she represents the wife living with him, or separated by his fault; but the act of 1849 modifies the practical effect of this by enabling the divorced husband to lawfully take a wife, who, living with him at the time of his death, is by the express terms of the statute the one entitled to dower. The words, "or who has been divorced where she is the innocent party," still mean the wife separated by his fault from a man who has no other conjugal tie. If, however, he acquire such tie, and leaves a lawful wife surviving, she is the "married woman living with her husband at his death," and the contingency of separation provided for by the qualifying words does not exist. In Stilson v. Stilson, 46 Conn. 15, 19, the divorced husband had married again, but, as appears, the second wife did not survive him. The court assumes that the divorced wife was entitled to dower. Had there been no second marriage, there could have been no question of her right. Whether the result is the same in the case of a second wife not surviving her husband is a question that was not discussed. It was assumed to be the same, the whole contest of the case turning on the effect of a contract between husband and wife before the divorce. If, upon lawful marriage after divorce, the link between the wife and her divorced husband which supports her claim to dower is finally severed, no troublesome questions will arise, no matter how many times a man is divorced; otherwise, such questions as have been discussed in this case may arise whenever a man dies, leaving more than one divorced widow and no genuine widow. In this case, however, the much-married man has left a widow, and under the statute she, and no one else, is entitled to dower, so that the questions are not material. They are not likely to become practical. Such a case as this has never before been presented to this court, and it is to be hoped it may never arise again. Moreover, the legislation of 1877 has abolished dower as to all marriages entered into after that date.

49 L. R. A.

Upon the appeal of Phebe E. Brown the Superior Court is advised to render judgment affirming the order of the Probate Court.

Upon the appeal of Esther Macdonald the Superior Court is advised to render judgment affirming the order of the Probate Court.

The other Judges concurred.

HYGEIA DISTILLED WATER COMPANY

v.

HYGEIA ICE COMPANY, Appt.

(72 Conn. 646.)

1. A party is not entitled to have a finding of facts corrected where they are not admitted or undisputed, and the facts found are not without evidence to support them, while the record is not shown to embrace all the evidence adduced with reference to them.
2. Refusal to permit the filing of additional defenses to certain counts in the declaration is not error when the counts are treated as out of the case.
3. The word "Hygeia," as indicating the name of the mythological goddess, is not so merely descriptive of the quality of goods in connection with which it is used that it cannot be protected as a trademark.
4. One adopting the name of the Goddess Hygeia as a trademark is entitled to protection against anyone using it upon similar products as indicating their origin, but not to a protection which will result in a partial monopoly of the English word "hygeia."
5. The adoption of the name of the Goddess Hygeia as a trademark will not prevent the use of the word "hygeia" in its natural signification of healthfulness as part of the corporate or business name of a rival, although some injury is thereby done to the owner of the trademark.

(Torrance, J., dissents.)

(April 4, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enjoin the use of the word "hy-

NOTE.—On the question, What words may be appropriated as trademarks? see also Alff v. Radam (Tex.) 9 L. R. A. 145, and note.

geia" as an infringement of plaintiff's trademark. Reversed in part.

Statement by Hamersley, J.:

This cause was before this court at a former term. 70 Conn. 516, 40 Atl. 534. In the report of that case the pleadings of the cause are sufficiently set forth, and need not be here stated. In the former trial the issues were found upon the first and third counts for the defendant, and upon the second count for the plaintiff, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. Upon an appeal from that judgment a new trial was granted. At the commencement of the new trial the defendant moved for leave to plead additional and supplemental defenses to the first and third counts, setting up in bar of the same the former judgment in its favor upon said counts. The court denied the motion on the ground that it appeared from the record that judgment had been rendered in favor of the defendant upon said two counts, leaving only the second count to be tried. The case was tried upon the second count only. The defendant excepted to the ruling. During the trial, the court, against the objection of the defendant, admitted certain evidence as detailed in the finding. To these rulings upon evidence the defendant excepted. The court found, in substance: (1) That the word "hygeia" was one which may be appropriated and used as a trademark. (2) That the plaintiff has so appropriated said word, not only as a portion of a device, but as an independent word or symbol, to designate its products of artificial or distilled water and beverages made therefrom, as to entitle it to the exclusive use thereof as its trademark in the business of making and selling such water and beverages. (3) That the defendant, by its use of said word in connection with the business of making and selling distilled water and sundry beverages made therefrom, had infringed and is infringing upon the plaintiff's rights in a way calculated to deceive purchasers and the public, to the plaintiff's damage. (4) That the defendant, by its use of the said word in connection with the manufacture and sale of ice is not infringing upon any rights of the plaintiff. The subordinate facts, from which these controlling facts are found, are set forth in detail and at great length in the record. In substance and effect the subordinate facts set forth in the present record do not materially differ from those contained in the former record (70 Conn. 516, 40 Atl. 534), where a statement of said facts may be found. For the purposes of this case certain parts of the present finding are here stated, namely: "(15) As used in application to said products in the manner hereinbefore set forth the name 'Hygeia' means and indicates in the trade and among the consuming public widely, and especially in the New England and Middle states of this country, and wherever the plaintiff's products are sold or known, that each of said products to which said name is applied is the product of the plaintiff company, and such has always been its meaning when so used." "(50) From a comparison of the bill heads, advertisements, labels, marks, etc., used by the defendant with those used by the plaintiff, from the foregoing facts and from the attending circumstances and evidence offered upon the subject, I find that consumers and purchasers using ordinary care are liable to be misled, deceived, and confused as to the products of the plaintiff and the defendant (except ice) by the defendant's use of said name 'Hygeia' in any of the ways aforesaid or otherwise, and that the continuance by the defendant of the use of said name 'Hygeia' as a part of its corporate name, or in any other of the ways hereinbefore described, or otherwise, in or in connection with the business of manufacturing and selling distilled water and beverages, is well calculated to induce the belief in purchasers that they are buying the plaintiff's products, when, as a matter of fact, they are buying the defendant's. I also find that the continuance by the defendant of the use of said word 'hygeia' as a part of its corporate name, or in any other of the ways hereinbefore set forth, or otherwise, or in connection with said business in water and beverages, will result in irreparable damage and injury to the plaintiff." (66) No use of said name 'Hygeia,' prior to its appropriation and use by the plaintiff's assignor and by the plaintiff, inconsistent with the rights claimed by the plaintiff, was proved by the defendant." In the reasons of appeal the errors assigned as to the foregoing paragraphs are stated as follows: "(1) The facts set forth in the finding do not support the conclusions stated in paragraph 15, because it is shown that the name 'Hygeia' has been used in connection with water other than the plaintiff's products upon the markets, and, as applied to said other water products, does not indicate that it is the product of the plaintiff company, or that such has always been its meaning; and because of the further reason, as shown in said finding, that the word 'hygeia' and its various cognate forms have been applied in common use to other products as indicative of quality. (2) The facts set forth in the finding do not support the conclusions stated in paragraph 50, because they do not show that anyone has ever been misled, deceived, and confused as to the plaintiff's and defendant's goods; and, further, because they do not show that the use by the defendant of its corporate name has ever misled, deceived, or confused customers, purchasers, or the public generally; and, still further, because they do not show that the defendant's corporate name was ever associated in the minds of customers, purchasers, and the public with the purchase and sale of its products, but, on the contrary, that the goods of the defendant were bought and sold by customers, purchasers, and the public generally by their distinctive tradenames. (3) In finding the fact as stated in paragraph 66, because the same is a conclusion of law; and, secondly, is without evidence to support it." Upon the trial below the defendant made certain claims of law upon the facts found, which, together with such other parts of the record as it is deemed necessary to state, are sufficiently set forth in the opinion. The court found the issue for the plaintiff upon the second count, "except that the acts of the defendant in making and selling ice as in said second count alleged are not an infringement of the plaintiff's rights, and are not a damage to the plaintiff." Such parts of the judgment as are material upon this appeal read as follows: "Whereupon it is adjudged that the defendant and its officers, agents, employees, and servants be, and they hereby are, each of them, forever enjoined, under a penalty of one thousand dollars: (1) Against transacting business under the name of the 'Hygeia Ice and Water Company;' and (2) so long as the defendant retains the word 'hygeia' as a part of its corporate name, against putting up, bottling, selling, offering for sale, or delivering distilled water in liquid form or for drinking use, or using distilled water as an ingredient in the making and compounding of ginger ale, soda water, lithia water, and other artificial mineral waters; and (3) also against using, in connection with the business of selling or delivering distilled water in liquid form or for drinking use, or in connection with the business of making, manufacturing, compounding, putting up, bottling, selling, offering for sale, or delivering ginger ale, soda water, lithia water, or other artificial mineral waters, in the preparation of which products distilled water shall have been used as an ingredient, the word 'hygeia' in and upon its signs, advertisements, letter heads, bill heads, circulars, printed matter, wagons, bottles, jugs, siphons, labels, corks, seals, wooden boxes and cases, packages, receptacles, or any other thing used by any of them in such business,—the use in and upon its signs, and the other things named, and which is hereby enjoined, to include, not only the use of said word 'hygeia' alone, but as well its use in the combinations the 'Hygeia Ice & Water Company,' the 'Hygeia Ice Company,' its use in combination with the name of the product (as 'Hygeia Water,' 'Hygeia Distilled Water'), and in combinations similar to any of said combinations, whether as a part of its corporate name or not. Nothing in this order shall be construed as preventing the use by defendant of said word 'hygeia' in the business of manufacturing and selling ice, or the use by defendant of its present corporate name in said ice business so long as it refrains from the manufacture and sale of such distilled water and beverages made therefrom." The defendant requested the court to correct the finding in certain particulars, and the court refused to do so. The evidence contained in the record upon which this request is based is certified as "a transcript of a portion of the testimony offered in said case," and as "a transcript of certain depositions offered by the defendant in evidence upon the trial of said case."

49 L. R. A.

Messrs. Henry Stoddard and Case, Ely, & Webb, for appellant:

The word "hygeia" is not the proper subject of a trademark or tradename, in that it has become a word merely descriptive of character and quality of the goods to which it is applied.

Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 138 U. S. 546, 34 L. ed. 1003, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396; Koehler v. Sanders, 122 N. Y. 72, 9 L. R. A. 576, 25 N. E. 235; Enoch Morgan's Sons Co. v. Troxell, 89 N. Y. 292; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 599; Caswell v. Davis, 58 N. Y. 223, 17 Am. Rep. 233; Fischer v. Blank, 138 N. Y. 244, 33 N. E. 1040; Boardman v. Meriden Britannia Co. 35 Conn. 402; Gilman v. Hunnewell, 122 Mass. 139.

The application of the word "hygeia" and its derivatives as English words has uniformly been to convey the idea of health and healthfulness, as descriptive of the quality and characteristic of the article to which it is applied.

It is immaterial that the word "hygeia" is registered as a trademark in the patent office.

Jaros Hygienic Underwear Co. v. Fleece Hygienic Underwear Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 424.

If "hygienic" cannot be appropriated, certainly "hygeia" cannot.

Hygeia Distilled Water Co. v. Hygeia Ice Co. 70 Conn. 534, 40 Atl. 534.

Words descriptive of the articles to which they are attached, or which indicate their ingredients, mode of composition, characteristic, property, quality, or nature, are not entitled to protection.

Re Farbenfabriken's Trade Mark, 7 Rep. 439 [1894] 1 Ch. 645; Desmond's Appeal, 103 Pa. 126, 49 Am. Rep. 118; Re Talbot's Trade Mark, 8 Rep. 149, 63 L. J. Ch. N. S. 264; Beadleston & Woerz v. Cooke Brewing Co. 46 U. S. App. 18, 74 Fed. Rep. 229, 20 C. C. A. 405; Taylor v. Gillies, 59 N. Y. 331, 17 Am. Rep. 333; Corwin v. Daly, 7 Bosw. 222; Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Sherrell, 93 N. Y. 331, 45 Am. Rep. 229.

The word "hygeia" is a term which clearly refers to grade and quality, and, as applied alone to articles of manufacture, and places, it has the same meaning, and it is only when associated with other words that it can in any way indicate origin or ownership, and be entitled to protection.

Caswell v. Davis, 58 N. Y. 235, 17 Am. Rep. 233; Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Springs Co. v. Hygeia Sparkling Distilled Water Co. 24 U. S. App. 172, 63 Fed. Rep. 443, 11 C. C. A. 277.

The plaintiff was not the first to appropriate the word "hygeia" to the class of merchandise to which it is applied.

The foundation of title to a trademark is priority of adoption and actual use in trade.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 346; Browne, Trademarks, § 324; Leidersdorf v. Flint, 8 Biss. 327, Fed. Cas. No. 8, 219.

Messrs. Henry C. White and Leonard M. Daggett, for appellee:

Plaintiff has established its exclusive right to the use of the word "hygeia" in the business of manufacturing and selling distilled water and products made therefrom.

Filley v. Fassett, 44 Mo. 169, 100 Am. Dec. 275; Carroll v. Ertheiler, 1 Fed. Rep. 688; Braham v. Bustard, 1 Hem. & N. 447.

Defendant has, in the application of the word "hygeia" to its products, infringed plaintiff's trademark.

Hier v. Abrahams, 82 N. Y. 519, 37 Am. Rep. 589; Bass, R. & G. v. Feigenspan, 96 Fed. Rep. 206; Manitowoc Pea-Packing Co. v. Numsen, 93 Fed. Rep. 196, 35 C. C. A. 207; Eckhart v. Consolidated Milling Co. 72 Ill. App. 70; Williams v. Brooks, 50 Conn. 278, 47 Am. Rep. 642; Hutchinson v. Blumberg, 51 Fed. Rep. 829; Johnson & Johnson v. Bauer & Black, 53 U. S. App. 437, 82 Fed. Rep. 662, 27 C. C. A. 374; National Biscuit Co. v. Baker, 95 Fed. Rep. 135; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Simpson, H. M. & Co. 54 Conn. 527, 9 Atl. 395; Pittsburg Crushed Steel Co. v. Diamond Steel Co. 61 U. S. App. 22, 89 Fed. Rep. 706, 32 C. C. A. 324.

Defendant was properly enjoined from using its corporate name in connection with the manufacture and sale of distilled water and products made therefrom.

William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Simpson, H. M. & Co. 54 Conn. 527, 9 Atl. 395; Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 462, 27 L. R. A. 42, 39 N. E. 490; Pinet v. Maison Louis Pinet, [1898] 1 Ch. 179; Continental Ins. Co. v. Continental F. Ins. Assn. 96 Fed. Rep. 846; Armington v. Palmer, 21 R. I. 109, 43 L. R. A. 95, 42 Atl. 308.

Defendant has not proved such a prior or concurrent use of the word "hygeia" by others, in connection with water products, as will defeat plaintiff's right as against defendant.

Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Springs Co. v. Hygeia Sparkling Distilled Water Co. 24 U. S. App. 172, 63 Fed. Rep. 438, 11 C. C. A. 277; Carlsbad v. Schultz, 78 Fed. Rep. 469.

Plaintiff's right is protected by the Constitutions of the United States and of Connecticut.

Covington & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 560, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198; Orutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 28 L. ed. 1137, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Black v. Caldwell, 83 Fed. Rep. 880; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 94; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers & S. Mfg. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 495; Investor Pub. Co. v. Dobinson, 82 Fed. Rep. 56; Continental Ins. Co. v. Continental F. Ins. Assn. 96 Fed. Rep. 846; National Folding Box & Paper Co. v. National Folding Box Co. 13 Rep. 60, 43 Week. Rep. 156.

The name "hygeia" is such an arbitrary word symbol that plaintiff may prevent its use by others in the manufacture and sale of water and beverages.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 245; Keasbey v. Brooklyn Chemical Works, 142 N. Y. 467, 37 N. E. 476; Braham v. Bustard, 1 Hem. 49 L. R. A.

& M. 447; Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co. v. Myers, 79 Fed. Rep. 87; Oswell v. Davis, 58 N. Y. 223, 17 Fed. Rep. 233; Bennett v. McKinley, 26 U. S. App. 496, 65 Fed. Rep. 505, 13 C. C. A. 25; Sheppard v. Stuart, 13 Phila. 117; Hier v. Abrahams, 82 N. Y. 519, 37 Am. Rep. 589; Waterman v. Shipman, 130 N. Y. 301, 29 N. E. 111; Listman Mill. Co. v. William Listman Milling Co. 88 Wis. 334, 60 N. W. 261; Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Springs Co. v. Hygeia Sparkling Distilled Water Co. 24 U. S. App. 172, 63 Fed. Rep. 438, 11 C. C. A. 277.

If the use of the word "hygeia" by defendant is likely to mislead purchasers and the public, such use is an infringement of plaintiff's trademark, against which preventive relief should be granted.

McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828; Seiao v. Provezende, L. R. 1 Ch. 192; Colman v. Crump, 70 N. Y. 573; Williams v. Brooks, 50 Conn. 278, 47 Am. Rep. 642; Bradley v. Norton, 33 Conn. 157, 87 Am. Dec. 200.

An actual deception of purchasers need not be shown by plaintiff to entitle it to an injunction.

Filley v. Fassett, 44 Mo. 169, 100 Am. Dec. 275; Bank of Tomah v. Warren, 94 Wis. 151, 68 N. W. 549; Shaw v. Pilling, 175 Pa. 78, 34 Atl. 446; Taendstieksfabriks Aktiebolaget Vulcan v. Myers, 139 N. Y. 364, 34 N. E. 904; New Home Sewing Mach. Co. v. Bloomingdale, 59 Fed. Rep. 284; Edelsten v. Edelsten, 1 De G. J. & S. 185; Mossler v. Jacobs, 66 Ill. App. 571; Saelehnner v. Apollinaris Co. [1897] 1 Ch. 893; Reddaway v. Banham [1896] A. C. 199; N. K. Fairbank Co. v. R. W. Bell Mfg. Co. 45 U. S. App. 190, 77 Fed. Rep. 869, 23 C. C. A. 554; Johnson & Johnson v. Bauer & Black, 53 U. S. App. 437, 82 Fed. Rep. 662, 27 C. C. A. 374; New England Awl & Needle Co. v. Marlborough Awl & Needle Co. 168 Mass. 154, 46 N. E. 386.

An intent on the part of defendant to defraud the plaintiff need not be proved.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 444; Hier v. Abrahams, 82 N. Y. 519, 35 Am. Rep. 589; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Simpson, H. M. & Co. 54 Conn. 527, 9 Atl. 395; Williams v. Brooks, 50 Conn. 278, 47 Am. Rep. 642; Saelehnner v. Apollinaris Co. [1897] 1 Ch. 893; Reddaway v. Banham [1896] A. C. 199; New England Awl & Needle Co. v. Marlborough Awl & Needle Co. 168 Mass. 154, 46 N. E. 386; Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co. L. R. [1896] 2 Ch. 54.

The deception, not of the dealer, but of the retail purchaser, determines the fact of infringement.

Boardman v. Meriden Britannia Co. 35 Conn. 402; N. K. Fairbank Co. v. Central Lard Co. 64 Fed. Rep. 133; Williams v. Brooks, 50 Conn. 278, 47 Am. Rep. 642; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 416; Parkland Hills Blue Lick Water Co. v. Hawkins, 95 Ky. 502, 26 S. W. 389; Seiao v. Provezende, L. R. 1 Ch. 192; Hutchinson v. Blumberg, 51 Fed. Rep. 829; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Simpson, H. M. & Co. 54 Conn. 527, 9 Atl. 395; Read v. Richardson, Cox Manual Trademarks Cas. No. 698; Orr-Ewing v. Johnston, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 434; Hutchinson v. Covert, 51 Fed. Rep. 832; Johnson & Johnson v. Bauer & Black, 53 U. S. App. 437, 82 Fed. Rep. 662, 27 C. C. A. 374; Cochrane v. Mac-nish [1896] A. C. 225.

Hamersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is not entitled to have the finding of facts corrected as requested. The facts which it requested the court to find are not admitted nor undisputed facts, nor is it claimed that such facts were found without any evidence, nor does it appear that the evidence certified as to these facts embraces all the evidence adduced with reference to them. Under repeated decisions of this court, the finding, under these circumstances, must stand as made. The denial of the motion for leave to file additional defenses to the first and third counts of the complaint did the defendant no harm. The court treated those counts as out of the case, and upon that view the defenses in question were entirely unnecessary. When this case was before us upon a former appeal (70 Conn. 533, 40 Atl. 534), it was claimed by the defendant that the word "hygeia" could not be adopted as a trademark, because it has become a term merely descriptive of the character and quality of the goods to which it is applied as healthful or health-giving. The trial court had decided that the word as adopted by the plaintiff was entitled to protection, and we then said we thought the court correctly decided against the contention of the defendant "upon the knowledge of this matter acquired by the exercise of its power of judicial cognizance, aided by evidence, and by reference to standard authorities on the subject." The former judgment enjoined the defendant against using the word "hygeia" upon or in connection with the sale of its distilled water products, and further enjoined it against using the word in its corporate or business name while dealing in those products. We held that the latter part of the judgment was not supported by the facts found, and therefore we did not consider the question whether the plaintiff was lawfully entitled to protection against the use of the word "hygeia" in such manner. After a new trial, resulting in a similar judgment, the case now comes before us on an appeal which presents anew the two questions: Is the plaintiff entitled to protection? Can that protection be extended to a prohibition of the use of the word "hygeia" in the defendant's corporate name? On the last question we have had no occasion heretofore to intimate any opinion. We still think that the word "hygeia" is not so merely descriptive of the quality of the goods as to render it legally impossible for the plaintiff to acquire an interest in it as a trademark in the manner found. It is a name of a mythological personage. The trial court has found that it was adopted as such by the plaintiff in combination with a figure of the goddess; that it was used on the plaintiff's products only as a symbol to indicate that they were its genuine products, and, as a result of the plaintiff's conduct, has become closely associated in the mind of the trade with its products, and, when attached to them, indicates to the consuming public that each product to which it is so attached is the product of the plaintiff. It was lawful for the plaintiff to so appropriate the name of a mythological person. Had it taken the name of Juno or Minerva, no question as to its right could arise. But it chose a name which is also an English word with a settled meaning. The plaintiff disclaims the use of the word with that meaning. And the court finds that it was not adopted with that meaning. The case is in this respect a peculiar one. We feel very strongly the necessity of great caution in permitting the use of a word as a trademark so as to limit in any way its use with its legitimate meaning. "The general rule is against the appropriating mere words as a trademark." Caswell v. Davis, 58 N. Y. 223, 235, 17 Am. Rep. 233; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 599; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall. 311, 322, 20 L. ed. 581, 583; Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 138 U. S. 537, 546, 34 L. ed. 997, 1003, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396. "The monopoly of use granted by the law of trademarks should not be extended to embrace terms of doubtful signification." Beadleston & Woerz v. Cooke Brewing Co. 46 U. S. App. 18, 74 Fed. Rep. 229, 233, 20 C. C. A. 405. This is not a case of first adoption. It is one where the word has in fact, through long use, actually acquired a signification when attached to the plaintiff's products, simply of ownership and origin. So used it is in fact a mere symbol which conveys the idea of origin, and nothing more, and it is further found that, when attached to products of other dealers, it is in fact regarded as a mere symbol conveying the same idea; i. e. that the products are made by the plaintiff. The labors of the plaintiff have created this condition, and are entitled to some protection, unless it is forbidden by a positive rule of law. We are not prepared to say, under such circumstances, that the name of a mythological person is entitled to no protection as a trademark simply because there is an English word derived from the same root, which cannot be so monopolized. Yet it is evident that the protection must be different from that awarded where there is no such complication. One may adopt his own name as a trademark, but he cannot prevent another having the same name from its honest use in the same business, although he may be injured thereby. "The disadvantages attending the choice of the name of a person as a mark affect every result flowing from such choice." William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Simpson, H. M. & Co., 54 Conn. 527, 571, 9 Atl. 395; Rogers & Brother v. Rogers, 53 Conn. 121, 156, 1 Atl. 807, 5 Atl. 675. A trademark cannot monopolize the name of a place, nor any substantive commonly used in language. Burton v. Stratton, 12 Fed.

Rep. 696, 790. But the name of a city may become in fact so associated with one's work, as designating its origin and ownership, as to become entitled to protection as a trademark, subject, however, to the infirmities inherent to such a mark; and so other manufacturers in the same place may honestly use the geographical name in connection with the same work, notwithstanding the incidental injury involved in such use. American Waltham Watch Co. v. United States Watch Co. 173 Mass. 85, 43 L. R. A. 826, 53 N. E. 141. In such cases the right of one to the credit of his own labor must accord with the right of all to use of a common language and to free competition; and a court of equity seeks to give reasonable protection to both rights without destroying either. The success with which this can be done depends somewhat on the subtlety of the complication. That may be so great that the court will refuse all protection. And so with the plaintiff. While entitled, upon the facts found, to a protection against anyone else using its trademark on similar products as indicating their origin, it is not entitled to a protection which may result in a partial monopoly of the English word "hygeia."

The trial court has enjoined the defendant against dealing in distilled water and its various products under any corporate or business name which contains the word "hygeia." There is here no question as to the use of a corporate name in this business, which, by reason of similarity, unlawfully infringes the plaintiff's interest in its own corporate name, nor of a dishonest and fraudulent use of the name by the defendant to the injury of the plaintiff. These questions are settled in favor of the defendant by the final judgment on the first and third counts. The sole question, as affecting the point under discussion, is this: Has the defendant a right to use the word "hygeia" in its corporate or business name as indicative of its mode of manufacture, notwithstanding some incidental injury results to the plaintiff's business from that use? It is found as a fact that the defendant manufactures artificial ice from filtered and distilled water by a peculiar process calculated to produce an absolutely pure ice, and for that reason, in good faith, and in ignorance of the plaintiff's existence, it used the word "hygeia" to associate its meaning with the ice produced by this special process, involving filtration and distillation; and that since its incorporation, in pursuance of a design entertained at that time, it has dealt in the water so distilled and filtered in its liquid as well as in its frozen form, and in various products of that water. If this is a correct use of the word the defendant's right to use it in this manner cannot be destroyed by the plaintiff's adoption of its trademark. We must therefore examine the real significance of the word more carefully than seemed necessary at the former hearing. The Greek word "hygeia" means "health." When the daughter of Æsculapius was deified as the goddess of health, 49 L. R. A.

she was named "Hygeia." The Latin word "salus" means "health," and this name also was given to the Roman goddess of health. Both words passed into the English language. The name of the divinity was confined to the Greek form. The derivatives of "salus" came into common use. The Greek word for health was at first appropriated mainly, if not wholly, to medical literature; but within the past century it has passed, with many derivatives, into common use. We find its definition when used as a noun in medical literature in the title of a book published in 1682: "Hygeia, Id Est Bonæ Valetudinis Conservandæ Thesaurus Lucupletissimus." It is used with a similar meaning in many medical books and journals, French and German, as well as English (although its primary meaning seems always to have been health). See Foster, Enc. Dic. It is used in this sense in 1802 in Beddoe's Hygeia, or Essays Moral and Medical. In 1841 it is used, as meaning the means or system of preserving health, by Emerson in his Essay on Nominalist and Realist. Emerson's Essays, 2d Series, p. 226. Dr. Richardson uses it with a similar meaning in an address to the Social Science Association on the arrangement of a city so as to reduce the rate of mortality: "Hygeia, or the City of Health," Chambers's Journal, Jan. 20, 1877. And in the Oxford English Dictionary it is defined as "a system of sanitation or medical practice." During the present century, and especially during the past forty years, the word has been freely used with an adjective meaning (as appears from the finding), as expressing the medically healthful property or effects of places, food, clothing, etc. This meaning of a means or method of preserving health it has always had in medical literature, and for a long period in general literature, although the transfer from medical to general literature has not been recognized by many of the standard dictionaries. The recognition of such changes often follows slowly. But the authority of the Oxford English Dictionary is of the highest, and it establishes, not a new use, but the recognition of a long-continued use. We cannot doubt that "hygeia," whether used as a substantive, to express a process or means of preserving health, or, with an adjective sense, to describe an object as resulting from the operation of hygeian method, is an English word, to the use of which, with that meaning, everyone is entitled. It is suggested that such meaning of the word arose from the sale of the plaintiff's products. This is palpably, and even absurdly, untrue. The rapid increase in the use of hygeia and its derivatives commenced long before the plaintiff's business enterprise was conceived, and is due to the force of a widespread social movement, which has made professional investigation of the laws of health a common study, which demands the application of the rules of hygeia to the preparation of everything we eat, drink, or wear, to the construction and maintenance of our houses, factories, and public buildings, and to the arrangement and care of our cities. So strong and widespread has this movement been, that, to express its exaggerated operation, we have found it necessary to coin and adopt into the language the word "hygeiolatry." Hygeia is a word of peculiar value. By reason of its passage into general literature from the medical it has a significance which the derivatives of "salus" failed to express. The idea conveyed by "salubrity" and "salubrious" is quite distinct from that conveyed by "hygeia" and "hygienic." It is this meaning of the word as expressive of the modern care for health by scientific methods that has brought it into common use, and makes it most valuable. The defendant, therefore, has a right to use the word "hygeia" in its corporate and in its business name as signifying the claim that its products of water, whether congealed or liquid, are prepared in accordance with the rules of hygeia; and any injury the plaintiff may suffer in its business from such honest use is the necessary result of its choosing as a trademark a word which not only was a symbol which it might appropriate, but which was also a valuable word in language, which the law does not permit to be monopolized. So far as attaching the mark "Hygeia" to the defendant's goods is in fact a practical representation that such goods are made by the plaintiff, the plaintiff is entitled to protection; but that protection cannot be extended to preventing the defendant from using in good faith, with its natural signification, the English word "hygeia" in its corporate name or business as descriptive of its method of manufacture. Any injury which results to the plaintiff from such use is not in violation of the plaintiff's rights, and is not due to a wrongful act by the defendant, but solely to the difficulties the plaintiff assumed in its selection of such a mark.

There ought not to be a new trial. The erroneous portions of the judgment are distinct from and independent of the other portion, and may be reversed without disturbing it. Sherwood v. Sherwood, 32 Conn. 1, 15; Taff v. State, 39 Conn. 82, 85; Middlebrook v. State, 43 Conn. 257, 270, 21 Am. Rep. 650. That portion of the judgment which enjoins the defendant against using, in connection with the business of selling or delivering distilled water in liquid form or for drinking use, or in connection with the business of making, manufacturing, compounding, putting up, bottling, selling, offering for sale, or delivering ginger ale, soda water, lithia water, or other artificial mineral waters in the preparation of which products distilled water shall have been used as an ingredient, the mark "Hygeia," either alone or in combination with the name of the product (as "Hygeia Water," "Hygeia Distilled Water"), in and upon its signs, advertisements, letter heads, bill heads, circulars, printed matter, wagons, bottles, jugs, siphons, labels, corks, seals, wooden boxes and cases, packages, receptacles, or any other thing used by it in such business, is affirmed; the residue of said judgment is reversed, and set aside.

The judgment of the Superior Court is erroneous in part, and the cause is remanded to be proceeded with according to law; costs in this court to be taxed in favor of the appellant.

The other Judges concur, except Torrance, J., who dissents.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

B. N. KAGER et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

Ira M. VICKERY et al.

(.....Kan.....)

*A judgment for money, and for the foreclosure of a mortgage upon real estate, against a deceased defendant, who had theretofore been duly served with process, is void, although the fact of death does not appear of record; and it may be collaterally im-

*Headnote by DOSTER, Ch. J.

NOTE—Effect of judgment entered against dead person.

- I. Judgments against parties dying before institution of suit.
- II. Judgments on confession.
- III. Void judgments.
- IV. Voidable judgments.
- V. Where death occurs at certain stages of the action.
 - a. Before issue joined.
 - b. Before default taken.
 - c. After default taken, but before final judgment.
 - d. After interlocutory order.

peached because thereof by the heirs of the deceased, if not made parties to the foreclosure proceeding, in an action brought by them for the recovery of the land sold and conveyed in satisfaction of the judgment.

(January 16, 1900.)

ERROR to the District Court for Cowley County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to assert title to certain real estate which had been purchased by defendants' grantors in

V.—continued.

e. Before verdict, report, or decision.

f. After verdict.

g. After interlocutory order.

VI. Judgment by relation back to time prior to death.

VII. Death of party pending appeal.

VIII. Judgments in rem.

IX. Classification by states where death occurs after suit is brought.

I. Judgments against parties dying before institution of suit.

The weight of authority is that a judgment judicial proceedings against plaintiffs' ancestor. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles L. Brown, for plaintiffs in error:

Mr. Kager having died intestate, his real estate passed immediately to his heirs, the widow taking one half and the children the other one half.

Dodge v. Beeler, 12 Kan. 525; Schermerhorn v. Mahaffie, 34 Kan. 108, 8 Pac. 199.

The heirs were indispensable parties to a legal decree in the foreclosure action, and no legal title could be based upon such proceedings without the heirs being made parties, and their interest in the land cut off by reason of such proceedings.

Britton v. Hunt, 9 Kan. 228.

Inasmuch as they were not parties to the proceeding, the defendants in error, Vickery and his wife, have no legal claim to the property, as against these plaintiffs in error.

Ibid.; Curtis v. Parker, 29 Kan. 130; Story, Eq. Pl. § 194; 4 Kent, Com. 185; Lane v. Erskine, 13 Ill. 501; Graham v. Carter, 2 Hen. & M. 6; Mayo v. Tomkies, 6 Munf. 520; Moore v. Starks, 1 Ohio St. 369.

Jurisdiction over the person of the defendant is absolutely necessary to the rendition of any valid judgment.

These plaintiffs in error were never made parties to the foreclosure proceedings. This being true, they have never been divested of the title of the property in controversy to the extent of their respective interests.

Rice County Comrs. v. Lawrence, 29 Kan. 158; Curtis v. Parker, 29 Kan. 130; Freeman, Void Judicial Sales, 3d ed. § 2; Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. §§ 116, 120 A; Great West Min. Co. v. Woodmas of Alston Min.

rendered against a party who was dead at the time of the institution of the suit is void, and such judgment may be attacked collaterally. The cases in Texas deny this, and follow their rule adopted in cases where a judgment is taken against a party who dies after suit is brought and before judgment. An early case in Pennsylvania also claims that there is no distinction as to judgments, whether the death occurs before or after suit. As a judgment where a court has no jurisdiction of a person is void as to such person, and is subject to a collateral attack, it seems that this rule should apply where a judgment is rendered against a party who was dead prior to the institution of the suit.

A judgment against a trustee in a process of foreign attachment, commenced after the death of the principal defendant, and payment of the amount thereof on execution by the trustee, are no bar to a suit against him by the representative of the deceased. Matthey v. Wiseman, 18 C. B. N. S. 657; Loring v. Folger, 7 Gray, 505.

In the latter case the court said that a judgment against F. and his trustee is a nullity, and may be avoided by the administrator without a writ of error, and furnishes no protection to the trustee.

In Reid v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 326, and Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236, it was said that if a judgment was rendered in an action originally brought against a dead person, in such a case the court never acquired jurisdiction of the cause.

A judgment in a suit commenced and prosecuted against a dead person is void. Graves v. Ewart, 99 Mo. 13, 11 S. W. 971; Crosley v. Hutton, 98 Mo. 196, 11 S. W. 613; Williams v. Hudson, 93 Mo. 524, 6 S. W. 261.

In the last case the court said that if the death is after suit commenced and service of process another question will be presented; but a suit commenced against a dead man gives the court no authority to enter judgment, and as to him the judgment is void.

And where a judgment was rendered on a bond against several obligors, one of whom was dead when the suit was brought, the judgment was set aside as void against the defendant who was dead, but not as against the other defendants. State ex rel. Ozark County v. Tate, 100 Mo. 265, 18 S. W. 1088.

A judgment of foreclosure against one who was dead at the commencement of the suit is void. Bollinger v. Chouteau, 20 Mo. 89. This case was an action by petition of the heirs of the mortgagor to redeem the land, the mortgagor having been brought into court by publication.

And foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage by publication are void, and may be collaterally attacked where the mortgagor was dead at the time of the institution of the suit, and the only parties to the action were the holder of the mortgage and the mortgagor. Richards v. Thompson, 43 Kan. 209, 23 Pac. 106.

A judgment rendered against a party who was dead before the action was brought is void, notwithstanding his sole executor was a defendant in the same action, but in his individual capacity. Bragg v. Thompson, 19 S. C. 572.

But it was held in this case that the execution would protect the sheriff, and he was only liable to the purchaser at execution sale for so much of the proceeds as had not been paid to the plaintiff in the execution before notice of the defect in the judgment.

A decree based upon a suit by a warning order to collect an assessment is void where the person named was defendant and owner of the property, and was dead at the time of the institution of the suit, and it may be collaterally attacked by an heir who is the owner of the property, and who was not a party to such decree. Greenstreet v. Thornton, 60 Ark. 369, 27 L. R. A. 735, 30 S. W. 847. See subhead Judgments in rem.

In Claffin v. Dunne, 120 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834, it was said that where an action was instituted against a dead person, and a judgment followed, it may be conceded that the judgment may be void on the ground that the court never acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.

In Camden v. Robertson, 3 Ill. 508, where judgment was rendered for defendants on the ground that it appeared from the evidence that one of the plaintiffs was dead before the institution of the suit, it was held to be erroneous on the ground that the death of a plaintiff in such a case could only be available to the defendant by a plea in abatement.

But in Taylor v. Snow, 47 Tex. 462, 26 Am. Rep. 311, which was an action of trespass to try title to land sold on execution, the trial court instructed the jury that if the defendant was dead at the time the original suit was commenced the court acquired no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and that any judgment rendered against a dead man without making his legal representatives parties is void, and that execution and proceedings thereon were also void, and could not be the foundation of a Co. 12 Colo. 46, 20 Pac. 771; Barber v. Morris, 37 Minn. 194, 33 N. W. 559.

A judgment is void and a nullity where it is rendered against a deceased person, even though such person may have been served with summons while living.

Rice County Comrs. v. Lawrence, 29 Kan. 158; Loring v. Folger, 7 Gray, 505; Carter v. Carriger, 3 Yerg. 411, 24 Am. Dec. 585; Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493; McCulloch v. Norwood, 58 N. Y. 562; Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 384; Norton v. Jamison, 23 La. Ann. 102; Gerault v. Anderson, Walk. (Miss.) 30, 12 Am. Dec. 521; West v. Jordan, 62 Me. 484; Lee v. Gardiner, 26 Miss. 521; Clay Dist. Twp. v. Buchanan, 63 Iowa, 188, 18 N. W. 859; Nolan v. Cameron, 9 Lea, 234.

Messrs. C. T. Atkinson, J. E. Torrence, Madden & Buckman, Jackson

title to the land. On appeal this instruction was held erroneous.

The instruction in this case goes to the question of jurisdiction, which is not noticed in the opinion of the supreme court; but the court discusses the question in the light of previous decisions, in which cases the court had jurisdiction before death. The court said that, if the defendant dies before the execution of a judgment, its payment must be enforced through the probate court, and not by execution; and if execution issue and sale is made, such sale might be said to be void because it has an inherent vice for which it may be avoided; and such sale will be declared void when the irregularity is shown by the proper parties and in the proper time and manner, just as a judgment having the like vice will be held void when its error is pointed out in the proper manner for invoking the action of the court upon it, but it cannot be collaterally attacked.

In Hooper v. Caruthers, 78 Tex. 432, 15 S. W. 98, which held that a sale was void where the record showed that the defendant was dead at the time of the rendition of the judgment, the court said: "In Taylor v. Snow, 47 Tex. 464, 26 Am. Rep. 311, from the opinion we understand that the party attacking the execution sale sought to show that the person against whom the judgment was, died prior to its rendition; but there is much in the opinion which seems to hold that a sale under execution issued after the death of a sole defendant is not void without reference to the time of the death." This was not approved.

Where a suit by publication was begun after defendant's death, and judgment and sale were had, and the heir brought a bill of review to set aside the judgment, and was decreed the proceeds of the sale, which was accepted without appealing, in an action of trespass to try title subsequently brought by the same heir for the same land, it was held that she was estopped from recovering the land. Powell v. Heckerman, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 304, 25 S. W. 166.

In Ledbetter v. Higbee, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 287, 35 S. W. 801, which was an action of trespass to try title where the defendant claimed title under a judgment of specific performance against R. and recovered in the present suit, it was assigned for error by plaintiff that the evidence tended to show that R. died in 1845, and that, as the county where the decree was had was organized in 1850, the proceedings must have been instituted after the death of R. The court held that if the fact that R. was dead at that time would justify holding the judgment to be an absolute nullity the fact of & Love, and Pollock & LaFerty, for defendants in error:

The death of Eustace B. Kager, after the commencement of the suit in the Federal court to foreclose the mortgage, and after the service of the chancery subpoena upon him, and before final decree, did not render the decree or the commissioner's deed based thereon absolutely void, and the same is not open to the collateral attack made upon it in this case.

Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 140; Black, Judgm. § 200; New Orleans v. Gaines, 138 U. S. 595, sub nom. New Orleans v. Whitney, 34 L. ed. 1102, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; Beard v. Roth, 35 Fed. Rep. 397; Yaple v. Titus, 41 Pa. 202, 80 Am. Dec. 604; Reid v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 326; Hayes v. Shaw, 20 Minn. 405, Gil. 355; McCormick v. Paddock, 20 Neb. 486, 30 N. W. 602; Jennings v. Simpson, 12 death should be established, and that the bill of exceptions did not show this. The court further said: "If, however, it had appeared from the bill of exceptions that Robinson was dead at the time referred to, we could not hold that the judgment was void for that reason." This, in effect, was the holding in Taylor v. Snow, 47 Tex. 462, 26 Am. Rep. 311, supra, although the court does not discuss that question at all, but bases its opinion upon a line of Texas cases which hold that where a judgment is taken against a party who dies after suit is brought before judgment, such judgment is not void, but voidable.

In an action of debt on a poor debtor's bond, where the defense was a discharge under Mc. Rev. Stat. chap. 148, providing for a citation to be served on the creditor if alive and in the state, otherwise on his attorney or agent, it was held that it could not be collaterally shown that the judgment creditor was dead previous to the disclosure by the debtor, and that this fact was known to the debtor and magistrates. Waterhouse v. Cousins, 40 Me. 333. In this case the sheriff returned service at the last and usual place of abode of P. It was held that if the sheriff's return was false the plaintiff had another remedy.

A judgment in sci. fa. upon a mortgage returned "nihil," and that there are no terretenants, followed by an alias sci. fa. and the same return, is not void, although the defendant was dead when the first writ issued. Murray v. Weigle, 118 Pa. 159, 11 Atl. 781; Wardner v. Tainter, 4 Watts, 270.

In the latter case it was said that a judgment rendered against a defendant after his death, who died pending the suit, is at most voidable, and that there is no distinction between that and a case where a judgment is "rendered against one who died before the commencement of the action, but, from the sheriff's return to the original writ, appeared to be alive at the time." In this case it was objected that the judgment in the sci. fa. upon the mortgage awarding execution was not voidable merely, but absolutely void for want of jurisdiction on the part of the court, because the defendant named therein was dead prior to suing out the writ. The court said: "This objection I have already met, as I conceive, by showing that from the return made by the sheriff to the writs of scire facias, and the judgment rendered thereon by the court, the plaintiffs below are concluded from making it even upon a writ of error, and much more in a collateral suit." The court further held, in addition to the facts above: "But the pro-

Neb. 558, 11 N. W. 880; Mitchell v. Schoonover, 16 Or. 211, 17 Pac. 867; Elliott v. Bastian, 11 Utah, 452, 40 Pac. 713; Stocking v. Hanson, 22 Minn. 545; Coleman v. McAnulty, 16 Mo. 177, 57 Am. Dec. 229; Tapley v. Martin, 116 Mass. 275; Murray v. Weigle, 118 Pa. 159, 11 Atl. 781; Knott v. Taylor, 99 N. C. 511, 6 S. E. 788; Clafin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834.

A judgment cannot be collaterally impeached on the ground that defendant was dead at the time the writ issued or judgment was rendered.

Knott v. Taylor, 99 N. C. 511, 6 S. E. 788; Mitchell v. Schoonover, 16 Or. 211, 17 Pac. 867; Warder v. Tainter, 4 Watts, 270; Yaple v. Titus, 41 Pa. 195, 80 Am. Dec. 604; Murray v. Weigle, 118 Pa. 159, 11 Atl. 781; ceeding by scire facias upon a mortgage, under our act of assembly is one in rem, and not against the person at all, and therefore jurisdiction against his person cannot be indisputably necessary."

The reasoning of Warder v. Tainter, to the effect that a judgment where the defendant dies before suit, and a judgment where the defendant dies after suit but before judgment, are both alike, is hardly sound, and weakens the case. The judgment in the Warder Case may be sustained on the other grounds stated in the opinion.

See Mills v. Alexander, 21 Tex. 154, subd. IX.

II. Judgments on confession.

English cases.

Generally speaking the death of the defendant is a countermand of a warrant of attorney, and a judgment taken after death without notice of the same should be set aside. But the English cases do not appear to be very clear as to the practice in regard to taking judgments on confession after the defendant's death. Some cases hold that a judgment taken after death, where the defendant dies within a year and a day from the time of giving the confession, will be valid by fiction of relation back to a time when the party was alive, as in Robinson v. Tonge, 3 P. Wms. 399; Oades v. Woodward, 1 Salk. 87, 2 Ld. Raym. 766, 850; Fann v. Atkinson, Willies, Rep. 423; Calvert v. Tomlin, 5 Bing. 1; Saville v. Wiltshire, Barnes's Notes, 270.

And in Fuller v. Jocelyn, 2 Strange, 882, and Chancy v. Needham, 2 Strange, 1081, where judgments were taken on old warrants of attorney, the court refused to set the same aside, although the defendants were dead at the time of taking judgment.

In Tripp v. Stauley (1847) 5 Dowl. & L. 262, 17 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 19, 11 Jur. 1062, it was held that a party may, by the terms of the warrant of attorney, waive the necessity of an affidavit being made of his having been recently seen alive, in order to obtain leave to enter up judgment after a year and a day have elapsed. Patteson, J., said: "I see no reason why such a stipulation in a warrant of attorney should not be good."

But in Heath v. Brindley (1834) 2 Ad. & El. 365, 4 Nev. & M. 235, it was held that a judgment entered on confession at a term which commenced more than a year and a day from the date of the warrant should be set aside at the instance of the administrator, where the defendant died in the vacation of that term, although the warrant of attorney provided for 49 L. R. A.

Mills v. Alexander, 21 Tex. 154; Thouvenin v. Rodriguez, 24 Tex. 468.

Where a sale is made under and in pursuance of a decree which is irregular and voidable only, but not absolutely void, the sale relates back to the decree, and a deed based on such decree is not subject to collateral attack.

Cross v. Know, 32 Kan. 725, 5 Pac. 32.

Doster, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of ejectment, for partition, and for the rents and profits of the land. Eustace B. Kager was at one time the owner of the tract in dispute. He and his wife, Ada L. Kager, executed a mortgage of the land to secure the payment of money. They made default in the payment of the judgment, notwithstanding more than twelve months should elapse, or that the defendant should be dead. The court said that the waiver in the warrant of attorney is not binding upon his representatives, and still less on the court.

Rule 73, Hilary Term, 2 Wm. IV. (Charnock's New Rules, p. 62), provides that "leave to enter up judgment on a warrant of attorney, above one and under ten years old, must be obtained by a motion in term, or by order of a judge in vacation; and, if ten years old or more, upon a rule to show cause."

It seems that since the Rule of Hilary Term, 4 Wm. IV., General Rules and Regulations, 3, providing that judgments take effect when signed, a showing must be made that the defendant was alive within a reasonable time prior to taking judgments on warrants of attorney. Jordan v. Farr, 2 Ad. & El. 437; Howard v. Batho, 5 Dowl. & L. 396; Powell v. Howard, 6 Scott, 826, 8 L. J. C. P. N. S. 16; Chell v. Oldfield, 4 Dowl. P. C. 629; O'Neill v. Coghlan, 2 Dowl. & L. 5. 13 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 204, 8 Jur. 361; Jacobs v. Griffiths, 5 Dowl. P. C. 577; Reeder v. Whip, 5 Dowl. P. C. 576; Croft v. Egmont, 8 Dowl. P. C. 95; Key v. Mountague, 1 Dowl. N. S. 853; Watson v. Mathews, 2 Dowl. N. S. 670, 12 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 139, 7 Jur. 627; Lot v. Anderson, 1 Dowl. N. S. 305.

From these cases supra it does not appear what would be the effect of taking a judgment where it subsequently appears that the party was dead at the time. But the deduction from them is that the court will not allow a judgment to be taken after the death of the defendant, although it might not set aside such judgments for that cause.

American cases.

There are not many cases in this country in regard to taking judgments by confession on warrant of attorney where the defendant died before judgment; and it seems that in Pennsylvania such judgment will be stricken off. In New York they are made void by the Code of Civil Procedure.

Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1275, relating to judgments on confession, and providing, "but a judgment shall not be entered upon such a statement after the defendant's death."—a judgment entered upon confession after defendant's death, which occurred on the same day at about 8 o'clock in the morning, was set aside. Maddock v. Stevens, 15 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 248.

In Nichols v. Chapman, 9 Wend. 452, prior to the Code of Civil Procedure, it was held that a judgment on a warrant of attorney may debt, and on the 9th day of September, 1878, suit to foreclose the mortgage was brought in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas. On the 23d day of September, 1878, they were both duly served with a subpoena in chancery issued in the case. January 8, 1879, the defendant Eustace B. Kager died intestate, leaving surviving him his wife, Ada, and two minor children. These two children were the plaintiffs in the action of ejectment in the court below, and are the plaintiffs in error in this court. July 15, 1879, final decree was rendered and entered in the foreclosure action against the defendants, Eustace B. and Ada L. Kager. This decree adjudged the amount due upon the mortgage indebtedness, and directed a sale of the land to be made to satisfy it. The sale was made on the 23d of February, 1880, and on the 5th day of April, 1880, the sale was confirmed, and a deed executed to the purchaser,—one J. B. Watkins. By mesne conveyances the title of Watkins has been transferred to Ira M. Vickery, the defendant in the ejectment suit, and the defendant in error here. B. N. Kager and Ada Kager, the children and heirs of Eustace B. Kager, having arrived at majority, instituted the action for the partition of the land, and to recover an undivided one half of it, and for the rents and profits of such portion, upon the theory that, their ancestor having died before the rendition of the decree of foreclosure, such decree was a nullity, and could not be made the basis of the sale that was had, and the deed that was executed. It is to be assumed that the decree was procured by complainants' counsel and rendered by the court in ignorance of the previous death of the debe entered after the defendant's death, to be entered as of the term if the death happen during a term, and to be entered as of the term preceding the death if the defendant dies in vacation. But execution in such a case cannot issue until one year after the death. In this case the death of the defendant was suggested of record.

In Livingston v. Rendall, 59 Barb. 493, it was said that Nichols v. Chapman, 9 Wend. 453, holding that a judgment on bond and warrant may be entered after the defendant's death, was based upon the old and technical theory that a judgment was entered as of the first day of the preceding term, and it is doubtful whether even then that decision would apply to a judgment by default. "There is certainly no such theory now remaining. There is no sense in which judgments are entered as of any term. And it would be very useless, and worse than useless, to continue a mere fiction when no good is to be gained."

A judgment entered on a warrant of attorney against a defendant where the record showed that he was dead at the time of entry will be stricken off on a rule. Tobias v. Dorsey, 2 W. N. C. 15.

And it was held proper to strike off a judgment that had been entered on a warrant of attorney on the fact being found that the defendant was dead before it was entered. Lanning v. Pawson, 38 Pa. 480. In this case the court said: "We speak now only of a judgment entered on a warrant of attorney, and therefore by the act of the plaintiff, and not really by the court."

And where a warrant of attorney authorized a joint or several judgment on a bond, and the plaintiff did not enter a several judgment but a joint one, and at the time of so doing one of the obligors was dead, it was held that the judgment was therefore clearly irregular, and must be opened as to all the defendants, and a fi. fa. set aside. Lewis v. Ash, 2 Miles (Pa.) 110.

But in Hartman v. Hesserlich, 8 W. N. C. 483, where a confession of judgment had been taken on a joint note, and the maker had died before the judgment was entered, on a rule by the sureties to strike off the judgment it was contended, on one side, that a judgment cannot be entered on a warrant of attorney against a survivor after the death of a defendant, and, on the other side, that in case of the death of one of the makers of a warrant of attorney judgment can be entered against the survivor. The court: "Rule discharged."

In Webb v. Wiltbank, 1 Clark (Pa.) 324, 49 L. R. A.

where the defendant gave an agreement for judgment as of March 1, with stay of execution until June 1, the agreement not to be filed until June, and before June the defendant died, and after June 1 the plaintiff filed the agreement suggesting the names of the executors, and issued execution, it was held that the judgment was rightly entered up, but that the execution could not issue without a sci. fa.

In this case the judgment evidently was intended to be revived. The case does not show how the judgment was entered.

Where a judgment was confessed during vacation, and after the next term the contingency happened upon which the defendant was to have the right to enter it up, and after the contingency happened the defendant died and the plaintiff entered up the judgment, it was held that the judgment was valid notwithstanding the tenth rule of court, providing that parties are at liberty to enter judgment obtained at one term of court on or before the last day of the court or term next succeeding, and that no judgment shall be entered up after such second term without giving a term's notice to the adverse party or his attorney. Keep v. Leckie, 8 Rich. L. 164.

This case followed the English rule of making a judgment valid by relation to a time prior to defendant's death.

In this case it was said: "A judgment is the conclusion of law upon facts found or admitted. The entry is merely the formal registry of what was adjudged, having relation, as all agree, to the term when the conclusion is supposed to have been entered. Why or how can the death interpose to arrest the mere formula of entering it up? If the party lives there is no judicial action requisite. No order by the court in point of fact. There is nothing interlocutory or inchoate; no verdict necessary: the facts are admitted; no assessment required: the sum is ascertained, and by consent is considered as adjudged. The whole proceeding by our practice is begun, prosecuted, and perfected in vacation, and the whole action is exploded if the entry does not follow as a legal corollary. The defendant is excluded, and the plaintiff cannot be postponed by the mere withdrawal of his assent, however bitter the penitence of the defendant. Continued assent is not of the essence of the right to sign judgment."

Where a chattel mortgage authorized an entry of judgment as on confession, and the court issued a writ of seizure, after the mortgagor had died, and the purchaser brought a suit of monition under La. Rev. Stat. 1832, p. 425, fendant Eustace B. Kager. Upon the above-recited state of fact these questions arise: Was the foreclosure decree rendered by the circuit court on the 15th day of July, 1879, and the succeeding sale and deed, void as to the plaintiffs in error, and subject to the collateral attacks made upon it, by reason of the death of Eustace B. Kager on the 8th day of January, 1879, after the bringing of suit, and service of process upon him? Or did his death render the proceedings had thereafter voidable only, and not subject to collateral attack? The court below ruled that the decree and other proceedings were not void, but were voidable only, and therefore could not be collaterally attacked. From this ruling the plaintiffs below have prosecuted error to this court.

In our judgment, the contention of the plaintiffs in error is sound, and must prevail. The foreclosure decree and subsequent proceedings were void, and constituted no basis for a claim of title. Upon the precise question involved, counsel for plaintiffs in error has not carried his investigation of the authorities along the entire line of decisions applicable thereto; and because thereof we have been compelled to make such independent research as the multiplicity of our labors would allow, and in consequence have rested our judgment largely upon what appears to be the reason and principle of the question, and less upon the authority of adjudged cases. We are free to confess that the position of the defendants in error is supported by the greater weight of authorities, numerically considered. In the Encyclopedia of Pleading and Practice (vol. 11, p. 843) it is said: "As to the validity of a judgment rendered for or against a party

Acts 1834, p. 125, providing that the judgment of the court confirming the sale operates as res judicata against all persons, whether present or absent; and the executrix resisted the confirmation, the supreme court of Louisiana held that neither the executrix nor her agent and vendee could question the sale, but that the creditors might. Bank of Louisiana v. Ford, 9 La. Ann. 209.

In a subsequent suit by the vendee of the executrix to recover the property the Federal court held that the decision in the state court that the court had jurisdiction was res judicata. Jeter v. Hewitt, 22 How. 352, 16 L. ed. 345.

In Bernes v. Weissner, 2 Bradf. 212, it was held that a judgment against a surety on a stipulation in admiralty recovered after the death of the stipulator, as in a recognizance, was not entitled to priority of payment out of his estate. The court said that the judgment was unauthorized; that not being in the state court was not such a judgment as 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 359, § 8, contemplates when it authorizes judgments to be docketed after the death of the party. The court said that the stipulation was nothing more than a conditional obligation to pay, and although judgment could be entered on it without service of process immediately on the final decree against the principal, yet that was not in fact done during the intestate's lifetime.

III. Void judgments.

In KAGER v. VICKERY it is held that a judgment for money and for the foreclosure of a mortgage is void, and may be collaterally attacked, where the defendant after service of process had died before judgment. This decision is in line with those of some states, although, as said in the opinion, the weight of authority is the other way. It is treated as a new question in that state, but a similar question arose in Richards v. Thompson, 43 Kan. 209, 23 Pac. 106, where a judgment was held void on account of the mortgagor having died before suit. And in McLaughlin v. State, 17 Kan. 283, it was held that a judgment against a principal and surety on a forfeited recognizance may be vacated as to the principal, but not as to the surety, where the principal was dead at the time of judgment, under Kan. Code, § 568, providing for vacating a judgment where the party was dead at the time of its rendition.

At common law a judgment taken against a party after his death is void. The court loses jurisdiction of the person and cannot render a valid judgment against him. This rule has been followed by some states while the weight of authority now is that, in the absence of statutory provisions, such judgments are voidable and erroneous, but not void, and cannot be collaterally attacked. The leading case adopting this view is Warder v. Tainter, 4 Watts, 270, where the defendant died before suit, and the judgment was in a proceeding in rem, and it was not necessary to establish the rule in that case. It is cited largely in cases which hold that a judgment taken against a party who dies after suit is voidable and erroneous. The cases seem to be irreconcilable.

It does not seem to be material at what stage of the proceedings the death occurs in order to render a judgment void, where the death is after suit and before judgment, except where the death is after verdict and in cases under the New York Code of Civil Procedure. See subd. V., Where death occurs at certain stages of the action.

Some cases cited by authors as holding that judgments against dead persons are null use the word "void" in the sense of "erroneous." They are cases where, by proper proceedings, they are sought to be reversed, and are not attacked collaterally. Such are the cases of Colson v. Wade, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 43; Burke v. Stokely, 65 N. C. 569; Moore v. Easley, 18 Ala. 619; Smith v. Pratt, 13 Ohio, 548; Bragg v. Thompson, 19 S. C. 572. There is a wide difference between a judgment null and void and one erroneous and voidable. The latter may be effective until set aside. This distinction was noticed in Carr v. Townsend, 63 Pa. 202.

The cases holding that a judgment is void where it is taken against a party who died after the action commenced, and before judgment, are as follows: Randal's Case, 2 Mod. 308; Snodgrass v. Cabiness, 15 Ala. 160; Meyer v. Hearst, 75 Ala. 390; Swink v. Snodgrass, 17 Ala. 633, 52 Am. Dec. 190; Haydock v. Cobb, 5 Day, 527; Edwards v. Whited, 29 La. Ann. 647; McCloskey v. Wingfield, 29 La. Ann. 141; Norton v. Jamison, 23 La. Ann. 102 (before issue); New Orleans & C. R. Co. v. Bosworth, 8 La. Ann. 80 (before issue); Parker v. Horn, 38 Miss. 215; Gerault v. Anderson, Walk. (Miss.) 30, 12 Am. Dec. 521 (after interlocutory order); Carter v. Carriger, 3 Yerg. 411, 24 Am. Dec. 585 (after default); Kelly v. Hooper, 3 Yerg. 395; Nix v. French, 10 Helsk. 377; Smith v. Cunningham, 2 Tenn. Ch. 565; Collins v. Knight, 3 Tenn. Ch. 183; Requa v. Holmes, 16 N. Y. 193, 26 N. Y. 338 (before interlocutory order); Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 457 (before default); Adams v. Nellis, 59 How. Pr.

after his death, the authorities seem to be hopelessly irreconcilable. Thus, according to numerous decisions, such judgments are utterly void, and may be collaterally attacked. The decided weight of authority, however, seems to be that if a court of general jurisdiction, or a court which has acquired full jurisdiction over the cause and over the parties, renders a judgment for or against a party after his death, the judgment is not for that reason void. Such a judgment, while erroneous, and voidable when properly assailed in a direct proceeding for that purpose, is valid until reversed by some appropriate proceeding, and may not be collaterally attacked." In Freeman on Judgments (vol. 1, 4th ed. § 153) it is said: "The decisions respecting the effect of judgments for or against persons who were not living at the time of their rendition are conflicting and unreasonable. Some of them apparently affirm that a judgment so rendered is void under all circumstances, and others that it is valid under all circumstances, because its rendition implies that the parties for and against whom it was given were then living, and that to show that either was then dead is to dispute the verity of the record, and therefore not permissible." In Black on Judgments (vol. 1, § 200) it is said: "The great preponderance of authority is to the effect that, where the court has acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the persons during the lifetime of a party, a judgment rendered against him after his death is, although erroneous and liable to be set aside, not void nor open to collateral attack." However, in the preceding section (199) the author says: "At the common law an action was abated 385 (before decision Code); Lemon v. Smith, 20 App. Div. 523, 47 N. Y. Supp. 158 (before report—Code); Stephens v. Humphries, 73 Hun, 199, 25 N. Y. Supp. 946 (before decision—Code).

And in Johnson v. Johnson, 40 Ala. 247; Stewart v. Nuckols, 15 Ala. 225, 50 Am. Dec. 127; Ex parte Swan, 23 Ala. 192; Hood v. Branch Bank of State, 9 Ala. 335; Nolan v. Cameron, 9 Lea, 234; Morrison v. Deaderick, 10 Humph. 342; and Hewly v. Johns, 3 Baxt. 85,—it was said that judgments taken against a party after his death are void.

In Randal's Case, 2 Mod. 308, in an action of debt upon a bond against an administrator who pleaded a judgment against the intestate and that he had no assets ultra, and the other party replied that the defendant died before judgment was obtained, the judgment was held ill, and "the court were of opinion that the plaintiff might avoid the judgment without a writ of error; especially in this case, where it is not only erroneous, but void."

This case was criticised in Warder v. Taintner, 4 Watts, 270, which held that a judgment was not void in an action where the defendant was dead at the time of the institution of the suit. It was there said that, although the judgment in Randal's Case, 2 Mod. 308, "may be correct in deciding that the plaintiff in that case could avoid the judgment as to himself, which was set up by the defendants in their plea to postpone his claim, by showing that it was obtained before the death of the intestate, yet I apprehend it cannot be so for the reason given by the reporter, to wit, 'that it was not only erroneous, but void;' for this would be contrary to the current of authorities already cited, which show that a judgment for such cause is only voidable at most, and not void. I am inclined, also, to believe that the reporter, through misapprehension, has misstated the reason which induced the court to make their decision; for Lord Holt seemed not to think the book of the best authority when in Salisbury v. Phillips, 1 Ld. Raym. 537, he, upon it being cited by counsel, said, in tra, 'that no books ought to be cited at the bar but those which were licensed by the judges.' The decision of the court, however, may be sustained upon the ground that the judgment was erroneous and voidable merely; but the plaintiff, not being either a party or privy to it, was therefore unable to reverse it by writ of error, and, being prejudiced by it, was entitled to do so in effect as to himself by pleading and showing the error whenever the judgment should come to be set up for the purpose of prejudicing or depriving him of his right."

49 L. R. A.

In Smith v. Evans, Donnelly's Cases, 25, it was held that where a decree was taken, and at the time of the decree a party to the suit was dead, the decree would be imperfect, and could not be remedied by a subsequent bill of revivor against the representatives of the deceased party.

A sale under an execution issued on a judgment rendered against an intestate after his death is void, and passes no title. Snodgrass v. Cabiness, 15 Ala. 160; Meyer v. Hearst, 73 Ala. 300; Swink v. Snodgrass, 17 Ala. 653, 52 Am. Dec. 190; Parker v. Horne, 38 Miss. 215.

And a judgment against a partnership which has ceased to exist by the death of one of the partners before the date of the judgment is null and void, and a surety on a release bond may show that such judgment is void. McCloskey v. Wingfield, 29 La. Ann. 141.

And a decree or judgment rendered against a dead person jointly with others may be void as to the party deceased, but is valid as to the living defendants. Collins v. Knight, 3 Tenn. Ch. 183.

In this case it was said that the weight of authority in this state certainly is that a judgment or decree against a deceased party to a suit is an absolute nullity; and our decisions are, upon this point, in conflict with the weight of judicial authorities elsewhere.

In Hood v. Branch Bank of State, 9 Ala. 335, the court set aside a judgment that had been rendered against a defendant after his death, and then entered judgment against the other defendants; and said: "The judgment against D. was a nullity."

In Powell v. Washington, 15 Ala. 803, where a judgment in favor of a deceased plaintiff was sustained, the court said: "We are referred to Hood v. Branch Bank of State, 9 Ala. 333, where it is said a judgment rendered against a dead man is a nullity. In such case, the representatives of the party deceased may move to set it aside. They are not estopped, not being party or privy to the proceeding. The cases are distinguishable."

In Tennessee, the death of a defendant to a suit before decree renders void as to him and his representatives all proceedings taken thereafter. Smith v. Cunningham, 2 Tenn. Ch. 565. In this case it was said that the weight of authority seems to be that, when jurisdiction has been obtained over the defendant in his lifetime, a judgment rendered against him subsequent to his death is not void, but only erroneous and voidable: but the decisions of our state are, however, otherwise, and are conclusive.

Where a party dies during the pendency of by the death of a sole plaintiff or defendant. And in some of the states the doctrine seems to be irrevocably settled that a judgment against a person who was dead at the time of its rendition is absolutely null and void." In Life Assn. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315, the court says: "Much of the confusion and uncertainty which prevail in the authorities on this subject is attributable, doubtless, to the fact that courts, in jurisdictions where the common-law system obtains, in attempting to follow the adjudications of other courts, have failed to distinguish the cases resting on purely common-law grounds from those resting in whole or in part upon statutes modifying the common law. A careful examination of the authorities clearly shows that a judgment by the common law, in the absence of any statutory provisions on the subject, against a dead person, either natural or artificial, is absolutely void, and the fact that service may have been obtained, or the suit commenced, before the death of the party, makes no difference in this respect; and this was unquestionably the rule from the earliest period of the common law down to the seventeenth year of the reign of Charles II., when the British Parliament passed the first act somewhat modifying the common law on the subject. Randal's Case, 2 Mod. 308; 1 Salk. 8; 2 Saund. 72, note m. The rule of the civil law was the same. 7 Rob. Pr. 157. By statute (17 Car. II. chap. 8, § 1) it was enacted, in substance, that the death of neither plaintiff nor defendant between verdict and judgment should be assigned for error, provided the judgment should be entered up within two terms after such verdict. The courts of Westminster, in giving a construca suit, a decree two years thereafter without any notice of the party's death being taken in the proceeding is void for want of jurisdiction, and upon a suit founded on such decree the want of jurisdiction may be shown by a plea, if it does not appear upon the face of the record. Kelly v. Hooper, 3 Yerg. 395.

In Haydock v. Cobb, 5 Day, 527, where the assignee of a note had levied on land of the obligor on his judgment obtained in the name of the assignor, and then obtained a decree against his assignor that the title acquired by the levy of the execution might be vested in him, but before the decree the assignor died, it was held, in an action of dissesin brought by the purchaser against the obligor, that he might show that the assignor died before the passing of the decree. The court said that if H. was dead at the time of the decree there was no party upon whom the decree could operate, and his heir could not be divested of his title by a decree which as to him was passed merely ex parte.

A judgment rendered against a party who was dead is void notwithstanding his executor was defendant in the same action in his individual capacity. But an execution regular in form issued upon such judgment will protect the sheriff, and a purchaser under such void judgment may recover from the sheriff so much of the proceeds of the sale as has not been paid to the plaintiff in execution before notice had by the sheriff of any defect in the judgment. Bragg v. Thompson, 19 S. C. 572.

But where a suit was commenced against the heirs to subject the real estate of the decedent to the payment of his debts, one of the heirs died without children, leaving her brothers and sisters her heirs, who were also parties to the suit, and no notice was taken of her death in the action, and the land was sold under a decree after her death. It was held that the estate vested in the surviving defendants, and that the purchaser obtained a good title. Gilchrist v. Cannon, 1 Coldw. 581. In this case the court said it would have been otherwise if the heirs of the decedent had been strangers to the record.

A judgment dissolving an injunction with damages rendered against a party who at that time was dead is a valid judgment binding on his succession and representatives who were parties to that proceeding. Stackhouse v. Zuntz, 41 La. Ann. 415, 6 So. 666. The court held the error to be clerical, and not to vitiate the judgment, and said: "Had not the widow, as widow in community and as tutrix, been a party to the record at the time the judgment was rendered, the case would have presented quite different features."

IV. Voidable judgments.

The majority of cases hold that a judgment taken against a party who dies after suit, but before judgment, is not void. These cases generally hold that such judgments cannot be attacked collaterally; that they are erroneous and voidable, and that they are open to an attack in the proper manner, by motion or by writ of error coram nobis, etc.

For the particular facts in these cases, see subd. IX., Classification by states.

A judgment rendered against a party after his death is not void. Trall v. Snouffer, 6 Md. 308; McCormick v. Paddock, 20 Neb. 486, 30 N. W. 602; Swasey v. Antram, 24 Ohio St. 87; Mitchell v. Schoonover, 16 Or. 211, 17 Pac. 867; Holman v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 1120; Fleming v. Seelgison, 57 Tex. 524; Best v. Nix, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 349, 25 S. W. 130; King v. Burdett, 28 W. Va. 601, 57 Am. Rep. 687; Beard v. Roth, 35 Fed. Rep. 397; Wallace v. Center, 67 Cal. 133, 7 Pac. 441; Tyrrell v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 1, 6 Pac. 867; Elliott v. Paterson, 65 Cal. 109, 3 Pac. 493; Claffin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834; Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236; Palmerton v. Hoop, 131 Ind. 23, 30 N. E. 874; Reid v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 326; Collins v. Mitchell, 5 Fla. 364.

And the same was said to be the rule in Carr v. Townsend, 63 Pa. 202; Moke v. Brackett, 28 Tex. 443; Denni v. Elliott, 60 Tex. 337; Harrison v. McMurray, 71 Tex. 122, 8 S. W. 612; Spalding v. Wathen, 7 Bush, 659; New Orleans v. Gaines, 138 U. S. 595, 34 L. ed. 1102, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; Coleman v. McNulty, 16 Mo. 173, 57 Am. Dec. 229.

And such judgment cannot be attacked collaterally. Tyrrell v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 1, 6 Pac. 867; Lockridge v. Lyon, 68 Ga. 137; Elliott v. Paterson, 65 Cal. 109, 3 Pac. 493; Claffin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834; Palmerton v. Hoop, 131 Ind. 23, 30 N. E. 874; Reid v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 326; Jennings v. Simpson, 12 Neb. 558, 11 N. W. 880; Knott v. Taylor, 99 N. C. 511, 6 S. E. 788; Swasey v. Antram, 24 Ohio St. 87; Yaple v. Titus, 41 Pa. 195, 80 Am. Dec. 004; Mills v. Alexander, 21 Tex. 154; Evans v. Spurgin, 6 Gratt. 107, 52 Am. Dec. 105; King v. Burdett, 28 W. Va. 601, 57 Am. Rep. 687.

And the same was said to be the rule in Davies v. Coryell, 37 Ill. App. 509, and Hayes v. Shaw, 20 Minn. 405, 111 355.

tion to this act, held that where a party—and there was no difference between plaintiff and defendant in this respect—died in term time, though before verdict, the cause might nevertheless proceed to trial and judgment, upon the theory the entire term was in contemplation but one day. 2 Saund. 72, note m. The judgments in these cases were entered precisely in the same manner as if the death of the party had not occurred, and the statute applied as well where the right of action did not survive to or against the legal representatives of the deceased party as where it did. Ibid. The next legislation on the subject was the statute of 8 & 9 Wm. III. Section 6, chap. 11, of that act provided, in substance, that in all actions to be commenced in any court of record, if the plaintiff or defendant should happen to die after interlocutory and before final judgment, the action should not by reason thereof abate, if such action could be originally prosecuted or maintained by or against the executors or administrators of the party dying; but the plaintiff in such case, or, in the event of his death after such interlocutory judgment, his executors or administrators, might have a scire facias against the defendant, or, if he should die after such interlocutory judgment, then against his executors or administrators, to show cause why damages should not be assessed or recovered in such action, etc. It will be perceived that this act is in some of its main features much like our own statute on this subject, and is doubtless the original from which our own was modeled, though ours is unquestionably a great improvement on the English model. This act, it will be further observed, extends only to cases where the death of either

And a judgment rendered against a party after his death will not be enjoined. Lockridge v. Lyon, 68 Ga. 137; Mosley v. Southern Mfg. Co. 4 Okla. 492, 46 Pac. 508; Holman v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 1120; Harper v. Hill, 35 Miss. 63.

A judgment taken against a party after his death is erroneous and voidable. Tedlie v. Dill, 3 Ga. 104; Lynn v. Lowe, 88 N. C. 478; Colson v. Wade, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 43; Burke v. Stokely, 65 N. C. 569; Wittenburgh v. Wittenburgh, 1 Mo. 226; Jennings v. Simpson, 12 Neb. 558, 11 N. W. 880.

And the same was said to be the rule, in Collins v. Mitchell, 3 Fla. 364; Lockridge v. Lyon, 68 Ga. 137; Claffin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834, Overruling Life Assn. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315; Davies v. Coryell, 37 Ill. App. 509; Case v. Ribellin, 1 J. J. Marsh. 30; Spalding v. Wathen, 7 Bush, 659; Smith v. Rice, 11 Mass. 507; Hayes v. Shaw, 20 Minn. 405, Gil. 355; Knott v. Taylor, 99 N. C. 511, 6 S. E. 788; Smith v. Pratt, 13 Ohio, 548; Swasey v. Antram, 24 Ohio St. 87; Mosley v. Southern Mfg. Co. 4 Okla. 492, 46 Pac. 508; Yaple v. Titus, 41 Pa. 195, 80 Am. Dec. 604; Fleming v. Seeligson, 57 Tex. 524; Moke v. Brackett, 28 Tex. 443; McClelland v. Moore, 48 Tex. 355; Harrison v. McMurray, 71 Tex. 122, 8 S. W. 612; Best v. Nix, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 349, 25 S. W. 130; Elliott v. Bastian, 11 Utah, 452, 40 Pac. 713; Evans v. Spurgin, 6 Gratt. 107, 52 Am. Dec. 105; King v. Burdett, 28 W. Va. 601, 57 Am. Rep. 687; Watt v. Brookover, 35 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. 1007; Beard v. Roth, 35 Fed. Rep. 397.

And such a judgment will be reversed on error, after the trial court overrules a motion to set the same aside. Tedlie v. Dill, 3 Ga. 104.

And will be reversed where the record shows that the death of the defendant was suggested and ignored. Wittenburgh v. Wittenburgh, 1 Mo. 226; Jennings v. Simpson, 12 Neb. 558, 11 N. W. 880.

And will be reversed if the death is shown by the record. Yaple v. Titus, 41 Pa. 195, 80 Am. Dec. 604.

And in Watt v. Brookover, 35 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. 1007, the same was said to be the rule.

And such a judgment will be corrected on proceedings in error. Flock v. Wyatt, 49 Iowa, 466.

And the same was said to be the rule in Smith v. Rice, 11 Mass. 507; Beard v. Roth, 35 Fed. Rep. 397.

But in Merrill v. Suffolk Bank, 31 Me. 57, 50 Am. Dec. 649, it was said that a judgment will not be corrected on error if the record 49 L. R. A.

shows that the court has jurisdiction of the person, and does not show that he is dead.

A judgment rendered against a party after his death may be revoked or recalled by writ of error coram nobis. Collins v. Mitchell, 3 Fla. 364; Calloway v. Nifong, 1 Mo. 223; Devoreux v. Roper, 1 Phila. 182; Hill v. West, 1 Blinn. 486; Yaple v. Titus, 41 Pa. 195, 80 Am. Dec. 604; Milam County v. Robertson, 47 Tex. 222.

And the same was said to be the rule, in Case v. Ribellin, 1 J. J. Marsh. 30; Watt v. Brookover, 35 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. 1007; Dows v. Harper, 6 Ohio, 518, 27 Am. Dec. 270; Harrison v. McMurray, 71 Tex. 122, 8 S. W. 612.

The writ of error coram nobis lies only in the court rendering judgment. Latham v. Hodges, 35 N. C. (13 Ired. L.) 267.

And in Elliott v. Bastian, 11 Utah, 452, 40 Pac. 713, it was said that this writ has become obsolete.

And in Spalding v. Wathen, 7 Bush, 659, it was said that such a judgment can only be corrected by the court which rendered it.

A judgment rendered against a party after his death may be set aside on motion. Knott v. Taylor, 99 N. C. 511, 6 S. E. 788; Burke v. Stokely, 65 N. C. 569; McClelland v. Moore, 48 Tex. 355; Elliott v. Bastian, 11 Utah, 452, 40 Pac. 713.

And the same was said to be the rule in Wood v. Watson, 107 N. C. 52, 10 L. R. A. 541, 12 S. E. 49.

And in Lockridge v. Lyon, 68 Ga. 137, it was said that a judgment may be set aside on motion or by affidavit of illegality.

V. Where death occurs at certain stages of the action.

Where a judgment is taken against a party who dies after suit brought, but before issue joined, or before default taken, or after default taken, or before trial, or before verdict, report, or decision, or before interlocutory order, it seems that such a judgment is erroneous and voidable, and according to the English cases, where it does not relate back, will be set aside. In New York it is made absolutely void by the Code, and in Louisiana and Tennessee, following the general rule in those states, it is a nullity. In Texas and California it is voidable, and in Massachusetts such a judgment has been held valid against the mode of attack, and it is questioned if it was erroneous.

Attention is called to subdivisions Void judgments, and Voidable judgments, where many cases evidently were similar in that the judg-party occurs after an interlocutory judgment. This brief reference to the earlier decisions founded on the common law, and subsequent legislation on the subject, clearly shows that the idea that a judgment against a dead person is voidable only, had its origin in the construction given to the act of 17 Car. II. above mentioned; and any extension of the doctrine to cases not falling within that act, or other acts of a similar character, would, on principle, be a clear misapplication of it. It is also to be observed that these statutes, having both been passed since the fourth year of the reign of James I., are not of any binding force in this country; and it is clear the decisions of the English courts construing them are likewise, on principle, of no authority here; and, so far as they have been acted upon by the courts of this country in deducing the common law as to ment must have been taken at one of these stages of proceedings; but the question simply discussed in those cases was, Is a judgment taken against a party after his death void or voidable? And such decision generally followed the rule in that state.

a. Death before issue joined.

Where, after imparlance and before judgment, one of the defendants died, and judgment was entered up against both defendants, and an execution issued without any suggestion of the death of the other defendant, on error coram vobis, the record was amended suggesting the death of the defendant. Hamilton v. Holcomb, 1 Johns. Cas. 29.

A judgment taken against a defendant after being cited, but who died before issue joined, is a nullity, and his heirs cannot be made liable on such judgment. New Orleans & C. R. Co. v. Bosworth, 8 La. Ann. 80.

So, a judgment against one who, though cited, dies before issue joined, is void. Norton v. Jamison, 23 La. Ann. 102.

In this case the court said that it was necessary to make his legal representative a party, otherwise the judgment was inoperative as to either, and the recording of it created no judicial mortgage on the property left by the defendant, and the insertion of the word "heirs" in the decree gave no force to the judgment against his heirs and legatees who were not cited.

b. Before default taken.

Where the defendant died after service of summons, a judgment taken against such defendant after his death was set aside on motion of his administrator. Livingston v. Rendall, 59 Barb. 493.

In this case the court held that, although the time to answer expired by its own limitation under the Code, without the entry of a rule for a default, yet the mere lapse of twenty days from the service of summons is not the obtaining of a judgment. The court said: "Probably the plaintiff might have filed his proof of service and entered a rule for judgment; although this practice seems at present to prevail only in cases of actual application to the court for judgment."

In this case the court said that 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 359, § 7, providing that in a case in which the record of judgment should be filed and docketed within one year after the death of a party against whom such judgment was obtained, a suggestion of such death, if it happened before judgment rendered, shall be en-the effect of a judgment for or against a dead person, they have led, as already remarked, to much misapprehension and confusion on the subject. Such a judgment, when tested by the common law alone, as we have already seen, is absolutely void."

It is proper, however, to say that in the subsequent case of Clafin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834, the supreme court of that state repudiated the quotation we have made from Life Asso. of America v. Fassett, as being a dictum. Therefore we have not made the quotation as expressive of the rule of authority in Illinois, but as the pertinent and deliberate declaration of eminent judges upon the abstract question of law, and also historically upon the origin and progress of the innovation in the common law made by the cases holding to a contrary doctrine. In the view of Mr. Black, and also in the view tered on the record, referring to the old practice, has become practically inapplicable to the practice under the Code, as originally judgments were perfected only in term time. The court further said, it will be seen, also, by reference to Rev. Stat. p. 387, §§ 3, 4, and 5, that under the old practice it was only after verdict or judgment interlocutory that a final judgment could be entered where the sole defendant had died, and even in the case of judgment interlocutory a scire facias was to be issued against the executors, and the judgment was against them.

A judgment by default, entered at a term which commenced after the defendant's death, is void, as the judgment does not relate back to a period beyond the first day of the term at which it is entered. Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 457. The court said the rule that records cannot be impeached in pleading is confined to parties and privies which only can bring error, and does not apply to strangers. The court further said that it was a judgment by default, and not by confession or verdict, and therefore not within 17 Car. II. chap. 8. 1 N. Y. Rev. Laws, 144, § 5, providing that the death of either party between verdict and judgment shall not be alleged for error so as the judgment be entered within two terms after the verdict, nor within 1 Rev. Laws, 312, providing that judgments shall not abate by the death of either party after interlocutory judgment, and that on a scil. fa. against terretenants they may plead the judgment so entered.

In Gerry v. Post, 13 How. Pr. 118, it was said that in Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 457, one Walton died October 5, 1873, and judgment was rendered against him by default at the next term in that month, and on scil. fa. against the terretenants they pleaded these facts; and it was held that the judgment was void, and no lien on the lands, and that no statute cured the effect of the death.

In United States v. Ambrose, 7 Fed. Rep. 554, referring to Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 457, it was said that was a scil. fa. against Stewart, who pleaded that on the day on which judgment was entered the defendant in the judgment was dead, and that consequently the judgment was void for want of jurisdiction; and it was held that the plea was a good plea because it did not contradict the record, but only undertook to avoid the effect of it by showing that the court had no jurisdiction.

In Warder v. Tainter, 4 Watts, 270, it was said that, as to the case of Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 457: "I think I have shown already that the judgment in question in that of the supreme court of Illinois, as first expressed, it would appear that at common law a judgment against a dead man was a nullity. We have not been able to examine many of the numerous decisions which appear to hold to the contrary. It is altogether likely that the reasons for the complete reversal which they have made of the common law upon the subject have been in many instances influenced by statutory provisions. Some of the cases we have read appear to have been so influenced. To hold that a valid judgment can be rendered against a dead man (that is, a judgment which can be made the basis for an assertion of title adverse to his heirs or legal representatives) would seem to be a holding requiring the sanction of a statute more or less explicit in its terms. There is no statute in this state which in terms or by implication sanctions the rendition of a judgment against one deceased. Code Civ. Proc. § 40, reads as follows: "An action does not abate by the death or other disability of a party, or by the transfer of any interest therein, during its pendency, if the cause of action survive or continue. In case of the death or other disability of a party, the court may allow the action to continue by or against his representative or successor in interest." This statute, however, is no authority for the rendition of a judgment against a dead man. It simply provides that, in the case of a cause of action which may survive to the party plaintiff or against the party defendant, the death of either of such parties shall not abate the action; that is, the action shall not be stricken from the docket. The proceedings so far conducted shall not go for naught, but may be contin-case was not void, but voidable only at most, on account of its having been given after the death of the defendant; and that the learned judge who delivered the opinion of the court misapprehended its real character when he said it was 'absolutely void.' But still the conclusion of the court on the case may be right, provided Stewart was really a stranger to the judgment and could not have brought a writ of error to reverse it. Of this, however, I entertain some doubt; because if I apprehend the facts of the case rightly, Stewart was heir . . . to Walton, against whom the judgment had been given, as well as tenant of the land to whom as such it had descended, . . . and if the judgment, being voidable only, became a lien upon the land, I am not satisfied but that he was privy, and might therefore as such have sued out a writ of error."

In Sternbergh v. Schoolcraft, 2 Barb. 153, the case of Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 457, was cited to the proposition: "The rule is well settled that no matter of defense which existed anterior to the recovery of the judgment can be pleaded or shown as a defense to an action upon the judgment." But what the court did decide was that this rule did not apply to strangers.

In Dyckman v. New York, 5 N. Y. 434, the case of Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 457, was cited to the proposition that "when the jurisdiction of a court of limited authority depends on a fact which must be ascertained by that court, and such fact appears and is stated in the record of its proceedings, a party to such proceedings, who had an opportunity to controvert the jurisdictional fact, but did not, and contested upon the merits, cannot afterwards in a collateral action against his adversary in those proceedings impeach the record, and show the jurisdictional fact therein stated to be untrue." But what the court really held was that "the reason of the rule shows its limitation," and that it was only confined to parties and privies.

In Grant v. Griswold, 21 Hun, 509, it was held that N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 763, providing that if death occurs after an accepted offer to allow judgment to be taken, or verdict, report, or decision, or an interlocutory judgment, the court must enter judgment, excludes an ordinary default. The court further said that this section was an adaptation of 2 Rev. Stat. 387, § 4, permitting final judgment in the names of the original parties within two terms after verdict or plea, notwithstanding the death of either party, and applied only to a verdict or plea by confession; that § 5 provided that nothing in § 4 shall be construed to authorize the entry of a judgment against any party who shall have died before a verdict is actually rendered against him, notwithstanding he may have died on the first or any other day of the term or sitting of the court at which such verdict shall have been taken; but such verdict shall be absolutely void. The court said: "There was no power in the court, either inherent or statutory, to direct any such judgments as of a date prior to his decease. This was explicitly held in Livingston v. Rendall, 59 Barb. 493, where the case of Nichols v. Chapman, 9 Wend. 455, was considered, and the doctrine there enunciated, of relation back to the first day of the preceding term, found to be wholly inapplicable to the present system. (And see Code Civ. Proc. § 1210, with Mr. Throop's note on Livingston v. Rendall, 59 Barb. 493, showing his intention to keep the section in harmony with this case.) The court certainly has no inherent power to enter judgment directly against a party deceased. This is impliedly conceded in all the cases. It results from their exclusive leaning upon the statute and strict application thereof. Lewis v. Rapelyea, 1 Barb. 29; Warren v. Eddy, 13 Abb. Pr. 28; Burhans v. Burhans, 10 Wend. 601; Spalding v. Congdon, 18 Wend. 543; North v. Pepper, 20 Wend. 677; Dowbiggin v. Harrison, 10 Barn. & C. 480. The only exception is where a party dies after verdict, and before the decision on a motion for a new trial. There the court has inherent power to direct the entry of judgment as of a date preceding such death. Ryghtmyre v. Durham, 12 Wend. 245. The reason of the latter rule is, that the party shall not be prejudiced by the delay of the court in giving judgment, if it can be avoided."

In Borsdorff v. Dayton, 17 Abb. Pr. 36, note, it was held that where the defendant dies before the expiration of his time to answer, the court has no power to enter judgment against him. And a judgment so entered will be set aside on motion, even after the expiration of a year from the date of entry. The court said: "At the time of his death, he was not in default, and the plaintiff had no right to a judgment. I cannot concede that a default can be taken against a dead man, any more than a summons can be served on a dead body."

But in Reid v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 326, it was held that the entry of a judgment against the defendant having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the parties after the death of the defendant upon a default by him in his lifetime, without the knowledge of his death, will not avoid the judgment if otherwise valid, ued in the name of or against properly substituted plaintiffs or defendants. The statute means that the progress of a case, though arrested at the point at which death intervenes, nevertheless from thenceforward may be conducted by those upon whom the right of action devolves, or against those upon whom the liability descends. This statute, however, does not assume to validate proceedings conducted in the name of or against deceased persons. It simply provides that, if parties die, the proceedings begun may be thereafter conducted in the name of or against their successors in interest. The common law has been nowise changed, therefore, by statute in this state. The common law, as we believe, gave no sanction whatever to judgments against dead persons, even though such persons had been in their lifetime subject to the jurisdiction of the court, by complaint duly filed and process duly served. As remarked by the supreme court of Mississippi in Gerault v. Anderson, Walk. (Miss.) 30, 12 Am. Dec. 521: "In courts of justice there must be actor, reus, and judez, before the court can act effectually to bind parties." "To say that the court had jurisdiction over the dead would contradict every principle of law and rule of proceeding. Why, in chancery, on the death of a party and the transmission of his interests to another, is a bill of review required? Why is a suit said to abate on the death of either party? The answer is that on the death of the party his interest ceases, and the jurisdiction of the court ceases also." Nor do the statutory provisions for the revivor of judgments bear upon the question. By statute, judgments may be revived; but that means that judgments

In this case the court said that, even if the judgment might have been reversed by writ of error for error in fact, yet, the error being a mere irregularity in the mode of exercising a judicial authority, it would seem that neither party could collaterally dispute the validity of the judgment, and certainly the plaintiff who has converted his demand into the form of a judgment, valid upon its face and which the defendant has made no attempt to set aside, but has pleaded it in bar, cannot treat it as of no effect by reason of the irregularity of the entry of judgment after defendant's death.

c. After default taken but before final judgment.

Where a judgment by default is taken against a defendant, and, before a writ of inquiry is executed, the defendant dies, a final judgment without noticing his death or reviving the suit is void, and may be taken advantage of by the administrators upon plea to a sci. fa. issued against them. Carter v. Carriger, 3 Yerg. 411, 24 Am. Dec. 585.

This case follows the rule in Tennessee, holding that all judgments taken against persons after their death are void without regard to the stage of the proceedings when the death happened.

So, upon the death of a party after a writ of inquiry executed and before return thereof, judgment should not be entered, but sci. fa. should be taken against the executor to show why the damages assessed should not be adjudged to the plaintiff. Goldsworthy v. Southcott, 1 Wils. 243.

Where death occurred between judgment by default and final judgment, it was held erroneous as void, and was reversed. Colson v. Wade, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 43. The word "void" in this case was evidently used in the sense of voidable.

d. Before interlocutory order.

In New York such a judgment is absolutely void.

In an action of ejectment, where one party claimed title under proceedings in a partition suit, it was held that all the proceedings in the partition suit subsequent to the death of the defendant were absolutely void as against his heirs. Requa v. Holmes, 16 N. Y. 193.

In this case the court said that 1 N. Y. Rev. Laws, 488, act April 10, 1813, providing that no suit in chancery shall abate by the death of any one of the defendants, but should survive, etc.; but that no order or decree of the court should bind any person not a party thereto,—applied to courts of chancery for partition.
49 L. R. A.

In Wasson v. Hoff, 27 Misc. 55, 57 N. Y. Supp. 953, it was said that the case of Requa v. Holmes, 16 N. Y. 193, relied on by the moving party, does not seem to be in point, because the defendant in that case died before interlocutory judgment, and before the rights of the parties were determined.

And in Requa v. Holmes, 26 N. Y. 338, the court said: "On this precise state of facts this court in 1837, when the cause was here for the first time, held that the proceedings in the partition suit subsequent to the death of Samuel Requa were absolutely void as against his heirs, and that all the title the defendant obtained was that which the surviving parties to the partition suit had at the time of the decree for sale." This case decides that the plaintiff could attack the decree of the court of chancery collaterally by proof that the defendant died before the same was made.

e. Before verdict, report, or decision.

If a defendant die on the night before the trial of the case at the sittings in term a verdict and judgment thereafter will be set aside on motion. Taylor v. Harris, 3 Bos. & P. 549. The court said that if a cause from never having been entered in the cause paper could not possibly have been tried until after the death of the defendant, a verdict obtained after his death cannot stand, as the postea is made up as of the very day on which the cause was tried, whereas in the case of trials after term the postea is made up as of the first day.

Where the defendant in ejectment died before the assizes began, the court refused to arrest the judgment, and the party was put to his writ of error that the point might be put in issue and tried by a jury. 1 Salk. 8.

The death of the defendant between the commission day of assizes and the day of trial is not a ground for setting aside the verdict for the plaintiff. Jacobs v. Miniconi, 7 T. R. 32. In this case the court said that all the verdicts given refer to the first day.

In Taylor v. Harris, 3 Bos. & P. 549, it was said in regard to Jacobs v. Miniconi, 7 T. R. 31, "that the cause there might have been tried at any period after it had once been entered in the judge's cause paper; and nothing but the multiplicity of business prevented it from being tried on the first day of the sittings. But the sittings in term neither commenced with the term nor are any part of the term. They are appointed at the discretion of the chief justice; and if a cause, from never having been which have been rendered against living persons may be revived after the death of such persons, not that judgments rendered against dead persons as though they were living may be revived. As remarked by the supreme court of Tennessee in Carter v. Carriger, 3 Serg. 411, 24 Am. Dec. 585: "The object of all law is the living man, not the dead body. The defendants in error's case is not helped by a scire facias. Its object is to enforce against the administrators a lien previously established against and fixed upon their intestate. When there is no such lien the scire facias is powerless. Its action is not original, but consecutive and successive,—wholly dependent upon the liability created against the living man. Without this foundation the scire facias against the administrator is only an inoperative and empty form, without substance and without effect."

entered in the cause paper, could not possibly have been tried until after the death of the defendant, a verdict obtained after his death cannot stand."

In Harrison v. McMurray, 71 Tex. 122, 8 S. W. 612, it was said that in numerous cases our courts have held that judgments against a defendant who had died before verdict are not void but only voidable, and can be set aside by a proceeding coram nobis,—that is, by proceedings in the same court where rendered, showing the fact of death at the rendition of the judgment.

In New York such a judgment is absolutely void.

In Gerry v. Post, 13 How. Pr. 118, it was said that at common law death abated all actions, and by 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 306, 307, § 8, if the defendant died after interlocutory, but before final, judgment, nothing could be done until his executors or administrators were brought in; that by § 5, if either party died after verdict, or a plea in confession, the court could enter final judgment in the names of the original parties at any time within two terms after the death; but if a verdict were entered after the death of a party, though he were alive at the beginning of the term, the verdict was absolutely void.

New York Code Civ. Proc. § 765, provides: "This title does not authorize the entry of a judgment against a party who dies before a verdict, report, or decision is actually rendered against him. In that case the verdict, report, or decision is absolutely void."

So, where a party dies before "decision" is actually rendered against him in a cause tried before the court, such decision and judgment thereon are void under this section. Adams v. Nellis, 59 How. Pr. 385. In this case the court said that until such a decision is signed and filed the cause is not removed from the authority of the trial court, but remains within its control. (Motion to set aside.)

And under this section a referee's report made after the death of a party defendant is void, and should be vacated on motion. Lemon v. Smith, 20 App. Div. 523, 47 N. Y. Supp. 158. In this case it was said that under this section the verdict, report, or decision is absolutely void. "Void as to whom? Clearly, as to the party who is dead, and as to the parties whose interests would be affected by the determination of the dead man's rights or obligations."

So, where an action was brought to foreclose a mortgage, and prior to the rendering of any decision therein a defendant who owned an undivided interest in the premises died, a judgment L. R. A.

The principle of the question for decision has been already considered by this court in Halsey v. Van Vliet, 27 Kan. 474. The facts of that case were that a judgment for money was recovered against a defendant who subsequent to its rendition died intestate. Before a revivor of the judgment was had, an execution was issued. After revivor, and less than five years therefrom, another execution was issued. This execution, however, was not issued within five years from the date of the judgment, nor within five years from the date of the preceding execution. The validity of a sale of land made upon the execution last issued was drawn in controversy. It was held by a majority of the court that the first execution having been issued after the death of the judgment debtor, and before the revivor, and while there was no defendant in being against ment against such party is void, and does not affect the interest of her heirs. Stephens v. Humphries, 73 Hun. 199, 25 N. Y. Supp. 946.

And where no "decision" within the meaning of that word in Code Civ. Proc. § 765, supra, has been rendered as to any of the matters at issue in the accounting proceeding, no decree can be entered against the accounting party. Herbert v. Stevenson, 3 Dem. 236.

In Corbett v. Twenty-third Street R. Co. 114 N. Y. 379, 21 N. E. 1033, it was held that, under § 764, Code Civ. Proc., providing that an action for a wrong does not abate by the death of a party, the word "decision," as used in this section, refers to a decision made by a court upon the trial of issues without a jury, and does not apply to a nonsuit.

In Smith v. Joyce, 11 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 257, it is said that "It is only where a party against whom the judgment is rendered dies before the verdict, decision, or report against him, that the judgment is absolutely void. (Code Civ. Proc. § 765.)"

In Arents v. Long Island R. Co. 36 App. Div. 379, 55 N. Y. Supp. 401, it was said that the case of Smith v. Joyce, 11 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 257, recognized the principle that where a party against whom a judgment is rendered dies before verdict, decision, or report against him, the judgment is absolutely void under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 765.

In Kissam v. Hamilton, 20 How. Pr. 360, it was said that 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 387, § 5, provides that a verdict is absolutely void unless actually rendered before the decease of a party.

1. After verdict.

The general rule is that where a verdict is taken against a party before his death, a judgment thereon, rendered after his death, will be held valid.

Under English Rules Supreme Court 1888, Ord. XVII. rule 1, a judgment may be entered against a party after his death where he died after verdict. This is founded on procedure act 1852, § 139, and derived from 17 Car. II. chap. 8, § 1.

And if the defendant dies after verdict and before the day in banc, the plaintiff may enter up judgment in the cause as if he were alive, under 17 Car. II. chap. 8, infra. Colebeck v. Peck, 2 Ld. Raym. 1280.

A judgment on a verdict where the defendant died between the verdict and judgment is valid. Burnett v. Holden, 1 Lev. 277.

And where a verdict was taken for the plaintiff, and, the question being difficult, the facts were stated in the form of a special case, which, whom or against whose property the process could run, such execution was null and void, and its issuance could not have the effect to keep the judgment from becoming dormant intermediate the death of the debtor and the issuance of the execution upon the revived judgment. The reason for the decision, of course, was that judicial proceedings against a dead man or against his property are nullities. If the issuance of an execution against the property of a deceased debtor upon a judgment rendered against him in his lifetime is a nullity, a fortiori would a judgment rendered against a dead man be a nullity. In the case of Rice County Comrs. v. Lawrence, 29 Kan. 163, a judgment against a convict in a case commenced against him before conviction was vacated upon direct proceedings instituted for the purpose. It was unnecessary in that case to determine whether the judgment was void in the sense of being subject to collateral attack, but it was characterized as a "nullity," and the trend of the opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Horton seemingly carries to the point of its utter invalidity upon collateral attack.

Upon reason and upon the authority of many adjudged cases, we are constrained to hold that the judgment of the court below was erroneous and should be reversed. Such reversal is therefore ordered, with directions to proceed in accordance with this opinion.

All the Justices concur.

Rehearing denied.

on account of press of business in the court, stayed over for more than two terms, and the defendant died before judgment, it was held that this did not deprive the plaintiff of his right to judgment, where it was not shown that defendant's estate had suffered prejudice by the delay. Green v. Cobden, 4 Scott, 486. In this case on a rule final judgment was awarded.

So, where the defendant died after verdict, and motion was made in arrest of judgment, it was held that the court would not take cognizance of such informations, and would not regard it, but would give judgment for the plaintiff. Blaby v. Eastwigg, 1 Cro. Ells. 202.

Where error was taken on a judgment, and the error assigned was that one of the defendants died before the day of nisi prius after verdict, it was held not assignable for error because the record mentioned that all appeared that day, and judgment was affirmed. Plummer v. Webb, 2 Ld. Raym. 1415, note.

In Chase v. Hodges, 2 Pa. 48, it was held that the death of the defendant between verdict and judgment, if not more than two terms intervene, cannot be avoided for error, since Stat. 17 Car. II. chap. 8, is made perpetual by 1 Jac. II. chap. 17, § 5, providing that when either party dies between verdict and judgment the death shall not be alleged for error, so that the judgment be had within two terms after verdict.

Under Minn. Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 66, § 274, providing that if a party dies after verdict or decision upon an issue of fact and before judgment the court may, nevertheless, render judgment thereon, and such judgment is not a lien on the real property of the deceased, but is payable in the course of administration on his estate, a judgment may be entered in such case without making the executor or administrator a party. Berkey v. Judd, 27 Minn. 475, 8 N. W. 383.

A money judgment against a decedent after his death, upon a verdict rendered during his lifetime, relates to the time of the verdict, and is a judgment docketed against the deceased, and entitled to priority of payment in the course of administration, under 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 87, § 28, subd. 3, providing that in case a judgment recovered shall be filed and docketed within one year of the death of the party against whom it is obtained, such judgment shall not bind the real estate, but be a preferred debt to be paid in the usual course of administration. Re Dunn, 5 Redf. 27.

New York Code Civ. Proc. § 763, provides: "If either party to an action dies, after an accepted offer to allow judgment to be taken, or after a verdict, report, or decision, or an interlocutory judgment, but before final judgment is entered, the court must enter final judgment, in the names of the original parties, unless the offer, verdict, report, or decision, or the interlocutory judgment, is set aside."

A judgment may be entered against a deceased defendant where a verdict is had before his death, and the entry of the judgment is a mere formal matter which the court may order without notice to anyone, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 763, supra, and § 1210, providing that when judgment is entered in such a case a memorandum of the party's death must be entered with the judgment in the judgment roll, indorsed on the judgment roll, and noted on the margin of the docket of the judgment; and that such a judgment does not become a lien upon the property of the decedent, but establishes a debt to be paid in the course of administration. Long v. Stafford, 103 N. Y. 274, 8 N. E. 522. In this case the entry was non pro tunc, but that fact was held to be immaterial.

Where a decision in a foreclosure action was made adjudicating the rights of the parties determining all the issues, fixing the lien, determining the amount, directing a judgment and sale, and awarding costs, and the owner of the equity of redemption then died, it was held that the court could subsequently determine the amount of costs, and appoint a referee to make the sale and enter final judgment in the names of the original parties, under Code Civ. Proc. § 763. It was further held that a party who did not claim under the owner of the equity of redemption could not attack the judgment. Wasson v. Hoff, 27 Misc. 55, 57 N. Y. Supp. 953.

But where judgment was given in assumpsit against two, and one of them died between verdict and the judgment, it was held that the King's bench on error may reverse its own judgments for such error. Meggot v. Broughton, 1 Cro. Ells. 106.

In an action of trespass against husband and wife, where the husband died after verdict between the day of nisi prius and the day in banc, as to whether the court will enter judgment or the bill shall abate, the court would advise. Anonymous, Cro. Car. 509.

g. After interlocutory order.

It seems that the authorities do not agree as to whether a judgment or decree is valid, where the death of the party occurs after interlocutory judgment. In the absence of any statute allowing such a judgment it may be said to be, at least, erroneous.

So, where death occurs between interlocutory and final judgment, judgment should not be entered against the deceased, but should be taken against the administrator under 8 & 9 Wm. III. chap. 10, providing after interlocutory judgment for a scil. fa. against an administrator. Weston v. James, 1 Salk. 42.

If the death is between interlocutory and final judgment the executor may defeat it by confessing judgments to others prior to the final judgment. Smith v. Eyles, 2 Atk. 886.

But an account settled in chancery between parties will stand notwithstanding the death of one before the final decree. Slingsby v. Hale, 1 Cas. in Ch. 122.

And where a decree directing a sale of land was made, and the commissioners sold the land, and after the defendant had been dead many years the court confirmed the report of the commissioners, it was held that, the death of the defendant not having been suggested on the record, the validity of the decree of condemnation could not be impeached in a collateral action. Evans v. Spurgin, 6 Gratt. 107, 52 Am. Dec. 105.

The court said that the error and proceedings to decree after the death of the defendant should have been shown in some proceeding instituted by the proper parties to set aside the decree for that cause.

In an action upon a foreign decree rendered after death, although founded on an interlocutory order made during life, it was held that such a decree rendered against an unrepresented deceased person was a nullity. Gerault v. Anderson, Walk. (Miss.) 30, 12 Am. Dec. 521.

This decision followed the general rule in Mississippi, which does not sustain judgments taken against parties after their death.

In Thomson v. Dudley, 3 Edw. Ch. 137, where the mortgagor in a foreclosure suit died after a bill taken pro confesso, and after a reference to compute the amount, when the cause was on the calendar upon the master's report, it was held that no decree could be had until the suit was revived against his representatives.

Where an interlocutory judgment was granted on overruling a demurrer and giving the defendant leave to answer, and he died before the expiration of the time, it was held that final judgment was properly rendered against him, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 763, providing that if either party to an action dies after an interlocutory judgment but before final judgment is entered, the court must enter final judgment in the names of the original parties. It was further held that such a judgment was a preferred claim against the estate, under 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. pt. 2, chap. 6, title 3, § 27, 3 Banks, 7th ed. 2298, § 3, providing for a preference of judgments docketed and decrees enrolled against the deceased. Clark's Estate, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 383. (But see next case.)

Where an interlocutory judgment was entered which directed that final judgment in favor of plaintiff be entered unless the defendant answer within twenty days, and before that time the defendant died, it was held that the action abated at the death until it should be revived, and, the condition of the order being interrupted by death, and therefore, there being no absolute order or interlocutory judgment, final judgment could not properly be entered until after revivor and substitution. Secor v. Clark, 22 Jones & S. 461.

This case seems directly opposite to Clark's Estate, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 383. Both cases were decided at about the same time. The case of Secor v. Clark does not cite any authorities or discuss that section of the Code. 49 L. R. A.

In a cause which survives where an interlocutory judgment is taken against two defendants and one of the defendants dies, who is not a necessary party, a motion may be made for leave to drop the deceased defendant out of the case and the action to proceed against the survivor. Halstead v. Cockroft, 49 How. Pr. 342.

VI. Judgment by relation back to time prior to death.

Formerly some cases sustained judgments taken against a party after his death, by relation back to the time prior to his death. This is similar to a nunc pro tunc judgment; but that subject is not intended to be discussed in this note.

English Rule Sup. Court 1883, Ord. XLI. rule 3, provides where a judgment is pronounced the entry should be dated as of the date on which such judgment is pronounced, unless ordered otherwise, provided that by special leave a judgment may be antedated.

A judgment signed in any part of a term or the subsequent vacation relates back to the first day of the term, notwithstanding the death of the defendant before judgment actually signed. Bragner v. Langmead, 7 T. R. 20.

And a decree pronounced before defendant's death may be enrolled afterwards like a judgment at law. Anonymous, 2 Cas. in Ch. 227.

Where judgment was signed at the opening of the office at 11 o'clock, and the defendant died at half-past 9 the same day, the judgment should not be set aside on motion. Wright v. Mills, 4 Hurst. & N. 468, 28 L. J. Exch. N. S. 223, 5 Jur. N. S. 771. In this case the court said that signing a judgment is a judicial proceeding, and is to be considered as having taken place at the earliest period of the day when it is done, and therefore not invalidated by what occurred in this case.

In Davies v. Davies, 9 Ves. Jr. 461, where a cause having stood sometime for judgment one of the defendants died in the interval, and the counsel for plaintiff said that it was settled that the death of a defendant does not necessarily prevent judgment, "judgment was pronounced accordingly by the Lord Chancellor a few days afterward."

After the hearing of a case one of the defendants, who had answered, died before decree was pronounced. A decree should have been rendered notwithstanding the death of the defendant, and without the consent of his representatives. Hall v. Clifton, 2 M'Cord, Eq. 88.

If a defendant die after an order for judgment on a bond, final judgment may be entered upon it at any time within two terms thereafter. Lynch v. Ingalls, 1 Bay, 449.

So, where a trustee dies after filing his answer the judgment may be rendered as of the term of answer. Hall v. Harvey, 3 N. H. 61.

An order for a judgment as in case of nonsuit, against the intestate in his lifetime, entered in the minutes of the court, is the basis of a valid claim against his estate, though the record be not signed or filed till after his decease. Salter v. Neville, 1 Bradf. 488.

In this case the court said: "The record itself, when duly made up, related back to the time of the entry of that order or judgment, no matter when it was in fact signed; though the actual time of signing, filing, and docketing might affect the rights of the party in case of any question as to priority of payment."

In Flock v. Wyatt, 49 Iowa, 466, it was held that the entry of a decree as of a date subsequent to the death of one of the defendants was irregular, and it should have been entered as of the date of submission, or at any rate as of a date prior to defendant's death.

See also subd. II., Judgments on confession.

VII. Death of party pending appeal.

There is some conflict of authority as to the effect of the death of a party pending an appeal, where such death is not noticed in the appellate court. Some cases hold that the death does not render the judgment void; but in Tennessee, Louisiana, and Mississippi, following the rule in other cases in such states, the judgment is held to be void.

Where an appeal was taken from the refusal to open a decree of divorce, and to allow a defense, and the case was submitted to the appellate court by both parties, and the appellant died before the judgment of reversal was entered, it was held that the appellate court a year thereafter could amend the record so as to make the judgment take effect as of a time prior to the death. Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236.

In this case the court said: "Where the sole defendant is dead when the suit or writ of error is brought, it may be true that a judgment against the deceased defendant is a nullity, for the reason that the court never acquired jurisdiction of the cause. In such a case the court never acquires any authority to act or take any step. But that is not the case here. Here, the court, before taking any steps, was clothed, by the act of the parties and the law, with full jurisdiction and rightful authority to render the judgment it did. Did the death of the appellee—not brought to the notice of the court by plea, suggestion, or otherwise—deprive it of such jurisdiction lawfully acquired? We think not. . . . The most that can be said of the entry of final judgment after the death of the appellee is, that it was irregular and informal."

Upon a former appeal it was held that a city was liable for rents and profits received by its grantees, but was entitled to a reduction in case compromises had been made between the occupants and the plaintiff, and a reference was ordered. On a subsequent appeal it was claimed that a number of the defendants had died before the remand of this cause to the circuit court on the former appeal and before the decree of reference of the circuit court upon the mandate, and that there had been no revivor. It was held that the order, if erroneous, was not prejudicial, as the decree was not against those defendants, but against the city, and no change by death could affect the rights of plaintiff in the present suit. New Orleans v. Gaines, 138 U. S. 595, sub nom. New Orleans v. Whitney, 34 L. ed. 1102, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428.

Where one of the defendants died pending certiorari to review a judgment against him, and the cause was dismissed and the judgment of the justice ordered to be executed, it was held that the remedy was by appeal; that injunction was not the remedy. The death of the defendant did not render the judgment void. Holman v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 1120.

In Rogers v. Paterson, 4 Paige, 409, where the court of chancery held that it had no power to correct a decree entered on a mandate from the court of errors although the respondent had died before judgment of reversal, and no notice had been taken of his death in the appellate court, and that the remedy, if any, was in the court of errors, it was said "that the court for the correction of errors had jurisdiction to make the decree notwithstanding the death of Taylor after issue joined in that 49 L. R. A.

court. The decree is not void, but is at most only erroneous." That if the death had been known the decree would have been entered nunc pro tunc, as of a day previous to his death, or perhaps the court might have declined hearing the case. That the practice of the House of Lords, adopted by the court for the correction of errors, rule 28, provides for revival by the representatives of either party, and that it appears to be the practice in the House of Lords to hear the case after the respondent's death without regard to the same, if the respondents do not apply for an order to revive the suit.

In Spalding v. Wathen, 7 Bush, 659, it was said: "We are not prepared to say that the want of a personal representative [where the plaintiff dies] renders void the appeal and all the proceedings" thereon. "Such a conclusion might be insisted upon with the same degree of plausibility in cases of the death before judgment of the defendant in the court below, or of the appellee in this court, as in such cases there would be no person in esse upon whom a judgment in personam could be made to operate, nor whose title to property could be divested by a judgment in rem; but even this proposition is by no means free from doubt."

But in Edwards v. Whited, 29 La. Ann. 647, it was held that a judgment of the supreme court on appeal against a person who is dead is an absolute nullity, and this may be shown by any person against whom the attempt is made to enforce it.

Where a surety on an appeal bond from a justice of the peace died shortly after appeal was taken, and the judgment was affirmed more than three years after his death, it was held that as to such surety the judgment was void, and was enjoined. Nix v. French, 10 Heisk. 377. In this case the respondent did not deny the right of the complainants to the relief sought, but asserted a cross bill, which was dismissed.

And a judgment on appeal to the effect that the death of appellant is suggested, and the case revived in the name of his administrator, and appeal is dismissed for want of prosecution, is void, where the administrator was not brought into court, as the question is jurisdictional, and, the record showing want of jurisdiction, the same could be attacked collaterally. Tarleton v. Cox, 45 Miss. 430.

VIII. Judgments in rem.

Where a judgment is taken in rem, and the debtor dies before final judgment but after the proceedings are brought, such judgment is not void, although it may be erroneous and voidable.

If jurisdiction is obtained by publication in an action for partition, the subsequent death of the defendant will not render the further proceedings void in a collateral attack, even though the defendant was confined in an insane asylum in another state at the time of the suit, and although a guardian ad litem should have been appointed. McCormick v. Paddock, 20 Neb. 486, 30 N. W. 602.

Where an action of attachment was brought against joint debtors, and no service was made, and one of the defendants died before judgment was taken against the garnishees, in a subsequent action against the garnishees under Ohio Code, §§ 218, 219, authorizing an action by the plaintiff in attachment against the garnishee, it was held that such judgment was not void on account of the failure to make the representative of the deceased defendant a party. Swasey v. Antram, 24 Ohio St. 87. The court said that the judgment was void-able and erroneous, and might be avoided by the representative of the deceased.

So, where attachment proceedings were instituted in February, 1801, against a nonresident who died in June of that year before judgment, and land was sold thereunder, it was held, in an action of ejectment by the heirs of the deceased to recover the land, that the judgment was not void, and that it could not be collaterally attacked. Cochran v. Loring, 17 Ohio, 409. The court said: "Now, the lessors of the plaintiffs are the heirs of Cochran. They stand in the relation of privies to this judgment. But were it otherwise, inasmuch as this attachment proceeding is a proceeding in rem, I should be unwilling to say that the death of the debtor, after the property is attached, would prevent the court from proceeding to liquidate the claims presented, and distribute the avails of the property according to the meaning and intent of the law under which the proceedings were had. To put this matter beyond controversy, the legislature, in subsequent attachment laws, have expressly provided that the death of the debtor shall not put a stop to the proceedings."

Where a court, having jurisdiction over the cause and over the parties, renders a judgment in attachment after the death of such party, the judgment is not for that reason void; but, although irregular and erroneous, it will be held valid until reversed or vacated by proper proceedings, and cannot be restrained by injunction. Mosley v. Southern Mfg. Co. 4 Okla. 492, 46 Pac. 508. In this case the court said that Okla. Code Civ. Proc. § 238, providing that if, after issuing attachment, the defendant should die, the proceeding shall be carried on, but his legal representatives shall be made a party, and § 586, providing that the district court shall have power to vacate or modify its judgment at or after the term at which such judgment or order is made, for the death of one of the parties before judgment, and § 588, providing that proceedings to vacate or modify such judgment shall be by verified petition, direct the procedure for the correction of the irregularity of a judgment rendered after the death of the party against whom such judgment was rendered, and preclude a proceeding by injunction.

Where an action was brought on a note by attachment, and after death of defendant the plaintiff took judgment on an order for the sale of the attached property which belonged to the deceased, and an administrator was appointed and petitioned to be allowed to appear in said action, and that further proceedings be taken against him as such legal representative, the part of the petition which recited that judgment was taken after defendant's death was struck out on motion. It was held that the attachment was not dissolved by the death, and the judgment was not void. The court said, we are not required to say whether it is reversible for error or not. Mitchell v. Schoonover, 16 Or. 211, 17 Pac. 867. The court said the decided weight of authority seems to be to the effect that if a court of general jurisdiction, or a court which has acquired full jurisdiction over the cause and over the parties, renders a judgment for or against a party after the death of such party, the judgment is not for that reason void. It may be erroneous, but until reversed by some appropriate proceeding it is valid.

In Kennedy v. Raguet, 1 Bay, 484, it was held that the death of an absent debtor after an attachment is issued will not avoid proceedings against the garnishees who make default. The court said that as they did not come in and deny that they did not have effects, or assert a right to retain them, they admitted effects to be in their hands sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's demand and then they became liable, and from thenceforth they ought to be considered as defendants.

In Crocker v. Radcliffe, 1 Treadway, Const. 83, where a copy of the writ of foreign attachment was served on the garnishee who returned that he had in his possession certain effects of the defendant, the absent debtor, but before any judgment was had against the defendant he died, the death of the defendant being admitted, the district court decided that the suit had thereby abated. On appeal it was held: "My opinion upon the whole is that the decision of the district court was correct, and that the motion in this court ought to be rejected." The effect of the Crocker Case is that if a judgment had been taken a garnishee could not have disputed the same although an administrator might.

In Crocker v. Radcliffe, 1 Treadway, Const. 83, it was said: "I do not mean to controvert or to disapprove of the decision made in the case of Kennedy v. Raguet, 1 Bay, 484. . . . In that case it seems there was a judgment and an execution against the defendant, the absent debtor, and the application was on the part of the garnishee to set them aside upon the ground that the defendant had died before judgment. I do not at present feel disposed to favor an application of this sort, as it could not be any injury or prejudice to the garnishee, to pay money due to the absentee or his representatives or deliver up the property to whoever might be authorized by law to receive it. The application ought, I think, to have been by the legal representatives of the absent debtor."

Where a trustee answered, and the cause was continued, and the trustee died before judgment was rendered, it was held that judgment might be rendered against the trustee as of the term when he answered. Hall v. Harvey, 3 N. H. 61.

But where a judgment was entered subsequent to a judgment by default, and the defendant died before rendering of final judgment upon execution of the writ of inquiry in an attachment case, the judgment was erroneous as void in law, and was reversed. Colson v. Wade, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 43. The word "void" evidently is used in this case in the sense of "erroneous."

Where a judgment is taken against a party who was dead at the time of the institution of the suit there is some conflict of authority as to whether the judgment is void or voidable.

Two returns "nihil" to a scire facias upon a mortgage are equivalent to a return of scire feci, and a judgment entered upon such returns cannot be collaterally impeached by evidence that at the time the writ issued the mortgagor was dead. Murray v. Weigle, 118 Pa. 159, 11 Atl. 781; Warder v. Tainter, 4 Watts, 270. This latter case was an action in ejectment. The property had been sold in proceedings against a lunatic, and it was held that the proceedings against the lunatic were in rem, and that in an application to sell the real estate of a lunatic the law does not contemplate his being heard; that he has lost nothing, therefore, by death, and that if a personal judgment would be only voidable, a decree for the sale of his property can be no more than voidable.

In an action to collect assessments for a drainage ditch, where the notice of the assessment had been held sufficient by the county board, that decision is conclusive as against a collateral attack. The fact that a property owner was dead prior to the time of the proceedings in the county court, and that not'

was given by publication as against a nonresident, will not render the assessment void. Otis v. De Boer, 116 Ind. 531, 19 N. E. 317.

The court did not discuss the effect of the death, but said: "In proceedings in rem proof of actual notice as against nonresidents, or unknown defendants, is seldom, if ever, required, and in a collateral attack upon a judgment in rem a liberal interpretation will be given to the rules governing constructive notice when necessary to sustain the judgment."

In Collins v. Mitchell, 5 Fla. 364, it was held that a party executing a replevin bond in an attachment upon partnership property was estopped by the bond from alleging that one of the partners was dead before the institution of the suit. The court further held that he was a privy to the judgment, and that the death of a party before judgment did not render it void, but erroneous, to be corrected by a writ of error coram vobis.

But a decree in a suit to collect an assessment on process by warning order is void as against the owner who was dead at the time of the institution of the suit. The decree may be collaterally attacked by the heir. Greenstreet v. Thornton, 60 Ark. 369, 27 L. R. A. 735, 30 S. W. 347. The court said: "But the fact that an action of this kind partakes of the nature of an action in rem does not dispense with the necessity of notice."

The custom of foreign attachment in London does not authorize proceedings against a defendant who was dead prior to the suit, and payment by the garnishee in such a case is no defense to a suit by the personal representative of the deceased for the debt. The proceedings are a nullity. Matthey v. Wiseman, 18 C. B. N. S. 657.

So, where the debtor was dead prior to the institution of an attachment suit a judgment was held to be no defense in an action by the personal representative against the garnishee, who had satisfied the judgment. Loring v. Folger, 7 Gray, 505.

Foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage by publication are void, and may be collaterally attacked where the mortgagor was dead at the time of the institution of the suit, and the only parties to the action were the holder of the mortgage and the mortgagor. Richards v. Thompson, 43 Kan. 209, 23 Pac. 106.

And such a judgment on publication service is void where mortgagor dies before suit. Bolinger v. Chouteau, 20 Mo. 89.

IX. Classification by states where death occurs after suit is brought.

Alabama.

A judgment against a party who died prior to the rendition of the judgment is void. Snodgrass v. Cabiness, 15 Ala. 180; Meyer v. Hearst, 75 Ala. 390; Swink v. Snodgrass, 17 Ala. 653, 52 Am. Dec. 190.

And the same was said to be the rule in Johnson v. Johnson, 40 Ala. 247; Stewart v. Nuckols, 15 Ala. 225, 50 Am. Dec. 127; Es parte Swan, 23 Ala. 192; Hood v. Branch Bank of State, 9 Ala. 335.

California.

A judgment rendered against a party to an action after his death is not void on its face, and proceedings must be taken to set the same aside before an application for a mandamus can be made to compel the court to substitute the administrator of the deceased as a party to the action. Elliot v. Paterson, 65 Cal. 109, 8 Pac. 493.

And the death of a defendant in an action of ejectment, after the filing of his answer and before the trial, does not render the judgment 49 L. R. A.

against him void as to purchasers, pendente lite, of his interest in the premises. Tyrrell v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 1, 6 Pac. 867.

And a judgment dismissing an action for want of prosecution is not void, although made after the death of the defendant and without the substitution of his personal representative. Wallace v. Center, 67 Cal. 133, 7 Pac. 441. The court said: "The right to attack the judgment for 'irregularities' was long since lost by lapse of time."

Connecticut.

Where a party dies after suit is brought, a judgment rendered thereafter against him is void. Haydock v. Cobb, 5 Day, 527.

Florida.

The death of a party before judgment rendered does not make the judgment void, but it is an error of fact for which the same may be recalled or revoked by writ of error, returnable in the same court where the record remains, called a writ of error coram vobis or qua coram vobis resident; for error in fact is not the error of the judges, and reversing it is not reversing their own judgment. Collins v. Mitchell, 5 Fla. 364.

Georgia.

That a judgment is a nullity by reason of having been rendered against a defendant after his death will not authorize an injunction. Lockridge v. Lyon, 68 Ga. 137. The court said that the error can be taken advantage of by an affidavit of illegality or motion to set aside the judgment.

If a judgment is rendered against joint defendants, and one of them is dead, the judgment shall be reversed for error as to them all. Tedlie v. Dill, 8 Ga. 104. The court said that if the plaintiff proceed it is at his peril. He ought to make a special entry of the death of the party, namely, to suggest it on the record with nihil ulterius versus eum fiat, and then take judgment only against the others.

Illinois.

A judgment rendered against a party after his death is not void. Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236.

A court having complete jurisdiction, the subsequent death of the defendant, not pleaded or suggested, will render a judgment against him voidable only. Such judgment cannot be attacked collaterally. It may be reversed on error if the fact of death appears from the record. If not, there is an error in fact, to be reached by motion; the judgment may be vacated in the court of its rendition. Claflin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834. Overruling dictum in Life Asso. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315.

In Life Asso. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315, Overruling in Claflin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834, it was said that judgments taken against defendants after their death are absolutely void; that there is a distinction between the death of a plaintiff and the death of a defendant, as a deceased defendant cannot plead in abatement the fact of his own death, and his legal representatives, until brought into court by the plaintiff, are not supposed to know anything about the pendency of the suit; but that, where the plaintiff dies, the defendant may well plead the fact in abatement, and there is no hardship in holding that if he does not the judgment will bind him when collaterally drawn in question.

In Davies v. Coryell, 37 Ill. App. 509, it was said that a judgment rendered after the death of a party is suggested, is a mere irregularity, and the error is to be corrected on a direct review. On a collateral attack it will be held valid.

Indiana.

If a defendant has been served with process, and then dies, a judgment thereafter rendered against him is not void or open to collateral attack. Palmerton v. Hoop, 131 Ind. 23, 30 N. E. 874. In this case the court said that in the matter of a collateral attack on a judgment a minor stands in no better situation than an adult.

Iowa.

A judgment against a party who has died after suit is brought is irregular, as it should have been dated back to a time previous to his death. Flock v. Wyatt, 49 Iowa, 466.

Kansas.

KAGER V. VICKERY holds that a judgment taken against a mortgagor after his death is void, and that such judgment may be collaterally attacked.

In Rice County Comrs. v. Lawrence, 29 Kan. 158, it was said that: "If counsel intend to assert that the judgment obtained in an action which is commenced against a party in his lifetime is valid and binding notwithstanding the death of the party before the hearing or trial, we do not assent."

Where a judgment is rendered against the principal and surety on a forfeited recognizance after the death of the principal, the judgment may be vacated as to the principal, but not as to the surety, under Kan. Civ. Code, § 568, providing that the district court shall have power to vacate or modify its own judgments or orders, at or after the term at which such judgment or order was made, for the death of one of the parties before the judgment in the action. McLaughlin v. State, 17 Kan. 283.

Kentucky.

In Case v. Ribellin, 1 J. J. Marsh. 80, it was said that if a judgment were rendered against a dead man which would be manifestly erroneous as soon as the facts should appear, the error could be corrected only by the court which rendered the judgment, and the appellate court would not notice it because it does not appear on the record. The court further said there must be some remedy for such a case, and there are numerous authorities showing that a writ of error coram vobis is the usual, and perhaps the only, one.

In Spalding v. Wathen, 7 Bush, 659, it was said that Ky. Code, § 579, provides that the death of one of the parties before judgment shall be ground for the vacation of the judgment by the court in which it is rendered, and that "It would have been an act of folly for the legislature to have enacted that the existence of a fact should constitute valid ground for the vacation of a judgment, which fact of itself rendered such judgment absolutely null and void."

Louisiana.

Judgments taken against a party after service of process and after his death are void. New Orleans & C. R. Co. v. Bosworth, 8 La. Ann. 80; Edwards v. Whited, 29 La. Ann. 647; McCloskey v. Wingfield, 20 La. Ann. 141; Norton v. Jamison, 23 La. Ann. 102.

But such a judgment was held valid where all his heirs were parties to the action. Stackhouse v. Zuntz, 41 La. Ann. 415, 6 So. 666.

Maine.

In Merrill v. Suffolk Bank, 31 Me. 57, 50 Am. Dec. 649, it was said that "error may be assigned on the death of a party before judgment. Wilkes v. Jordan, Hobart, 5b. The death of a defendant is not assignable for error if the record states that he appeared; for nothing can be assigned as error which contradicts the record. Plummer v. Webb, 2 Ld. Raym. 1415, note. The statute of 17 Car. II. chap. 8, provided that death between the verdict and judgment should not be assigned as error."

Maryland.

In Trail v. Snouffer, 6 Md. 308, it was said: "It is well settled that at common law a judgment cannot be obtained where either party has died, if the objection be taken in due time; but if not then made, the judgment concludes all persons from denying the fact of the party's existence at the time of its entry. There are exceptions by statute (Foster's Law of Scire Facias, chap. 5), and by our acts of Assembly in reference to the death of parties in this court."

Massachusetts.

In Reid v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 326, it was said that a judgment rendered against a person who died after issue joined was different from a judgment rendered in an action originally brought against a person already dead, for in such a case the court never acquired jurisdiction of the cause. In this case it was said that in Hildreth v. Thompson, infra, the dictum "that if either party to an action dies before judgment no judgment can be entered" is unnecessary to the decision, and is controlled by the authorities already cited.

In Hildreth v. Thompson, 16 Mass. 191, it was said that by the common law all proceedings in a suit at law are stopped by the death of one of the parties; if one of them die before judgment no judgment can be entered.

In Smith v. Rice, 11 Mass. 507, it was said that if a party die before judgment rendered against him his executor may reverse it on error, and it is no objection to a writ of error that the case is open to appeal, inasmuch as the plaintiff in error had no opportunity to avail himself of that remedy.

Michigan.

In Hochgraef v. Hendrie, 66 Mich. 556, 34 N. W. 15, in an action of ejectment, judgment below being affirmed by an equal division, nothing was decided.

In this case the trial court held that the death of a mortgagor after sale and before decree of confirmation did not make the confirmation void.

Minnesota.

In Hayes v. Shaw, 20 Minn. 405, Gil. 355, it was said that most of the cases go to the point that even the death of the defendant before the rendition of the judgment against him will not make the judgment void where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties before the death of the defendant.

In this case it was said that while the court ought to cease to exercise its jurisdiction over a party at his death, the neglect to do so is an error to be corrected by some proceeding in the action in which the error occurs, and the judgment, though erroneous, is not on that account to be attacked in a collateral action.

In an action by executors to open up a judgment in ejectment against the plaintiff, who had died pending the suit, where the answer was that the executors had made final settlement and had not claimed the real estate in the inventory, it was held that the application should have been denied on the ground of plaintiff's delay in instituting the same. Stocking v. Hanson, 22 Minn. 542.

A judgment is valid where the defendant dies after verdict. Berkey v. Judd, 27 Minn. 475, 8 N. W. 383.

Mississippi.

A judgment taken against a party after his death is void. Parker v. Horne, 38 Miss. 215; Gerault v. Anderson, Waik. (Miss.) 30, 12 Am. Dec. 521.

In the latter case, the court of appeals in another state decreed during the lifetime of defendant that he should pay the value of land to be ascertained by the court below, and, after interlocutory decree, and before it had been carried into effect, the defendant died, and the court below, without the knowledge of the defendant's death, assessed the damages and passed the final decree. It was held that act of Congress May 26, 1790, providing that the records and judicial proceedings shall have the same faith and credit in every court in the United States as they have in the courts from whence they are taken, did not render valid such judgment.

Missouri.

In Voorhis v. Gamble, 6 Mo. App. 1, it was held that in an action of ejectment where one derived title through a sheriff's deed, and through a subsequent decree, which set aside other deeds made by the debtor as fraudulent against creditors, it could be shown that a party to such decree was dead at the time of the decree. It was also held that such decree "was a nullity as to her rights," and inoperative against her heirs. The principal contention and discussion in this case was that, as the dead party in the suit to cancel deeds was only a cestui quo trust, and as the trustee was a party, it was not necessary to make her heirs parties to that suit after she died; but the court held otherwise. This case does not appear to have been subsequently cited or reviewed. In Coleman v. McAnulty, 16 Mo. 173, 57 Am. Dec. 229, it was said that such judgments were erroneous and not void. And in Wittenburgh v. Wittenburgh, 1 Mo. 226, it was held that such a judgment was reversible for error if the record showed that the party was dead before judgment. These cases are not noticed in Voorhis v. Gamble, 6 Mo. App. 1.

Where one of two defendants dies before a judgment rendered against both, the error can only be corrected in the court where the judgment is rendered, by writ of error coram nobis, as error in fact can only be corrected where it accrued. Calloway v. Nifong, 1 Mo. 223.

In State ex rel. Meinhard v. Stratton, 110 Mo. 426, 19 S. W. 803, it was said that the statute provides for a judgment against a party who dies after verdict.

Nebraska.

A judgment taken against a party after his death is not void. McCormick v. Paddock, 20 Neb. 486, 30 N. W. 602.

A judgment against a person after his death is reversible if the fact and time of death appear on the record, or for error coram nobis if the fact must be shown aliunde. It is voidable, but not void, and cannot be impeached collaterally. Jennings v. Simpson, 12 Neb. 558, 11 N. W. 880.

In this case the court said the authorities are not uniform or free from conflict, but that this is a rule of law according to the weight of authority.

New Hampshire.

A judgment taken against a trustee after his death is valid. Hall v. Harvey, 3 N. H. 61 (judgment in rem).

New York.

A judgment against a party, taken after his death, is void unless it is within the saving clause of the statutes or Code. The following judgments were held void: Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 457; Requa v. Holmes, 16 N. Y. 193, 26 N. Y. 338 (before interlocutory order); Adams v. Nellis, 59 How. Pr. 385 (before verdict—Code); Lemon v. Smith, 20 App. Div. 523, 47 N. Y. Supp. 158 (before report—Code); Stephens v. Humphries, 73 Hun, 199, 25 N. Y. Supp. 946 (before decision—Code); Herbert v. 49 L. R. A.

Stevenson, 3 Dem. 236 (before decision—Code).

And the same was said to be the rule, in Gerry v. Post, 13 How. Pr. 118 (before verdict); McCulloch v. Norwood, 58 N. Y. 562; Smith v. Joyce, 11 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 257 (Code, § 765); Kissam v. Hamilton, 20 How. Pr. 369 (before verdict—statute).

And the following judgments were held erroneous: Hamilton v. Holcomb, 1 Johns. Cas. 29 (before issue); Livingston v. Randall, 59 Barb. 493.

And a decree was refused in Thompson v. Dudley, 3 Edw. Ch. 137 (decree pro confesso).

And the following judgments were held valid by relation back or under a statute: Salter v. Neaville, 1 Bradt. 488 (relation back; order before death); Re Dunn, 5 Redf. 27 (after verdict—statute); Long v. Stafford, 103 N. Y. 274, 8 N. E. 522 (after verdict—Code); Wasson v. Hoff, 27 Misc. 55, 57 N. Y. Supp. 953 (after decision—Code).

In Clark's Estate, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 383, a judgment was held valid where the death occurred after an interlocutory order.

But the contrary was held in Secor v. Clark, 22 Jones & S. 461.

In McCulloch v. Norwood, 58 N. Y. 562, it was said that N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 121, providing that no action shall abate by the death of a party if the cause of action survive, does not permit it to proceed against a dead party, but requires that his representative or successor in interest be regularly brought into court.

North Carolina.

When final judgment in an action against several defendants is rendered after the death of one of the defendants, such judgment should be vacated on motion, and it is error in fact. Burke v. Stokely, 65 N. C. 569. The court said that "It was the business of the plaintiff to make this suggestion, as it is 'error in fact' to take judgment against one who is dead." When the action is joint the objection may be taken by a surviving defendant.

A judgment in ejectment where the defendant died before judgment is irregular and voidable, and might be declared void by the court on a proper application by motion in the action; but such judgment cannot be attacked collaterally or by an independent action for such irregularity. Knott v. Taylor, 99 N. C. 511, 6 S. E. 788.

The remedy is writ of error coram nobis in the court rendering such judgment. Latham v. Hodges, 35 N. C. (13 Ired. L.) 267.

A judgment rendered against a party after his death is irregular, and the same will be set aside in a direct proceeding for that purpose, so that a representative may have an opportunity to resist a recovery. Lynn v. Lowe, 88 N. C. 478.

The court said that if no opportunity has been offered the defendant to be heard the court will at once, when judicially informed of the error, correct it, and in such a case the court does not investigate the merits of the matter in dispute, but sets aside the judgment, and reopens the otherwise concluded matter, to afford the representatives the opportunity not open to his intestate, which the law accords to all, of being heard in opposition.

And such judgment was held to be erroneous and voidable, and was reversed. Colson v. Wade, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 43. In this case the court said that the judgment was "void."

In Wood v. Watson, 107 N. C. 52, 10 L. R. A. 541, 12 S. E. 49, it was said that there is manifest reason why a judgment against a dead man may be avoided and set aside as irregular by a proper motion in the action; but these reasons do not apply to a judgment in favor of a dead defendant against a living plaintiff. Ohio.

A judgment in rem, taken against a party after his death, is not void. Swasey v. Antram, 24 Ohio St. 87; Cochran v. Loring, 17 Ohio, 409.

In Dows v. Harper, 6 Ohio, 518, 27 Am. Dec. 270, it was said that a writ of error coram nobis is the proper remedy where the party dies before judgment.

In Smith v. Pratt, 13 Ohio, 548, it was said that if a court falsely assume the existence of the fact on which their jurisdiction depends, and carry into the record the finding of its existence, the proceedings, although void, yet admit reversal on error, since it may afford the only effectual protection of the parties. Upon this principle judgments against a person deceased, although void, are reversible at common law upon the assignment of the error in fact.

Oklahoma and Oregon.

A judgment in rem, taken against a party after his death, is not void. Mosley v. Southern Mfg. Co. 4 Okla. 492, 46 Pac. 508; Mitchell v. Schoonover, 16 Or. 211, 17 Pac. 887. Pennsylvania.

Where after suit was brought one of the defendants died and the judgment was entered against both, and error was brought to the superior court, where the writ was nonprossed, and then on error coram nobis the death of one of the defendants before judgment assigned, it was held that an amendment should be permitted by entering a suggestion of the defendant's death with the same effect as if it had been done before judgment. Hill v. West, 1 Blinn. 486.

In Devereux v. Roper, 1 Phila. 182, a writ of error coram nobis was allowed upon suggestion that the defendant died before judgment was entered.

In Yaple v. Titus, 41 Pa. 195, 80 Am. Dec. 604, which held that a judgment in rem was not void where the defendant had died before suit, it was said that a judgment rendered against a person after his death is reversible if the fact and time of death appear on the record, or in error coram nobis if the fact must be shown alibunde. It is voidable and not void; and cannot be impeached collaterally.

In Carr v. Townsend, 63 Pa. 202, it was said: "No authority has been shown for the position taken in this case, that judgment taken or entered in favor of a deceased party is a nullity. Even a judgment against a deceased party is not so."

In Hurst v. Fisher, 1 Watts & S. 440, it was said that when a judgment against a dead man is inadvertently rendered the party aggrieved may be relieved by writ of error coram nobis.

South Carolina.

Judgments taken against a party after his death have been held valid. Hall v. Clifton, 2 M'Cord, Eq. 88; Lynch v. Inglis, 1 Bay, 449 (by relation back).

And in a proceeding in rem by attachment a judgment was held valid. Kennedy v. Raguet, 1 Bay, 484. (See subd., Judgments in rem.)

But in Crocker v. Radcliffe, 1 Treadway, Const. 83, in a similar case it was held that the suit abated.

Tennessee.

In this state judgments taken against deceased parties are void. Carter v. Carriger, 3 Yerg. 411, 24 Am. Dec. 585 (after default); Kelly v. Hooper, 3 Yerg. 395; Nix v. French, 10 Helsk. 377; Smith v. Cunningham, 2 Tenn. Ch. 563; Collins v. Knight, 3 Tenn. Ch. 183. 49 L. R. A.

And the same was said to be the rule in Nolan v. Cameron, 9 Lea, 234; Morrison v. Deaderick, 10 Humph. 342; Hewgly v. Johns, 3 Baxt. 85.

But in Gilchrist v. Cannon, 1 Coldw. 581, where the heirs of the deceased were parties to the action, the judgment was held valid. Texas.

The death of a defendant after the court has acquired jurisdiction of the person by citation, appearance, and answer, and when represented by a counsel, will not render the judgment void, but voidable only, if the record does not show that he was dead at the time. Fleming v. Seeligson, 57 Tex. 524.

This was a proceeding in the nature of a bill to review and set aside the judgment, but was unavailing by reason of the statute of limitations.

And a judgment taken against a party after his death is not void but voidable, and the relief against the same is to be had by motion to set aside. But such relief was denied on account of the statute of limitation. Best v. Nix, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 349, 25 S. W. 130.

A decree ordering a curator ad hoc to make a deed where the absent defendant was dead, was held binding, and not subject to a collateral attack. Mills v. Alexander, 21 Tex. 154. The defendant in this case died in 1833, and the decree was in 1839, and evidently the suit was not brought until after death; but this does not appear in the opinion. The court holds that a judgment is not void by reason of the death of a party before its rendition, but that it will be held valid until avoided by a direct proceeding for that purpose.

Where a judgment authorized an administrator to sell land to satisfy judgments against the intestate, it was held that the latter judgments were not void by reason of the defendant being dead at the time of their rendition, but were only voidable. They should have been annulled by proceedings in the same court where they were rendered. Giddings v. Steele, 28 Tex. 732, 91 Am. Dec. 336. In this case the death of the defendant S. had been suggested, but, without having made his representative a party or dismissing the cause as to S. judgments were rendered against him and H. for the debt sued on. The court said: "We are not prepared to say that these judgments are of themselves nullities and void; but from the rulings of this court in a number of cases we are inclined to the opinion that they were not void, but only voidable, and could have been annulled and set aside by a proceeding coram nobis,—that is, by proceedings instituted in the same court where the voidable judgments were rendered, and by showing the fact that Steele was dead at the rendition of the judgments. Then they would have been set aside and the error corrected."

And where the defendant was dead at the rendition of the judgment, and this is not shown by the judgment, the relief can only be had by petition in the nature of a bill of review, or for a new trial, or by motion to set aside the judgment. McClelland v. Moore, 48 Tex. 355. In this case the court said the death of the defendant had been suggested, and the court had granted leave to the executor to enter himself as a party; but this error had not been carried into the minutes of the court, and the error in the judgment for the want of a party defendant was owing to a mere defect in the record.

A judgment against a party who was dead, and whose death was shown by the record, may be corrected by the court on a writ of error coram nobis by the court rendering it. Milam County v. Robertson, 47 Tex. 222. In this case the court said that whether this judgment was void or voidable it was not necessary to decide.

And the remedy is by appeal where the defendant dies pending certiorari. Holman v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 1120.

In Denni v. Elliott, 60 Tex. 337; Harrison v. McMurray, 71 Tex. 122, 8 S. W. 612; and Moke v. Brackett, 28 Tex. 443,—it was said that a judgment rendered against a party who was dead at its rendition is not void, but only voidable.

In Taylor v. Snow, 47 Tex. 462, 26 Am. Rep. 311, an instruction that if the defendant was dead at the time of the institution of the suit the judgment was void, and that a purchaser under execution sale obtained no title, was held erroneous. The court, on appeal, does not notice the distinction between death of party before suit and death of party after suit, but discusses judgments where defendant dies after suit is brought, and says they are voidable, but not void. The court holds that while an execution sale is void, if an execution issues after death of the debtor it cannot be collaterally attacked.

Referring to this case, the court, in Hooper v. Caruthers, 78 Tex. 432, 15 S. W. 98, infra, says: "There is much in the opinion which seems to hold that a sale under execution, issued after the death of a sole defendant, is not void without reference to the time of the death."

... Giving technical effect to a judgment, the case of Taylor v. Snow was probably correctly decided on its facts; but we are of opinion that the law is correctly stated in the other cases referred to, and that a sale made under execution against a deceased person after his death, he being alive at the time judgment was rendered, is void in the sense that it is wholly inoperative to pass title to or against anyone, and therefore may be attacked directly or collaterally."

But if a judgment shows on its face that the party against whom it was rendered was dead at the time judgment was rendered, a "sale" made thereunder will be void, and may be attacked collaterally. Hooper v. Caruthers, 78 Tex. 432, 15 S. W. 98. In this case the court said: "Conceding that it cannot be shown in a collateral proceeding that a person against whom a judgment was rendered was not alive at the time, and a sale under it thus invalidated, it does not follow from this that an execution and sale made under it will not be absolutely void—void for all purposes—if the judgment shows on its face that the party against whom the judgment was rendered was not at the date of its rendition alive, or if it be shown that his death occurred after the judgment was rendered."

Utah.

Where the court has jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter of an action, a judgment rendered therein against a party after his death, though erroneous, is not void if his death does not appear from the judgment roll. Elliott v. Bastian, 11 Utah, 452, 40 Pac. 713. The court said that in such a case the proper way to have the judgment set aside is by a motion supported by affidavit or otherwise, but, unless made in time, it will not be set aside.

Virginia.
A decree entered after the death of a purchaser, directing a commissioner to convey the land to the "said purchasers, or to those to whom they may have sold," was held to be not void, where a deed was made to a vendee of the purchaser who was in possession. The "said purchaser," or "to their vendees," import that they were living, and, the record not disclosing the contrary, the decree cannot be collaterally assailed. Pugh v. McCue, 86 Va. 475, 10 S. E. 715.

And a decree confirming a commissioner's report of sale is not void where the death of the party occurred after sale and before the decree of confirmation. Evans v. Spurgin, 6 Gratt. 107, 52 Am. Dec. 105.

On a motion supported by an affidavit, a decree, as to one of the defendants who was dead at the time of the decree, was set aside as to such defendant. Hooe v. Barber, 4 Hen. & M. 439.

West Virginia.

Where process has been regularly served on a defendant, and there is no appearance, and the defendant dies before judgment, and his death is not suggested on the record, and after his death judgment is rendered against him, such judgment is not void but voidable, and cannot be collaterally attacked. King v. Burdett, 28 W. Va. 601, 37 Am. Rep. 687. In this case the court said that a number of cases may be found which hold that, although a court has fairly obtained jurisdiction of the parties, a judgment against a party who is dead is a nullity; but the great weight of authority is in favor of holding a judgment against a deceased person not void but voidable. It is easy for the personal representative, upon motion, to correct the same under W. Va. Code, chap. 134, § 1, providing for correcting a clerical error or error in fact on motion, as this gives an additional remedy to a writ of coram nobis.

In Watt v. Brookover, 35 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. 1007, it was said that where the fact of death is apparent in the record of the judgment its rendition would be error of law to be corrected by appellate process, and when it does not appear in the record, but is to be shown alibi, it is called error in fact to be corrected at common law by writ of error coram vobis, and under W. Va. Code 1887, chap. 135, § 1, providing a motion in lieu of that writ.

Federal cases.

A judgment of a county court, rendered after the death of an administrator, and fixing the amount due on his settlement, is not void. Beard v. Roth, 35 Fed. Rep. 397. In this case the court said: "The court had exclusive original jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and had acquired jurisdiction of Vaughn's person in his lifetime. It is probable that the judgment of the county court, rendered after his death, might have been reversed on appeal; but it is not void, and is not open to collateral attack."

Such a judgment cannot be set aside on motion after the term. The remedy is by bill of review or appeal. Scott v. Blaine, Baldw. 287, Fed. Cas. No. 12,525.

Where it was contended that the court erred in charging a city in an accounting, with the amount of a pretended decree against A. S. rendered five years after his death, for rents accruing after his death, it was held that he was represented by his brother, his universal legatee, and counsel was employed, and it would be a fault to set aside these proceedings as void. New Orleans v. Gaines, 138 U. S. 595, sub nom. New Orleans v. Whitney, 34 L. ed. 1102, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428. In this case the court said that "a judgment rendered after a defendant's death without the plaintiff's fault is not void. The irregularity or error may be cured by entering it nunc pro tunc of a date prior to the defendant's death; and even this has been held not necessary in a collateral proceeding." But it was further held that the city cannot raise the question now after the decree of the circuit court and an appeal to this court and a remand of the cause to the circuit court, during all of which time this objection could have been made.

See subd. I. Judgments against parties dying before institution of suit.

Summary.

In conclusion, it may be said that the weight of authority is that judgments are void in cases where they are taken against parties who have died before the institution of the suit; that they are voidable in cases where they are taken against parties dying after service of process and before judgment. As to this latter proposition, there are quite a number of states holding contra, and the cases cannot be reconciled. It seems that where the party dies after verdict a judgment entered thereafter will not be held void. Some states now regulate by statute or Code the effect of judgments taken against parties who have died.

See, further, O'Sullivan v. People (Ill.) 20 L. R. A. 143, note, As to entry of judgment nunc pro tunc. I. T.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

GEORGIA RAILROAD & BANKING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Moselle FITZGERALD.

(108 Ga. 507.)

1. An admission by a person, tending to show that a physical injury received by him, and which subsequently resulted in his death, was caused by an accident, and not by the negligence of a railroad company of which he was an employee, was admissible in evidence for the defendant on the trial of an action for the homicide of such person, brought by his widow against that company.
2. On the trial of an action against a railroad company for a homicide alleged to have been caused by the negligent "kicking" of a car, it was, in the absence of evidence showing that a "running switch" and a "kick" were the same thing, erroneous to admit in evidence against the defendant one of its rules, which related exclusively to running switches. The more especially is this true if it affirmatively appeared from the evidence that the two things were essentially different.
3. While some of the charges excepted to may not have been precisely accurate presentations of the law, the only errors of sufficient importance to warrant the granting of a new trial are those dealt with in the preceding notes.

(July 26, 1899.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Walton county to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's husband. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph B. Cumming, Bryan Cumming, and H. D. McDaniel for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. H. C. Roney and W. S. Upshaw for defendant in error.

*Headnotes by FISH, J.

NOTE.—The decision in the above case, though it seems to be unusual, and is within the express provisions of the statute (Ga. Civil Code, § 5193) as to admissions of privies, doubtless states the rule that would be followed everywhere.

That the plaintiff in an action for wrongful death of another is chargeable with the con-

Fish, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. This was an action brought by a widow to recover damages for the homicide of her husband, an employee of the railroad company, who was killed while making an effort to couple cars. As has been expressly decided, her right to a recovery must necessarily depend upon a determination of the question whether or not "the husband, had he lived, would have had such right; and whatever would have been a good defense to his suit, had he lived, will be equally available against one brought by her." Berry v. Northeastern R. Co. 72 Ga. 137. In other words, she is to be considered in privity with the husband, in so far as her right to complain of his homicide is concerned. It follows, necessarily, that the company should have been permitted to show, by any competent evidence at its command, that the injuries sustained by him were occasioned, not by the alleged acts of negligence on its part of which complaint was made, but by other and wholly different causes. Section 5181 of our Civil Code provides in terms that "the declarations and entries of a person, since deceased, against his interest, and not made with a view to pending litigation, are admissible in evidence in any case;" while § 5193 undertakes to state the rule that "the admissions of privies in blood, privies in estates, and privies in law are admissible as against" all persons with whom they are in privity. Accordingly we think that in the present case the defendant company should have been permitted to prove that the plaintiff's husband, in undertaking to state the cause of his injuries, had "said he was making an effort to couple cars, and that his foot struck some obstacle on the track, and he fell." Even were she not a privy in law with him, this evidence was admissible under the rule that "self-deserving" declarations made by a deceased person having peculiar opportunities to know the truth as to the matter under investigation may be proved even in cases between third parties, none of whom claim under or through him. See Field v. Boynton, 33 Ga. 239; 1 Wharton, Ev. §§ 226 et seq.; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. 366, and cases cited.

tributary negligence of the deceased, see cases in note to Usher v. West Jersey R. Co. (Pa.) 4 L. R. A. on page 263; also Meyer v. King (Miss.) 35 L. R. A. 474; Clark v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 36 L. R. A. 123; and Wolf v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. (Ohio) 36 L. R. A. 812.

2. The plaintiff alleged in her petition that her husband's death resulted from the negligence of the company's servants in "kicking" a car "from the train of cars at a high and dangerous rate of speed, which speed prevented a coupling from being made." At the trial she was permitted to introduce in evidence a rule of the company providing that "running switches shall not be made," notwithstanding the defendant objected to this evidence "on the ground that the petition undertook to specify the particular negligence complained of, and that the complaint was about 'kicking,' and not about 'running switches';" that there were no allegations which would authorize such evidence, especially as it had been shown by the evidence that a 'kick' and a 'running switch' were radically different." We are of the opinion that this objection was well taken. Certainly the trial judge was not authorized, in the absence of proof, to explain these purely technical and arbitrary terms, or to assume to take judicial cognizance of their precise meaning; and more especially was it error so to do when it affirmatively appeared from the evidence introduced before him that these terms were not synonymous but that they were employed to designate two things, which were essentially different in character and manner of execution.

3. Some of the charges excepted to may be open to a number of the minor criticisms suggested by counsel for the plaintiff in error, but in the main they were correct expositions of the law, and the inaccuracies to which our attention has been called will doubtless be eliminated when the case again comes on for a hearing, which it must do because of the errors above pointed out.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

E. A. HORNE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

A. M. RODGERS.

(.....Ga.....)

- *1. One who bought land, paid a part of the purchase money, gave a promissory note for the balance, and took a bond for titles with knowledge of an existing encumbrance on the property, and who subsequently entered into an agreement with the vendor recognizing liability on the note, and, in effect, the promise to pay therein contained, upon the vendor's removing the encumbrance, could not defeat a recovery upon

*Headnotes by COBB, J.

NOTE.—As to the effect of the temporary absence of a judge from the courtroom, see also Ellerbe v. State (Miss.) 41 L. R. A. 569, and note.
49 L. R. A.

the note, when on the trial of an action thereon brought by the vendor it affirmatively appeared that the latter had complied with the terms of the agreement, and could, and would, on the payment of the note, have made the defendant a good title.

2. It was not on the trial of such an action a fact material to the case that the land declined in value after the note for the purchase money had matured, nor that, ordinarily, property under encumbrance was not marketable.
3. Nor was it good matter of defense that the defendant had never been placed in possession of the premises, it not appearing that he had ever desired possession, and it being shown that he could at any time have obtained possession on demand therefor.
4. The amendment to the petition offered by plaintiff pending the trial was subject to several of the objections set up in the special demurrer thereto, and was properly disallowed.
5. The absence of the judge from the courtroom while the trial is in progress for a brief space of time, will not, in a case where the evidence demanded the verdict as rendered, be, in the light of the former rulings of this court, a sufficient reason to reverse the judgment, when such absence was known to counsel, and there was no request to suspend the trial, no objection to the absence, and no motion for a mistrial upon the judge's return. (a) The rulings made in O'Shields v. State, 81 Ga. 301, 6 S. E. 426, and Pritchett v. State, 92 Ga. 65, 18 S. E. 536, criticised and disapproved, but, in the absence of an application to review the same, they are followed in the present case.
6. The rulings on evidence were free from error; the charge, taken as a whole, fairly and properly submitted the case to the jury; the evidence demanded the verdict as rendered; and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

(April 5, 1900.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Bibb County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for failure to make title to property sold by defendant to plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Hugh V. Washington, for plaintiff in error:

The evidence as to whether the land was marketable with a mortgage foreclosure suit pending against it was clearly relevant and admissible, as evidence that was admitted showed that the land was bought for resale.

Sedgw. & W. Trial of Title to Land, § 841; Brashier v. Gratz, 6 Wheat. 533, 5 L. ed. 324; 2 Parsons, Contr. 538, 539.

The evidence that "defendant stated to plaintiff at the time of the second contract that certain notes therein referred to and deposited as security would be paid," when defendant knew at the time of the statement that they would not be paid, was admissible as showing fraud and bad faith on the part of defendant.

Civil Code, § 3685; Smith v. Mitchell, 6 Ga. 458; Brown v. Doane, 86 Ga. 38, 11 L. R. A. 381, 12 S. E. 179; Gordon v. Irvine, 105 Ga. 144, 31 S. E. 151.

This evidence was further admissible as being for the jury to say whether it was a statement of fact or of opinion.

Robinson v. Woodmansee, 80 Ga. 249, 4 S. E. 497; Andrews v. Jackson, 108 Mass. 266, 37 L. R. A. 402, 47 N. E. 412.

A contract may be set aside for fraud in the procurement.

Civil Code, § 3533; Smith v. Mitchell, 6 Ga. 458; Epps v. Waring, 93 Ga. 768, 20 S. E. 645; Printup v. Rome Land Co. 90 Ga. 180, 15 S. E. 764; Peel v. Bryson, 72 Ga. 331; Walters v. Eaves, 105 Ga. 586, 32 S. E. 609; Adams v. Henderson, 168 U. S. 573, 42 L. ed. 584, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 179.

The amendment to plaintiff's petition alleging a secret agreement between the defendant and the maker of certain notes deposited by him as security, by which the maker was to be relieved from payment, set up a good defense to the cross action for purchase money, and should have been allowed.

Civil Code, § 3685; Epps v. Waring, 93 Ga. 765, 20 S. E. 645; Printup v. Rome Land Co. 90 Ga. 180, 15 S. E. 764; Weems v. Georgia Midland & G. R. Co. 84 Ga. 359, 11 S. E. 503; O'Neal v. Phillips, 83 Ga. 556, 10 S. E. 352.

Parol evidence may be pleaded and heard to avoid a written contract for fraud.

McBride v. Macon Teleg. Pub. Co. 102 Ga. 424, 30 S. E. 999; Smith v. Mitchell, 6 Ga. 479; Ham v. Parkenson, 68 Ga. 830; Watson v. Kemp, 41 Ga. 586; Printup v. Rome Land Co. 90 Ga. 180, 15 S. E. 764; Lunday v. Thomas, 26 Ga. 537.

Where the vendor is insolvent the vendee is entitled to relief.

Johnson v. Dorough, 99 Ga. 644, 27 S. E. 187.

Defendant had repudiated his obligation under the second contract, which was a release to plaintiff.

Ford v. Smith, 25 Ga. 675.

The absence of the judge from the bench during the argument of counsel for plaintiff, without suspending the case, and without counsel's consent, was illegal and improper.

Hayes v. State, 58 Ga. 36; O'Shields v. State, 81 Ga. 301, 6 S. E. 426; Pritchett v. State, 92 Ga. 65, 18 S. E. 536; Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 873, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580; Smith v. Sherwood, 95 Wis. 558, 70 N. W. 682; Thompson v. People, 144 Ill. 378, 32 N. E. 908; O'Brien v. People, 17 Colo. 561, 31 Pac. 230; Turbeville v. State, 56 Miss. 793; People v. Eckert, 16 Cal. 111; People v. Shaw, 63 N. Y. 38; Palin v. State, 38 Neb. 862, 57 N. W. 743; State v. Carnagy, 106 Iowa, 483, 76 N. W. 805; Meredeth v. People, 84 Ill. 479; State v. Smith, 49 Conn. 376; Hinman v. People, 13 Hun, 266; Blend v. People, 41 N. Y. 604.

Messrs. Minter Wimberly and Hardeman, Davis, & Turner for defendant in error.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On March 24, 1894, Horne brought suit 49 L. R. A.

against Rodgers, making allegations which were, in substance, as follows: On May 4, 1892, plaintiff paid to defendant $400, and delivered to him notes for $350 and $750, due, respectively, on May 30, 1892, and May 4, 1893, and defendant delivered to plaintiff a bond conditioned to make title to a one-half interest in a described lot of land upon the payment of the notes. Plaintiff was fraudulently induced to contract for the land by the representations of defendant that the $400 cash and the amount of the $350 note would be used to obtain a favorable settlement of a purchase-money claim on the land which was due one Carstarphen. Plaintiff did not know what the character or the amount of the claim of Carstarphen was, and paid the note upon the assurance that the two amounts above referred to would satisfy the Carstarphen claim, and would be used for that purpose. Plaintiff has since discovered that the claim of Carstarphen was secured by a mortgage upon the land, and that defendant failed and refused to apply any part of the money paid by plaintiff to the satisfaction of the same. Carstarphen instituted proceedings to foreclose the mortgage, which was pending on May 4, 1893, and for this reason plaintiff has refused to pay the note due on that date. By reason of defendant's failure to pay off the mortgage and make to plaintiff an unencumbered title, he was prevented from making a sale of the property, and sustained a loss thereby of $500, which would have been the profits arising from such sale. Damages are laid at $750 and interest and $500, and judgment prayed accordingly. The defendant in his answer admitted that the contract for sale had been entered into, that plaintiff had paid the $750, and that Carstarphen had a mortgage on the land, but denied the other allegations. Defendant alleged that plaintiff well knew at the date of the contract that the mortgage was in existence and was a valid lien on the property; that defendant has been always ready to pay whatever amount was due Carstarphen, but there was a dispute about the matter; that plaintiff knew this, as well as that there was a suit pending to foreclose the mortgage, and was familiar with what constituted the defense to that suit; that defendant, in order to protect plaintiff and others who had purchased lots from him, on August 11, 1892, made a written agreement with plaintiff, providing that defendant should deliver to two named persons the note of plaintiff, due May 4, 1893, and two notes by other parties, and the proceeds of certain sales of land should be also turned over to these parties, all to be held until the termination of the suit between defendant and Carstarphen, when so much of them as was necessary should be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment obtained by Carstarphen; that, in consideration of this action of the defendant, plaintiff agreed not to bring any suit for the purpose of canceling the note due May 4, 1893, or recover back the $750 already paid, but reserved the right to bring action on the bond for titles in the event defendant failed to pay whatever judgment was recovered in the suit brought by Carstarphen; that plaintiff has never paid or tendered the balance due on the purchase price of the land, and defendant is and has ever been ready to make to plaintiff good and sufficient titles to the land, according to the terms of the bond, upon the payment of the purchase price. Defendant prayed judgment against the plaintiff for the amount due on the note, which matured May 4, 1893. By an amendment plaintiff alleged that the agreement of August 11, 1892, was entered into in consequence of certain false and fraudulent statements in reference to the matter of the controversy between defendant and Carstarphen, as well as in reference to a plan which defendant had by which the property could be sold and a profit realized by plaintiff; that defendant purposely delayed the trial of the foreclosure suit until May 14, 1896, when a judgment was rendered for the full amount claimed, which defendant threatened to further resist; that, as the notes deposited under the agreement of August 11, 1892, have not been paid, the consideration of that agreement has entirely failed; that defendant is insolvent. Plaintiff offers to surrender the bond for titles, and prays for a cancellation of the note due May 4, 1893, for $750, for a judgment against defendant for attorney's fees on account of bad faith, and for general relief. Defendant amended his answer by alleging that the note of plaintiff, due May 4, 1893, contained an agreement to pay attorney's fees; that the judgment in favor of Carstarphen has been all paid, except an amount equal to the sum due on the note of plaintiff; that Carstarphen has agreed that upon the payment of the note to defendant, the mortgage execution shall be marked "Satisfied;" and defendant tenders to plaintiff a warranty deed to the land embraced in the bond for titles, and a cancellation of the Carstarphen mortgage, whenever plaintiff will pay the note due May 4, 1893. The prayer of the amendment was for a judgment against plaintiff for $750, besides interest and attorney's fees, and that upon payment of this judgment defendant make title free of all encumbrances to plaintiff to the property described in the bond for titles. When the case came on for trial the jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant against plaintiff for $750, with interest and attorney's fees, and upon this verdict the court entered a decree that defendant recover of plaintiff the sum mentioned in the verdict, and that, upon defendant filing with the clerk a good and sufficient warranty deed to the property described in the bond for titles, execution issue on the judgment, and that upon payment of the judgment the title vest in plaintiff. The plaintiff made a motion for a new trial upon numerous grounds, which was overruled. The case is here upon a bill of exceptions sued out by the plaintiff assigning error upon the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial, and upon a ruling in which an amendment by plaintiff was disallowed, which was the subject of exceptions pendente lite.

1. The evidence demanded a finding that plaintiff knew when he made the contract of purchase that there was an encumbrance upon the land. While he testified that he "did not know there was a mortgage on the property at the time of the trade," he admitted that he "knew from what Rodgers said that there was a balance due Carstarphen, and that there was an encumbrance of some kind on it, and Rodgers desired the money from [plaintiff] to remove the encumbrance." The evidence also demanded a finding that defendant had complied with the contract of August 11, 1892, and discharged his liability to Carstarphen, so that, upon the payment by plaintiff of the note due by him, defendant would be able to convey the property to him free from encumbrance. Plaintiff admitted that he had never paid or tendered to defendant the amount due on his note, which matured on May 4, 1893, but that, on the contrary, he had refused to pay the same at maturity, and had steadfastly persisted in that refusal. The evidence did not authorize a finding either that the original contract of purchase or the contract of August 11, 1892, was induced by fraud perpetrated by the defendant upon the plaintiff. Such being the case, the jury could not have done otherwise than to return a verdict refusing the plaintiff's prayer for rescission, and finding for the defendant on his answer in the nature of a cross bill, praying for judgment on the note due May 4, 1893.

2, 3. There was no error in refusing to permit the plaintiff to prove that the land declined in value after the time that the note for the purchase money matured. The plaintiff, having neither paid the note nor tendered the amount of the purchase money at its maturity, and demanded a title on that day, the subsequent decline in value was wholly immaterial to the present investigation. In the light of the fact that plaintiff knew at the time of the purchase that the property was encumbered, the fact that property with an encumbrance on it was ordinarily not marketable was likewise immaterial. The failure of the vendee, under a bond for titles, to obtain possession of the bargained premises, will not constitute a defense to a suit on the note for the purchase money, when it appeared, not only that he never desired possession, but also that he could have obtained possession at any time on demand.

4. During the progress of the trial the plaintiff offered an amendment, which the court refused to allow. This amendment alleged, in substance, that he was induced to make the contract of August 11, 1892, by reason of the statement that certain notes were to be turned over to the persons named therein, "to be by them deposited in the Union Savings Bank of Macon, Ga.," and that the same were unconditional notes, which would be paid at maturity, and plaintiff had been informed by the officer of the bank that the notes were not in the possession of the bank; that after the contract above referred to was executed he was told by the maker of one or more of said notes, viz., S. B. Barfield, that they were conditional notes, by the terms of which, in certain contingencies, he was to be released from the payment of one half of the amount of the purchase money as represented by said notes, and petitioner was also informed by said Dr. Barfield that said contingency had arisen, and that he (Barfield) had been released from one half of his purchase money by the defendant Rodgers; that, in truth and in fact, said notes were conditional notes; this was also a verbal agreement between H. L. Barfield and Rodgers, wholly unknown to plaintiff, Horne, at the time of making the second contract; that said notes were never paid by reason of said condition, unknown to plaintiff at the time of making the second contract of August 11, 1892; that the failure of the defendant to deposit the notes in the bank above referred to was such a violation of the agreement as to authorize a rescission, and that the representations of defendant that the notes were unconditional was a fraud upon plaintiff, in that, if he had known that the notes were conditional, he would not have entered into the contract; that plaintiff has never been in possession nor received any rents from the property, the possession and control of the property having been at all times either in defendant or Carstarphen. The court sustained a special demurrer to the amendment, and refused to allow the same. We see no error in this ruling. It not being alleged that the failure of the plaintiff to obtain possession was due to the fault of defendant, or that he ever demanded possession, the mere fact that he had never been in possession would not be a sufficient reason for a refusal to pay the purchase-money notes. There being no stipulation in the contract of August 11, 1892, that the notes therein referred to were to be deposited with the bank referred to in the amendment, and there being no allegation that a stipulation to that effect was left out by fraud, accident, or mistake, the plaintiff had no right to complain that such deposit was not made. If the amendment can be so construed as to contain a distinct averment that the notes referred to were conditional, it is still defective, for the reason that it does not set forth what the condition was, so that it might be determined whether it was of such a character as that it would so affect the value of the paper as security in the hands of the persons with whom it was deposited that injury would result to the plaintiff therefrom. The averment that, "in truth and fact, said notes were conditional notes," is not sufficient without a further averment setting forth what the condition was, so that it might be determined whether it was of a character liable to affect the value of the notes as security. All the other averments are merely to the effect that Dr. Barfield said that the notes were not in a contingency to be paid, that that contingency had arisen, and that he had been released. What Dr. Barfield said was immaterial. There is no allegation in the amendment that Barfield had in fact been released. The terms of the notes should have been distinctly alleged, so that the court could have determined whether there was a condition in the contract, and what the character of the condition was. If the amendment should be so construed as to contain merely an averment that Dr. Barfield said "that, in truth and fact," the notes were conditional, then it is clear that the amendment was properly disallowed. It matters not, however, which is the proper construction to be placed on the language of the amendment, there was no error in sustaining the demurrer to the same.

5, 6. In one of the grounds of the motion for a new trial it was alleged, as a reason why the verdict should be set aside, that, when counsel for plaintiff arose to make his opening argument to the court and jury, the judge, without the consent of plaintiff, or his counsel, and without suspending the trial, left the courtroom, and remained out of sight of counsel and the jury, the greater portion of the opening argument, which lasted seventy-five minutes, and did not return until sent for by plaintiff's counsel. In a note to this ground the judge says it is true that he did leave the bench while counsel was addressing the jury without suspending the trial; that he cannot tell exactly how long he was absent; that the purpose for which he retired was to eat a lunch, and immediately upon eating a light lunch he returned to the courtroom, that the entire time he was absent from the courtroom he was in the hearing of counsel, but not in sight of counsel or the jury. The note concludes with the statement that no injury or inconvenience resulted to counsel or his client by the judge's absence. The first time that any question of this character came before this court was in the case of Hayes v. State, 58 Ga. 35. In that case it was held that "in the trial of a capital case, especially during the examination of a witness for the state, the judge should not retire beyond the bar, for even a brief absence, without ordering a suspension of business until his return." Judge Bleckley in the opinion says: "When, during the trial of a capital case, the judge leaves the bench, and withdraws beyond the bar, he should order a suspension of business until his return. His immediate presence tends to preserve the legal solemnity and security of trial, and upholds the majesty of law." A new trial was ordered in that case, but not solely on account of the absence of the judge. In O'Shields v. State, 81 Ga. 301, 6 S. E. 426, it was held that "where, during the progress of the argument to the jury in a criminal trial, the judge stated to defendant's counsel that he desired to step out for a little while, and asked if there were any objection; and, none being made, did go out of the courtroom, and remained out two or three minutes, allowing the argument to go on in his absence, a new trial does not necessarily result from such action. The judge acted improperly in not suspending the trial during his absence, but no objection was made, no motion made to have a mistrial declared in consequence of his action, and it is not pretended that any harm resulted to defendant because of it." In Pritchett v. State, 92 Ga. 65, 18 S. E. 536, it was held that it was not proper for the presiding judge to absent himself from the courtroom during the trial of a murder case without suspending the trial, but that such conduct would not result in a new trial, "where it appears that he was absent only for a few moments, for a necessary purpose, during the argument of defendant's counsel; it not appearing that any injury resulted therefrom to the accused, or that a motion to have a mistrial declared was made." Attention was called in that case to the fact that in Hayes's Case, 58 Ga. 35, a new trial was granted, not alone on account of the absence of the judge, but also because of serious errors in the charge; and also to the fact that the ruling made is supported by the decision in O'Shield's Case, 81 Ga. 301, 6 S. E. 426. Until the present case, the three cases cited are all that are to be found in our Reports relating to this question, and from these we deduce the rule applicable in such cases to be: The mere absence of the judge during the progress of the trial, when no objection is made, will not necessarily require the granting of a new trial, when the absence is only for a few moments and for a necessary purpose; and, in order for such absence to become reversible error, it must appear, not only that objection was made to the judge's failure to suspend the trial, but that the absence of the judge resulted in some harm to the losing party. In obedience to this rule, we are constrained to affirm the judgment in this case. If it were an open question, we would hold that the presence of the judge at all stages of the trial is absolutely necessary to its validity, and that the absence of the judge from the trial without suspending the same, for any length of time, no matter how short, or for any purpose, however urgent, would vitiate the whole proceeding, whether objection was made by the parties interested or not, and whether injury resulted to anyone or not. The judge is such a necessary part of the court that his absence destroys the existence of the tribunal, and public policy demands that the tribunal authorized to pass upon the life, liberty, and property of the citizens should be constituted during the entire trial in the manner prescribed by law. The great weight of authority is in harmony with this view. The very definition of "trial" carries with it the idea of the superintendence of a judge. In a recent case, Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 13, 43 L. ed. 873, 877, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580, Mr. Justice Gray defines "trial by jury" to be: "A trial by a jury of twelve men, in the presence and under the superintendence of a judge empowered to instruct them on the law and advise them on 49 L. R. A.

the facts, and (except on acquittal of a criminal charge) to set aside their verdict if, in his opinion, it is against the law or the evidence." The supreme court of Wisconsin thus comments upon the absence of the judge, without suspending the trial, during the argument of counsel to the jury: "The presiding judge of a trial court is charged with the duty of trying the case from the opening to the close, and he ought not to abdicate his functions even for half an hour. During such an absence grave errors or abuses of privilege may occur, and this court may be left to the conflicting affidavits of over-zealous attorneys or parties in interest to determine what in fact took place." Smith v. Sherwood, 95 Wis. 558, 70 N. W. 682. In Thompson v. People, 144 Ill. 378, 32 N. E. 968, it was said that a judge had no more authority to leave the courtroom during the argument to the jury than while the evidence was being introduced or at any other stage of the trial, and that so doing was reversible error. In O'Brien v. People, 17 Colo. 561, 31 Pac. 230, it was held: "The presence of the judge is essential to the organization of the court. The arguments of counsel, as well as the taking of the evidence, are a part of the trial, and the judge cannot properly absent himself while such proceedings are being carried on. It is his duty to be present to superintend the proceedings, uphold the majesty of the law, and thus give protection and security to the parties interested or concerned in the trial, and also to see to it that counsel in their arguments do not travel outside the record, or transcend the limits of legitimate discussion." In Turbeville v. State, 56 Miss. 793, the court uses this language: "There can be no court without a judge, and his presence, as the presiding genius of the trial, is as essential during the argument as at any other time." See also People v. Eckert, 16 Cal. 111; Shaw v. People, 3 Hun, 272; People v. Shaw, 63 N. Y. 38; Palin v. State, 38 Neb. 802, 57 N. W. 743; State v. Carnagy, 106 Iowa, 483, 76 N. W. 805; Meredeth v. People, 84 Ill. 479; State v. Smith, 49 Conn. 376; Hinman v. People, 13 Hun, 266; Blend v. People, 41 N. Y. 604. Even in those cases where it was held that the absence of the judge would not necessarily cause a new trial, the practice was strongly disapproved of, as it was in the two Georgia cases. It is true that all of the cases cited are of comparatively recent date, but this is probably accounted for by the fact that in other states, as in Georgia, the practice of the judge absents himself from the courtroom while the trial is in progress is also of recent origin.

What we have said covers all of the assignments of error which we think are of sufficient consequence to require special mention. After a careful and patient examination of this somewhat voluminous record, we have reached the conclusion that not only the rulings complained of were free from error, but also that the evidence demanded the verdict rendered. In such a case, following the former rulings of this court, we will have to hold that the absence of the judge from the courtroom for the brief space of time indicated by his note to the motion for a new trial is not sufficient to reverse the judgment. With all possible respect for our learned brother of the circuit bench, who, so far as concerns the merits of the case, tried the same so fairly and correctly, we feel it our duty on the present occasion to say, as has been heretofore said by this court, that the judge should never leave the courtroom for any purpose, for any length of time, without suspending the trial. The rulings heretofore made by this court will not be extended in the slightest. If, in the present case, counsel had objected to the trial proceeding in the absence of the judge, or had upon the return of the judge to the bench made a motion for a mistrial, or if, notwithstanding a request by counsel to suspend, the judge had compelled the counsel to proceed in his absence, the case would not have been controlled by the former decisions.

Counsel for defendant in error asked that damages be awarded against the plaintiff in error for bringing the case to this court for delay only. While the assignments of error in which complaint is made of the judge's rulings are without merit, still we think the complaint made in the ground of the motion for a new trial last dealt with authorized the plaintiff in error to bring the case here for adjudication. While we think the question is controlled by former decisions, the fact that it is so controlled is not so obvious as to authorize the awarding of damages for bringing the point here for adjudication.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

A. RUHSTRAT, Plff. in Err.,
v.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois.

(185 Ill. 133.)

1. A state's forbidding the use of the national flag for advertising purposes is an interference with the constitutional privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States.
2. The police power does not extend to the prohibition of the use of the national flag for advertising purposes.
3. When the police power is exerted for the purpose of regulating a useful business or occupation and the mode in which that business may be carried on or advertised, the legislature is not the exclusive judge as to what is a reasonable restraint upon the constitutional right of the citizen to pursue his calling or to exercise his own judgment as to the manner of conducting it.
4. An unconstitutional discrimination is made by the law which permits the use of the national flag for public or private exhibitions of art, but forbids its use, under penalty, for advertising purposes generally.

(Cartwright, Ch. J., and Wilkin and Carter, JJ., dissent.)

(April 17, 1900.)

ERROR to the Criminal Court for Cook County to review a judgment convicting defendant of violation of the statute prohibiting the use of the national flag for advertising purposes. Reversed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

The plaintiff in error was prosecuted and convicted for violation of an act of the legislature of Illinois, entitled "An Act to Prohibit the Use of the National Flag or Emblem of Any Commercial Purposes or as an Advertising Medium," approved April 22, 1899, in force July 1, 1899. Ill. Laws 1899, p. 234. The following is a copy of the act in question:

"Sec. 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, organization, or corporation to use or display the national flag or emblem, or any drawing, lithograph, engraving, daguerreotype, photograph, or likeness of the national flag or emblem, as a medium for advertising any goods, wares, merchandise, publication, public entertainment of any character, or for any other purpose intended to promote the interests of such person, firm, corporation, or organization.

"Sec. 2. Nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting either public or private exhibitions of art, or shall in any way restrict the use of the national flag or emblem for patriotic purposes.

"Sec. 3. All prosecutions under the provisions of this act shall be brought by any person in the name of the people of the state of Illinois, against any person or persons violating any of the provisions of this act, before any justice of the peace of the county in which such violation is alleged to have taken place, or before any court of competent jurisdiction; and it is hereby made the duty of the state's attorney to see that the provisions of this act are enforced in their respective counties, and they shall prosecute all offenders on receiving information of the violation of any of the provisions of this act; and it is made the duty of the sheriffs,

NOTE.—The decision in the above case is without any direct precedent. It will be noticed that the reasons for the decision are based upon considerations applicable only to a state law, and not to a Federal law. An act of Congress limiting the uses to which the national flag might be put in order to protect it from any desecration or degrading use would seem certainly within the range of Federal authority.

gress limiting the uses to which the national flag might be put in order to protect it from any desecration or degrading use would seem certainly within the range of Federal authority.

deputy sheriffs, constables, and police officers to inform against and prosecute all persons whom there is probable cause to believe are guilty of violating the provisions of this act. One half of the amount recovered in any penal action under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the person filing the complaint in such action, and the remaining one half to the school fund of the county in which the said conviction is obtained.

"Sec. 4. All prosecutions under this act shall be commenced within six months from the time such offense was committed, and not afterwards.

"Sec. 5. Any persons violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100 and costs, and in default of payment of said fine and costs imposed shall be imprisoned in the county jail at the rate of one day for each dollar of fine and costs imposed."

Plaintiff in error, A. Ruhstrat, and his partner, Allen S. Curlett, are copartners under the firm name of Ruhstrat & Curlett in the wholesale and retail cigar business in the city of Chicago. They used pictures of the national flag upon cigar-box labels for the purpose of advertising and selling certain brands of their cigars by means of such advertisement. Plaintiff in error was arrested for a violation of said act, and, on trial before a justice of the peace, was fined $50 and costs. He took an appeal to the criminal court of Cook county, and, upon trial of the case in the latter court he was found guilty and fined $10. Motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were made and overruled. Judgment was rendered upon the finding of the court, a jury having been waived, and plaintiff in error was fined $10 and costs. The present writ of error is prosecuted from this judgment of the criminal court of Cook county. Specimens of the labels used by the plaintiff in error upon his cigar boxes are in the record. One of these labels is a pictorial representation, with a female head in the center and a picture of the American flag in the upper left-hand corner. Another of the labels is a pictorial representation of the likeness of Nansen, the explorer, in the center of a wreath, around one side of which is entwined an American flag. Another label is a pictorial representation, with a likeness of President Lincoln in the center, and a view of the capitol building at Washington in the distance, and upon the right hand of the representation is a picture of the American flag. Still another label is a pictorial representation with a female figure in the center, holding in her right hand a shield containing upon it a picture of the American flag. The plaintiff in error, upon the trial below, submitted to the court, to be held as law in the decision of the case, certain propositions to the effect that the act in question was illegal and void, as being in violation of the Constitutions of the state of Illinois and of the United States. These propositions were refused, and exception was taken to the refusal of the same. The reasons assigned in support of the motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were also the alleged invalidity of the act as being in conflict with the Illinois and Federal Constitutions.

Messrs. Hoffheimer & Pfau, for plaintiff in error:

The flag is the property of the people of the United States, and is emblematic of national sovereignty as distinguished from state sovereignty.

U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 1791, 1792.

The nation is a sovereign power, separate and distinct from state sovereignty.

Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 71, 10 L. ed. 101; The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, sub nom. Buffington v. Day, 20 L. ed. 122; Wilson's Works, 7, 8.

The act is in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and article 2 of the Constitution of the state of Illinois.

Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 113, 21 L. ed. 420; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 340, 35 N. E. 62.

The passage of the flag law cannot be justified under the police powers of the legislature.

Tiedeman, Pol. Power, p. 12, § 3; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 108, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 11, 27 L. ed. 838, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 19 L. R. A. 727, 32 Pac. 870; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 606, 607, 744; Fraser v. People use of School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Ho Ah Kow v. Numan, 5 Sawy. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546; Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

The flag law is unconstitutional and void in that it deprives the citizens of the state of Illinois of the equal protection of the laws. It is class legislation.

Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869, 7 N. E. 631; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454; Harding v. People, 160 Ill. 459, 32 L. R. A. 445, 43 N. E. 624.

Messrs. Charles S. Deneen and F. L. Barnett, for defendant in error:

The flag law act does not conflict with the Federal Constitution. State enactments under police power are supreme unless there is a grant of exclusive authority to Congress.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 77, 21 L. ed. 409; Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. ed. 717; First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 19 L. ed. 701; New York ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. Tax Comrs. 2 Black, 620, 17 L. ed. 451; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 664, 31 L. ed. 211, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 504, 24 L. ed. 1116.

The law must be presumed to be constitutional. All doubts must be resolved in its favor.

State v. Holden, 14 Utah, 71, sub nom. Holden v. Hardy, 37 L. R. A. 106, 46 Pac. 756; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 202; Newland v. Marsh, 19 Ill. 384; Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill. 271.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The provisions of the Constitution of Illinois which the terms of the act of April 22, 1899, known as the "Flag Law," are alleged to contravene, are §§ 1, 2, and 4 of article 2, and § 22 of article 4. Section 1 of article 2 is as follows: "All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inherent and inalienable rights—among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights and the protection of property, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Section 2 is as follows: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." Section 4 of the same article provides that "every person may freely speak, write, and publish on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty," etc. Section 1 of article 14 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States is as follows: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The expression, "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," is general in its character, and includes many rights which are inherent and inalienable. Many of the rights referred to in this expression are included in the general guaranty of "liberty." The happiness here referred to may consist in many things or depend on many circumstances, but it unquestionably includes the right of the citizen to follow his individual preference in the choice of an occupation. Black, Const. Law, p. 404. "The right of every man to choose his own occupation, profession, or employment, though not expressly guaranteed by the Constitution, is included in the right to the pursuit of happiness." Id. p. 411.

In Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257, the general proposition that the enjoyment by the citizen, upon terms of equality with all others in similar circumstances, of the privilege of pursuing an ordinary calling or trade, and of acquiring, holding, and selling property, is a general part of his rights of liberty and property as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, was assented to by the Supreme Court of the United States as embodying a sound principle of constitutional law. In the latter case it was also held that, although the power and discretion which a state legislature has in the matter of promoting the general welfare, and of employing means to that end, are very large, yet such power must be so exercised as not to impair the fundamental rights of life, liberty, and property. In Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427, it was said: "The right to follow any of the common occupations of life is an inalienable right. It was formulated as such under the phrase 'pursuit of happiness' in the Declaration of Independence, which commenced with the fundamental proposition that 'all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, and that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.' This right is a large ingredient in the civil liberty of the citizen." It was also said in this case that "the liberty of pursuit—the right to follow any of the ordinary callings of life—is one of the privileges of a citizen of the United States." It was also there said: "If it does not abridge the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States to prohibit him from pursuing his chosen calling, and giving to others the exclusive right of pursuing it, it certainly does deprive him (to a certain extent) of his liberty; for it takes from him the freedom of adopting and following the pursuit which he prefers, which, as already intimated, is a material part of the liberty of the citizen." Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652. In Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 60, 22 L. R. A. 340, 35 N. E. 62, we said (page 71, 147 Ill., page 342, 22 L. R. A., and page 63, 35 N. E.): "Liberty," as that term is used in the Constitution, means, not only freedom of the citizen from servitude and restraint, but is deemed to embrace the right of every man to be free in the use of his powers and faculties, and to adopt and pursue such avocation or calling as he may choose, subject only to the restraints necessary to secure the common welfare." Fraser v. People use of School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325, 28 N. E. 1126; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343; Live Stock Dealers' & Butchers' Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 1 Abb. (U. S.) 388, Fed. Cas. No. 3408; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 26, 21 L. ed. 394; Godcharles v. Wigman, 113 Pa. 431, 6 Atl. 354; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621, 10 S. E. 285.

The plaintiff in error was engaged in the wholesale and retail cigar business. This was certainly a lawful and respectable business. Under the authorities referred to and under the interpretation of the Constitution there made, plaintiff in error had not only the right to choose the business in which he was engaged as his occupation, but he had the right to pursue and carry on that business in any way and by any methods which were lawful and proper. Included in "the right to choose one's occupation is the right to be free from unlawful interference or control in the conduct of it." Black, Const. Law, p. 412. In these days of commercial enterprise, advertising is an important factor in business pursuits. It cannot be denied that the plaintiff in error had a right to advertise his business in any legitimate manner, so as to attract the attention of the public. Nor can it be denied that the plaintiff in error had the right to design and make use of a trademark. The use of trademarks is as old as commerce itself. The conventional trademark is a part of what is called "the symbolism of commerce." Browne, Trademarks, 2d ed. §§ 1, 26. It is allowable to use a picture as a trademark, and a picture made up of many objects in many colors may be a trademark. Id. §§ 258, 259. Browne, in his work on Trademarks (§ 265), says: "Color may be of the essence of a mark of manufacture or commerce, known as a 'trademark.' National flags are sometimes blended with other objects to catch the eye. They are admirably adapted to all purposes of heraldic display, and their rich, glowing colors appeal to feelings of patriotism and win purchasers of the merchandise to which they are affixed. . . . One flag printed in green may catch the eye of the son of the Emerald Isle. . . . Another flag, with stars on a blue field and stripes of alternative red and white, may secure a preference for the commodity upon which it is stamped." The right of the citizen to pursue the calling which he has chosen, and to advertise his business in a legitimate way by the use of labels or trademarks, is not improperly exercised by making a picture of the national flag a part of such labels or trademarks, unless thereby the public safety, welfare, or comfort is interfered with.

It is claimed on the part of the People that the flag law in question was enacted by the state legislature in the exercise of its police powers. The law is justified upon the alleged ground that it is an enactment under and by virtue of the police power of the state, and that, being enacted under and by virtue of that power, the courts cannot exercise a supervision over the wisdom and judgment of the legislature in its passage. It is claimed that the law tends to elevate the morals and promote the welfare of the public, and that, as such, it is a valid exercise of legislative power. The police power is limited to enactments which have reference to the public health or comfort, the safety or welfare, of society. Laws which impose penalties on persons, and interfere with the personal liberty of the citizen, cannot be constitutionally enacted, unless the public health, comfort, safety, or welfare demands their enactment. It is for the legislature to determine when an exigency exists for the exercise of this power, but what are the subjects of its exercise is clearly a judicial question. The exercise of legislative discretion is not subject to review by the courts when measures adopted by the legislature are calculated to protect the public health and secure the public comfort, safety, or welfare; but the measures so adopted must have some relation to the ends thus specified. Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454. The legislature has no power under the guise of police regulations, to arbitrarily invade the personal rights and personal liberty of the individual citizen. Its determination upon this question is not final or conclusive. If it pass an act ostensibly in the exercise of the police power, but which in fact interferes unnecessarily with the personal liberty of the citizen, the courts have a right to examine the act, and see whether it relates to the objects which the exercise of the police power is designed to secure, and whether it is appropriate for the promotion of such objects. When the police power is exerted for the purpose of regulating a useful business or occupation, and the mode in which that business may be carried on or advertised, the legislature is not the exclusive judge as to what is a reasonable and just restraint upon the constitutional right of the citizen to pursue his calling, and to exercise his own judgment as to the manner of conducting it. The general right of every person to pursue any calling, and to do so in his own way, provided that he does not encroach upon the rights of others, cannot be taken away from him by legislative enactment. Tiedeman, Pol. Power, § 3; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 108, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 606, 607, 744; Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 19 L. R. A. 727, 32 Pac. 872; Frorer v. People use of School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454. In Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, it was said: "If, therefore, a statute, purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution." In Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 32 L. R. A. 659, 43 N. E. 1108, we said (page 308, 161 Ill., page 1110, 43 N. E., and page 663, 32 L. R. A.): "If the act were one calculated to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society, then it might be regarded as an exercise of the police power of the state. In Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611, it was held that, if the law prohibits that which is harmless in itself, or requires that to be done which does not tend to promote the health, comfort, safety, or welfare of society, it will in such case be an unauthorized exercise of power, and it will be the duty of the courts to declare such legislation void."

It is difficult to see how the flag law of April 22, 1899, tends in any way to promote the safety, welfare, or comfort of society. The use of a likeness of the flag upon a label or as part of the trademark of a business man in the lawful prosecution of his business cannot be regarded otherwise than as an act which is harmless in itself. It may violate the ideas which some people have of sentiment and taste, but the propriety of an act, considered merely from the standpoint of sentiment and taste, is a matter about which men of equal honesty and patriotism may differ. The act in question is severe in its terms. It makes it the duty of the state's attorney to prosecute all persons guilty of a violation of the provisions of the act, and makes it the duty of sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables, and police officers to inform against all persons "whom there is probable cause to believe are guilty of violating the provisions of this act. One half of the amount recovered in any penal action under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the person filing the complaint in such action, and the remaining one half to the school fund of the county. . . . Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10, nor more than $100 and costs, and in default of payment of said fine and costs imposed shall be imprisoned in the county jail," etc. What is the offense for which these penalties are imposed? The using or displaying of the national flag or emblem, or any drawing or likeness of the same, "as a medium for advertising any goods, wares, merchandise, publication, public entertainment of any character, or for any other purpose intended to promote the interests of such person, firm, corporation, or organization" so using or displaying the same. Section 2 of the act provides that the use of the national flag or emblem for patriotic purposes shall not in any way be restricted. It is not altogether clear that a person might not make use of or display the national flag or emblem for a purpose intended to promote his own interests, and yet, at the same time, for an entirely patriotic purpose. It is not clear that the prohibition leveled against the use or display of the flag, tends in any way to elevate the morals or promote the welfare of the public.

The flag is used, in the prosecution of commerce upon the high seas, as a symbol of nationality. The nationality of a ship is determined by the flag which it carries. A ship, navigating under the flag and pass of a foreign country, is to be considered as bearing the national character of the country under whose flag she sails. Under what is called in international law "the law of the flag," a shipowner who sends his vessel into a foreign port gives notice by his flag to all who enter into contracts with the shipmaster that he intends the law of that flag to regulate those contracts, and that they must either submit to its operation or not contract with him or his agent at all. 1 Bouvier, Law Dict. (Rawle's Rev.) pp. 799, 800. It is a doctrine of international law that a ship becomes hostile so soon as she hoists the enemy's flag; and, while the cargo of the ship does not necessarily take character from the flag, yet the general rule is that the goods under such flag follow the fate of the vessel. 49 L. R. A.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 480, note 3. It is difficult to see why, if, in the prosecution of foreign commerce or trade, the flag is used to protect a ship and cargo and designate its character, it should be a desecration of the same flag to use a likeness of it upon a label or trademark in the prosecution of domestic trade or business.

A flag is emblematic of the sovereignty of the power which adopts it. The American flag is emblematic of the sovereignty of the United States. Congress, by §§ 1791 and 1792 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, has provided as follows: "The flag of the United States shall be thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white; and the union of the flag shall be thirty-seven stars, white in a blue field. On the admission of a new state into the Union, one star shall be added to the union of the flag; and such addition shall take effect on the fourth day of July then next succeeding such admission." In The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, sub nom. Buffington v. Day, 20 L. ed. 122, it was said: "The general government and the states, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other within their respective spheres. The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme; but the states within the limits of their powers not granted, or, in the language of the Tenth Amendment, 'reserved,' are as independent of the general government as that government within its sphere is independent of the states." The state of Illinois has never adopted a flag emblematic of its sovereignty. The flag is the flag of the United States as a sovereignty. The United States, acting through its Congress, has adopted a flag emblematic of national sovereignty. Presumably, the national flag was adopted for the use of the citizens of the United States. There is a difference between the privileges and immunities belonging to the citizens of the United States as such, and those belonging to the citizens of each state as such. The privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States are those which arise out of the nature and essential character of the national government, the provisions of its Constitution, or its laws and treaties made in pursuance thereof; and it is these rights which are placed under the protection of Congress by the Fourteenth Amendment. People ex rel. Akin v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 585, 51 N. E. 785; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394. The right to use or display the flag would seem to be a privilege of a citizen of the United States, rather than the privilege of a citizen of any one of the states. The national government, in the exercise of its inherent power to establish a flag or emblem symbolic of national sovereignty, has passed §§ 1791 and 1792, above referred to, and has thereby taken jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a national flag, and has legislated upon it. Congress has passed no legislation restricting the use of the flag, or confining its use to any particular purpose. It would seem that, if it had been the intention of Congress to restrict or confine such use, some provision to that effect would have been embodied in the act prescribing and describing the national flag.

The use of the flag of the United States, as embodied in advertising sheets and placards and labels, and in common-law trademarks, has received the unqualified approval of the whole commercial world. It has also received the sanction of those having in charge the execution of the trademark laws of the United States. The usage and practice of employing a flag for commercial purposes have been indulged in by citizens of the United States with the knowledge of the national government. The absence of congressional prohibition against the usage and practice thus indulged in with the knowledge of the general government has created a "privilege" in the citizen of the United States to continue such use until withdrawn by the competent authority. An act of legislation, passed by a particular state, which deprives the citizen of such privilege, contravenes that clause of the amendment to the national Constitution which forbids any state to abridge the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States. If the state legislature can restrict the use of the national flag, and permit its use for one purpose and prohibit its use for another purpose, it would have the right to prohibit its use altogether within the limits of the state. But it cannot be pretended that the state of Illinois has authority to prohibit the use of the national flag altogether. It necessarily follows that it has no authority to prohibit its use for certain purposes. We are of the opinion that this law is unconstitutional, not only as infringing upon the personal liberty guaranteed to the citizen by both the Federal and state Constitutions, but also as depriving a citizen of the United States of the right of exercising a privilege impliedly, if not expressly, granted to him by the Federal Constitution.

The act is also unduly discriminating and partial in its character. It exempts from penalties imposed by the act persons who may choose to make use of the national flag or emblem for either public or private exhibitions of art. The exhibitor who engages in public or private exhibitions of art may do so, not merely for the public benefit, but for the promotion of his own interests. By thus excluding artists or exhibitors from the inhibitions of § 1 of the act, the act thereby creates a class or classes of persons who are exempted from the penalties embraced therein. Legislation of this kind has frequently been condemned by the courts in this country. The legislature clearly has no power to deny to plaintiff in error the right to use the national flag to advertise his business, or, in other words, to deny to all persons following particular occupations the right to use the national flag, and at the same time to permit artists or art exhibitors to use the same. The manner in which the act thus discriminates in favor of one class of occupations, and against all others places it in opposition to the constitutional guaranties hereinbefore referred to. Willert v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869, 7 N. E. 631; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454.

For the reasons herein set forth, the judgment of the Criminal Court of Cook County is reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed. Reversed and remanded.

Cartwright, Ch. J., and Wilkin and Carter, JJ., dissent.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Kansas, Appt.,

v.

John ROOK.

(.....Kan.....)

*1. The statute of limitations, as a defense to an information for crime, need not be specially pleaded, nor is it to be tried in advance of the hearing of the main issue, and therefore matter in support of a plea of the statute of limitations may be given in evidence under the issue of not guilty.

*Headnotes by DOSTER, Ch. J.

NOTE.—The decision in the above case as to the effect of the discharge of an accused person on a motion to quash to preclude a review of that decision on appeal on the ground that he has been already placed in jeopardy and discharged is a novel one.

For appeal from an order discharging defendant on a plea of former jeopardy, see State v. Hager (Kan.) 48 L. R. A. 254.

49 L. R. A.

2. A defendant in a criminal case cannot be said to be in "jeopardy," so as to entitle him to plead a former acquittal or conviction to a subsequent trial for the same offense, unless he has been arraigned, or waived arraignment, and pleaded not guilty, or had such plea entered for him; and therefore, when a trial has been had without an arraignment of the accused or a waiver of it by him, and without a plea of not guilty or the entry of it for him, he cannot be said to have been in "jeopardy."

3. When a defendant in a criminal case has not been in "jeopardy," error of the court in ordering his discharge may be made "a question reserved by the state," under the statute (Gen. Stat. 1897, chap. 83, § 30), and an appeal had to this court upon such reserved question.

4. An information examined and found to state a concealment by the defendant, so as to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations.

(January 6, 1900.)

APPEAL by the state from an order of the District Court for Franklin County quashing an indictment charging defendant with breaking and entering a barn in the night-time. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. L. Branson and O. A. Smart, for appellant:

The allegations in the information as to concealment are as follows: "That ever since the commission of the offense herein charged the defendant has continuously so concealed himself that process could not be served upon him."

The allegation of a former commencement of a prosecution was sufficient.

A prosecution is commenced when a complaint is filed and a warrant issued, and an officer uses due diligence to serve the same.

Re Clyne, 52 Kan. 448, 35 Pac. 23; Re Griffith, 35 Kan. 377, 11 Pac. 174.

Any words which include the exception with certainty are sufficient. The precise words of the statute need not be used, it being sufficient if the words used clearly accomplish the purpose, and the averment negating an exception may, by reference to the statute specifying the averment, be sufficient.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 581; State v. Hayes, 59 Kan. 61, 51 Pac. 905; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. § 405; Wharton, Crim. L. 6th ed. § 446.

The allegation of concealment should not be more specific, because it would in this case, and frequently in many cases, be impossible to allege the facts in detail constituting concealment. Concealment of a defendant is a matter peculiarly within his own knowledge, and comes within the rule requiring less particularity than in other cases.

6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 271; Maxwell, Code Pl. 1st ed. 13, 14; Heard, Civil Pl. 265; State v. Hayes, 59 Kan. 61, 51 Pac. 905; State v. Smith, 13 Kan. 295; State v. Bancroft, 22 Kan. 199; Ulmer v. State, 14 Ind. 52.

Gen. Stat. 1897, chap. 100, § 362, provides for an increased punishment upon a subsequent conviction of a felony; prior conviction should be alleged in the information.

Underhill, Crim. Ev. pp. 569 et seq.; 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 489; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 569; 1 Bishop, New Crim. L. 959-963; Kelley, Crim. Law & Pr. § 615; Re Miller, 110 Mich. 676, 34 L. R. A. 398, 68 N. W. 990.

Concealment by defendant, so that process cannot be served upon him, constitutes a frequent ground for attachment.

Hoggett v. Emerson, 8 Kan. 262; Drake, Attachm. 6th ed. § 49; Bennett v. Avant, 2 Sneed, 152; Fitch v. Waite, 5 Conn. 117.

It is concealment to avoid service of process.

Young v. Nelson, 25 Ill. 565; North v. McDonald, 1 Biss. 57, Fed. Cas. No. 10,312.

Messrs. A. H. Case and C. B. Mason, for defendant:

This action was barred on the 27th day of 49 L. R. A.

February, 1898, more than one year before this action was commenced.

Kan. Code 1897, 402, § 32.

The exception, "must be commenced within two years after its commission," is not complied with so as to save the statute by the commencement of an action before a justice of the peace, defendant's name being unknown, warrant issued, and not served.

Re Griffith, 35 Kan. 381, 11 Pac. 174; People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 120; Bell v. Dart, 54 Ill. 526; United States v. Ballard, 3 McLean, 469, Fed. Cas. No. 14,507; United States v. White, 5 Cranch, C. C. 368, Fed. Cas. No. 16,678.

The exception in § 33 of the Code is: "If any person who has committed an offense . . . so conceals himself that process cannot be served upon him, . . . the time of concealment is not to be included in computing the period of limitation." This we take to mean a concealment within the state.

Hoggett v. Emerson, 8 Kan. 262; Frey v. Aultman, 30 Kan. 181, 2 Pac. 168; Myers v. Center, 47 Kan. 324, 27 Pac. 978.

The statute of limitation was pleaded, the court heard the evidence, the defendant was acquitted and discharged. Can the state appeal from such discharge?

State v. Moon, 45 Kan. 146, 25 Pac. 614.

The question whether an offense was barred by the statute of limitations cannot properly be raised by demurrer, by instruction, or motion for a new trial, but should be specially pleaded.

State v. Hussey, 7 Iowa, 409; State v. Groome, 10 Iowa, 311; United States v. White, 5 Cranch, C. C. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 16,675; State v. Howard, 15 Rich. L. 282; United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. 168, 21 L. ed. 538; State v. Hobbs, 39 Me. 212; People v. Van Santvoord, 9 Cow. 660; State v. Rust, 8 Blackf. 195.

You cannot prejudice a defendant by proof of particular acts of crime other than the one for which he is being tried, unless the acts have been committed in the preparation for the crime, or the actual doing of the crime, or in concealing it or its fruits.

State v. Boyland, 24 Kan. 186; State v. Thurtell, 29 Kan. 148; State v. Bonsor, 49 Kan. 758, 31 Pac. 736; Stevens v. State, 50 Kan. 712, 32 Pac. 350; Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 1124.

Doster, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by the state from an order quashing an information against the appellee, John Rook, for a felony, and upon a question reserved by the state upon an order sustaining the appellee's plea of the statute of limitations, and discharging him from custody. On the 20th of March, 1899, the county attorney of Franklin county filed an information against the appellee for a burglary alleged to have been committed on the 26th day of February, 1896. As a reason for delaying the prosecution beyond the two-years period of limitation, the information contained the following averment: "And I, said county attorney, give further information that a prosecution of the offense herein charged was commenced on the 7th day of March, A. D. 1896, and within two years after the commission of said offense, before George W. Batdorf, a justice of the peace in and for the township of Franklin, in the county and state aforesaid, against this defendant, said defendant's name being at that time unknown, and the fact of defendant's name being unknown was stated in the complaint filed and warrant issued in the said prosecution; that ever since the commission of the offense herein charged the defendant has continuously so concealed himself that process could not be served upon him." To this information the appellee filed a motion to quash, for the reason that the offense charged was shown to have been committed without the statutory period for the commencement of the prosecution. At the same time he also filed a special plea of the two-years statute of limitations. The motion to quash and the special plea were heard and considered together. No evidence in support of the plea or in opposition to it was introduced, but in argument to the court, and for the purpose of evidence to be considered in connection with the plea, the county attorney made the following statement: "If the court will permit me to make a suggestion, I will just state frankly what we have got. We expect to show that this man was pursued about twenty-four hours after the stuff was taken, and chased down in Linn county for a considerable distance; that he abandoned his team and wagon and the stolen property, and took across the field to the woods, and, so far as we know, has never been seen since, by anyone that we know of, until about the time of his arrest; that a warrant was placed in the hands of the officers at Topeka, who went to his residence, and were not able to find him until about the time of his arrest." Following the quotation of this statement, the bill of exceptions contains the following recitals: "Thereupon the court announced that the said facts, if proved, would not amount to a concealment, and that the court would so instruct the jury if the facts went to the jury, and the court held that, under the facts stated by the state, the action was barred; and further held that the motion to quash should be sustained, and sustains the same; to which ruling and finding the state excepts, reserves the question, and stands upon the information. The court thereupon orders the defendant discharged from custody, to which order the state excepts."

We have delayed the decision of this case to give consideration to a question involved in it, but which was not argued by counsel, and that is the effect of the appellee's discharge, after the trial by the court of his plea of the statutory bar, upon the right of the state to present and have determined the question reserved by it, to wit, the claimed error of the discharge. While the statute

(Gen. Stat. 1897, chap. 83, § 30) gives to the state a right of appeal "upon a question reserved by the state," yet what questions may be reserved by it, or what, as a matter of specific definition, "a question reserved by the state" is, have never been definitely settled. A uniform line of decisions has maintained the proposition that no error, however flagrant, committed by the court against the state, can be reserved by it for decision by the supreme court when the defendant has once been placed in jeopardy and discharged, even though the discharge was the result of the error committed; this, for the reason that the accused, having been once in jeopardy, cannot be retried after reversal of the case upon the state's appeal, and the questions presented, being therefore moot in their nature, will not be considered by the court. State v. Carmichael, 3 Kan. 102; Olathe v. Adams, 15 Kan. 391; Oswego v. Belt, 16 Kan. 480; State v. Crosby, 17 Kan. 396; Junction City v. Keefe, 40 Kan. 275, 19 Pac. 735; State v. Moon, 45 Kan. 145, 25 Pac. 614; State v. Lee, 49 Kan. 570, 31 Pac. 147. In Junction City v. Keefe, 40 Kan. 275, 19 Pac. 735, a very general statement of the meaning of the phrase, "question reserved by the state," was made. It was there remarked: "We believe the phrase, 'question reserved by the state,' is any exception embodied in a bill of exceptions, where a defendant has been discharged for any cause upon a trial on the merits, and the two exceptions named supra." The exceptions referred to are judgments for defendants quashing indictments or informations, and orders arresting the judgment. For the purposes of this case, and also many others, the above definition of a "question reserved by the state" is too general, in that it does not also define the meaning of the phrase, "trial upon the merits." In the case under consideration, the appellee, by his plea of the statute of limitations, raised a question which, legally speaking, went to the merits of his case. Technically, it did not go to the question of his guilt or innocence, but it went to the merits of his claim of right to an acquittal or discharge. The plea of the statutory bar need not have been specially made by him. It could have been made as well under the plea of not guilty. While some of the cases countenance the making of pleas of statutory limitation as special defenses, and countenance trials upon them in advance of the hearing of the main issue, yet the general and better practice is to involve such pleas under the issue of not guilty. 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. § 799; Wharton, Crim. Pl. 8th ed. § 317. Such is the requirement of practice in this state. Re Stewart, 60 Kan. 787, 57 Pac. 976. In case the special plea of the statute of limitations has been heard in advance of the trial of the main issue, and has been denied, the accused is not precluded from again relying on the same facts under the plea of not guilty. Thompson v. State, 54 Miss. 740. It would seem, therefore, that a question material to the defense—one that could have been properly involved under the general issue—had been submitted to decision, and upon it a finding had been made in appellee's favor, and his discharge had been ordered. It will be observed that the trial of this question was to the court without a jury, and also that it was upon an agreed statement of facts, or, what was equivalent thereto, a statement of facts by the county attorney, which, for the purposes of the legal question that was to arise thereon, was accepted as correct. Trials of misdemeanors upon agreed statements have several times been had in this state. Olathe v. Adams, 15 Kan. 391; Oscego v. Belt, 16 Kan. 480; and State v. Lee, 49 Kan. 570, 31 Pac. 147. As to whether a case of felony, such as the one under consideration, may be heard by the court without a jury, either upon evidence or agreed statement, we have no concern. The defendant in this case is not before us raising the contention.

A fact material to a determination of the question whether the appellee has been in jeopardy, so as to prevent the consideration by us of the point reserved by the state, is now to be noticed. The record nowhere shows that the appellee was arraigned, or that he waived arraignment, and pleaded not guilty, or that he refused to plead, and had the plea of not guilty entered for him. This fact, we think, makes this case an exception to those heretofore decided. Cases of felony are uniformly triable to a jury, and, therefore, decisions as to the point of time in the progress of the case at which what is called "jeopardy" attaches have relation to other circumstances evidencing jeopardy than those in the case before us. Some of the cases hold that jeopardy begins when the jury is sworn to try the case; others, that it begins when the jury is "charged,"—that is, when the jury, as was formerly the practice, were preliminarily informed of the charge against the prisoner. None of these is applicable, because in this case there was no jury, and therefore no swearing or "charging" them. We are not, however, without authority upon the question. In the case of Weaver v. State, 83 Ind. 289, it was held that until a defendant entered his plea of not guilty, or, upon his refusal to plead, it had been entered for him, he could not be regarded as in jeopardy. In this case the court, quoting from Bishop's Criminal Law, said: "Not only must the tribunal be made complete by the impaneling of the jury, as already explained, in order to produce the legal jeopardy of which we are treating, but all other preliminary things of record necessary to sustain the verdict of not guilty, if rendered, must be done." Under the General Code of this state, the preliminary things necessary to sustain the verdict of guilty, if rendered, which ought to appear of record, are the arraignment of the defendant and the entry of his plea to the indictment. Those preliminary things did not appear of record in this case at the time of the first impanelment and swearing of the jury to try the cause, and therefore it would seem that the appellant was not put in legal jeopardy. 1 Bishop, Crim. L. § 1020.

It is true that defendants, even in cases of felony, may waive formal arraignment, and it is perhaps true that an accused person, submitting to trial without arraignment, will be deemed to have waived it; but the calling upon the defendant to plead, and his plea, made by himself or entered for him, would seem to be a necessity. "The right of arraignment on a criminal trial may in some cases be waived, but a plea is always essential. The court cannot supply an issue after verdict, where there has been no plea, notwithstanding that the defendant consented to go to trial." Wharton, Crim. Pl. 8th ed. § 409. In Newsom v. State, 2 Ga. 60, it was ruled that "a case is submitted when the prisoner has been arraigned,—the plea of not guilty filed,—and the jury impaneled and sworn." In Douglass v. State, 3 Wis. 820, it was ruled that "an arraignment may, in minor offenses, be waived by the defendant, but a plea is necessary to form an issue. An issue in a criminal case cannot be supplied so as to correspond with the verdict, where there has been no issue joined, and a verdict in a criminal case, where there has been neither arraignment nor plea, is a nullity, and no judgment can be rendered thereon." This statement of the law was reaffirmed in Davis v. State, 38 Wis. 487.

The appellee not having been in jeopardy, we are not precluded from an examination of the claims of error made upon the appeal by the state. As to whether the matters stated by the county attorney in avoidance of the appellee's plea of the statute of limitations would be sufficient to evidence a concealment, and therefore to take the case out of the statute, it will not be necessary to express an opinion, nor, indeed, should it be done by us. The motion to quash the information was, we think, improperly sustained. The information stated, in sufficient language, one of the exceptions to the running of the statute of limitations. The statute reads: "If any person who has committed an offense is absent from the state, or so conceals himself that process cannot be served upon him, or conceals the fact of the crime, the time of absence or concealment is not to be included in computing the period of limitations." Gen. Stat. 1897, chap. 102, § 33. The information alleged, in positive terms, "that, ever since the commission of the offense herein charged, the defendant has continuously so concealed himself that process could not be served upon him." Whether, in cases of concealment, it is necessary to institute a prosecution within the statutory period of two years,—that is, whether it is necessary within that time to file a complaint and procure the issuance of a warrant,—may be doubted. The counsel for the state has argued the case as though such might be a requisite, and possibly some of the language of the opinion in Re Clyde, 52 Kan. 441, 35 Pac. 23, may lend countenance to such view. However, if such meaning was intended, the soundness of that case is that respect may be questioned. Be this as it may, the information in this case avers that a prosecution was instituted within the necessary time by the filing of a complaint and the issuance of a warrant. The language of the information as to the appellee concealing himself is fully as specific as the language of the statute declaring the exception, and this is certainly sufficient. A similar information, under a similar statute, was held good in Ulmer v. State, 14 Ind. 52.

In our judgment, the court erred in quashing the information and in discharging the defendant.

The case will therefore be reversed, with directions for proceedings in the court below in accordance with this opinion.

All the Justices concur.

John W. CLARK, Plff. in Err.,
v.
Calvin J. SKEEN et al.

(.....Kan.....)

*1. A stipulation in an instrument for the payment of a certain sum of money, payable with current exchange on a place other than the place of payment, is not destructive of negotiability.

2. A note for the payment of a certain sum at a fixed date is not rendered non-negotiable by a stipulation that upon default in the payment of interest the whole amount shall become due, at the option of the holder, and then draw a greater rate of interest.

(March 10, 1900.)

ERROR to the District Court for Barber County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on certain promissory notes. Reversed.

Statement by Johnston, J.:

Action to recover upon a promissory note for $3,000, and the interest coupons attached thereto, executed by Calvin J. Skeen, Sarah C. Skeen, Garlie Lane, and Myron J. Lane in favor of the Jarvis-Conklin Mortgage Trust Company, and to foreclose a mortgage given by the same parties, to secure the payment of the note, on real estate in Barber county. The following is a copy of the promissory note, omitting signatures and indorsements. "Five years after date, for value received, we promise to pay to the order of the Jarvis-Conklin Mortgage Trust Company, at its office in Kansas City, Missouri, three thousand ($3,000) dollars, lawful money of the United States, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July in each year, according to the tenor and effect of the interest notes of even date herewith and hereto attached. Both principal and interest payable with New York exchange. This note is to draw interest from date at the rate of twelve per cent per annum if either principal or interest remain unpaid ten days after due. At the option of the legal holder, after any of said interest notes remain due and unpaid ten days, the whole of the principal and interest may be declared immediately due and payable. This note is given for an actual loan of the above amount, and is secured by a mortgage deed of even date herewith, which is a first lien on the property therein described. Dated at Kansas City, Mo., July 2, 1888." The note and interest coupons were duly signed, and are alleged to have been indorsed and duly transferred before maturity for a valuable consideration, to John W. Clark, the plaintiff in this action. The defendants denied and contested the transfer to and ownership by Clark of the note and mortgage, and also set up a counterclaim for damages alleged to have arisen from the failure of the payee of the note to promptly pay over the proceeds of the loan. A trial was had with a jury, resulting in a verdict in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff complains, and assigns numerous errors on the rulings made by the trial court.

Messrs. Beardsley & Gregory, for plaintiff in error:

The note sued on is a negotiable note.

The provision that in case of default a note can be declared due by the holder does not render it non-negotiable.

De Hass v. Roberts, 59 Fed. Rep. 855, Affirmed in 28 U. S. App. 559, 30 L. R. A. 189, 70 Fed. Rep. 227, 17 C. C. A. 79; Holden v. Clark, 16 Kan. 346; Markey v. Corey, 108 Mich. 184, 36 L. R. A. 117, 66 N. W. 493; Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580, 35 L. R. A. 544, 68 N. W. 278; Dobbins v. Oberman, 17 Neb. 163, 22 N. W. 356; National Bank v. Dean, 86 Iowa. 656, 53 N. W. 338; O'Keeffe v. First Nat. Bank, 49 Kan. 348, 30 Pac. 473.

The fact that after default it was to draw a greater rate of interest from date does not render it non-negotiable.

Parker v. Plymell, 23 Kan. 402; De Hass v. Roberts, 59 Fed. Rep. 855, 28 U. S. App. 559, 30 L. R. A. 189, 70 Fed. Rep. 227, 17 C. C. A. 79; Crump v. Berdan, 97 Mich. 293, 56 N. W. 559; Hope v. Barker, 112 Mo. 338, 20 S. W. 567; Merrill v. Hurley, 6 S. D. 592, 62 N. W. 958; Gilmore v. Hirst, 56 Kan. 626, 44 Pac. 603; Robinson Female Seminary v. Campbell, 60 Kan. 60, 55 Pac. 276; Berry v. Berry, 57 Kan. 691, 47 Pac. 837.

The provision that the note should be payable with New York exchange does not render it non-negotiable.

Dan. Neg. Inst. §§ 54, 54a; Randolph, Com. Paper, § 200; Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 28a; Smith v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 241, 80 Am. Dec. 83; Bullock v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 137, 33 Am. Rep. 356; Leggett v. Jones, 10 Wis. 34; Morgan v. Edwards, 53 Wis. 609, 40 Am. Rep. 781, 11 N. W. 21; Hill v. Todd, 29 Ill. 101; Clauser v. Stone, 29 Ill. 114, 81 Am.

*Headnotes by JOHNSTON, J.

NOTE.—As to provision for exchange as affecting negotiability of instrument, see also Culbertson v. Nelson (Iowa) 27 L. R. A. 222, and note.
49 L. R. A.

Dec. 299; Whittle v. Fond du Lac Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 1106; Orr v. Hopkins, 3 N. M. 25, 1 Pac. 181; Bradley v. Lill, 4 Bias. 473, Fed. Cas. No. 1,783; Grutacay v. Woulluse, 2 McLean, 581, Fed. Cas. No. 5,854; Price v. Teal, 4 McLean, 201, Fed. Cas. No. 11,417; Hastings v. Thompson, 54 Minn. 184, 21 L. R. A. 178, 55 N. W. 968.

The writing on the back of the note, while it is in such a form as is generally known as a special indorsement, when placed upon negotiable paper plainly constitutes an assignment, even if the note in question be considered non-negotiable.

Loudermilk v. Loudermilk, 93 Ga. 443, 21 S. E. 77; Merchants' & M. Nat. Bank v. Barnes, 18 Mont. 335, 45 Pac. 219.

Anything showing an intention to transfer is an assignment, even if it be only delivery, or an oral assignment.

Bentley v. Standard F. Ins. Co. 40 W. Va. 729, 23 S. E. 587; Story, Promissory Notes, § 128, and cases cited; Parker v. Riddle, 11 Ohio, 102; Haber v. Brown, 101 Cal. 445, 35 Pac. 1037.

A negotiable promissory note, as well as every other kind of note, may be transferred by delivery merely.

Washington v. Hobart, 17 Kan. 277; Williams v. Norton, 3 Kan. 295; McCrum v. Corby, 11 Kan. 470; Weeks v. Medler, 20 Kan. 65.

Delivery is presumed from possession.

Randolph, Com. Paper, § 217; Barrick v. Austin, 21 Barb. 241; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 53; Brooks v. James, 16 Wash. 335, 47 Pac. 751; Carnahan v. Lloyd, 4 Kan. App. 605, 46 Pac. 323, and cases cited; O'Keeffe v. First Nat. Bank, 49 Kan. 349, 30 Pac. 473.

Messrs. W. W. S. Snoddy and E. C. Wilcox for defendants in error.

Johnston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the course of the trial the district court, in ruling upon the testimony and instructing the jury, held that the note copied in the foregoing statement is not a negotiable instrument; and the determination of this question will dispose of, or render unimportant, a number of other questions discussed by plaintiff in error. The negotiability of the paper appears to have been challenged on two grounds, and the first is that it contains a stipulation that upon default in the payment of interest the whole amount shall become due, and then draw a greater rate of interest. Stipulations like these are not inconsistent with negotiability. According to mercantile law, negotiable paper is required to be certain as to time and amount; but the note in question, as will be observed, fixes a certain time for payment, and the fact that it may become due at an earlier time depends upon the maker himself. Stipulations somewhat similar were contained in the notes and mortgages under consideration in Holden v. Clark, 16 Kan. 346; and yet it was held that the paper was negotiable, and that an innocent and bona fide purchaser took the same freed from the equities existing between the original parties. In Carlton v. Kenealy, 49 L. R. A.

12 Mees. & W. 139, it was held that a note payable in instalments, subject to a condition that upon default being made in the payment of the first instalment the greater amount should become due, is negotiable; and in deciding the case it was said that "almost every note payable in instalments has such a condition. It is not a contingency. It depends upon the act of the maker himself, and on his default it becomes a promissory note for the whole amount." In Dobbins v. Oberman, 17 Neb. 163, 22 N. W. 356, the note contained a provision that it should be due at a stated time, and might become due earlier, on the happening of a certain event. The instrument was held negotiable, and in deciding it the court stated: "It matters not, then, that it also contains a promise to pay sooner than the general date of payment, upon the happening of an uncertain event." In Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580, 35 L. R. A. 544, 68 N. W. 278, it was held that a note for the payment of a certain sum at a fixed date is not rendered non-negotiable by a provision that it may become due sooner, at the option of the holder, on default in the payment of interest, nor by the fact that a mortgage securing it contains a similar provision in regard to a default in the payment of taxes. The same question was before the Supreme Court of the United States in Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 136 U. S. 269, 34 L. ed. 349, 10 Suf. Ct. Rep. 999, where it was held that a recital that the note in suit was one of a series, and that in default of payment on any one of the series the note in suit should become due, did not render the note non-negotiable; the same containing a promise to pay at a certain definite date, at which it became due at all events. See also, De Hass v. Roberts, 59 Fed. Rep. 853; National Bank v. Dean, 86 Iowa, 656, 53 N. W. 338; Walker v. Woollen, 54 Ind. 164; Cota v. Buck, 7 Met. 588; Ernst v. Steckman, 74 Pa. 13, 15 Am. Rep. 542; Markey v. Corey, 108 Mich. 184, 36 L. R. A. 117, 66 N. W. 493; Randolph, Com. Paper, § 114; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 48. The fact that it was to draw a greater rate of interest after default does not destroy the negotiable quality of the paper. In Parker v. Plymell, 23 Kan. 402, the note contained a promise to pay interest after maturity, but stipulated that if the note was not paid at maturity the same should bear interest at 12 per cent from date, and it was held that this provision did not render the note non-negotiable. Gilmore v. Hirst, 56 Kan. 626, 44 Pac. 603, was a case where the note contained a stipulation that if the interest was not paid when due it should become principal, and draw 8 per cent interest, and it was held that the stipulation for the payment of interest on interest did not render the note non-negotiable. See also De Hass v. Roberts, 59 Fed. Rep. 853; Hope v. Barker, 112 Mo. 338, 20 S. W. 567.

The second ground of attack upon the negotiability of the note is that it was made payable with New York exchange. There is considerable division of judicial opinion as to the effect of such a stipulation, but we are better satisfied with those authorities holding that it is not destructive of negotiability. It is a general rule that one of the essential qualities of commercial paper is that the amount to be paid must be fixed and certain, and the reason for this rule is that parties to such paper may know the amount necessary to discharge it. The spirit of the rule requiring precision, however, applies rather to the principal amount than to incidental additions of interest or exchange. In Seaton v. Scoville, 18 Kan. 433, 26 Am. Rep. 779, 21 Am. Rep. 212, this court held that a note otherwise negotiable was not rendered non-negotiable by a stipulation to pay costs of collection, including reasonable attorney's fees. Although that stipulation is not analogous to the one we are considering, some of the courts place it on the same footing with a provision for the payment of exchange, and hold that both of them introduce such an element of uncertainty as to deprive the instrument of the negotiable attribute. In discussing the effect of such a stipulation, Daniel, Neg. Inst. 4th ed. § 54a, says that "instruments payable with exchange have been generally treated as commercial instruments by the business world and the courts; that a fair construction of the statute of Anne, upon which many of the modern statutes are modeled, and which has been deemed by some of the courts only declaratory of the common law, does not necessarily impeach as a note an instrument so payable; and that the spirit of the rule requiring precision in the amount of negotiable instruments applies rather to principal amount than to the ancillary and incidental additions of interest or exchange." The current rate of exchange between two places at a particular time may be said to be a matter of common knowledge, or at least easily ascertainable by anyone. However, the exchange may be treated as incidental to the principal amount, and as a means of transmitting the amount due to the payee. In Bullock v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 137, 33 Am. Rep. 356, Judge Cooley, in discussing the matter of the payment of exchange or express, said: "By the agreement, as well as by the terms of the notes, they were made payable at East Saginaw, and it therefore became the duty of the promisors to be at any expense necessary in the transmission of the money to that place. Whether they sent by draft or by express, the expense would equally fall upon them, and an express promise to pay it could add nothing to their liability." In Morgan v. Edwards, 53 Wis. 609, 40 Am. Rep. 781, 11 N. W. 23, it is said that "a note is payable in lawful money of the United States, which is at par in every portion of the country. If a note is payable in Milwaukee, with exchange on New York, it requires precisely the same sum of money to pay it as would be required had it been made payable in New York. The exchange is the cost of drawing a bill, and transmitting the money to New York to meet it. In Leggett v. Jones, 10 Wis. 35, the note was made payable at the Dodge County Bank, with exchange on New York. Had the note been payable in New York, no one would claim that there was any uncertainty in the amount, although the maker would necessarily have been subjected to the expense (uncertain in amount) of providing funds there to meet it. It is precisely that expense which constitutes and governs the cost of exchange. Hence the same sum of money which would have been required to pay the note in New York would have paid it at the Dodge County Bank, including the exchange according to its terms. . . . Hence it may well be said that the uncertainty in the amount due on a note which stipulates for the payment of exchange between two points is rather apparent than real and substantial." See also Smith v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 242, 80 Am. Dec. 83; Johnson v. Friebie, 15 Mich. 286; Bradley v. Lill, 4 Biss. 473, Fed. Cas. No. 1,783; Hastings v. Thompson, 54 Minn. 184, 21 L. R. A. 178, 55 N. W. 968; Hill v. Todd, 29 Ill. 101; Whittle v. Fond du Lac Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 1106; Orr v. Hopkins, 3 N. M. 25, 1 Pac. 181; Leggett v. Jones, 10 Wis. 35. In Randolph, Com. Paper, § 200, in speaking of the provision for exchange, it is said that "such a provision is valid, at least if it be not used as a subterfuge to avoid the usury laws." See also Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 28a; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 54.

Our conclusion is that the note in question is negotiable, and, in answer to some of the points raised in the case, it may be said that the possession of such a note, properly indorsed, is prima facie evidence that the holder is the owner thereof; that he acquired it in good faith, for value, in the usual course of business, before maturity, and without notice of any circumstance that would impeach its validity. And where the defendant, who is the maker of the note, claims that the plaintiff does not so hold it, the burden is upon him to prove his claim. Mann v. Second Nat. Bank, 34 Kan. 746, 10 Pac. 150; First Nat. Bank v. Emmitt, 52 Kan. 603, 35 Pac. 213; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 318. There is some criticism of other instructions, but, as the note is held to be negotiable, the questions are not likely to arise upon another trial; and the same is true as to rulings upon the testimony.

The judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

All the Justices concur.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

Rube HALBERT et al., Appts.,
v.

SAN SABA SPRINGS LAND & LIVE-STOCK ASSOCIATION.

(89 Tex. 230.)

Ninety full days must expire after the adjournment of the legislature before the taking effect of an act passed by it, unless an emergency clause is added, under Const. 1876, art. 3, § 39, providing that no law shall take effect or go into force "until ninety days after the adjournment of the session at which it is enacted."

(February 17, 1896.)

NOTE.—Rule as to first and last days in computation of time.

- I. General rule as to inclusion or exclusion.
- II. Early rule as to which day is counted.
- III. The modern common-law doctrine.
 - a. General rules.
 - b. Application and reasons for.
- IV. The statutory rule.
 - a. Statement and effect of.
 - b. Application of.
- V. Construction of particular provisions as to time.

- a. Difference in language of provisions.
- b. "From" or "after" a day or event.
- c. "Before" a day or event.
- d. "Within" a designated period.
- e. "Between" designated dates or events.
- f. "Until" a designated time or event.
- g. Notice without reference to terminal.

- h. "At least" prefacing period of time.
- VI. The rule when Sunday or a holiday is the first or last day.

- a. At common law.
- b. The statutory rule.

- VII. Application of rules with reference to subject-matter and surrounding circumstances.

- a. General rule.
- b. To contracts.
 1. General and miscellaneous.
 2. Negotiable instruments.
 3. Insurance policies.
 4. Leases and rental contracts.
- c. To statutes of limitations.
 1. In civil actions.
 2. In criminal prosecutions.
- d. To provisions for time in civil actions.
 1. General statement as to.
 2. Service and return of process.
 3. Pleading.
 4. Notices of trial.
 5. Notices, motions, and proceedings in general.
 6. Attachment, replevin, and arrest.
 7. Rendition and docketing of judgments.
- e. To provisions for time in criminal cases and penal actions.
- f. To provisions for time in proceedings for review.
 1. Motions for new trial.
 2. Appeal, error, review.
 3. Steps taken to perfect appeal.

QUESTION certified by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth Supreme Judicial District arising in an appeal by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Sutton County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain sheep and goats.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. G. Tayloe, L. N. Halbert, and Cochran & Hill, for appellants:

At the time appellee filed its articles of incorporation in the department of state there was no law of Texas permitting the formation of corporations for the purposes specified in its charter, the law authorizing the creation of corporations for the purposes

VII.—continued.

g. To executions.

1. Notices and sale under, generally.

2. Redemption from sale under.

h. To sales under mortgages and trust deeds.

i. To mechanic's liens.

j. To taxes.

1. Assessment and collection.

2. Redemption from tax sales.

k. To eminent domain.

l. To matters of administration of estates.

m. To proceedings to dispossess tenant or distrain for rent.

n. To bankruptcy and insolvency laws.

o. To poor-debtor acts.

p. To provisions for recording and filing instruments.

q. To enactment and taking effect of statutes and resolutions.

r. To elections and offices.

s. Miscellaneous provisions for time.

VIII. Conclusion.

I. General rule as to inclusion or exclusion.

The general rule adopted under the old common law, as well as by the more modern cases and under the statutes, is that, in the computation of time one day, either the first or the last, is included and the other excluded. Reed v. Sexton, 20 Kan. 195; Re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 632, 21 Pac. 475; Sanders v. Norton, 4 T. B. Mon. 464; Mitchell v. Woodson, 87 Miss. 567; Gillespie v. White, 16 Johns. 117; Small v. Edrick, 5 Wend. 137; Columbia Turnp. Road v. Haywood, 10 Wend. 422; Irving v. Humphrey, Hopk. Ch. 304; Re Carhart, 2 Dem. 627; Kling v. Goodenough, 2 Ad. & Kl. 463.

And this is the general rule whether the computation is from the event or act or from the day of the event. Sanders v. Norton, 4 T. B. Mon. 464.

Where any particular number of days not expressed to be clear days is prescribed, time is to be computed not to exclude both days, but to exclude the one and include the other. State ex rel. Lewis v. Eggleston, 34 Kan. 714, 10 Pac. 3; Walsh v. Boyle, 30 Md. 262; State, Stroud, Prosecutor, v. Consumers' Water Co. 56 N. J. L. 422, 28 Atl. 578.

And where a statute requires an act to be performed a certain number of days prior to a day named, or within a definite period after a day or event specified, or where time is to be computed either prior or subsequent to a day named, the rule is to exclude one day of the named in said charter having been repealed prior to the execution and filing of said articles of incorporation, and said charter was without authority of law, illegal, and void.

Tex. Rev. Stat. 1879, art. 566, subd. 27; Tex. Const. 1876, art. 3, § 39; O'Connor v. Towns, 1 Tex. 107; Hollis v. Francois, 1 Tex. 118; Burr v. Lewis, 6 Tex. 76; Lubbock v. Cook, 49 Tex. 96; Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 177, 17 L. ed. 822; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 111, 112; State v. Mounts, 36 W. Va. 179, 15 L. R. A. 243, 14 S. E. 407; Hyde v. White, 24 Tex. 137; Young v. Van Benthuyssen, 30 Tex. 768; Smith v. Dickey, 74 Tex. 61, 11 S. W. 1049; Hill v. Kerr, 78 Tex. 213, 14 S. W. 568; Linhart v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 504, 27 S. W. 260; Hammons v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 17, 29 S. W. 780; Griffith v. Bogert, 18 How. 158, note in 15 L. ed. 307; Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 507, 19 Am. Rep. 470.

designated period and include the other. Stebbins v. Anthony, 5 Colo. 348; Re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 632, 21 Pac. 475.

In the above case, Small v. Edrick, 5 Wend. 158; Columbia Turnp. Road v. Haywood, 10 Wend. 423; Thomas v. Aflick, 16 Pa. 14, infra, VII. d, 5; and Early v. Doe, ex dem. Homans, 16 How. 615, 14 L. ed. 1081,—were distinguished upon the ground that in those cases the language of the statute was different.

This rule, however, is subject to many exceptions, growing out of the language of the provisions for the period of time to be computed, and arising from peculiar facts and circumstances of the particular cases to which the rule is sought to be applied. And the question as to which of the first and last days of a period of time shall be included in the computation, and which shall be excluded, has not only given rise to much conflict of authority, but has also been determined differently and on different theories in different periods and jurisdictions; and this question, like the general one of inclusion of one day and exclusion of the other, has been variously decided with a view to the language of the particular provision for the period to be computed, and the peculiar facts and circumstances surrounding the particular case with reference to which the computation is to be made.

II. Early rule as to which day is counted.

The rule of the older cases supported and retained by some of the more modern ones was that where a computation of time was to be made from an act done or from the time of an act, the day when the act was done was to be included. Priest v. Tarlton, 3 N. H. 93; Spencer v. Champion, 13 Conn. 11; Swift v. Tousey, 5 Ind. 196; Jacobs v. Graham, 1 Blackf. 392; Leavenworth Coal Co. v. Barber, 47 Kan. 20, 27 Pac. 114; Lebus v. Wayne-Ratterman Co. 14 Ky. L. Rep. 794, 21 S. W. 652; Butler v. Fessenden, 12 Cush. 78; Cunningham v. Phillips, Tappan (Ohio) 132; Lubbock v. Cook, 49 Tex. 96; Griffith v. Bogert, 18 How. 158, 15 L. ed. 307; Arnold v. United States, 9 Cranch, 104, 3 L. ed. 671; Glassington v. Rawlins, 3 East, 407; Bellasis v. Hester, 1 Ld. Raym. 280; Castle v. Purditt, 3 T. R. 623; Norris v. Hurdred de Gautris, 2 Rolle Abr. 520.

In Swift v. Tousey, 5 Ind. 196, supra, it was said that Hathaway v. Hathaway, 2 Ind. 513, infra, VII. b, 1, based on the authority of the late English decisions, must be regarded as directly overruling the former cases on the subject.

49 L. R. A.

On motion for rehearing.

It is a rule of the English common law, well and firmly settled since the case of Mercer v. Ogilvie, 3 Paton, 434, that when a given number of days is required to elapse between one act and another the day of the one is excluded and the day of the other included.

Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, 19 Am. Rep. 470; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. pp. 3-14; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 111, 112; Cressey v. Parks, 75 Me. 387, 46 Am. Rep. 406.

So generally recognized is this rule, says Mr. Sutherland (Stat. Constr. p. 137), "that it requires no particular words for its application."

The rule of computing time by excluding one and including the other day of the specified period is the rule adopted in other jurisdictions for determining, under constitu-

As a general rule, except where it was necessary in order to settle which of two acts done on the same day was to prevail, the law took no notice of part of a day, and the first day to be counted was the day any part of which was occupied in a particular business, which was to endure for a certain number of days in order to fulfil any requirement of the law. Migotti v. Colvill, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 233, 48 L. J. C. P. N. S. 695, 40 L. T. N. S. 747, 27 Week. Rep. 744, 14 Cox C. C. 305.

And the rule of computation was to include the first day and exclude the last. Thomas v. Aflick, 16 Pa. 14; Loosse v. Vogel, 80 Ala. 308; Bailey v. Lubke, 8 Mo. App. 57.

In the computation of time from a date or from a day of a date, the day of the date was to be excluded; but where a computation was to be made from an act done, or from the time of an act, the day in which the act was done was to be included. Re Soldiers' Voting Bill, 45 N. II. 607; Lefavour v. Bartlett, 42 N. H. 555; Bell v. Adams, 10 N. H. 181; Blake v. Crowninshield, 9 N. H. 304; Frankfort v. Farmers' Bank, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1635, 49 S. W. 811; Moor v. Covington City Nat. Bank, 80 Ky. 305; Long v. Hughes, 1 Duv. 387; Handley v. Cunningham, 12 Bush, 403; Wood v. Com. 11 Bush, 220; Chiles v. Smith, 13 B. Mon. 460; White v. Crutcher, 1 Bush, 472; Flint v. Sawyer, 30 Me. 226; Perry v. Provident L. Ins. & Invest. Co. 99 Mass. 162; Atklas v. Sleeper, 7 Allen, 487; Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486; McCulloch v. Hopper, 47 N. J. L. 189, 54 Am. Rep. 146; Orth v. McCook (Ohio) 14 West. L. Month. 215; Wayne v. Duffy, 1 Phila. 367; Hampton v. Erenzeller, 2 Browne (Pa.) 18; Lubbock v. Cook, 49 Tex. 96; Burr v. Lewis, 6 Tex. 76; Bellasis v. Hester, 1 Ld. Raym. 280; Howard's Case, 1 Ld. Raym. 430; Clayton's Case, 5 Coke, 1, 1 Bulst. 177.

When an act was to be performed within a particular period from or after a specified day, the proper method of computing time was to exclude the day named and include the day on which the act was to be done. Ewing v. Bailey, 5 Ill. 420; Harper v. Ely, 56 Ill. 179; Goode v. Webb, 52 Ala. 452; Lang v. Phillips, 27 Ala. 312; English v. Williamson, 34 Kan. 212, 8 Pac. 214; Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 970; Rigelow v. Willison, 1 Pick. 485; Fuller v. Russell, 6 Gray, 128; Rand v. Rand, 4 N. H. 267; Thomas v. Aflick, 16 Pa. 14; Best v. Polk, 18 Wall. 112, sub nom. Best v. Doe, ex dem. Polk, 21 L. ed. 805.

Unless it appeared that a different computational and statutory provisions, the time "at" which an act of the legislature becomes operative.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 213-219, and notes; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 111, 112, and notes; Bishop, Written Laws, 107; State v. Mounts, 36 W. Va. 179, 15 L. R. A. 243, 14 S. E. 407; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 61.

The Constitution having been framed in the light of the common law of England, and by its express language having kept in force as the rule of the decision that great system of laws, should we not read its provisions by the light they afford? We think so.

Ryan v. Porter, 61 Tex. 108.

By the first statute the computation was to be made from "after the day of the adjournment," and by the Constitution it is changed so as to be made from "after the adjournment," omitting the words "the day of" before the words "the adjournment."

tion was intended. Goode v. Webb, 52 Ala. 452.

And the full time was to be given exclusive of such day or date. Engliah v. Williamson, 34 Kan. 212, 8 Pac. 214.

The rule was that the words, "from the day of the date," in a provision for a period of time, excluded the day, while, "from the date," included it. Howard's Case, 2 Salk. 625.

But when time was to be computed from the time of an act done the day on which the act was done was to be excluded. Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486.

A distinction was made in the computation of time from an act done and from the day of the date of an instrument; the day of the date of the instrument was excluded in the computation, and the day upon which the act was done was included. Dickinson v. Lee, 2 Coldw. 615.

And in cases that depended, not upon writings dated, but upon time to be reckoned from an act done, the time was reckoned by including the day on which the act was done. Norris v. Hundred of Gawtry, Hobart, 139, Brownlow & G. 156.

The computation of time from the date of a deed, commenced on the day the deed was dated, including that day. Seignoret v. Noguire, 2 Ld. Raym. 1241.

And the words "from the date," when used to pass an interest conveyed from one to another, as in a lease for years, included the day of the date; but in matters of account, where no interest was designed to be passed, the day of the date was excluded. Hatter v. Ash, 1 Ld. Raym. 85.

And where a note or other obligation was payable in a certain number of days from date the day of the date was always excluded in the computation of the time. Avery v. Stewart, 2 Conn. 69, 7 Am. Dec. 240.

Where the computation of time was to be made from an act done, the day on which the act was performed was included, because the act was the terminus a quo the computation was to be made, there being in contemplation of law no fractions of a day, and therefore the terminus was to be considered as commencing the first moment of the day; but where the expression was "from the date" the rule was that if a present interest was to commence from the date, the day of the date was included, but if it was used merely to fix a terminus from which to compute time, the day was in all cases excluded. Pearpoint v. Graham, 4 Wash. C. C. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 10,877.

So, in Taylor v. Jacoby, 2 Pa. 495, 45 Am. 49 L. R. A.

"Where the computation is to be made from an act done, the day on which the act is done is to be included."

Arnold v. United States, 9 Cranch, 104, 3 L. ed. 671.

Mr. W. W. Hermon, for appellee:

Such a construction should be given as would operate most to the ease of the parties entitled to favor, and by which rights would be secured and forfeitures avoided.

O'Connor v. Towns, 1 Tex. 114.

If there is any doubt in the minds of the court such doubt should be solved in favor of appellee, for thereby the court would secure the rights of appellee and avoid the forfeiture of its charter.

In case of days of grace three entire days are meant.

Watkins v. Willis, 58 Tex. 523; Young v. Van Benthuysen, 30 Tex. 768.

To obviate the injustice of a rule which

Dec. 615, the rule was stated that the words, "from or after the date or the day of the date," include the day, when they are used in a conveyance to create an estate, but that they exclude it when they are used in an instrument to perpetuate the evidence of a debt.

And in Mound City Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Twinling, 19 Kan. 340, it was said to be the general rule that if time is to be computed from an act, or from an act done, a year would terminate at the close of the 365th day, but where time is to be computed from a date, or from the day of the date, the year would terminate only at the close of the 366th day. But the question was one as to whether or not insurance premiums were paid in season, and not one of first and last days.

So, in Demis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, 19 Am. Rep. 470, it was said that all the cases in which the day of the date or of an act is excluded are founded upon some statute or contract in which there is language, "from the time," or the like equivalent to "from the day" or "from the date."

But while, in a majority of cases where time was to be computed from some event or act done, the day within which the event transpired or the act was done was included, it was excluded whenever such exclusion would prevent an estoppel or save a forfeiture. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 1 Kan. App. 197, 40 Pac. 1099; Windsor v. China, 4 Me. 298; State ex rel. Heltemeyer v. Gasconade County Ct. 33 Mo. 102; Dowell v. Vinton, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 327.

See also early English and American cases applying this doctrine, infra, VII.

III. The modern common-law doctrine.

a. General rules.

In Seward v. Hayden, 150 Mass. 158, 5 L. R. A. 844, 22 N. E. 620, it was said that the distinction between computation from a day or a date and computation from an act done or from an event, made by many of the earlier cases, does not rest upon a sound principle, and is no longer recognized in most jurisdictions.

And in Blake v. Crowninshield, 9 N. H. 304, and Elder v. Bradley, 2 Sneed, 247, it was said that the tendency of the modern cases is to exclude the day of an act or an event in the computation of time, unless for a special reason it is necessary to include it.

And the general rule now is that in computing time, whether from the date or the day of would compel parties at their peril to know and obey a law of which, in the nature of things, they could not possibly have heard, the Constitution gives to all parties the full constitutional period in which to become acquainted with the terms of the statutes which are passed, except when the legislature has otherwise directed.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 188; Smith v. Cassidy, 9 B. Mon. 192, 48 Am. Dec. 420; Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Dec. 252.

Suppose the Constitution of Texas had said that no law shall go into effect until one day after the adjournment of the legislature. Then if the law should go into effect the first moment of the day following the adjournment of the legislature there would be no time at all between the day of the adjournment of the legislature and the day when the law would go into effect, and the intention of the Constitution to give one day would be disregarded and set at naught. The same rule applies to the case when ninety days are allowed as to the case where one day would be given.

Warren v. Slade, 23 Mich. 5, 9 Am. Rep. 70; Price v. Hopkin, 13 Mich. 326; Biggs v. McBride, 17 Or. 640, 5 L. R. A. 115, 21 Pac. 879; American Salt Co. v. Heidenheimer, 80 Tex. 347, 15 S. W. 1039; Hill v. Faison, 27 Tex. 431; Stephenson v. Texas & P. R. Co. 42 Tex. 169.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court of civil appeals has certified to this court the following statement and question: "On June 29th, 1885, the San Saba Springs Land & Live-Stock Association was chartered by the state of Texas, the purpose the date, or from a certain act or event, the day of the date or event is to be excluded. Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, 19 Am. Rep. 470; Fuller v. Russell, 6 Gray. 128; Evans v. Bowers, 13 Colo. 511, 22 Pac. 812; Teucher v. Hiatt, 23 Iowa, 527, 92 Am. Dec. 440; Seward v. Hayden, 150 Mass. 158, 5 L. R. A. 844, 22 N. E. 629; Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286; McCulloch v. Hopper, 47 N. J. L. 189, 54 Am. Rep. 146; Vandenburgh v. Van Rensselaer, 6 Paige, 147; Phelan v. Douglass, 11 How. Pr. 193; Judd v. Fulton, 10 Barb. 117; Roman v. Liswell, 6 Cow. 659; Cornell v. Moulton, 3 Denio, 12; Ex parte Dean, 2 Cow. 605, 14 Am. Dec. 521; Seaman v. Eager, 18 Ohio St. 209; Kimm v. Osgood, 19 Mo. 60; Re Goswiler, 3 Penr. & W. 200; McCready v. McGovern, 1 Kulp, 474; Hood v. Loughery, 24 Pittsb. L. J. 139; Cromellin v. Brink, 20 Pa. 523; Boyer v. Northern C. R. Co. 1 Pearson (Pa.) 113; Re Simpson, 20 Pitts. L. J. N. S. 402; Smith v. Dickey, 74 Tex. 61, 11 S. W. 1049; Lubbock v. Cook, 49 Tex. 96; Spear v. State, 2 Tex. App. 246; Hunter v. Lanlus, 82 Tex. 677, 18 S. W. 201; Young v. Higgon, 6 Mees. & W. 53, 8 Dowl. P. C. 212.

Unless it appears that a different computation was intended. Lubbock v. Cook, 49 Tex. 96; Burr v. Lewis, 6 Tex. 76; Hunter v. Lanlus, 82 Tex. 680, 18 S. W. 201.

Or unless there be some special provision requiring a definite mode of computation. Rex v. Cumberland, 4 Nev. & M. 378, 1 Harr. & W. 16; King v. Goodenough, 2 Ad. & El. 463.

In Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, 19 Am. Rep. 470, supra. It was said that Wheeler v. Bent, 4 Pick. 167, infra, VII. f. 2, was decided summarily and without argument, and that it might be difficult to reconcile it with the words of the statute or the decisions of other courts. And Butler v. Fessenden, 12 Cush. 73, supra, II. was explained, the court saying that the point adjudged in that case was that by the settled practice in computing the time of service before the return day of process the day of service is included. And the statement in Atkins v. Sleeper, 7 Allen, 487, repeated in Perry v. Provident L. Ins. & Invest. Co. 99 Mass. 162, supra, II., that where time is computed from an act done the general rule is to include the day, was said to be dictum, and aside from the decision of the court in each case, as in the first the computation was to be made from a certain day and was held to exclude that day, and in the second whether the day was included or excluded made no difference in the result, and that it is supported by none of the authorities cited except upon 49 L. R. A.

grounds which have been expressly repudiated in Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. 485, infra.

The rule is to exclude the first day, and include the last. York's Case, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 503, Fed. Cas. No. 18,139; Re Fortner, 2 Harr. (Del.) 461; Morrison v. Morrison, 3 Del. Co. Rep. 31, 3 Lanc. L. Rev. 272; Winston v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 59, 22 S. W. 138; Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. Gootee, 61 U. S. App. 617, 89 Fed. Rep. 941, 32 C. C. A. 436; Rex v. Cumberland, 4 Nev. & M. 378, 1 Harr. & W. 16; King v. Goodenough, 2 Ad. & El. 463.

Though each case depends upon the reason of the thing according to the circumstances. Teucher v. Hiatt, 23 Iowa, 527, 92 Am. Dec. 440.

And the rule excluding the first day from the computation of a period of time is uniform, whether the question arises upon the practice of the court or the construction of a statute. Cornell v. Moulton, 3 Denio, 12.

And in computing the time within which an act is required to be done, there is no distinction between the expression "from the date" and "from the day of the date." In the provision for the performance of such act. Price v. Whitman, 8 Cal. 412.

The method of computing time by Scotch law is that the terminus a quo the day or the date of the deed must be excluded, and the time reckoned independently of it. Lawford v. Davies, 47 L. J. Prob. N. S. 38, 39 L. T. N. S. 111, 26 Week. Rep. 424, L. R. 4 Prob. Div. 61.

But the rule that in computing time from a day or a date the day or date is to be excluded is not inflexible, and in the interpretation of a statute or contract it yields to a manifest purpose or intention in conflict with it. Seward v. Hayden, 150 Mass. 158, 5 L. R. A. 844, 22 N. E. 629; Re Fortner, 2 Harr. (Del.) 461; Taylor v. Brown, 147 U. S. 640, 37 L. ed. 313, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 549.

No absolute rule in computing time from an act or an event, that the day is to be inclusive or exclusive, exists; the question depends on the reason of the thing according to the circumstances. Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. Jr. 248; State v. Asbury, 26 Tex. 83; Taylor v. Brown, 5 Dak. 335, 40 N. W. 525; Price v. Whitman, 8 Cal. 412.

And the days from and to which the time is to be computed should be included or excluded according to the context and subject-matter so as to effectuate the intent of the parties, and not to destroy it. Williamson v. Farrow, 1 Ball. L. 611, 21 Am. Dec. 492; Manning v. Dove, 10 Rich. L. 395; Taylor v. Brown, 147 U. S. 640, 37 L. ed. 313, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 549; Texas of the corporation being specified as 'the raising, breeding, owning, buying, selling, and trading in live stock of all kinds, or in such as the corporation may see fit; and also the owning, buying, selling, and trading in real estate in the state of Texas, and in any other state or territory of the United States or the Republic of Mexico.' The charter was granted by virtue of subdivision 27, art. 566, Rev. Stat. Question. Was article 566, Rev. Stat., in force on June 29, 1885, or had the act of March 27, 1885, gone into effect, thereby repealing said article?"

The object of the constitutional convention in prescribing a period of time within which no law enacted by the legislature should be operative was to give notice to the people of its passage, that they might obey it when it should become effective, and also to enable them to adjust their affairs to the change made, if any. Price v. Hopkin, 13 Mich. 325. The law which requires citation to be served five days before the return day thereof is analogous to the constitutional provision, in that each is intended to fix a time for giving notice of an event which is to occur, or a thing that is to be done, the first to an individual, the latter to all persons; and we might well apply the rule that the entire period of time mentioned is to expire between the two dates named, as, for instance, that the day of service and the day of return in service of citation must both be excluded in the computation of the time. Applying that rule in this case, the day of adjournment of the legislature and the day that the law shall take effect would be likewise excluded in the computation of time prescribed by the Constitution; that is, ninety full days must expire between the adjourn-

& P. R. Co. v. Goodson, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 27; State v. Asbury, 26 Tex. 83; O'Connor v. Towns, 1 Tex. 107; Taylor v. Brown, 5 Dak. 335, 40 S. W. 525.

And such a construction should be given as will operate most to the ease of the party entitled to favor. State v. Asbury, 26 Tex. 83; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Goodson, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 27; O'Connor v. Towns, 1 Tex. 107.

And it would tend to avoid forfeitures. O'Connor v. Towns, 1 Tex. 107; Winston v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 59, 22 S. W. 138; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Goodson, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 27; Blake v. Crowninshield, 9 N. H. 304; Dowling v. Foxall, 1 Ball & B. 195.

And the day from which the reckoning commenced, and that on which it terminates, may both be included or excluded as will best preserve a right or prevent a forfeiture. State ex rel. Stock v. Schnierle, 5 Rich. L. 299.

A forfeiture will be avoided unless required by the positive words of the statute. Dowling v. Foxall, 1 Ball & B. 195.

So, no rule with reference to the inclusion or exclusion of the first or last day in computing time has been enforced so strictly as to defeat the intention of the parties, as that is always paramount to all other considerations. Blackman v. Nearing, 43 Conn. 56.

And, where a time is referred to as a terminus a quo, in computation, the first day is excluded, except in cases where it is necessary to include it in order to vest an interest or prevent a forfeiture or the divesting of a right, and in all cases where a point of time or the doing of an act is referred to merely as a terminus from which to measure time, the day of the date of the act should be excluded. Millard v. Willard, 3 R. I. 42.

But while, as a general rule, in computing time the first day is to be excluded, when the entire validity of an instrument or a title must fail, and the true intentions of the parties be defeated, unless the first day be included, it should be done. Price v. Whitman, 8 Cal. 412.

And a construction of a statute providing for a period of time which would exclude the day of the date will not be adopted where it is invoked, not to avoid a forfeiture or confirm a title, but to destroy one obtained by a purchaser in good faith under the sanction of a public judicial sale. Griffith v. Bogert, 18 How. 158, 15 L. ed. 307.

The general principle is that time will be so computed as to save the right intended to be favored by the law or to be secured by the 49 L. R. A.

parties to the contract. Turner v. Odum, 3 Coldw. 455; Jones v. Planters' Bank, 5 Humph. 619, 42 Am. Dec. 471.

And the day on which an act is done is included or excluded in the computation of a period of time running therefrom, as the case requires a rigorous or liberal construction. Ege's Appeal, 2 Watts, 283.

And where the construction of the language of a statute providing for the time of performance of an act is doubtful, courts will always prefer that which will confirm, rather than destroy, any bona fide transaction or title, and the intention and policy of the enactment should be sought for and carried out. Griffiths v. Bogert, 18 How. 158, 15 L. ed. 307.

The rule, however, that in computing time from or after the day of a given date the day is to be excluded, is never to be rejected unless it appears that a different computation was intended. Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. 435.

So, in Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. Gootee, 61 U. S. App. 617, 89 Fed. Rep. 941, 32 C. C. A. 436, it was said that much of the confusion existing concerning the report of decisions of the cases involving the computation of time with reference to the inclusion or exclusion of the first and last days will be found, on a close examination of the opinions of the courts, to be owing to the desire to give due effect to the meaning of the parties as expressed in the language or phrases used in each case.

For application of these rules to particular subjects and cases, see infra, VII.

b. Application and reasons for.

The rule that, in construing instruments with reference to the time of performance of an act provided for therein, they should be so construed, if possible, as that rights depending upon them should be upheld and not destroyed, embraces every instrument or contract as well as wills, and applies as forcibly to the construction of statutes and all proceedings under them as to other papers. Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Dec. 249; People v. New York C. R. Co. 28 Barb. 284. And see Cornell v. Moulton, 3 Denio, 12, supra.

Not only mercantile contracts, such as bills of exchange, promissory notes, and policies of insurance, but also wills and all other instruments are to be understood and construed so that the day of the date or the day of the act from which a future time is to be ascertained is to be excluded from the calculation. Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Dec. 249.

But the rule of interpretation which excludes ment of the legislature and the taking effect of the law. O'Connor v. Towns, 1 Tex. 107.

Article 3, § 39, of the Constitution of 1876, reads as follows: "No law passed by the legislature, except the general appropriation act, shall take effect or go into force until ninety days after the adjournment of the session at which it was enacted, unless in case of an emergency, which emergency must be expressed in a preamble or in the body of the act," etc. At the time this constitutional provision was adopted, the act of December 1, 1849 (Paschal's Anno. Dig. art. 457C), was in force, which is in this language: "Every law hereafter made, shall commence and be in force with the commencement of the sixtieth day after the day of the adjournment of the session of the legislature at which such law may be passed, unless in the law itself another time for the commencement thereof is particularly mentioned." The construction of the Constitution urged by appellants' counsel would require that we change the language so as to read "until the ninetieth day," which would accord with the law as it then existed. But the convention did not use that language. From the change of the language, it must be presumed that there was an intention to change the rule fixed by the law upon the subject. Oriental Hotel Co. v. Griffiths, 88 Tex. 574, 30 L. R. A. 765, 33 S. W. 661. The changes plainly made are that the period of time is enlarged from sixty to ninety days; the legislature is prohibited from putting any law into effect in less time than that named, save in the excepted classes mentioned; and, instead of saying that the law shall take effect at the commencement of the ninetieth day, it is said "until ninety the first, and includes the last, day, has no application to a provision which is clear and explicit, and can only be invoked where the act is to be done within a certain number of days or a specified period of time; whenever the statute says after the expiration of a day named, that day must fully expire. Marvin v. Marvin, 75 N. Y. 240.

And whenever the whole day and every moment of it can be counted then it should be, but whenever, if counted, the party would in fact have a fractional part of it only, then it should not be counted. Phelan v. Douglass, 11 How. Pr. 193.

The reason for the rule that in computation of time the first day will be excluded is, that the law takes no notice of fractions of a day, except in certain cases where the hour itself becomes material, and time is not, therefore, computed from the hour of the day on which the event happened to the corresponding hour of the day of performance, but the computation is from the day when the act was done, such day being regarded as a point of time, and the computation begins from the expiration of such day, as, if counted, it would fail to give the party to be affected the whole of that day, but only a fractional part of it. Ibid.

But such reason ceases whenever the party affected has a whole and entire day as one of those to be included in the computation. Ibid.

See also infra, VII., Application of rules with reference to subject-matter and surrounding circumstances.

IV. The statutory rule.

a. Statement and effect of.

In many jurisdictions there are statutes or rules of court providing, either explicitly or substantially, that the time within which an act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, unless the last is Sunday or a holiday, in which case it also shall be excluded.

The rule thus laid down has been held to be merely declaratory of the law as it previously existed. Womack v. McAhren, 9 Ind. 6; Batman v. Megowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533; Hahn v. Dierkes, 37 Mo. 574; People v. Burgess, 153 N. Y. 561, 47 N. E. 889; Carothers v. Wheeler, 1 Or. 194; Lutz's Appeal, 124 Pa. 273, 16 Atl. 858.

And not to change the existing rule with reference to the first and last days, except, perhaps, to more definitely fix the event from which the count is to be made. People v. Burgess, 153 N. Y. 561, 47 N. E. 889. 49 L. R. A.

Thus, in computing the time under the New York statutory rule, the first day, or the day on which the time begins to run, is to be excluded. Judd v. Fulton, 4 How. Pr. 298; Rae v. National L. Ins. Co. 20 U. S. App. 410, 60 Fed. Rep. 690, 9 C. C. A. 215.

And in matters of practice the day on which any rule shall be entered, or order, notice, pleading, or paper served, is to be excluded in the computation of time for complying with the exigency of such rule, order, notice, pleading or paper; and the day on which a compliance therewith is required is included, except when it falls on Sunday, in which case the party has the next day to comply therewith. Bissell v. Bissell, 11 Barb. 96.

So, under the Missouri statutes the time within which an act may be done is to be computed by excluding the first day and including the last. Hodgson v. Banking-House, 9 Mo. App. 24.

And under N. H. Rev. Stat. chap. 1, § 25, one uniform rule for the computation of time is established, which excludes the day of the date of an act in all cases not specially provided for. Lefavour v. Bartlett, 42 N. H. 555.

And in Kentucky, where in the computation of a period of time the first day is excluded, the last day must be counted as one of the intermediate days. Batman v. Megowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533.

In the above case it was said that in Smith v. Cassidy, 9 B. Mon. 192, 48 Am. Dec. 420, infra, VII. f, 2, the rule that in the computation of time if the first day be excluded, the last day must be counted, was recognized as the correct one, but that it was inadvertently misapplied; and that no new rule was asserted in Chiles v. Smith, 13 B. Mon. 460, infra, VII. f, 2; but that the then existing rule was merely stated and exemplified, and the matter of ascertaining and determining when the day on which an act was done or an event occurred was to be computed as part of the time, was rendered definite and certain.

Where a state statute as to time for the performance of an act has been construed by courts of the state in a suit between the parties, their construction will prevail as to the parties under that statute in suits in the Federal court. Griffith v. Bogert, 18 How. 158, 15 L. ed. 307.

b. Application of.

The statutes and rules providing for the computation of time are very different in their range of application.

Thus, Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 6570, providing that the time within which an act is to be done days," etc. If the convention had intended that a law to be thereafter passed should take effect on the ninetieth day after adjournment of the legislature, it would have been easy and natural to have used the language of the law then in force. It cannot be claimed that it was intended that the law should go into effect at an earlier date than the ninetieth day, and the only change that could result from the language used is that it should take effect at a later date than that which would be expressed by language similar to that of the then-existing law.

The language "until ninety days" is incomplete and meaningless if we construe it alone by the words used, and therefore it becomes necessary, in order to arrive at the intention of the framers of the Constitution, to supply those words which have evidently been omitted. Mr. Sutherland says:

shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, and if the last be Sunday it shall be excluded, is intended to furnish a general rule for the computation of the time mentioned in all statutes, unless the terms used therein make such construction inadmissible. St. Louis v. Bambrick, 41 Mo. App. 648.

And the provision of Neb. Code, § 895, to that effect, was intended to establish a uniform rule applicable alike to the construction of statutes and to matters of practice. McGinn v. State, 46 Neb. 427, 30 L. R. A. 450, 65 N. W. 46.

And Hill's (Or.) Code, § 519, making the same provision, applies to all computations of time, and is not limited to cases in which the time is expressed in days. Grant v. Paddock, 30 Or. 312, 47 Pac. 715.

So, Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4951, providing that, unless otherwise specially provided, the time within which an act is required by law to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, and if the last be Sunday it shall be excluded, applies to all computations of time under the provisions of the Code. Chicago Label & Box Co. v. Washburn, 15 Ohio C. C. 510.

And Minn. Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 66, § 82, to that effect, is not confined to matters of practice in the courts, but is intended to establish a uniform rule for the computation of time, applicable, at least, to all cases arising under that chapter, whether the question arises in matters of practice or in the construction of statutes. Spencer v. Haug, 45 Minn. 231, 47 N. W. 794; Johnson v. Merritt, 50 Minn. 303, 52 N. W. 863.

But the statutory rule for computing time, excluding the first and including the last day, but excluding it when it is Sunday, applies only when it is necessary to have a rule for ascertaining the first or the last day on which a thing may be done, and when the first or last day is expressed it does not apply. Northwestern Guaranty Loan Co. v. Channell, 53 Minn. 269, 55 N. W. 121.

So Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1280, to that effect, prescribes the rule for the computation of time in all civil actions. Wright v. Manns, 111 Ind. 422, 12 N. E. 160.

But the Indiana statute has reference to matters properly falling within the Code of Civil Procedure, and not to matters in no way connected therewith. Vogel v. State ex rel. Land, 107 Ind. 374, 8 N. E. 164.

And it has no application to the office of justice of the peace, as neither the office nor any-
49 L. R. A.

"Where one word has been erroneously used for another, or a word omitted, and the context affords the means of correction, the proper word will be deemed substituted or supplied." Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 260. Ninety days is the period of time intended to be prescribed by the Constitution which must elapse after the legislature adjourns before a law enacted by that body can become operative, but this is not expressed by the words used, neither can it be said that eighty-nine days or any less number must elapse if we regard only the words used. In fact, nothing definite and certain can be determined from these words; but, by supplying the words evidently omitted, we can read the provision as if it had been written thus, "until the expiration of ninety days after the adjournment of the legislature"; or, "until a period of ninety days shall have elapsed thing relating to it is provided for by the Code. Ibid.

And Ky. Code Pr. § 681, providing that if a certain number of days be required to intervene between two acts the day of one only of the acts may be counted, does not apply where the computation is to be made from an act done as distinguished from the day of the act done. Frankfort v. Farmers' Bank, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1635, 40 S. W. 811.

So, the Tennessee statute, which is the same as that of Minnesota and Indiana, applies when the computation begins from the beginning of some event or the performance of some act within a given length of time thereafter, and when it is indispensable in order that some right may be saved or that some liability may be avoided, but does not apply where the provision is that some act, like the service of a summons, shall be done a designated number of days before a specified day or event. Dickinson v. Lee, 2 Coldw. 615.

But the similar provision of the Dakota Code of Civil Procedure, § 6, applies only to matters of practice in the territory, and does not fix the rule concerning matters of a general nature to which it has no relation, such as a limitation in a patent granted to an Indian under the statutes of the United States. Taylor v. Brown, 5 Dak. 335, 40 N. W. 525.

Under the Florida common-law rule of court, 63, in all cases in which any particular number of days not expressed to be clear days is prescribed by the rules of practice of the courts, they are to be computed exclusively of the first day and inclusively of the last, unless the last shall happen to fall on Sunday or on certain other specified days, and then the time is to be reckoned exclusively of the last day also. Crawford v. Feder, 27 Fla. 323, 8 So. 642.

See also infra, VII., as to Application of rules with reference to subject-matter and surrounding circumstances.

And see infra, VI. b, as to application when last day falls on Sunday or a holiday.

V. Construction of particular provisions as to time.

a. Difference in language of provisions.

While the larger share of provisions, whether statutory or contractual, under which a computation of time is involved, requires a reckoning of a designated period from or after a particular time or event, provisions frequently occur when the reckoning is to be backwards from a designated time or event. Likewise, an act is often after the adjournment of the legislature." The words supplied are consistent with the context and in harmony with the purposes of the convention in framing the section quoted. It is also in harmony with the previous decisions of this court in construing statutes upon the subject of notice, and we conclude that this provision of the Constitution should be construed as if the language had been used that is above supplied. Section 43 of article 12 of the Constitution of 1869 provided: "The statutes of limitation of civil suits were suspended by the so-called 'Act of Secession,' 28th of January, 1861, and shall be considered as suspended within this state until the acceptance of this Constitution by the United States Congress." The Constitution was accepted on the 30th day of March, 1870. In the case of Dowell v. Vinton this provision of the Constitution of 1869 was construed by the court of appeals, the question being whether or not limitation commenced to run on the day the Constitution was accepted by Congress, or on the succeeding day. It was held by the court of appeals that the law of limitation was not revived until the 31st day of March, 1870, the day next succeeding the day on which the Constitution was accepted. We think that this case is in point, and correctly decided. It is in harmony with the decisions before cited herein, and with the general rules laid down for construction under like circumstances. See 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 327, p. 140. We therefore answer that article 566 of the Revised Statutes was in force on June 29, 1885, and that the act of March 27, 1885, did not go into effect until the 30th day of June of that year.

Rehearing denied.

required or permitted within a designated period of time, and time is often given until a designated day or event. So a designated period of time is sometimes required to intervene between two acts or events, and frequently a notice of a designated number of days or the like is required without reference to anything to mark either the beginning or ending of the period, and occasionally the period of time in the different provisions above mentioned is prefaced by the words "at least." The meaning of each of these provisions depends upon proper construction of the language used, and each has its own influence upon the question of the inclusion or exclusion of the first and last days of the prescribed period, and whether, if but one be included, it shall be the first or last.

In the subdivisions of this section, general rules only are given; for their application to particular facts and circumstances, see infra, VII., and its subdivisions.

b. "From" or "after" a day or event.

The general rule is that where a particular period sought, whether definite or indefinite, is to be begun or to be computed from or after some recognized division of time or its equivalent, as, for example, twenty days after date, the date so specified is to be excluded in computation of the time, unless the contrary appears. Cummins v. Holmes, 11 Ill. App. 158; Bowman v. Wood, 41 Ill. 203; People ex rel. Harless v. Hatch, 33 Ill. 9; Vogel v. State ex rel. Land, 107 Ind. 374, 8 N. E. 164; Atkins v. Boylston F. & M. Ins. Co. 5 Met. 439, 39 Am. Dec. 692; Seaman v. Eager, 16 Ohio St. 209; Lutz's Appeal, 124 Pa. 273, 16 Atl. 858; Menges v. Frick, 73 Pa. 137, 18 Am. Rep. 731; Hill v. Kerr, 78 Tex. 213, 14 S. W. 566; Best v. Polk, 18 Wall. 112, sub nom. Best v. Doe ex dem. Polk, 21 L. ed. 805; Russell v. Ledsam, 14 Mees. & W. 582, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 353, 9 Jur. 557.

And if a man is given a certain number of days after an event in which to perform an act or claim a right he is allowed so many full days, and a fragment of the day on which the event took place is not to be counted against him. Griffin v. Forrest, 49 Mich. 309, 13 N. W. 603.

And whenever the expression in the provision for time is, "from a day to a day," or, "from one day to another," the second day is to be included. Conawingo Petroleum Refining Co. v. Cunningham, 75 Pa. 138.

And one who is required to do an act within a designated time, as thirty days from the happening of an event which occurred on the 26th of August, is entitled to the whole of the 25th of September for that purpose. Judd v. Fulton, 4 How. Pr. 298.

The words "from" or "after," however, used in a provision for a period of time to elapse between two acts or events, like the words "succeeding," "subsequent," and similar words, when not expressly declared to be inclusive or exclusive, are susceptible of different significations, and are used in different senses having an exclusive or inclusive meaning according to the subject to which they are applied, and their true meaning, therefore, must be collected from the context and subject-matter in the particular case. Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 18; Taylor v. Brown, 5 Dak. 335, 40 N. W. 525; Deyo v. Bleakley, 24 Barb. 9; Lysle v. Williams, 15 Serg. & R. 135; Pugh v. Leeds, 2 Cowp. 714.

And the court will construe the language so as to effectuate the deeds of the parties, and not to destroy them. Lysle v. Williams, 15 Serg. & R. 135; Deyo v. Bleakley, 24 Barb. 9; Pugh v. Leeds, 2 Cowp. 714.

Especially where the words themselves abstractly may admit of either meaning. Pugh v. Leeds, 2 Cowp. 714.

Where a definite period is to be computed from or after an act or event, as where an appeal bond is required to be filed within twenty days after the rendition of judgment, and the like, the event, and not the time, is used to fix a point of time; and the rule as to whether or not the day of the event is to be included in making the computation is flexible, yielding to the intention of the parties as manifested by other parts of the instrument or by the whole taken together, by the concurrent acts and declarations of the parties, and by all circumstances tending to show it. Cummins v. Holmes, 11 Ill. App. 158.

And a provision for the performance of an act by a judgment debtor at the time of the rendition of the judgment or within four days thereafter shows an intention on the part of the legislature to exclude the first day in the computation of the four. Ex parte Dean, 2 Cow. 605, 14 Am. Dec. 521.

So, the words "from the date" and "from the day of the date," in a provision for time within which an act is to be done, mean the same thing, and may be either inclusive or exclusive of that day. Houser v. Reynolds, 2 N. C. (1 Hayw.) 114, 1 Am. Dec. 551.

And the words "from or after the date or the day of the date," in a provision for time within which an act is to be done, include the day

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

George M. CONWAY et al., Pliffs. in Err.,
v.
SMITH MERCANTILE COMPANY et al.

(6 Wyo. 327.)

1. Time "until" a certain day, within the meaning of an order of court, may be either inclusive or exclusive of the day mentioned, according to the intention of the court, and this intention may be inferred from the subject-matter and other considerations.
2. An order giving a party "until" a certain day within which to prepare and present a bill of exceptions includes the day named under a statutory rule that the last day mentioned shall be included in the time within which an act is to be done when required by law.

3. The successor of a trial judge who presided in a case, overruled a motion for a new trial, and granted time in which to present a bill of exceptions, may, on the latter's death before presenting the bill, make the order for its allowance in open court, where the statute provides that it shall be allowed by the court if presented in open court, but specifies that it shall be done by the judge of the court before whom the cause was tried if presented in vacation.

(Scott, J., dissents.)

(April 27, 1896.)

ON MOTION to strike from the record the bill of exceptions upon a writ of error to review a judgment of the District Court for Natrona County. Overruled.

when they are used in a conveyance to create an estate, but exclude it when they are used in an instrument to perpetuate the evidence of a debt. Taylor v. Jacoby, 2 Pa. St. 495, 45 Am. Dec. 615; Houser v. Reynolds, 2 N. C. (1 Hayw.) 114, 1 Am. Dec. 551.

And "from a time," and "from and after a time," used in provisions for time for the performance of an act, are expressions used indiscriminately and for the purpose of expressing the same idea. French v. Wilkins, 17 Vt. 341.

And when the words "from the date" are made use of to denote the terminus a quo, an immediate interest is to pass, and the day of the instrument is inclusive in the computation of time, for the reason that when words of an equivocal meaning are made use of, and there is no index from which the intention of the party who used them may be gathered, the construction should be most advantageous for him in whose favor the instrument is made. Lysle v. Williams, 15 Serg. & R. 135.

So, in Seingorett v. Noguire, 2 Ld. Raym. 1241, it was held that to aver that a contract was to commence with the day of the date was the same thing as to aver that it commenced from the day of the date.

See also Hatter v. Ash, 1 Ld. Raym. 85; Avery v. Stewart, 2 Conn. 69, 7 Am. Dec. 240; Pearpoint v. Graham, 4 Wash. C. C. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 10,877; Taylor v. Jacoby, 2 Pa. St. 405, 45 Am. Dec. 615; Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, 19 Am. Rep. 470, supra, II. And see infra, VII.

c. "Before" a day or event.

As a general rule, where notice is required to be posted or published a specified number of days before an event of which notice has to be given, the required number of days is to be computed by excluding the day of first posting or publishing and including the day on which the event is to occur. Coe v. Caledonia & M. R. Co. 27 Minn. 197, 6 N. W. 621; Hall v. Cassidy, 25 Miss. 48; People use of Chaddock v. Barry, 93 Mich. 542, 18 L. R. A. 337, 53 N. E. 785.

In the above Michigan case it was said that if Isabelle v. Iron Cliffs Co. 57 Mich. 120, 23 N. W. 618, infra, VII. d. 2, is at variance with the present case, it must be overruled; but the justice who wrote the opinion in that case was giving construction to a statute relative to the service and return of a writ of attachment where the officer making the service in that case was unable to find the defendant within his bailiwick, the question having been one of jurisdiction.

49 L. R. A.

In determining the time within which process or notice must be served the language of the statute must be observed, and when an act is to be done a certain number of days before a day stated, that day is excluded in the computation. People use of Chaddock v. Barry, 93 Mich. 542, 18 L. R. A. 337, 53 N. W. 785, dictum.

The specified day is the one to be excluded in the computation of time, but in counting back from that time the day on which the act is to be performed may be included. People v. Burgess, 153 N. Y. 561, 47 N. E. 889.

In the above case attention was called to the criticism of Aultman & T. Co. v. Syme, 91 Hun, 632, 26 N. Y. Supp. 528, infra, VII. g. 1, in Connecticut Nat. Bank v. Bayles, 17 App. Div. 596, 45 N. Y. Supp. 305, infra, VII. c. 1, and it was said that the appeal in the former case, recorded in 148 N. Y. 755, 43 N. E. 985, was dismissed for the reason that the court of appeals did not deem the order appealable or the question properly presented.

Where a statute requires a previous service of a given number of entire days, both the first and the last must be excluded in the computation. Garner v. Johnson, 22 Ala. 494.

And, in the absence of any statutory provision for governing computation of time where an act is required to be done a certain number of days or weeks before a certain other day upon which another act is to be done, the day upon which the first act is to be done must be excluded from the computation, and the whole number of days or weeks must intervene before the day fixed for doing the second act. Ward v. Walters, 63 Wis. 39.

And where an act is to be done by or before a given day it must be performed prior to that day. Richardson v. Ford, 14 Ill. 332.

But where a time is limited to do an act before a date named, and nothing in the reason of the thing requires the exclusion both of the day of the act and the day before which the act is to be done, the meaning of the legislature will not be taken to be that both days shall be excluded. Hodgson v. Banking-House, 9 Mo. App. 24.

New Hampshire Pub. Stat. chap. 2, § 34, providing that when time is to be reckoned from a day, date, act done, or the time of an act done, either by force of law or by virtue of a contract, such day, date, or the day when such act is done, shall not be included in the computation, is general, and applies equally whether the time is to be reckoned backward or forward from a specified day or act. Bernard v. Martel, 68 N. H. 466, 41 Atl. 183.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. C. Wright and Clark & Breckons for defendants in error, in support of the motion.

Messrs. Burke & Fowler for plaintiffs in error, contra.

Groesbeck, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

John B. Okie, one of the defendants in error, files his motion to strike from the record the bill of exceptions.

1. One of the grounds of this motion is that the bill was not reduced to writing and presented for allowance to either the court, or the judge thereof in vacation, within the time allowed therefor. The order allowing time in which to prepare and present the bill of exceptions was made when the motion for a new trial was overruled, and the parties making said motion duly excepted to the ruling of the court thereon, and, upon request, were given "until" the second Monday in May, 1895, within which to prepare and present for allowance their bill of exceptions. The second Monday in May, 1895, we judicially know, and it is conceded, under the statute then in force, was the first day of the term of the district court for Natrona county next succeeding the entry of the order allowing time for the preparation and presentation of the bill, and so the time allowed by such order was in effect "until" the first day of the next succeeding term of the court. This was within the time allowed by the statute, which provides that time may be given to reduce the exception to writing, but not beyond the first day of the next succeeding term. Rev. Stat. § 2646. The bill was not presented

d. "Within" a designated period.

The general current of the modern authorities on the interpretation of contracts, and also of statutes where an act is to be performed within a specified period from or after a day named, is to exclude the day thus designated and include the last day of the specified period. Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 177, 17 L. ed. 822; Atkins v. Boylston F. & M. Ins. Co. 5 Met. 439, 39 Am. Dec. 692, dictum; Roan v. Rohrer, 72 Ill. 582; Penn Placer Min. Co. v. Schreiner, 14 Mont. 121, 35 Pac. 878; Re Goswiler, 3 Penn. & W. 200; Harker v. Addis, 4 Pa. 515; Duffy v. Ogden, 64 Pa. 240; Edmundson v. Wragg, 104 Pa. 500, 40 Am. Rep. 590; Esler v. Peterson, 8 Phila. 303; Snyder v. Smith, 1 Legal Gaz. 35; Ex parte Paul, 2 Legal & Ins. Rep. 77; Gass v. Schuykill Iron Co. 2 Legal Chron. 241; Love v. North Branch Canal Co. 2 Luzerne Legal Obs. 28; Brenner v. Dombach, 3 Lanc. Bar, 10th Feb. 1872; Thorne v. Mosher, 20 N. J. Eq. 257.

Unless it appears that a different computation was intended. Atkins v. Boylston F. & M. Ins. Co. 5 Met. 439, 39 Am. Dec. 692, dictum.

And where an act of assembly requires a thing to be done within a certain time from a prior date, and perhaps also from a prior act, and the party by not doing it loses his right, in relief of the party and to preserve him from losses, a most liberal construction ought to be chosen and the farthest time given from which the reckoning is to be made. Green's Appeal, 6 Watts & S. 327.

And where one is required to do an act within a designated time, as thirty days from the happening of an event, he will have the whole of the thirtieth day for that purpose. Judd v. Fulton, 10 Barb. 117.

e. "Between" designated dates or events.

Time between two days is that which is intermediate without computing any part of either of the two days to make it up. Robinson v. Foster, 12 Iowa, 186.

And the word "between," used in a provision with reference to a period of time between two days, excludes both. Weir v. Thomas, 44 Neb. 507, 62 N. W. 871; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Mehrhof Bros. Brick Mfg. Co. 53 N. J. L. 205, 23 Atl. 170.

And an act to be done between two certain days must be performed before the commencement of the latter day. Richardson v. Ford, 14 Ill. 332.

The term "to intervene," in a provision that a designated number of days shall intervene between two acts, means "to come between," and when it is said that a day must intervene between two other days the meaning is that a day must fully elapse between the two days mentioned. Coleman v. Keenan, 76 Ill. App. 315.

Dut where a statute directs that a certain number of days are required to intervene between two acts, the date of one of the acts may be counted. Jones v. State, 42 Ark. 93; Crawford v. Feder, 27 Fla. 523, 8 So. 642.

Unless the statute calls for clear or entire days. Crawford v. Feder, 27 Fla. 523, 8 So. 642.

And where expressions used in the designation of a period of time to elapse between two events will admit of either exclusive or inclusive construction, and the effect of one would be to devert a right or work a forfeiture, if any doubt exists as to their meaning they should be so construed as to prevent a forfeiture. Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 18.

f. "Until" a designated time or event,

The words "to," "till," and "until" are synonymous, and are sometimes ambiguous and equivocal in the particular connection in which they occur in provisions for a period of time for the performance of an act, and are therefore construed as exclusive or inclusive according as the subject-matter about which they are used may show the intention in using the words to have been the one or the other. Gottlieb v. Fred W. Wolf Co. 75 Md. 126, 23 Atl. 198; Webster v. French, 12 Ill. 302; Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94; Ryan v. State Bank, 10 Neb. 524, 7 N. W. 276; King v. Stevens, 5 East, 244, 1 Smith, 437; CONWAY V. SMITH MERCANTILE CO.

Whether such words will be held to be words of inclusion or exclusion is usually determined by the text of the statute or instrument in which they are used, and will be held to include or exclude the day named as the evident intention requires. State ex rel. Bickford v. Benson, 21 Wash. 365, 58 Pac. 217.

And this intention may be inferred from the subject-matter and other considerations. CONWAY V. SMITH MERCANTILE CO.

In Ryan v. State Bank, 10 Neb. 524, 7 N. W. 276, however, it was said that the word "until," used in defining a period of time in a statute, as well as in a contract, is usually taken as implying an intention to exclude the day to which it refers.

And in People v. Walker, 17 N. Y. 502, it was held that the word "until," used in a statute for allowance until the first day of the next term, and counsel for the motion to strike the bill from the record contend that, by the terms of the order allowing time for such presentation of the bill, the first day of the next term must be excluded, as the time allowed therefor was up to, but not including, the first day of the term. It has always been the approved practice under this statute to have the order granting time for the presentation of the bill to read "up to and including the first day of the next succeeding term of the court;" but this custom was not followed, as the order gives time "until" the first day of the next term. The decision of this ground of the motion rests upon the construction to be given to the word "until," in the order allowing time for the preparation and presentation of the bill, and whether or not it includes or excludes the first day of the next term succeeding the entry of the order. The word "until" may either, in a contract or a law, have an inclusive or exclusive meaning, according to the subject to which it is applied, the nature of the transaction which it specifies, and the connection in which it is used, and this rule extends to the correlatives of the word. Ordinarily, the word, like "from" and "between," excludes the day to which it relates. Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 95. The authorities in parallel cases to the one at bar are conflicting. See Webster v. French, 12 Ill. 302; Clark v. Ewing, 87 Ill. 344. In a strong dissenting opinion in the last-cited case a number of cases are reviewed which are applicable to the question here presented: Pepperell v. Burrell, 2 Dowl. P. C. 674, where it was held that seven days' time for pleading gives the whole of the seventh continuing the charter of a bank in force until the 1st day of January, 1850, excluded the day named, and the charter would end with the 31st day of December, 1849.

Bnt in Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94, it was said that the word "until," like the words "from" or "between," generally includes the day to which it relates.

When a thing is not authorized to be done until after a particular day, however, it cannot be done until after the whole of that day has elapsed. Sapp v. Morrill, 8 Kan. 677.

And where one is prohibited from doing an act until after the expiration of a designated time, as thirty days, he cannot do it until the next day after the whole thirty days have expired. Judd v. Fulton, 10 Barb. 117, 4 How. Pr. 298.

g. Notice without reference to terminal.

In computing the time for which a notice must be given of the performance of an act, either the day of the notice or the day of performance must be excluded, the other being included. Mitchell v. Woodson, 37 Miss. 587; Small v. Edrick, 5 Wend. 137; Re Carhart, 2 Dem. 627.

And it has been stated to be the general rule that where a statute requires service for a fixed number of days, the mode of computation is to include the day of service, and to exclude the day on which the period terminates. Garner v. Johnson, 22 Ala. 404.

But where ten days' notice is required by law the notice cannot require action on the tenth day. Wing v. Cleveland (Ohio) 14 Ohio L. J. 100.

And where a month's notice is required, and the months are broken, the day on which the notice is given is excluded; and the calendar month or other period of time required is complete when, starting from a given day in the first month, you arrive at the corresponding day in the succeeding month, whatever may be the length of either. Freeman v. Read, 4 Best & S. 174, 32 L. J. M. C. N. S. 226, 10 Jur. N. S. 149.

Upon the other hand, however, the general rule for computing time for the service of notice has been held to be that it is to be reckoned exclusive of the day of service and inclusive of the day on which the application is to be made. Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286.

In that case it was said that the exceptions to the general rule, that in computing time for notice it is to be reckoned exclusive of the day of service and inclusive of that on which the application was made, are of those cases in 49 L. R. A.

which, by the express terms of the statute or rule, the day on which an act is to be done is excluded.

h. "At least" prefacing period of time.

The rule has been laid down that where an act is required by statute to be done a designated number of days, at least, before a given event, the time must be reckoned exclusively both of the day of the act and that of the event. Queen v. Shropshire Justices, 8 Ad. & El. 173.

And that, when a statute requires notice of at least a certain number of days before a meeting or other act, that number of clear days is required, and the day of the notice and the day of the meeting are both to be excluded from the computation. Jones v. State, 42 Ark. 93.

The prevailing, and apparently the more modern, rule, however, is different. Thus, the words "at least," in a provision giving a number of days for the performance of an act prefixed to the number, do not necessarily mean full, clear days. Stebbins v. Anthony, 5 Colo. 348.

They do not change the requirement of the number of days, or affect the rule that either the first or last day shall be excluded and the other day included, or change the requirement into one of entire days. State, Stroud, Prosecutor, v. Consumers' Water Co. 56 N. J. L. 422, 28 Atl. 578; Sappington v. Lenz, 53 Mo. App. 44.

The words "at least" and "no less," in statutory provisions for a period of time, simply mean that so many days and no less are allowed. Sappington v. Lenz, 53 Mo. App. 44.

In the above case, Taylor v. McKnight, 1 Mo. 120, infra, VII. 1, 2, was distinguished upon the ground that it was decided previous to the enactment of the statutory rule for the computation of time.

While a requirement of not less than three days may well be held to demand three full days, a requirement of notice of at least ten days before the making of an application means only that notice shall be given as early as the tenth day before the application is made, and the computation is to be made by excluding the first day and including the last. Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286.

VI. The rule when Sunday or a holiday is the first or last day.

a. At common law.

For the common-law rule as to computing first and last day when the first or last day day to plead in, after excluding the day on which the order was made. Ozley v. Bridge, 1 Dougl. 87, where a rule to plead "by" a particular day was entered, that day was construed to continue until the office opened the next morning. Thomas v. Douglass, 2 Johns. Cas. 226, where an order was made enlarging the time to plead "until the second day" of the term, and judgment for want of a plea was entered on the second day of the term; and this was held irregular by the appellate court (Kent being at the time one of the judges), the judgment was set aside, and it was held that the order must be so construed as to include the second day of the term, although it read "until" that day. In Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. 352, the court said: "It has been decided that 'till' includes the day to which it is prefixed;" citing Dakins v. Wagner, 3 Dowl. P. C. 535. To the same effect are the following authorities: Hahn v. Dierkes, 37 Mo. 574; Penn Placer Min. Co. v. Schreiner, 14 Mont. 121, 35 Pac. 878; Gottlieb v. Fred W. Wolf Co. 75 Md. 126, 23 Atl. 198, and cases cited; Houghwout v. Boisabuin, 18 N. J. Eq. 315; Glynn County Academy Comrs. v. Dart, 67 Ga. 765; Rogers v. Cherokee Iron & R. Co. 70 Ga. 717. And it has been held that when time is given until a day certain to file a bill of exceptions, if it is filed on or before that day, it is filed in time. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Turner, 81 Ky. 489; Newport News & M. V. R. Co. v. Thomas, 96 Ky. 613, 29 S. W. 437; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gracy, 126 Mo. 472, 28 S. W. 736, 29 S. W. 579. The order of the court in the case at bar gave until a day certain "within which" to file the bill, and, under the positive provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, the exceptions must be re-falls on Sunday or a holiday, see note "Extension of time when last day falls on Sunday," Brown v. Valles (Colo.) 14 L. R. A. 120.

b. The statutory rule.

Many of the states have statutes providing that if the first or last day on which an act is to be done falls on Sunday or a holiday, that day is to be excluded in the computation of time. Under these statutes the general rule is that when an act is to be done on a day which happens to be Sunday or a holiday, it may be done on the Monday following; but the rule is not universal, and is not generally applicable to all questions of computation of time.

Under such provisions, the general rule is that, where an act is to be performed within a certain number of days, and the last day falls on Sunday, the person charged with the performance of the act has the following day to comply with his obligation. Monroe Cattle Co. v. Becker, 147 U. S. 47, 87 L. ed. 72, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 217; Evans v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 76 Mo. App. 468.

And the rule is the same when a given number of days are allowed to do an act. West v. West, 20 R. I. 464, 40 Atl. 6.

Sunday, however, cannot be excluded in computing the time within which an act is required to be done, unless there is some statute expressly providing for such exclusion. Shefer v. Magone, 47 Fed. Rep. 872; Dorsey v. Pike, 46 Hun, 112; Cooley v. Cook, 125 Mass. 406; Broome v. Wellington, 1 Sandf. 664.

Or unless Sundays and holidays are expressly excluded, or the intention of the legislature to exclude them appears manifest. Cooley v. Cook, 125 Mass. 406; Edmundson v. Wragg, 104 Pa. 500, 40 Am. Rep. 590; West v. West, 20 R. I. 464, 40 Atl. 6; Stebbins v. Leowolf, 3 Cush. 137.

Where the time limited for the performance of an act is such that one or more Sundays must fall within it, and there is no statute excluding any of them, it is not the province of the court to extend the time fixed by excluding the last, the first, or any intermediate Sunday or holiday. Johnson v. Meyers, 12 U. S. App. 220, 54 Fed. Rep. 417, 4 C. C. A. 399.

And the rule that when the last day of a period of time falls on Sunday the period will be extended to include the following Monday is not applicable to acts which by statute are required to be done within a certain time therein limited. Haley v. Young, 134 Mass. 364.

And Sanb. & B. (Wis.) Anno. Stat. § 4971, with 49 L. R. A.

relation to computing the last day of a period of time when it falls upon Sunday, applies only to cases when the time is expressed in days, and does not apply to the limitation of one year within which to bring an action to enforce a lien. Williams v. Lane, 87 Wis. 152, 58 N. W. 77. And see Aultman & T. Co. v. Syme, 91 Hun, 632, 36 N. Y. Supp. 528, infra, VII. g. 1. But see Grant v. Paddock, 30 Or. 312, 47 Pac. 712, supra, IV. b.

And where the time for doing an act is one or more years, and the last day falls on Sunday, it cannot be lawfully performed on the next day. Williams v. Lane, 87 Wis. 152, 58 N. W. 77.

So, it is only when an act is to be done on Sunday that the day is to be excluded under the statutory rule of computation. Robinson v. Foster, 12 Iowa, 186; Conklin v. Marshalltown, 66 Iowa, 122, 23 N. W. 294; Merritt v. Gate City Nat. Bank, 100 Ga. 147, 38 L. R. A. 749, 27 S. E. 979.

The statutory rule that when the last day of a period of time within which an act is to be done falls on Sunday, the Sunday is to be excluded and the act may be done on Monday, applies to courts not of record, including the municipal court of Rochester, so that a notice of appeal may be served on the following Monday, where the time to serve it expires on Sunday. Dorsey v. Pike, 46 Hun, 112, 11 N. Y. Supp. 227.

But it does not apply to the district courts of the city of New York. Ready Roofing Co. v. Chamberlain (N. Y.) 1 Rob. C. C. 222.

In Dorsey v. Pike, 46 Hun, 112, 11 N. Y. Supp. 227, supra, Marvin v. Marvin, 75 N. Y. 242, supra, III. b, was distinguished, the court saying that that case holds that the section of the Code with reference to computation of time does not apply to acts where the law specifically provides a different rule of computation; but that the provision relating to the mode of computation when the last day fell on Sunday was not brought before the court.

In Alabama the statutory provision that time within which an act is provided by law to be done must be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, and if the last is Sunday it must also be excluded, is construed to mean that if the last day happens to be Sunday, it is excluded, and the act must be performed on the day previous. Allen v. Elliott, 67 Ala. 432.

And in Missouri the construction seems to have been the same. See Patrick v. Faulke, 45 Mo. 312; Miner v. Tilley, 54 Mo. App. 627, infra, VII. I.

duced to writing, and presented to the court or judge thereof in vacation, "within the time given for allowance." It may be assumed that every order of court giving time beyond the trial term to present a bill of exceptions is made with reference to these statutory provisions. If the order gives time until the first day of the next term, it seems not to do violence to the language to construe the order as including that day, which is the first and only day after the trial term, when there is a court in session to which the bill may be presented. Such an order should not receive a strict construction, resulting in a denial of the right of the party to present his bill of exceptions to the court, but rather a liberal construction, preservative of that right. Time "until" a certain day may be either inclusive or exclusive of the day mentioned, according to the intention of the court, and this intention may be inferred from the subject-matter and other considerations. If one has until the second Monday of May to perform an act or incur a forfeiture, it would be a harsh rule that would enforce the forfeiture after the performance of the act on that day. But the acts to be performed, the preparation and presentation of the bill, are, by the terms of the order and the language of the statute, to be done "within" a certain time; and in such case the statutory method of computation also found in the Code must apply: "Unless otherwise specially provided, the time within which an act is required by law to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day, and including the last, and, if the last be Sunday, it shall be excluded." Rev. Stat. § 2341. It is manifest from the order of the court that it was intended to

As to application of the statutory rule to particular subjects, see infra, VII.

VII. Application of rules with reference to subject-matter and surrounding circumstances.

a. General rule.

The common-law rules with reference to the computation of time apply generally to all matters, whether provided for by statute or not. And the statutory rule that the first day is to be excluded and the last day included in the computation of time, unless it falls on Sunday, in which case it is to be included, though in some states confined to matters provided for by the Codes of Civil Procedure, is generally applicable to provisions for time in contracts also, and to all cases in which a period of time is provided for, whether by contract or by statute or otherwise.

Both the statutory and the common-law rule, however, are often excluded either by the language of the provision for time, expressly designating the rule by which it is to be computed, or by the surrounding circumstances under which a departure from the usual rule would better accord with equity and right.

The following subdivisions, containing cases which are in the nature of illustrations of the general rule, should be considered in connection with the general rules given in the preceding portion of this note.

b. To contracts.

1. General and miscellaneous.

The general rule with reference to counting the first and last days in computing time, that one day is counted inclusive and the other exclusive, applies in the construction of contracts and statutes, as well as in matters of practice. People v. New York C. R. Co. 28 Barb. 284.

And see Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Dec. 249, supra, III. b.

In the absence of anything tending to show a contrary intention, the words "from date" in a contract exclude the day of date. Walker v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 188, 45 N. E. 89.

2 Ind. Rev. Stat. § 205, however, providing that the time within which an act is to be done as therein provided shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, is held to relate exclusively to statutory time, and does not apply to ordinary contracts. Cook v. Gray, 6 Ind. 335.
49 L. R. A.

But the Missouri statute to that effect is held to apply to the interpretation of contracts when no different meaning is exhibited by the instrument to be construed. Gray v. Worst, 129 Mo. 122, 31 S. W. 585.

And it would appear from the cases below that the statutory rules and the rules of the courts are generally applicable to contracts as well as the rules of the common law; and that practically the same result is arrived at, whether the case be one for the application of the statutory or of the modern common-law rule.

Thus, under a contract conditioned for the payment of money one year from the date, dated November 25, 1848, on condition of the performance of a specified act within the time, performance of the act on the 26th of November, 1849, is seasonable, as the day on which the instrument is dated is to be excluded in the computation. Oatman v. Walker, 33 Me. 67.

And a tender under a contract by which money became due and payable within a year from the date, made on March 3, 1848, the date of the contract being March 3, 1847, is good. Farwell v. Rogers, 4 Cush. 460.

So, under a written contract dated April 19, 1844, to convey certain lands within twenty days from the date thereof, the day of the date is to be excluded in computing the twenty days, and the vendee would have been in time to offer performance of the stipulations on his part at any time on the 9th of May, and if during that day the vendor conveyed the land to another, thus disabling himself to perform the contract, it was a sufficient excuse. Buttrick v. Holden, 8 Cush. 233.

And where by the terms of a contract a deed was to be delivered and the purchase money for land paid on the 1st day of May, if the 1st day of May should fall on Sunday, compliance with the contract on Monday is a legal performance. Stryker v. Vanderbilt, 27 N. J. L. 68.

And a notice of election to take under a contract made July 14, to convey land at a stipulated price within sixty days, given on September 12, is sufficient and in season to warrant a decree for specific performance. Serrill v. Burk, 8 Phila. 515.

And under a contract dated December 24, 1883, by which a grantee of land promised to pay a designated sum to the grantor if he should dispose of the land at any time within five years, the date of the contract is to be excluded, and the date of the disposition included; and where he disposed of the land December 24, 1888, he is liable for the payment of the designated sum. Shelton v. Gillett, 79 Mich. 173, 44 N. W. 428.

give time within which to file the bill, and that the statutory rule of computation which includes the last day mentioned was contemplated. The matter has been indirectly passed upon in this jurisdiction in the cases of Jubb v. Thorp, 2 Wyo. 406, and Woods v. Hilliard Flume & Lumber Co. 2 Wyo. 457, decided by the territorial supreme court. In the former of these cases, the order of court allowed the exceptant "until" the first day of the next term to file the bill of exceptions, and in the latter case he was permitted to file the bill "by" the first day of the next term. It was considered in both of these cases that the bill must be presented in open court on the first day of the term mentioned, and not before a judge in vacation. These cases were, in effect, overruled by the case of McBride v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Wyo. 183, 18 Pac. 635, upon the point that the bill could be presented to the judge in vacation, within the time allowed; but the other question, the one presented here, was not before the court in the last-mentioned case. The weight of authority is decidedly in favor of the position that the word "until," used in a connection similar to its use in the order of the court in the case at bar, giving time within which to present the bill of exceptions, includes the last day named; and we think our statutory rule for computing the time within which an act is to be done, when required by law, directing that the last day mentioned shall be included, is applicable, and settles the question. The bill was therefore presented in apt time.

2. Another ground for the motion to strike the bill from the record presents a more perplexing question. The bill was al-

So, the time provided for in an agreement for the purchase of bonds by which the purchaser was to hold them for one year, and the seller bound himself to repurchase the bonds at the option of the purchaser at the end of one year from the date of the contract, is to be computed by excluding the day of the date; and where the purchase was made April 21, 1890, the option ended April 21, 1891, including the whole of that day, and became exercisable April 22, 1891. Weid v. Barker, 153 Pa. 465, 26 Atl. 239.

But proceedings for the collection of a bond dated July 22, 1818, made payable in five years from the date, may properly be issued on the 22d of July, 1823, as in such case the computation of the period of time should be most advantageous to him in whose favor the instrument was made. Lysle v. Williams, 15 Serg. & R. 135.

So, a contract between merchants and owners of a vessel by which the merchants are given twenty days for loading, counting from the day of readiness until the day of dispatch, does not give them either the day of readiness or the day of dispatch, and the enumeration of the days must be made by excluding both. Merritt v. Ona, 44 Fed. Rep. 369, sub nom. Merritt v. Mora, 11 L. R. A. 724.

In the above case it was said that in Pennsylvania, Re Goswiler, 3 Penn. & W. 200, supra, III. a, was overthrown by Thomas v. Afflick, 16 Pa. 14, supra, II., which after being followed in Barber v. Chandler, 17 Pa. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 533, infra, VII. d, 2, was itself overthrown by Cromellen v. Brink, 29 Pa. 523, supra, III. and Re Goswiler again set on its feet.

But the word "from," in a contract for services to be rendered from a designated date, will be deemed to be intended to be inclusive of that date, where it appears that the person contracting to render services did actually enter into the services on that day, and that the employer discharged him on that day. Wilkinson v. Gaston, 9 Q. B. 137, 15 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 340, 10 Jur. 804.

So, in construing a contract providing for its performance in a designated number of days without more, the time is to be computed exclusive of the day of its date. Blake v. Crowninshield, 9 N. H. 304.

And where creditors give a debtor a letter of license to conduct his business "for and during the term of one year from the date hereof" the day of the date is to be excluded from the computation of the year. Ammerman v. Digges, 12 Ir. C. L. Rep. 1, Appx.

And where, under the terms of a contract, 49 L. R. A.

a party has until a designated day to accept, he may accept on that day if the offer is still open. Houghwout v. Boisabuin, 18 N. J. Eq. 315.

So, where a submission of an award is made on the agreement that it should be returned on or before a certain day, and the time is enlarged until another designated day, an award made on the last designated day is sufficient, as the word "until" is for such purpose inclusive. Knox v. Simmonds, 3 Bro. Ch. 358, 1 Ves. Jr. 309; Kerr v. Jeston, 1 Dowl. P. C. N. S. 538.

And a provision in articles to submit certain matters in controversy to arbitration, that the award should be made and published within ten days from the date of the article, is complied with where the articles were dated and entered into September 25, 1847, and the award was made, written out, signed, and witnessed on the 4th day of October following. McClure v. Shroyer, 13 Mo. 104.

But the release of all demands until a designated date does not release a bond dated that day. Nichols v. Ramsel, 2 Mod. 280.

Under a contract to deliver by the 1st day of November, however, a delivery on or before that day is sufficient. Coonley v. Anderson, 1 Hill, 519.

And under a contract for the sale of lumber, stipulating for the delivery thereof on or before August 1, and for payment on delivery, the seller has the whole of the 1st day of August to deliver the lumber, and unless the buyer is then ready to receive it and pay for it, he can have no right of action for breach of contract. Adams v. Dale, 29 Ind. 273.

So, where goods are sold October 5, to be paid for in two months, an action for the price cannot be maintained until the expiration of December 5. Webb v. Fairmaner, 3 Mees. & W. 473, 6 Dowl. P. C. 549.

And there is no variance between a contract to deliver goods by the 1st of November and a statement in the pleading, in an action thereon, that the goods were to be delivered on or before that time. Coonley v. Anderson, 1 Hill, 519.

And the intent of the parties to a sale on a credit of six months, with a provision for a resale if payment was not made at the end of that time, will be deemed to be that the day of the sale was to be excluded in the computation of the six months, as until the purchase was made no credit could be given. Williamson v. Farrow, 1 Ball. L. 611, 21 Am. Dec. 492.

A contract to complete work by a designated time, however, means that it shall be done belowed, signed, and made a part of the record, on the first day of the term of the Natrona district court, following the entry of the order allowing time for the presentation of the bill for settlement, by Hon. J. H. Hayford, who was the successor of Judge Blake, the trial judge, and the one who overruled the motion for a new trial, and granted time within which to present the bill; the latter having died some time previous to the presentation of the bill. It is vigorously asserted that neither Judge Hayford, nor the court presided over by him, could have settled and allowed the bill narrating the occurrences at the trial, as the trial judge alone was the proper person to allow and sign the bill, and certify to the absolute truth of the matters detailed in the bill, and thus intelligently make it a part of the record, all of which must import absolute verity. It is contended that the successor to the trial judge, being a stranger to the record, cannot certify truthfully to the accuracy of the bill; and in a case like the one presented, owing to the impossibility of securing the action of the trial judge, on account of his death, that the only possible relief to be afforded to the losing party in such a case, who may wish to contest the judgment or decree unfavorable to him, is to secure a new trial, upon an application setting forth the death of the judge before the time for the settlement of the bill had expired, made within a reasonable time to the district court. Counsel for the respective parties have diligently arrayed the authorities substantiating and opposing this view, which, as will be apparent to one examining the question, will be found in irreconcilable conflict. Doubtless, the statute of West-fore that time. Rankin v. Woodworth, 3 Penn. & W. 48; Miller v. Phillips, 31 Pa. 221.

But an averment of payment on the 1st day of May is not an averment of performance of a covenant to convey before the 1st of May. Halloway v. Davis, Wright (Ohio) 120.

So, where hogs are sold under an agreement to deliver between two days the word "between" excludes both days named. Cook v. Drals, 2 Cln. Sup. Ct. Rep. 340.

And under a stipulation to deliver designated property on demand at any time between two designated dates, a demand on the preceding day for delivery on the last day named is not sufficient. Cook v. Gray, 6 Ind. 335.

And under a contract for the delivery of property from the 15th to the 28th of a specified month, both the 15th and the 28th should be excluded in the computation of time, and evidence of an offer or tender on the 28th in a suit upon the contract is improper, and a pleading alleging a tender on the 28th is bad. Newby v. Rogers, 40 Ind. 9.

And under a contract for the sale of cattle, in which it was agreed as a part of the consideration that the purchaser should come and accept the cattle within eight days from the time of the contract, the eight days are to be computed by counting the first day, that is, the day upon which the contract was made. Brown v. Buzan, 24 Ind. 194.

So, under a contract for the sale of property to be delivered between September 15, and October 15, four days' notice of delivery to be given, the last day of delivery is October 14, and notice of intention to deliver on that day should be given on the 10th. Fowler v. Rigney, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 182.

But one who sells oil under a contract to deliver it, buyer's option, at any time from that date to December 31, has the whole of December 31 in which to perform. Conawingo Petroleum Refining Co. v. Cunningham, 75 Pa. 138.

So, under a contract for the transfer of slaves by which the transferee was bound to make his election within a year whether to hold the slaves as under a contract of hiring, or to be a purchaser, the day of the contract is to be excluded in the computation of the year, and where the transferee fails to elect upon the day on which the year ended as thus computed, his right to become a purchaser of the slaves is at an end. Simpson v. Peck, 2 Swan, 54.

And under a bond containing a provision that if the interest on the indebtedness secured thereby should remain unpaid for the space of thirty days after it became payable the principal should become due at the option of the mortgagee, if an instalment of interest becomes due July 20, the limit is reached in case of non-payment on August 23, and a tender on August 29, is too late to prevent the exercise of the option. Serrell v. Rothstein, 49 N. J. Eq. 385, 24 Atl. 369.

In applying the rule in cases of forfeiture, however, that the day of the event after which, in a specified number of days, the forfeiture occurs, will be excluded, in case of failure of a mortgagor to pay interest within a specified number of days after it became due, a court of equity will lean against the construction which favors forfeiture. Thorne v. Mosher, 20 N. J. Eq. 257.

But under a contract by the terms of which a party is entitled to its benefit provided he comes to close the transaction within two weeks from the 24th of August on the terms therein mentioned, the computation of the time must commence on the 25th of August excluding the 24th, so that the two weeks would transpire with the 7th of September; and where the agent for the party called between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock at night on that day at his residence half a mile from his own place of business, where he would have to go to transact the business properly, and after he had retired to rest and was asleep, and could not have gotten up and dressed himself and gone to his office and completed the business before 12 o'clock, the application will not be deemed to have been made within the time required by law, as he is deemed to be required to perform within a reasonable time, which is to be regulated by the circumstances of the case. Curtis v. Blair, 26 Miss. 309, 59 Am. Dec. 257.

2. Negotiable instruments.

The general rule under the statute, as well as at common law, is that in computing the time that a note payable at a future date has to run, the day of the date is excluded. Beeman v. Cook, 48 Vt. 201, 21 Am. Rep. 123; Ammidown v. Woodman, 31 Me. 580; Leavitt v. Simes, 3 N. H. 14; Taylor v. Jacoby, 2 Pa. St. 495, 45 Am. Dec. 615.

And this is the rule whether the time runs from the date or from the day of the date. Henry v. Jones, 8 Mass. 453.

A note payable without grace in a specified time is not due until that time has expired, excluding the day the note was dated from the computation. Hill v. Norvell, 3 McLean, 583, Fed. Cas. No. 6497.

And in computing the time when a note or bill payable at a certain number of months minister (13 Edw. I. chap. 31), the parent of all statutes allowing bills of exception, required the signature and seal of one of the trial judges; but the reason for this rule was the necessity of presenting the bill immediately upon taking the exception to the judge for his signature, while his recollection was fresh. The practice afterwards was for the judge to note the exception, and to rely upon his notes in the determination of the question whether the bill tendered was true or not, and the bill could be tendered during the term. This rule has still further been relaxed by statute in many jurisdictions in this country, by permitting the bill to be presented within a limited time after the term. Our statute goes still further and allows the court to grant time for the tendering of the bill for allowance and settlement, not beyond the first day of the next succeeding term; and it also confers the power to allow the bill upon a court as well as a judge,—an innovation upon the usual statutory rule, and enlargement of the usual grant of time beyond the term within which to tender it for allowance. The time may be extended to and including the first day of the next succeeding term of the court, and, when the exception is reduced to writing, it must be presented to the court, or to the judge thereof in vacation, within the time given for allowance. If true, it shall be the duty of the court if presented in open court, or the judge of the court before whom the cause was tried if presented in vacation, to allow and sign it; whereupon it shall be filed with the pleadings as a part of the record, but not spread at large upon the journal. If the writing is not true, the court or the judge in vacation shall correct after date will become due, the rule is to exclude the day of the date from the computation, and include the day of payment when no days of grace are allowed, and the note will become payable on the same day of the stipulated month as that of its date. Roehner v. Knickerbocker, L. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 160; Campbell v. Lane, 25 Tex. Supp. 93.

Thus, where a note is dated November 11, 1858, and made payable in twelve months after date, the payee has no legal right to demand payment until November 11, 1859, and the debtor has until the last minute of that day to pay the note. Young v. Van Benthuyssen, 30 Tex. 762.

So, the maker of a note payable one day after date is entitled to the whole of the following day after the one on which the note is dated for payment, and cannot be sued thereon before that day has expired. Taylor v. Jacoby, 2 Pa. St. 495, 45 Am. Dec. 615; Sanders v. Ochiltree, 5 Port. (Ala.) 73, 30 Am. Dec. 550; Moore v. Hollaman, 25 Tex. Supp. 81; Raeffe v. Moore, 58 Ga. 94.

And a usage of banks to include the day of the date of a promissory note in their computation of the time when it becomes due will be recognized only as evidence of the assent of the parties to such usage and of their waiving their legal claims, and not as forming rules for the decision of the court. Blanchard v. Hilliard, 11 Mass. 85.

So, where days of grace are allowed on a negotiable note the day on which the note became due is excluded from the computation of the time at which suit may be maintained, or the statute of limitations will begin to run against the note. Bell v. Sackett, 38 Cal. 407; Fisher v. State Bank, 7 Blackf. 610; Watkins v. Willis, 58 Tex. 521.

And the rule is the same under the usual statutory provision as to the computation of time. Benson v. Adams, 69 Ind. 353, 35 Am. Rep. 220.

A note dated August 25, and payable in four years from date, falls due August 28, four years afterwards. Ripley v. Greenleaf, 2 Vt. 129.

And a promissory note dated October 17, 1849, payable twelve months after date, falls due, counting the three days of grace, on the 20th of October, 1850. Sheppard v. Spates, 4 Md. 400.

And a note dated November 1, 1857, payable eleven months after date, is not due, including the three days of grace, until October 4, 1858. Campbell v. Lane, 25 Tex. Supp. 93.

And one payable on the 1st of March is not 49 L. R. A.

due until the expiration of the 4th of that month, and an action commenced thereon on that day is premature. Wiggle v. Thomason, 11 Smedes & M. 452.

So, a bill drawn payable at five days after sight and accepted the first day of a month is payable on the 9th of the same month, the day of the acceptance being excluded and the three days of grace allowed, and a demand and protest for nonpayment on the 8th is premature and of no effect. Mitchell v. DeGrand, 1 Mason, 176, Fed. Cas. No. 9,661.

In Bellasis v. Heister, 1 Ld. Raym. 280, however, probably decided under the old common-law rule, it was held that in computing the time at which a bill of exchange payable a certain number of days after sight becomes due the day of sight is to be included.

Under Tenn. act Feb. 21, 1860, permitting a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent, but not to exceed 10 per cent for money loaned, which was to take effect from and after the 1st day of September, 1860, a note executed on that day at 10 per cent is usurious, as in such case the words "from and after" include that date. Turner v. Odum, 8 Coldw. 455.

The Missouri statute in relation to bills of exchange and negotiable promissory notes, § 737, providing that paper falling due on Sunday or a holiday shall be considered as falling due on the day previous, grants an exception to the general rule provided by Mo. Rev. Stat. § 6570, that when the last day for doing an act is Sunday, it shall be excluded in the computation of time. Miner v. Tilley, 54 Mo. App. 627.

So, in Wentworth v. Clap, 11 Mass. 87, note, which was an action on a note dated June 26, 1810, payable in fifty-seven days and grace, in which the usual demand on the maker was made August 21, and the usual notice upon the indorser August 24, the court refused to permit the note to go to the jury; but it does not appear whether the question depended upon the inclusion or exclusion of the first or last day of the period.

3. Insurance policies.

Insurance policies are contracts, and provisions for a period of time contained in them are subject to the common-law and statutory rules of computation to the same extent as contracts generally.

Thus, the rule is that the words "from the day of the date," in a provision for a period of time in an insurance policy, excludes the day, but "from the date" includes it. Howard's Case, 2 Saik. 625.

it, or suggest the correction to be made, and it shall then be signed as aforesaid. Rev. Stat. §§ 2040, 2049, as amended by Session Laws 1890, chap. 38, § 1. The exceptant may be allowed under the statute, not only time beyond the term, but until and including the first day of the next term, to tender the bill for allowance, and this full time was given in this cause. When this time is granted, pursuant to the statute, the exceptant ought not to be deprived of the right to present his bill on the first day of the next term, by a change in the personnel of the court, either by resignation, death or other casualty not occurring through his own laches.

The rule given in the earlier text-books was very liberal, and, where an appellate court had exhausted its endeavors to have the bill correctly returned it would still do what is in its power to obtain the ends of justice. In one instance, where a judge refused to sign a bill after having been so ordered by the appellate tribunal, and resigned in order to escape this duty, the supreme court, being satisfied that the bill was true as presented, ordered it entered as part of the record, as though it had been duly signed. People v. Pearson, 4 Ill. 270, 285, cited with approval in Powell, App. Proc. p. 253. In this work it is said in treating of this matter that "such, it is apprehended, would be the course of proceedings where the judge died before signing the bill which was presented to him in due time, or any other accident prevented its execution, where the appellate court were satisfied of the truth of its contents." In support of this position may be cited the case of Burk v. McMullen, 4 Pa. 317. The later text-books seem to lean

And the effect of the word "from" in an insurance policy insuring against claims for personal injury, in respect to accidents caused by vehicles for twelve calendar months from November 24, 1887, is to exclude November 24, 1887, and include November 24, 1888, in the computation of the period of insurance, so that the insurance company would be liable in case of the accidents happening November 24, 1888. South Staffordshire Tramways Co. v. Sickness & Acci. Assur. Asso. [1891] 1 Q. B. 402.

So, under the by-laws of a mutual benefit association, making an assessment payable on or before August 31, and providing that in case of nonpayment the member should be suspended, but giving sixty days from the date of suspension within which the member could secure reinstatement by paying all dues, assessments, and fines, an assessment made by the executive committee on the 1st day of August gives the member until the 31st, and all of that day in which to make payment, and in case of a nonpayment he would be suspended by operation of the by-law upon September 1, and reckoning the sixty days within which he could be reinstated by excluding the first and including the last day, payment on October 31 would be within the sixty days from September 1, and sufficient to reinstate the member. Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. Gootte, 61 U. S. App. 617, 89 Fed. Rep. 941, 32 C. C. A. 436.

And in Howard's Case, 1 Ld. Raym. 480, which was an action upon a life-insurance policy, dated September 8, 1897, for one year from the day of the date of the policy, the insured having died on the 3d of September, 1898, at one o'clock in the morning, it was held that the words "from the day of the date" were exclusive but that the insurer was liable because, as no fractions of a day will be considered, the policy remained in force until twelve o'clock of that night.

So, in computing the one year mentioned in an insurance policy providing that after one year from date the policy will be enforceable for the full amount, the day of the date is to be excluded in the absence of anything tending to show a contrary intention, and that the policy took effect at noon on the day of its date makes no difference. Walker v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 167 Mass. 188, 45 N. E. 89.

And under a stipulation that the policy is to be deemed forfeited unless the insured makes payment of an assessment within thirty days from the date of notice thereof, the day on which notice comes to him will be excluded in 49 L. R. A.

the computation of the thirty days. Protection L. Ins. Co. v. Palmer, 81 Ill. 88.

And under the rules of a mutual benefit association giving a member one month from date of notice of assessment within which to pay, a notice to a member that the time for payment expires May 10, and that he will stand suspended if not paid on or before that day, mailed to the member April 20, is insufficient and invalid, and will not warrant a forfeiture of the member's rights under his certificate. Bridges v. National Union, 73 Minn. 486, 76 N. W. 270, 409, 77 N. W. 411.

In computing the period of ninety days specified in an accident insurance policy insuring against accident which shall occasion death within ninety days from the happening thereof, the day on which the accident occurred is to be excluded; and where the death of the insured occurred at about the same hour of the accident on the ninety-first day thereafter, no recovery can be had. Perry v. Provident L. Ins. & Invest. Co. 99 Mass. 162.

And under 36 Vict. chap. 44, § 37, providing, in effect, that if a person takes additional insurance without the previous sanction of the original insurer his policy becomes void, but if he gives notice in writing, and the company does not within two weeks after the receipt of that notice express its dissent, the additional insurance shall be deemed to be assented to, the two weeks is to be reckoned exclusive of the day on which the notice was received; and where such a notice was given on the 5th of July, and a fire occurred on the 19th, the company is still in a position to repudiate the policy. McCrea v. Waterloo County Mut. F. Ins. Co. 26 U. C. C. P. 431.

So, the day upon which a notice was mailed should be excluded in the computation of the thirty days for which notice must be given, under the New York statute, prior to the maturity of a premium of a life insurance policy, in order to forfeit the policy for nonpayment. Rosenplanter v. Provident Sav. L. Assur. Soc. 96 Fed. Rep. 721, 46 L. R. A. 473, 37 C. C. A. 566; Rae v. National L. Ins. Co. 20 U. S. App. 410, 60 Fed. Rep. 690, 9 C. C. A. 215.

And where a life-insurance policy provides that it is to terminate in case the premium charged shall not be paid in advance on or before the day at noon on which the same shall become due and payable, if the payment falls due on Sunday that day is to be excluded, and the payment may properly be postponed till Monday without a forfeiture of the policy. Hammond v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co. 10 Gray, 306.

And the rule is the same under the Iowa stat to the position that the trial judge alone can settle and allow the bill of exceptions. 3 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 446, 452, 455, 456, and cases cited; 2 Thomp. Trials, § 2807, citing only Law v. Jackson, 8 Cow. 746; Elliott, App. Proc. § 799. Some of the courts hold to the rule that the trial judge alone is competent to sign the bill because he alone is personally cognizant of the proceedings, and can testify to the accuracy of the bill, and that the exceptant should not lose his exception because of an event he could in no wise prevent, and is entitled to a new trial where there is no trial judge to act; while other tribunals, of equal respectability and dignity, hold that the court continues although its personnel changes, and that the successor of the trial judge has authority to settle and allow the bill. Perhaps the differences in practice may be illustrated by contrastute where the articles of incorporation of the insurance company required the payment of an assessment to be made within thirty days from the time the notice of assessment was mailed, if the last of the thirty days is Sunday. Holbrook Bros. v. Mill Owners' Mut. Ins. Co. 86 Iowa, 255, 53 N. W. 229.

So, property insured against fire by a policy, purporting by its terms to run from the 14th of February until the 14th of August, and until so long after as the insured shall pay a designated sum and the insurer shall accept the same, is protected during the whole of the 14th of August, and the insurer is liable for loss caused by a fire on that day where the insured intended to keep up the policy, and the insurer knew of such intention, but the renewal premium was not demanded or paid until afterwards. Isaacs v. Royal Ins. Co. L. R. 5 Exch. 290, 18 Week. Rep. 982, 39 L. J. Exch. N. S. 189, 22 L. T. N. S. 681.

And a policy of insurance running to January 24, 1895, containing provisions for continuance, will be held to include the whole of that day, so that in case of the death of the insured at 8 o'clock in the evening of that day the company would be held liable on the policy, where by the provisions of the policy the premium was payable on or before January 24 in every year, so that the insured had all of the 24th in which to pay the premium and keep up an unbroken insurance. Thomson v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 4 Pa. Dist. R. 382.

And while a stipulation in an insurance policy, that it shall begin at noon and expire at noon on days named becomes a special rule for the fixing of the dates referred to, it does not apply as a rule for all computations of time under the policy. And another clause therein providing that the policy shall be canceled at any time at the request of the insured or by the company, by giving five days' notice of such cancellation, is governed by the general rule excluding the first day and counting days as legal days beginning and ending at midnight. Penn Plate Glass Co. v. Spring Garden Ins. Co. 189 Pa. 255, 42 Atl. 138.

An insurance policy on goods to be shipped between two designated days, however, does not cover goods shipped on either of such days, as both days are to be excluded in the computation. Atkins v. Boylston F. & M. Ins. Co. 5 Met. 439, 39 Am. Dec. 692.

And where a loss occurs on September 13, 1889, under a policy of fire insurance containing a clause limiting the time within which an action may be commenced to six months after loss, and action is commenced March 15, 1890, 49 L. R. A.

ing the rulings in the states of Illinois and North Carolina upon the matter of settlement of the bill where the trial judge has forgotten the occurrences of the trial, and cannot remember whether the matters detailed in the bill are true or not. In the former state, it was held that where the testimony was not preserved by the stenographer's notes, and the judge had forgotten the evidence, he should examine the witnesses who testified at the trial, to ascertain what they testified to. People v. Gary, 105 Ill. 264. In the latter state, in a case where the trial judge certified that his memory of the case was too indistinct to remember what had occurred at the trial, owing to the lapse of time since the trial and before the bill was presented to him, the court said: "There are numerous precedents that if the case cannot be settled by the judge by reason

It may be maintained, as the six months will not be deemed to include the day upon which the loss of damage occurred, as to include it would effect a forfeiture of the policy. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 1 Kan. App. 197, 40 Pac. 1099.

And where a policy of fire insurance provides that no action shall be maintained thereon unless brought within twelve months after the loss, and the insured property is burned on March 16, 1884, suit instituted on the policy March 16, 1885, is in time where March 15 is Sunday. Owen v. Howard Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 571, 10 S. W. 119.

But in Allemania Ins. Co. v. Little, 20 Ill. App. 431, which was an action upon an insurance policy containing a provision that in case of loss suit must be brought thereon within six months from the happening of the fire, it was held that if the fire occurred on the 23d day of August, 1884, and suit was not brought until the 24th day of February, 1885, it was too late; but the case was one in which the fire commenced upon one day and lasted until the next, and the question was whether the limitation ran from the day the fire commenced or from the day of the destruction of the building.

4. Leases and rental contracts.

Under the old common-law rule a lease to commence at date included the day of the date. Haths v. Ash, 2 Saik. 413.

And a lease habendum from henceforth included the day of the making. Cornish v. Cawsey, Aleyn, 77.

And under a lease made habendum from the date of the indenture, ejectment might be maintained on the same day with the demise. Osborn v. Rider, Cro. Jac. 135.

But a lease habendum from the day of the date excluded the day of the date. Cornish v. Cawsey, Aleyn, 77.

And in ejectment on a lease habendum from the day of the date, the ejectment could not be laid on the same day, but on a demise habendum from henceforth it might. Lewlyn v. Williams, Cro. Jac. 258.

And a lease from the 1st day of May to the 1st day of May next was exclusive of those days, so that ejectment would lie on the second day. Doe ex dem. Bailey v. Smyth, Anthon, N. P. 243.

Under a lease made to run from the 1st day of April for a year, however, the 1st day of April is not to be excluded in computing the year, but the term commences on that day. Fox v. Nathans, 32 Conn. 348; Marys v. Anderson, 24 Pa. 272.

of loss of papers, or (prior to the amendatory act) by reason of his having gone out of office, or otherwise, a new trial will be granted; and, by analogy, the same rule will be adopted where, by the great lapse of time, the judge is unable to settle the case." But it was held that the appellant must show that he was not guilty of laches. Simmons v. Andrews, 106 N. C. 201, 10 S. E. 1052, and cases cited; Owens v. Paston, 106 N. C. 480, 11 S. E. 375. In the case of Newton v. Boodie, 3 C. B. 795, it was held that where a party has lost the benefit of a bill of exceptions tendered to the ruling of a judge at nisi prius or at the assizes, by the death of the judge, and without any default on his own part, it is not competent to another judge of the court out of which the record issues to seal the bill of exceptions; and in such a case, where the circumstances warrant it, the court will allow the party to move for a new trial, notwithstanding the proper time for doing so has elapsed. But the rule was granted in order to see if there was evidence to fix one of the defendants on plea of not guilty, as borne out by the notes of the chief justice of the court, who died before the bill was perfected; and it was decided that there was no evidence to connect such defendant with any of the proceedings in trespass, and this was decided upon the notes of the evidence, and the rule was discharged. This ruling and examination into the notes of the judge was tantamount to reviewing the cause on its merits, warranted, perhaps, under the circumstances, and is apparently a better practice than to leave the party to obtain his new trial in the court below, as a matter of right and of course, owing to the death of the trial judge without

And expires on the last day of March of the next year. Ibid.

And a lease dated September 10 ends on September 10 of the following year, and a notice to surrender possession by that time is good. Higgins v. Halligan, 46 Ill. 173.

And where a house is leased on the 10th of January from year to year the rental payable quarterly, the fourth quarter becomes in arrear on the 10th of the succeeding January, and the landlord may on that day resort to legal proceedings to obtain payment thereof. Donaldson v. Smith, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 197.

So, in Hatter v. Ashe, 3 Lev. 438, 1 Ld. Raym. 84, it was held that the words "from the date," in the lease, should be construed to include in the term the day upon which the lease was dated.

In Barwick's Case, 5 Coke, 93b, however, it was held that the day of the date of a freehold lease by letters patent running from the day of the date was to be excluded, and that therefore the letters patent were void, as creating a future estate.

And in Bacon v. Wallee, 3 Bulst. 204, it was held that a lease running "from date," and one running "from the day of the date," is the same thing, the expressions meaning the same. But see, infra, Wilcox v. Wood, 9 Wend. 346; Mack v. Burt, 5 Hun, 28.

And in Ackland v. Lutley, 9 Ad. & El. 879, 1 Perry & D. 636, it was said that the general understanding is that terms for years last during the whole anniversary from the date on which they are granted.

So, the more modern cases hold that the words "from the date" and "from the day of the date," when used in a lease to designate the commencement of a term, have precisely the same meaning. Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. 485.

And that the words "from the day of the date" or "from the date," contained in written leases, may be exclusive or inclusive of that day according to the context and subject-matter. Donaldson v. Smith, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 197.

And a lease of premises includes the day of the date of the lease, unless the instrument shows a contrary intention, or unless a different custom or usage appears. Buchanan v. Whitman, 78 Hun, 67, 27 N. Y. Supp. 604.

In the above case Mack v. Burt, 5 Hun, 28, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the lessee was to have possession "from and after May 1," this expression unquestionably excluding the 1st day of May.

So, a lease for twenty-one years in possession but not in reversion, made by a person under a power reserved in his marriage settlement, 49 L. R. A.

to his only daughter to commence from the day of the date, is a lease in possession and not in futuro, and is good, as it will be construed inclusive of the day of the date. Pugh v. Leeds, 2 Cowp. 714.

And under a lease of certain premises from December 25, 1849, for a term of fourteen years, with a proviso that it shall be lawful for either of the parties to determine the demise at the expiration of the first seven years by six months' notice, the seven years are to be reckoned from December 25, 1849, and the lease may be determined on December 25, 1856. Bird v. Baker, 1 El. & El. 12, 28 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 7, 4 Jur. N. S. 1148.

And the term of a lease made January 25, to run from the first day of April next for and during and until the full end and term of five years, rent to be payable in equal quarterly payments on the first day of April, July, October, and January, and containing a provision that the lessees would at all times leave upon the land leased property enough to secure one quarter's rent, commences on the 1st day of April that year, and includes that day, and the first quarter's rent is payable on that day in advance. Deyo v. Bleakley, 24 Barb. 9.

So, the tenancy under a one-year lease will be deemed to commence on the day of the date of the lease, and to terminate at midnight of the day preceding that day in the following year, where the lessee took possession of the premises on the day of the date of the lease. Buchanan v. Whitman, 151 N. Y. 253, 45 N. E. 556.

And under a lease executed and delivered June 12, 1890, to continue during the full term of twenty-one years next ensuing, giving the lessees power to terminate it whenever they found it would not pay them to continue, a notice of election to terminate the lease, given June 12, 1891, was too late, as the lessee had then entered upon the second year and was liable for the rent for that year. Nesbit v. Godfrey, 155 Pa. 251, 25 Atl. 621.

And a lease to hold from the 1st day of April for one year expires on the 31st day of March of the following year, and, though the lessee is entitled to remain in possession the whole of the 31st of March, he has no right to remain a moment longer, and it would be proper to give him notice to quit on that day. Fox v. Nathans, 32 Conn. 348.

Upon the other hand, however, the general rule in the computation of time of the duration of a lease has been held to be to count the day of the execution of the lease out, and count certifying to the bill; for it is manifest that such a course would be a hardship to the prevailing party in the court below, to force him to retry the cause, if there were no reasons for doing so. By granting a new trial the defendant in error would be put to the time and expense of a retrial of the cause; and this should not be done, unless it appears by an inspection of the record and a re-examination of the issues and the evidence, that prejudicial error was committed by the trial court. But it is intimated that in the case of Stirling v. Wagner, 4 Wyo. 5, 31 Pac. 1032, 32 Pac. 1128, this court through the opinion of the writer hereof, intimated that the court allowing the bill must have some knowledge of the matters detailed in it, otherwise it could not suggest the corrections to be made, and that the statute using such language indicates an accurate knowledge of the events at the trial. We do not think that the case decided that question, as the matter in dispute therein was as to the power of an ex-judge to sign the bill in vacation; and we held that a liberal construction of the statute, under the weight of authority, permitted him to sign and allow the bill. There were some expressions in that case which might lead counsel to infer that the bill must be allowed and signed by the trial judge, and not by a stranger to the proceedings of the trial court; but, taken as a whole, the opinion does not speak, nor attempt to speak, conclusively on the point in dispute in this case. It was insisted that a liberal construction of the statute should prevail in that case, and this is the rule that we shall follow in the case before us, as the statutes relating to the practice in securing bills of exception the day of its termination in. Higgins v. Haligan, 46 Ill. 173.

And under a lease providing that the lessee is to hold from and after the 1st day of May for one year to the 1st day of May in the succeeding year, the 1st day of May at the commencement of the term is to be excluded in the computation of the time it is to run. Wilcox v. Wood, 9 Wend. 346; Mack v. Burt, 5 Hun. 28.

And a written lease specifying that it is for the term of one year from the 1st day of November, 1872, to the 1st day of November, 1873, commences on the 2d day of November, 1872, and terminates on the 1st day of November, 1873, where there is no evidence of a different intent. Goode v. Webb, 52 Ala. 452.

And a lease for a term of years running from the 1st day of July in a designated year begins, so far as the computation of the duration of the term is concerned, on the 2d of July of that year. Atkins v. Sleeper, 7 Allen. 487.

So, an assignment executed on the 31st of August of all rents due and coming due to the assignor until October 1, of a designated year, from the tenants of a certain estate who pay their rents on the first day of each month, will not be deemed to have been intended to be limited to the rents falling due on the 1st of September, but will also be deemed to include those which fall due on the 1st of October. Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94.

And where rent becomes due on the 1st day of May, a period of one month from that time within which payment is required to be made to prevent a forfeiture expires on the 1st day of June following, as in the computation of the time the day upon which the rent becomes due is to be excluded. Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 177, 17 L. ed. 822.

And where a lease provides that in case of default in payment of rent within five days after it becomes due judgment in ejectment may be entered, and the fifth day falls on Sunday, the tenant has the whole of Monday within which to pay rent. Gregg v. Krebs, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 779.

Occupation for the full time under a lease of real estate from the forenoon of April 2, 1890, until the forenoon of April 1, 1891, constitutes living upon demised premises for one entire year within the provisions of a law giving a pauper a settlement who has thus dwelt in a township for one whole year, as in such case the statutory rule for the computation of time does not apply, and the computation is to be made most favorable to the parties whose rights are affected thereby. Cascade Overseers v. Lewis Overseers, 148 Pa. 834, 23 Atl. 1003, 49 L. R. A.

And a lessee under a lease, stating that he has taken it from the 30th day of September at a designated price per annum, and who enters at noon on that day and quits at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of September 29 of the following year, is a tenant for a year, and gains a settlement by reason thereof within the terms of 1 Wm. IV. chap. 18, § 1. Queen v. St. Mary, 1 Bl. & Bl. 816.

c. To statutes of Limitations.

1. In civil actions.

In ordinary cases the rule that in reckoning time from a day or a date the day or date is to be excluded is applicable to the statute of limitations, as well as to other statutes. Seward v. Hayden, 150 Mass. 158, 5 L. R. A. 844, 22 N. E. 629.

In the above case, it was said that the authorities on which Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 193, infra, rested have since been overruled, and that case was said to have been overruled by Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, 19 Am. Rep. 470, supra, III.

And the rule of the modern decisions is nearly, if not quite, universal, that in computing the time in which an action may be brought the first day upon which it might have been brought is excluded. Davison v. Budlong, 40 Hun. 245; Harris v. Harris, 13 Ohio C. C. 170.

And that the day when money became due should be excluded from the count in reckoning the duration of the period prescribed by the statute of limitations. Geistweidt v. Mann (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. 372.

And if a statute of limitations were deemed to apply to a demand existing at the time of its enactment, the day on which the statute took effect would be excluded in the calculation of the six years within which an action might be brought. Fairbanks v. Wood, 17 Wend. 329.

Thus, a statute of limitations passed on the 7th day of February, 1843, providing a ten years' limit, does not bar a bill filed on the 7th of February, 1853, under the rule of the Alabama courts to include one day and exclude the other, except where the statute requires so many clear days. Owen v. Slatte, 26 Ala. 547, 62 Am. Dec. 745.

So, in computing the time within which a limitation will run against an account, the day on which the cause of action accrued should not be counted. Smith v. Dickey, 74 Tex. 61, 11 S. W. 1049.

In the above case, State v. Asbury, 26 Tex. 82, infra, VII. c. 2, was distinguished upon the

are a part of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that and "all proceedings under it shall be liberally construed, in order to promote its object, and assist the parties in obtaining justice." The court should save the rights of the parties, if possible, by saving the bill. Edwards v. Kearney, 13 Neb. 502, 14 N. W. 536, and other cases from that state cited in Stirling v. Wagner, 4 Wyo. 5, 31 Pac. 1032, 32 Pac. 1128. It is true that the last clause of the section of the Code relating to the allowance of bills of exception does provide that, if the bill is not true, the court or judge shall correct it, or suggest the corrections to be made; and this, standing alone, might imply that the court or judge must have personal knowledge of the events of the trial, in order to intelligently sign the bill; but the exceptant has filed his bill within the time allowed by the court, in open court, and this is under the express provision of the statute. The court continues although its personnel changes, and where, as in this case, a duty is imposed upon the court to sign and allow the bill of exceptions, as well as upon the trial judge, it seems that the power to perform these duties must carry with it the power of determining the truth of the bill, even where the presiding judge is the successor to the trial judge, who has died, resigned, or gone out of office. The court, at the term when the bill was presented, was the successor of his predecessor, could exercise the same powers, and had the right to act on every case that remained undecided upon the docket, as fully as his predecessor could have done. The court remains the same, and the change of the incumbents cannot and ought not, in any respect, to injure the rights of the litigant ground that that was a criminal case, and in criminal cases the statute and proceedings are to be construed strictly against the prosecutor and in favor of the accused.

And in computing the six years within which an action for money had and received must be brought under the New Jersey statute of limitations, the day on which the money came to the defendant's hands should not be counted. McCulloch v. Hopper, 47 N. J. L. 189, 54 Am. Rep. 146.

So, a cause of action on an account for goods sold accrues on the day that the last of the goods was delivered, and that day is to be excluded in computing the time within which action may be brought under the statute. Menges v. Frick, 73 Pa. 137, 13 Am. Rep. 731.

And where goods are sold on the 19th day of February, 1870, and the debt thereby created becomes due on that day, the creditor may bring his action therefor on the 19th day of February, 1873, as in such case the three years' limitation providing that action may be begun within three years is computed by excluding the first day and including the last. Hook v. Bixby, 13 Kan. 164.

And in computing the time within which a suit against a boat for stores should be commenced, the day on which the delivery was completed should be excluded. The Mary Blane v. Beehler, 12 Mo. 477.

In Shaline v. Goodman, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 267, however, it was held that under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 3203, providing that actions to recover debts not evidenced by a contract in writing must be brought within two years, an action on a claim for goods sold which fell due February 28, 1881, brought on February 28, 1883, is barred.

So, in computing the time within which an action should be commenced upon a note, the day on which the right of action accrued should be excluded. McGraw v. Walker, 2 Hilt. 404; Blackman v. Nearing, 43 Conn. 56, 21 Am. Rep. 634; Beeman v. Cook, 48 Vt. 201, 21 Am. Rep. 123; Baker v. Ramsburg, 4 Mackey, 1; Bilitch v. Brewer, 83 Ga. 333, 9 S. E. 837.

And the practice of commencing suits on notes payable at bank on the 3d day of grace after their dishonor, though well established, does not affect the rule. Blackman v. Nearing, 43 Conn. 56, 21 Am. Rep. 634.

The day of payment is included as the last of the currency of a note or bill, so that a suit on that day is premature, and for that reason the statute of limitations does not begin 49 L. R. A.

to run until the day after the day of payment. Bilitch v. Brewer, 83 Ga. 333, 9 S. E. 837.

In the above case, English v. Ozburn, 59 Ga. 392, infra, VII. h, was distinguished on the ground that the object of service of notice of trial is to enable the party to make preparations for trial, and there is no obstacle to beginning such preparation on the day of service; and Barrett v. Devine, 60 Ga. 632, and Western & A. R. Co. v. Carson, 70 Ga. 388, infra, VII. f, 2, were distinguished upon the ground that certiorari can be brought upon a judgment or verdict upon the same day of its rendition, whereas, in the absence of an express demand and refusal, no action can be brought upon an ordinary promissory note until the day after its maturity; and it was said that it is doubtful whether the rule for computing time for the bringing of certiorari, indicated though not distinctly expressed, in Jones v. Smith, 28 Ga. 41, infra, VII. f, 2, would not, if correctly understood and applied in computing months, be consonant to the one laid down in Ga. Code, § 4, ¶ 8, for computing days, which is that only the first or the last day shall be counted.

Thus, a right of action on a note which became due October 4, 1852, accrues thereon October 5, 1852, and an action commenced October 5, 1858, is within the six years limited by statute. McGraw v. Walker, 2 Hilt. 404.

And a promissory note made payable generally on or before the 15th day of October, 1880, is not barred on the 15th day of October, 1888, so as to prevent suit on that day. Bilitch v. Brewer, 83 Ga. 333, 9 S. E. 837.

And the day of the date of a promissory note payable on demand is to be excluded in reckoning the six years named in the statute of limitations after which an action thereon is barred. Seward v. Hayden, 150 Mass. 158, 5 L. R. A. 844, 22 N. E. 629.

So, an action on an order or warrant for the payment of money dated December 23, 1885, commenced December 23, 1895, is in time under the ten years' statute of limitations, within the statutory rule of Missouri that the time within which an act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last. Parsons v. Egyptian Levee Co. 73 Mo. App. 458.

And under Pennsylvania act of May 28, 1858, providing that no action to recover back interest in excess of 6 per cent voluntarily paid shall be sustained unless commenced within six months from and after the time of payment, suit brought on November 14, 1881, to recover such an excess included in a payment made on the preceding 13th of May in season, the 13th parties. Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. 291, 9 L. ed. 234; McCandless v. McWha, 20 Pa. 183; Bahnsen v. Gilbert, 55 Minn. 334, 56 N. W. 1117; Hays v. McNealy, 16 Fla. 406.

In this connection it is well to keep in view the discrimination made in the statute. If the bill is presented in vacation, it is to be presented to the judge of the court "before whom the cause was tried;" but there is no such statutory provision expressly providing that the "court" settling and allowing the bill should be presided over by the trial judge.

In this case the parties opposing the bill stated in writing that the bill was true, and the order of the court allowing the bill recites such admission. The evidence and the details of the trial appear to be preserved by the notes of the official stenographer, and, although these are made prima facie correct by statute, they are not sufficient without the authentication of the court or judge allowing the bill. Johns v. Adams, 2 Wyo. 194, 197. We think that as the evidence and exceptions were thus preserved by the stenographer, and as the opposing parties admitted the correctness of the bill, the court to whom the bill was presented, within the time given by the order allowing time for its preparation and presentation, was warranted in authenticating the bill. In these busy days, it would be impossible for a trial judge to remember accurately the events of the trial, without having recourse to the laborious and tedious method of taking copious notes of the evidence and matters of exception; and his memory would have to be marvelous without such aids to carry in his mind the minutiae of the trial, where, as in of November being Sunday. Edmundson v. Wrang, 104 Pa. 500, 49 Am. Rep. 590.

And under the Oregon statute declaring that no action shall be maintained for the recovery of real property or the possession thereof unless the plaintiff or his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor was seised or possessed of the premises within ten years before the commencement of such action, the day on which the grantors of the person in possession became entitled to possession by the death of their ancestor should be excluded in making the computation. Grant v. Paddock, 30 Or. 312, 47 Pac. 715.

So, in computing time under the statute of limitations against actions for a personal injury, the day on which the injury occurred should be excluded. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 67; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Goodson, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 27.

And an action brought October 30, 1896, is in season under a one-year limitation, when the injuries were sustained October 30, 1895. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 67.

And so is an action for a personal injury received on April 13, 1888, commenced on April 13, 1889. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Watson, 90 Ala. 68, 8 So. 249.

In Peterson v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 97 Ga. 708, 25 S. E. 370, however, it was held that the plaintiff in an action for a personal injury has a right to sue on the day he is injured, and in computing the period of limitation of the time within which he must sue, which in Georgia is within two years after the right of action accrues, the computation should begin on that day.

So, an action brought by a person discharged from imprisonment December 14, against a magistrate for false imprisonment, by writ sued out on the following 14th of June, is commenced within the six calendar months after the act committed, as required by 24 Geo. II. chap. 44, § 8, as the 14th day of December ought not to be included in the computation. Hardy v. Byle, 9 Barn. & C. 603, 4 Mann. & R. 295.

Likewise the five years from the date of entry of a judgment within which it may be revived under Pa. act March 26, 1827, are to be computed exclusive of the day on which the judgment was rendered. Green's Appeal, 6 Watts & S. 327.

And in computing the ten years within which an action upon a judgment is required by law to be brought, the day on which the judgment was entered is to be excluded. Warren v. Slade, 23 Mich. 1, 9 Am. Rep. 70. 49 L. R. A.

And where judgment was rendered March 15, 1859, an action commenced by summons March 15, 1869, is in season. Ibid.

And where a decree was rendered November 20, 1883, a suit upon it is in time under the ten years' statute of limitations, within Tenn. Code, § 46, providing that the time within which any act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first and including the last day, if brought November 20, 1893. Cowan v. Donaldson, 95 Tenn. 322, 32 S. W. 457.

However, in Cook v. Moore, 95 N. C. 1, it was held that a judgment rendered October 20, 1873, is barred by the ten years' statute of limitations, so that no recovery could be had thereon in an action brought October 20, 1883.

So, where the last day of the five years during which a judgment is a lien falls on Sunday, a scire facias to revive the judgment may, under the Pennsylvania statutory rule for the computation of time, be issued on the Monday following. Lutz's Appeal, 124 Pa. 273, 16 Atl. 858.

And the statute of limitations of New York providing that a final judgment or decree for a sum of money is presumed to be paid and satisfied after the expiration of twenty years from the time the party recovering it was first entitled to a mandate to enforce it, runs against a judgment recovered January 27, 1876, and expires on January 27, 1896, under the statutory construction act of 1892, 1894, § 27, providing that in computing any specified number of days, weeks, or months from a specified event, the day upon which the event happens is deemed the day from which the reckoning is made, and the day from which the time is reckoned shall be excluded, as the statute being silent as to the day from which the computation of a year is to be made, it will be deemed to have been the intention of the legislature to adopt the same computation as that adopted with reference to months, the statute providing that a year is twelve months; and where a summons is placed in the hands of the sheriff for service on that day, and thereafter duly served, it is in season. Connecticut Nat. Bank v. Bayles, 17 App. Div. 596, 45 N. Y. Supp. 305.

In the above case, Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 193, infra, was said to have been overruled by Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. 485, infra, VII. g. 3, and it was said that it was not in accordance with the decisions of the state of New York; and Aultman & T. Co. v. Syme, 87 Hun. 295, 34 N. Y. Supp. 379, 91 Hun. 632, 36 N. Y. Supp. 528, infra, VII. g. 1, was disapproved, the court saying that it was difficult to under-this case, time was allowed and taken to and including the first day of the next term of court. As a matter of practice, sanctioned by long usage and recognized by statute, both bench and bar rely upon the official notes of the stenographer; and this practice is one that should be upheld, as it expedites the business of the courts.

Repeating the quotation from People v. Williams, 91 Ill. 91, used in the case of Stirling v. Wagner, 4 Wyo. 5, 31 Pac. 1032, 32 Pac. 1128: "It is, however, contended that so long a time has elapsed since the trial of the cause that it is impossible for the judge to determine what the evidence was on the trial. We do not apprehend there can be much trouble on this score. It is set up in the petition, and not denied in the answer, that a full phonographic report of all the evidence offered on the trial was made at the time by skilled reporters. If this be true, we cannot see how there can be much room for controversy in regard to the evidence." These expressions relate to the preservation of evidence taken in a chancery case in open court, instead of by the master; but the principle is the same as in other Illinois cases, particularly that of People v. Gary, 105 Ill. 264, holding that the trial judge may resort to such means when his memory cannot be relied upon, in determining the truth of the bill of exceptions; that is, either by taking as true the notes of the stenographer, or by rehearing the witnesses where the testimony has not been preserved. We do not decide whether this latter method can be resorted to, as the court below re-examined no witnesses, but evidently relied upon the notes of the stenographer, and the written admission of the adverse parties, to stand how the learned general term arrived at its conclusion.

So, the day upon which an administrator or executor qualifies is to be excluded in computing the limitation of two or three years, as the case may be, which will bar a creditor's demand against him as such. Elder v. Bradley, 2 Sneed, 247; Paul v. Stone, 112 Mass. 27.

And a demand made upon an administrator on the 12th of January, 1853, is within the year prescribed by law after the granting of letters of administration, where the letters were granted on the 12th of January, 1852. Kimm v. Osgood, 19 Mo. 60.

And a writ dated January 19, 1871, is in season within the two years' limitation in Massachusetts, where the bond was filed and approved January 19, 1869. Paul v. Stone, 112 Mass. 27.

So, under the Texas statute providing that the owner of a claim against an estate rejected by an administrator may, within ninety days after such rejection, bring a suit against the administrator for its establishment, the ninety days is to be computed exclusive of the day of the rejection of the claim. Hunter v. Lanus, 82 Tex. 680, 18 S. W. 201.

And under an order of the probate court made on the 14th of December, limiting to six months from date the time for the exhibition of claims against the estate of the deceased person, a claim exhibited on the 14th of the following June is in season. Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Rep. 249.

So, where a cause of action accrues to a woman during coverture, and her right depends upon her having brought her suit within one year after her discovery, a bill filed November 9, 1870, is in time, where her husband died November 9, 1869. Rogers v. Etter, 8 Baxt. 13.

A person becomes of age, however, on the day before his 21st birthday, and the period of limitation of an action which accrues at a person's majority begins to run on that day, and that day is to be included in the computation of the time, and therefore a period limited by years will expire on the second day before his birthday anniversary. Ross v. Morrow, 85 Tex. 172, 16 L. R. A. 542, 19 S. W. 1090.

In computing the time excepted from the statute of limitations by Ala. Code, § 3244, providing that the time between the death of a person and the grant of letters testamentary or of administration, not exceeding six months is not to be counted in the estimate, the day of the death of a person must be included, and the 49 L. R. A.

day on which the letters are granted must be excluded. Allen v. Elliott, 67 Ala. 432.

And under Tex. Const. 1869, art. 12, § 43, providing that statutes of limitations in civil actions were suspended by the acts of session, and shall be considered as suspended within the state until the acceptance of the Constitution by the United States Congress, the day upon which Congress accepted the Constitution of Texas is to be excluded in the computation of the four years' limitation, and where the Constitution was approved by act of Congress dated March 30, 1870, a suit brought March 30, 1874, is in season. Dowell v. Vinton, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 327.

The contrary rule, however, has been laid down and acted upon in a few of the cases. But it is to be observed that, with the exception of the Georgia case, they are all early cases, and were probably decided under the early rule including the first day when the computation was from an act done.

Thus, where a definite period is fixed by law within which a given right or privilege is to be taken advantage of, the first day upon which that right or privilege could lawfully have been asserted is to be considered the date upon which the period of limitations commenced to run, and that day is to be included in the computation where any question arises as to whether such right or privilege was exercised in time. Jones v. Kern, 101 Ga. 309, 28 S. E. 850.

And in determining whether an action on a written instrument was brought within the period allowed by the statute of limitations, the day of the date of the instrument is to be included, and the day on which the summons was issued is to be excluded. Shinn v. Tucker, 33 Ark. 421.

So, a promise made on the 1st day of November, 1811, and which might be sued on that day, is barred by the six years' statute of limitations, so that a suit thereon cannot be maintained on the 1st of November, 1817. Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 193, said in Seward v. Hayden, 150 Mass. 158, 5 L. R. A. 844, 22 N. E. 629, supra, to have been overruled in Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, 19 Am. Rep. 470, supra, III.

And an action on a note commenced December 16, 1854, is barred by the four years' statute of limitations where the note was dated December 14, 1850, and was made payable one day after date. Smith v. Wilson, 15 Tex. 132.

So, where a judgment was rendered in the circuit court on the 3d day of October, 1820, the filing of a transcript of the record in the supreme court on the 3d of October, 1825, is establish the truth of the bill; and we think his action was warranted under the circumstances of the case, as there was no dispute as to what the bill should contain. Elliott, App. Proc. § 799; Wood v. People, 59 N. Y. 119. Under the case as presented, it would be manifestly unjust to both of the parties to reject the bill for lack of sufficient authentication, as such a course might result in a new trial, when the record, if examined, might not disclose reversible error. If such would not be the result, the plaintiffs in error would be deprived of the right of review secured under constitutional and statutory provisions, without any fault on their part, and when they have proceeded under the order of the court, and are not guilty of laches. We feel that we must liberally construe the statute, and save the bill in order to prevent a miscarriage of justice.

3. The remaining ground of the motion is that the bill of exceptions does not purport to show all the evidence admitted at the trial of the cause. It is but fair to say that counsel inserted this ground owing to the action of the court in requesting an argument too late, and is barred by the statute of limitations. Jacobs v. Graham, 1 Blackf. 392.

2. In criminal prosecutions.

The rule has been laid down by a majority of the cases that in computing time under an act requiring an indictment to be found within a designated period after the commission of the crime the day upon which the criminal act is done is excluded. Com. v. Wood, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 179.

Thus, the two years' statute of limitations against prosecutions for murder in Florida does not bar a prosecution by indictment on the 13th of December, 1880, where the offense was alleged to have been committed on the 13th of December, 1878. Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 970.

And an action under a statute declaring that certain penalties incurred by railroad companies shall be sued for within ten days after the same are incurred is properly brought on the 30th of December, where the penalties were incurred on the preceding 20th of that month. People v. New York C. R. Co. 28 Barb. 284.

So, under the act for the prevention of cruelty to animals, 12 & 13 Vict. chap. 92, § 4, requiring that every complaint thereunder shall be made within one calendar month after the cause of such complaint shall arise, the day of the alleged offense is to be excluded from the computation of the calendar month, and an information laid on June 30 is in time to confer jurisdiction upon the justice where the act of alleged cruelty was committed May 30. Radcliffe v. Bartholomew [1892] 1 Q. B. 161.

So, W. Va. Code, chap. 13, § 12, providing that the time within which an act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, or if the last be Sunday it shall also be excluded, applies to the construction of statutes in criminal as well as civil cases, and applies to a statute of limitations with reference to the violation of the exercise law. State v. Beasley, 21 W. Va. 777.

In State v. Asbury, 26 Tex. 83, however, it was held that the application of the doctrine that in computing time such a construction should be given as will operate most to the ease of the party entitled to favor, to the question whether or not the statute of limitations has run against a misdemeanor, requires the inclusion of the day on which the offense was committed.

And in People v. Wood, 10 N. Y. Legal Obs. 61, it was held that in computing the time limited within which to prosecute for a criminal offense the day on which the offense was committed is to be included.

And under 27 Eliz. chap. 13, providing that no person shall take any benefit from a robbery except he or they so robbed shall commence his or their suit or action within one year after such robbery, the day on which the robbery was committed is included in the year; and where a robbery took place on the 9th of October, a writ on the 9th of the following October is too late. Norris v. Hundred de G. 1 Brownlow & G. 156, Hobart, 139.

d. To provisions for time in civil actions.

1. General statement as to.

Common-law rules as to computation of time are applicable to provisions for time in civil actions as well as in the construction of statutes and contracts, and the rules of court, and statutory rules for the computation of time are particularly applicable to civil actions, having been adopted and enacted in some instances with special reference to civil actions, and having been held in some instances to be applicable to them only.

2. Service and return of process.

The general rule is that, in determining the question whether or not a summons was served in time, either the day of service or the day of return or appearance will be excluded, and the other of those days will be included. Day v. Hall, 12 N. J. L. 203; Bowman v. Wood, 41 Ill. 203.

And usually the day of service of a summons is included, and the return day is excluded. Reigelsberger v. Stapp, 91 Ind. 311; Stebbins v. Anthony, 5 Colo. 348; Neitzel v. Hunter, 19 Kan. 221; Pollard v. Yoder, 2 A. K. Marsh. 264; Ferris v. Zeldler, 5 Phila. 529; Montgomery v. Souder, 8 Lanc. L. Rev. 185.

In Ferris v. Zeldler, 5 Phila. 529, supra, it was said that the contrary rule suggested in Barber v. Chandler, 17 Pa. 43, 55 Am. Dec. 533, infra, was but a dictum and not important to the decision of the case, and that a later opinion of one of the judges plainly shows its incorrectness.

Thus, a summons served on the 11th of the month, returnable on the 17th, is served six days before the return day within a provision requiring such service, under the rule for the computation of time, that the day of the service should be excluded and the day of the return included. Young v. Krueger, 92 Wis. 361, 66 N. W. 355.

And so is service of a summons on the 11th returnable on the 17th. Smith v. Force, 31 Minn. 119, 16 N. W. 704.

And a writ issued and served on Wednesday, which is returnable at a term to commence on the following Monday, is served at least five days before the return thereof, within the meaning of the Alabama statute. Garner v. Johnson, 22 Ala. 494.

And a requirement of five days' service of a summons is satisfied by service on the 26th of April of a summons returnable on the following 1st day of May. Day v. Hall, 12 N. J. L. 203.

And a writ served on the 5th of January, to be returned on the 15th is in time. Reigelsberger v. Stapp, 91 Ind. 311.

upon that point. We cannot say that it is necessary to have all the evidence before us at this stage of the proceedings. That matter may only be determined by an inspection of the bill and an examination of the assignment of errors. So far as we can ascertain from the certificate to the bill, we think it may be gathered therefrom that all of the evidence is in the bill. However, if it should hereafter appear that the bill has vices which will invalidate it, we can dispose of that matter upon the hearing upon the merits.

The motion to strike the bill of exceptions from the record is overruled.

Conway, J., concurs.

Scott, J. (who sat in lieu of Mr. Justice Potter, who was of counsel below), dissenting:

I dissent from so much of the foregoing opinion as appears in paragraph 2 thereof, and think that the motion to strike should be granted.

And a summons returnable March 23d, making the answer day the 12th of April following, allows twenty days for answering after the day on which the summons was returnable, as required by law. Neitzel v. Hunter, 19 Kan. 221.

So, a service of a summons on the 21st of September, the term of court to which it is returnable commencing on the 1st of October following, is a sufficient ten-day service, excluding the day of service and including the day on which the term commences. Martin v. Reed, 9 Ind. 180.

And so is a service on the 22d of June, when the court commences on the following 2d day of July. Womack v. McAhren, 9 Ind. 6.

And so is a service on the 21st of September when the first day of the term of the court following is the 1st day of October. Martin v. Howell, 8 Ind. 501.

Likewise of a service on the 28th of December, when the term of court to which it is returnable commences on the 7th of January following. Dugdale v. Ryan, 8 Ind. 529.

And service on the 31st of August, the term of court commencing on the 10th of September following. Blair v. Davis, 9 Ind. 236; Blair v. Manson, 9 Ind. 357.

And a summons issued on the 15th of June, returnable on the 25th of that month, is proper. Krohn v. Templin, 2 Ind. 146.

And so is the service of a summons on the 27th of December, returnable on the 7th of the January following, the term of court commencing on the 6th of January; and it makes no difference that it was made returnable on the 2d day of the term, and that default was taken on that day. Baltimore & O. & C. R. Co. v. Fihn, 2 Ind. App. 55, 28 N. E. 201.

And where six days' service of a summons is required, and it is returnable on the 8th of the month, a service on the 2d is good under the rule for computation of time, reckoning one day inclusive and the other exclusive. Columbia Turp. Road v. Haywood, 10 Wend. 422.

In the above case, Small v. Edrick, 5 Wend. 137, infra, VII. d. 4, was distinguished upon the ground that the phraseology of the statute under which that case arose was different, the statute there requiring notice to be served at least fourteen days before the first day of the court, while in the present case the statute required the summons to be served at least six days before the time of appearance.

So, under Ind. act March 6, 1877, chap. 105, § 315, providing that if the summons be personally served ten days before the return day the action shall stand for issue and trial at the term during which it was made returnable, the time is computed by excluding the day of service and including the return day, and service on the 9th for the 19th is a good ten days' service. Monroe v. Paddock, 75 Ind. 422.

And a judgment by default may be rendered on the 10th day after the day on which the summons was served under the Indiana statute 49 L. R. A.

with relation to the service of a summons, computing the time by excluding the day of service and including the return day of the writ. Kerr v. Haverstick, 94 Ind. 178.

And in determining whether service of a summons had been perfected twenty days previous to the return term, as required in Alabama, the first day of the term is the last day of the period limited, and if by including this day twenty days have elapsed after the day of service, the case properly stands for trial at that term. Thrower v. Brandon, 89 Ala. 406, 7 So. 442.

By the early rules of the common law, however, if a process was served on Wednesday, that day was included in the computation, and where it was returnable on the following Monday, it would be deemed to have been served five days before the term of court beginning that day. Dickinson v. Lee, 2 Coldw. 615.

And in computing the time of serving process before the return day the day of service was included and the return day excluded. Dilts v. Zeigler, 1 G. Greene, 164, 48 Am. Dec. 370; Temple v. Carstens, 1 G. Greene, 492.

And in counting the three days in which a summons in forcible entry and detainer might be made returnable, the day of service was one day, and a service of a summons on the 6th returnable on the 9th was good. Barto v. Abbe, 16 Ohio, 408.

So, a service of a summons on the 27th of October the return day of which was the 7th of November is a service of ten days before the return day, the return day being left out of the count. Black v. Johns, 68 Pa. 83.

And in computing time with a view to the service of process the day on which the process is served is one of the fourteen at the expiration of which, in Massachusetts, a writ is returnable, and a writ served October 20, returnable November 3d, is in season. Butler v. Fessenden, 12 Cush. 78.

In New Hampshire under the statute providing that writs of mesne process shall be served fifteen days before the sitting of the court at which the process is returnable, the day upon which the service is made is included as one of the fifteen days. Bell v. Adams, 10 N. H. 181, dictum.

And in the computation of time under the Pennsylvania act of assembly authorizing the institution of suits before a justice, all summons to be returnable in not less than five days from the date, the day of issuing the summons as well as of the return is to be counted. Barber v. Chandler, 17 Pa. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 533.

In the service of writs in Connecticut the statute declares that the day of service shall be computed. Spencer v. Champion, 13 Conn. 11. dictum.

When it is provided, however, that a designated period of time shall intervene between the service and return of process, many of the cases have held that both the first and last day

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Louisiana ex rel. STATE PHARMACEUTICAL ASSOCIATION et al.
App'rs.

v.

John T. MICHEL.

(52 La. Ann. 936.)

*1. A bill which has passed both houses of the general assembly, and been signed by the presiding officers thereof, is presented to the governor, within the meaning of the Constitution, when the clerk of the house of representatives or secretary of the senate carries the same to the executive office, and offers or tenders it to the governor or his secretary.

*Headnotes by Blanchard, J.

of the period must be excluded, though the contrary rule has also been asserted.

Thus, under the Texas statute requiring that process shall be executed at least five days before the return day thereof, five full days must intervene between the service and the return of a citation, and both the day of service and the day of return must be excluded from the computation. O'Connor v. Towns, 1 Tex. 107.

And Mich. Comp. Laws, § 4987, providing that a summons in a proceeding before a circuit-court commissioner to obtain possession of lands must command the defendant to appear at a time and place therein to be specified, not less than three nor more than six days from the issuing thereof, shows an intention to require three entire days after the day of service and before the return. Sallee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

And where a summons in a justice's court is tested on the 27th of February and returnable on the 8th day of March, and the law requires such summons to be served at least six days before the return day, the last day for the service thereof is March 1. Isabelle v. Iron Cliffs Co. 57 Mich. 120, 23 N. W. 613.

And Mich. Comp. Laws, § 4987, requiring the summons in certain cases to be served at least two days before the return day thereof, necessarily excludes the day of the return from the computation of the two days. Sallee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

So, in computing the five days allowed to sheriffs and their deputies for serving writs under Ga. act 1856, pamphlet 136, the return day or latest day fixed for filing petitions at law or bills in equity must be excluded. Baxley v. Bennett, 33 Ga. 146.

And a justice's summons required to be made returnable not less than two nor more than four days from the date thereof is erroneous and defective if made returnable on the 2d day after it was issued. Everts v. Flak, 44 Mich. 516, 7 N. W. 81.

But in the computation of time under the Missouri statute providing that in proceedings to revive justices' judgments the citation shall be served upon the defendant commanding him to appear at a time not less than ten nor more than thirty days from the issuing thereof, and that the same shall be served at least ten days before the day of appearance, the statutory rule that time shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last applies, the words "not less" and "at least" not being equivalent in meaning to the word "more." Sappington v. Lenz, 53 Mo. App. 44.
49 L. R. A.

2. The mandate of the Constitution is not that the governor must act, in the way of a veto, within five days of his reception of a bill, but within five days of its presentation to him.

3. The day on which the bill is presented is not to be included in the computation of the five days, but the last day of the specified period is to be computed.

4. A "day," in this sense, begins at 12 o'clock midnight, and extends through twenty-four hours to the next 12 o'clock midnight.

5. There is a general rule that, where a limitation of time is fixed within which a particular act or thing is required to be done, if done at all, after which performance or the doing of the thing would be without effect, if the time limited exceed a week, an intervening Sunday is included in

So, in the computation of time under Iowa Rev. 1860, § 2815, providing that a defendant, if served otherwise than by publication, shall be held to answer at the next term provided he be served so as to leave at least ten days between the day of service and the first day of the term, both the day upon which the service was made and the first day of the term of the court are to be excluded. Robinson v. Foster, 12 Iowa, 186.

And Iowa Rev. § 4121, providing that unless the term "clear days" is used the mode of computing time is by excluding the first day and including the last, does not apply to prevent the exclusion of both the first and last days in the computation of time under that act. Ibid.

So, under Oldham & W.'s Digest, art. 415, providing that citations shall be returnable on the first day of the term of court after they are issued, and that the defendant is not compelled to plead at the return term unless the citation shall be served at least five days before the first day of the return term, exclusive of the days of service and return, the five days are clear days, and where a citation issues October 3, and is made returnable October 17, and service is made October 12, judgment cannot be rendered by default against the defendant for failure to answer. Dickson v. Burke, 28 Tex. 117.

Under the Nebraska statutory rule provided, by § 895 of the Code, that time within which an act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, the invariable practice has been to make a summons, required by Neb. Code, § 811, to be served, unless accompanied by an order of arrest, at least three days before the time of appearance, returnable on the 4th day from the date of service. White v. German Ins. Co. 15 Neb. 660, 20 N. W. 30.

But a summons in an action of forcible detainer issued and served three days prior to the day appointed for trial, including the day of service, is sufficient under that act to confer jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. Messick v. Wigent, 37 Neb. 692, 56 N. W. 493.

And the time of service of a summons issued by a justice of the peace under Kan. Civil Code, § 536, containing a similar provision, is governed by the statutory rule, and the day of service must be excluded but the day of appearance included. Schultz v. Hine, 39 Kan. 334, 18 Pac. 221.

In the above case, Garvin v. Jennerson, 20 Kan. 371, infra, VII. d, 5, was distinguished the computation; if less than a week, Sunday is excluded.

6. When the time stipulated is such that it does not necessarily include Sunday, Sunday is excluded from the computation without express mention of the fact. When the time stipulated must necessarily include Sunday, to exclude that day from the computation there must be an express declaration to that effect.

7. It follows that, if one of the five days accorded the chief executive in which to return a bill with his objections happens to be Sunday, the same is not to be computed as one of the constitutional "five days."

8. This view is strengthened by the general policy of the law in regard to the first day of the week, which, by statute, in Louisiana, is made a day of "public rest," and by the sentiment prevailing in Christian countries.

9. Whatever doubt may exist in the judicial mind as to the proper meaning to be given to the words used, it is safely resolved in favor of that construction, sanctioned alike by the policy of the law and the moral sentiment of the people.

(February 19, 1900.)

A PPEAL by relators from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of East Baton Rouge refusing a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to promulgate a legislative bill as a law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Albert Voorhies, for appellant:

Sundays are counted as the general rule. Pierce v. Cushing, 33 La. Ann. 404.

Mr. Charles M. Cunningham, with Mr. Milton J. Cunningham, Attorney General, for respondent.

upon the ground that in that case the provision required depositions to be filed at least one day before the day of trial, while in the case at bar the requirement was that the summons must be served at least three days before the time of appearance, and not on the day of appearance.

Under How. (Mich.) Stat. § 6827, providing that a summons shall in all cases except as therein before provided, be served at least six days before the time of appearance mentioned therein, the day of service is excluded in the computation, and the appearance day is included. People use of Chaddock v. Barry, 93 Mich. 542, 18 L. R. A. 337, 53 N. W. 785.

And a summons served on the 14th, returnable on the 16th of the same month, is sufficient under a statute requiring summons in actions in which the plaintiff is a nonresident to be served not less than two days before the time for appearance mentioned in it. Ball v. Mander, 19 How. Pr. 468.

But in estimating the five days for the return of a summons under the Pennsylvania act, providing for the return of a summons not more than eight nor less than five days after the date of the summons, the day of the date of the summons is to be excluded, and a summons issued by a justice April 12, requiring the defendant to appear April 16, gives only four days, and is therefore void. Montgomery v. Souder, 8 Lanc. L. Rev. 185.

So, the statutory rule for computation of time applies to the time for publication of notice to nonresident defendants, under Kansas Code providing therefor; and the answer day must be not less than forty-one days from the date of the first publication, and the day of the first publication is to be excluded and the answer day included. Beckwith v. Douglas, 25 Kan. 229.

But a service of a summons under a statute requiring publication for four successive weeks, the first of which shall be at least thirty days before the return day, by publishing it for four successive weeks, the first publication being on May 2 and the last on May 3, the return day being June 1, is sufficient where either the first day of publication or the return day is excluded from the publication. Stebbins v. Anthony, 5 Colo. 348.

So, Hutch. (Miss.) Digest 823, art. 17, requiring the publication of notice to nonresident defendants in chancery to be made once a week, for one month, requires that publication shall be made for a calendar month, which period must intervene between the date of the first publication and the date of the last, except 49 L. R. A.

cluding one day and including the other. Mitchell v. Woodson, 37 Miss. 587.

And a publication in three successive issues of a weekly newspaper, of a summons against an absent or transient defendant, does not comply with Oldham & W.'s Dig. (Tex.) art. 1103, requiring a publication for three successive weeks of a citation issuing from a justice's court, unless the full term of three weeks or twenty-one days elapse between the day of the first publication and the day on which the judgment is rendered exclusive both of the first day of the publication and the return day of the writ. Hill v. Faison, 27 Tex. 428.

The California statutory rule for the computation of time, requiring that when an act is to be done within a designated time it shall be computed by excluding the first and including the last day, does not apply to the computation of the time for the publication of a summons required to be once a week for not less than three months, as there is no time within which an act is to be done within the meaning of the statutory rule for the computation of time. Savings & Loan Soc. v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 347.

But the general rule applies to service of citation in surrogate's court required to be eight days before return day, so that the service of a citation on the 12th returnable on the 20th of the same month is sufficient to confer jurisdiction. Re Carhart, 67 How. Pr. 216, 2 Dem. 627.

And under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2520, requiring citations in surrogate's court to be served "at least" eight days before the return day, the statutory rule applies to the computation of the six days. Re Carhart, 2 Dem. 627.

But under Mich. act March 16, 1840, requiring that a citation shall be served three days at least before the return day thereof, both the day of service and the day of return must be excluded in the computation of the three days, the latter being excluded by the terms of the statute and the former by the rule of construction excluding the day of service, that being a fraction of a day. Dousman v. O'Malley, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 450.

And a default cannot be entered in Louisiana until after the full expiration of the tenth day after the citation, and a default cannot be confirmed until the full expiration of two days after the default was entered. Hart v. Nixon, 25 La. Ann. 136.

So, when the last day for the service of a summons in the New York marine court was Sunday, service on the next day is in time, under § 788 of the Code, providing that if the last day occurs on Sunday it must be excluded

Blanchard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding by mandamus to compel the secretary of state to promulgate as a law duly enacted an act of the general assembly of the state of Louisiana known as "House Bill No. 46," entitled "An Act to Amend and Re-enact Act No. 66 of the Acts of 1888, Entitled 'An Act to Regulate the Practice of Pharmacy; to Regulate the Sale of Compounded Medicines and Drugs, Preparations and Prescriptions; to Regulate the Sale of Poisons; to Create a State Board of Pharmacy, and to Regulate the Emoluments Thereof; to Prevent the Practice of Pharmacy by Unauthorized Persons, and to Provide for the Trial and Punishment of Violators of This Act by Penalties and through Civil Process, and to Repeal all Laws Contrary to, or in Conflict with, Any of the Provisions of This Act.'" The contention of the relators is that at a late session of the general assembly the aforesaid bill duly passed both houses, and was on the 8th of July, 1898, signed by the speaker of the house of representatives and by the lieutenant governor and president of the senate; that the enrolled copy of the bill so signed was presented to the governor of the state on the same day, July 8, 1898, for executive approval; and that, the act not having been returned by the governor within five days thereafter, the general assembly continuing in session, it had become a law as though the executive signature in approval thereof had been attached. The further contention is that application was made to the secretary of state to promulgate the act in accordance with law, and that he refused to do so. To the preliminary writ, requiring him from the count, though the day of service was the 31st day after the granting of the attachment. Gibbon v. Freel, 65 How. Pr. 273.

3. Pleading.

In computing the time to plead with reference to including the first and last day, the general rule is that one day is to be inclusive and the other exclusive, so as to give the party the full number of days. Hoffman v. Duel, 5 Johns. 232; Phelan v. Douglass, 11 How. Pr. 193.

And where a party has a certain number of days in which to plead or answer, judgment cannot be taken against him until after the last of those days has expired. Brackett v. Brackett, 61 Mo. 223; Lohman v. Cox, 9 N. M. 503, 56 Pac. 286.

Thus, in computing the time to plead on ten days' notice under a rule of court, the day on which the notice was given is excluded. Marks v. Russell, 40 Pa. 372.

And where a rule to plead is served on the 1st day of September, a default entered on the 21st of that month is premature. Hoffman v. Duel, 5 Johns. 232.

But where ten days' time to reply is given, either the first or the last of the ten days must be excluded from the calculation, and where the extension is made March 24, and the following five days are holidays, excluding the one day of the ten, a judgment for want of a replication on the 8th of April following is not too soon. Liffin v. Pitcher, 1 Dowl. N. S. 767, 6 Jur. 537.

And the defendant in an action in which a judge's order had been made, that three days after the service thereof at the defendant's residence the plaintiff should be at liberty to proceed as if personal service of the writ of summons had been effected, and service is made on the 21st of the month, has all of the 24th thereof, and a judgment obtained upon the 24th is irregular. Weeks v. Wray, L. R. 3 Q. B. 212, 37 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 84, 17 L. T. N. S. 498, 16 Week. Rep. 399, 9 Best & S. 62.

So, under a declaration entered on the 6th of June, indorsed, "Plea in four days for judgment," the defendant has the whole of the 10th of January to plead, and judgment signed on that day for want of a plea is irregular. Dunn v. Hodson, 1 Dowl. & L. 204, 7 Jur. 971.

And a summons requiring the defendant to answer plaintiff's plea on or before August 2, gives him all of the 2d day of August in which to plead, and no action on the merits of the case can be taken until August 3d, and a judgment rendered previous to that time is invalid. Lohman v. Cox, 9 N. M. 503, 56 Pac. 286.

49 L. R. A.

And where an order is obtained giving a defendant seven days' time to plead on May 15, and defective pleas are delivered on May 22, a judgment signed by the plaintiff as for want of a plea upon that day is too early, and will be set aside. Pepperell v. Burrell, 2 Dowl. P. C. 674, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 372, 4 Tyrw. 811.

Under the Pennsylvania court rule providing that unless a declaration be filed within twelve months from the first day of the term to which an action is brought a judgment of non pros shall be entered, as of course, calendar months are referred to, and the return day of the summons must not be counted, so that, where the summons was returnable November 6, 1876, judgment of non pros cannot be regularly entered until November 8, 1877. Gustine v. Elliott, 11 W. N. C. 433.

And under the Wyoming statute, by which the first day of a period of time is excluded and the last day included, a month from August 30 would begin at the last moment of that day, and six months would end with February 28, following, so that a petition filed on February 28 is filed within six months from August 30, notwithstanding the fact that the other six months of the year is one day short. Daly v. Anderson (Wyo.) 48 Pac. 839.

Under the early common-law rule, however, the time to plead under a judge's order extending the time was reckoned inclusive of the day of the date of the order, but exclusive of the day on which it expired. Kay v. Whitehead, 2 H. Bl. 35.

So, the general rule is that the word "till," in an order giving a defendant till a designated day to plead, is inclusive of the day to which it is prefixed, and permits a plea on that day. Dakins v. Wagner, 3 Dowl. P. C. 535; Thomas v. Douglass, 2 Johns. Cas. 226.

And see supra, IV. f.

And where a rule is entered requiring a party to plead before the end of the next term he has the whole of the last day of the term in which to plead, and his default cannot be entered until the next day thereafter. Sharp v. Door, 15 Johns. 531.

And under the Texas statute of May 15, 1846, p. 370, § 24, providing that, if the defendant does not file his answer before the fifth day after the meeting of the court, the plaintiff may have judgment by default made final on such day, judgment cannot be made final on the fifth day of the meeting of the court, but must be delayed until the sixth, as the day of the meeting of the court must be excluded in the computation. Hollis v. Francois, 1 Tex. 118.

to show cause why the act should not be promulgated, the secretary of state, through the attorney general, answers, in effect, that he should not be required to promulgate the act as a law of the state for the reason that the same was vetoed by the governor within five days after he received the same at the hands of the messenger of the house, and was not subsequently passed by the action of the two houses of the general assembly, the governor's veto to the contrary notwithstanding. The case was tried below on the following admission of facts: "It is admitted that house bill No. 46, after being signed by the speaker of the house and lieutenant governor on the 8th of July, 1898, was carried to the governor's office about 10 or 11 o'clock on the night of July 8; that the governor's private secretary had gone home, and that the governor declined to receive the bill at that hour; that this bill was in a batch containing a large number, as shown by the receipts; that on the next day—July 9—the bills were delivered to the governor, and he signed a receipt, which had been prepared on July 8, without noticing the date; that the engrossed copy of the bill, along with the copies of the other bills included in the same receipt, was delivered to the secretary of state at 4 P. M. on July 9, as shown by memorandum made by the secretary of state at that time; that the secretary of state also signed a receipt for this bill, together with the other bills, dated July 8, without noticing the date. It is further admitted that the governor's veto reached the house of representatives at 11:20 P. M. on July 14, just before adjournment, and that the house did finally adjourn that night at 12 o'clock without

So, in Oxley v. Bridge, 1 Dougl. 67, it was held that on a rule to plead by a particular day, that day is construed to continue until the office opens on the next morning.

In Clark v. Ewing, 87 Ill. 344, however, it was held that where time to plead is extended by rule to a specified date, it does not include that day, and a default for want of a plea may be taken on that day, the words "to that day" meaning until the meeting of the court on that day.

And in Freeman v. Jackson, 1 Bos. & P. 479, it was held that the first and last days of the period designated in an order to enlarge time for pleading are both reckoned inclusively.

So, in computing the number of days intervening between the filing of a petition and the commencement of a term of court, where a designated number of days is required to intervene, the Sundays intervening are counted, and the rule is not affected by the fact that the term commenced upon Monday, and the last day of the period was Sunday. Heard v. Phillips, 101 Ga. 691, 44 L. R. A. 369, 31 S. E. 216; Conklin v. Marshalltown, 66 Iowa, 122, 23 N. W. 294.

As no act was required to be performed on that day. Conklin v. Marshalltown, 66 Iowa, 122, 23 N. W. 294.

So, in Seed v. Ketchum, 15 W. N. C. 366, upon a rule to strike off judgment taken for want of a defense on the third Saturday after the return day, which was October 6, the defense having been filed on the following Monday, it was said that the established practice has been to consider the Monday following the return day as within the first week in which a plaintiff may file his copy without notice.

New York Code Civ. Proc. § 788, providing that if the last day to perform an act falls on a public holiday it must be excluded in computing time, does not include the Saturday half holiday provided for by N. Y. Laws 1887, chap. 289, and where the time to plead expires on Saturday the pleading should be served on that day, and an order extending the time to plead, granted on Monday, is unauthorized, as the time has already expired. Fries v. Coar, 19 Abb. N. C. 267, 13 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 152.

4. Notices of trial.

The day on which a notice of hearing or trial is served is to be excluded, as a general rule, in the computation of the time when such notice is to be given, and the first day of the term included. Anderson v. Baughman, 6 Mich. 298; Dayton v. McIntyre, 5 How. Pr. 117, 3 Code Rep. 164.
49 L. R. A.

And in the case of the publication of a notice the rule is to exclude the day of publication and include the first day of the court. Stebbins v. Anthony, 5 Colo. 348.

And statutes providing that the time within which an act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last establishes a general rule for the computation of time applicable to service of notices of trial, as well as to any other acts in civil actions. State ex rel. Currie v. Weld, 39 Minn. 426, 40 N. W. 561; Easton v. Chamberlin, 3 How. Pr. 412.

And this is the rule notwithstanding another statute providing that notice of trial may be served at any time after the issue joined, but must be ten days before the court. Easton v. Chamberlin, 3 How. Pr. 412.

In State ex rel. Currie v. Weld, 39 Minn. 426, 40 N. W. 561, supra, it was said that the court is not disposed to extend the rule of computation adopted in Greve v. St. Paul, S. & T. F. R. Co. 25 Minn. 327, infra, beyond the language of the rule then construed.

Thus, a notice of trial served on the 11th for the 21st is a good ten days' notice. Dayton v. McIntyre, 5 How. Pr. 117, 3 Code Rep. 164.

And so is a notice on the 9th for the 19th. Legge v. Williams, cited in 2 Tidd, Pr. 9th ed. 755.

And notice under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1373, posted on the 12th day of July of a hearing on the 22d day of the same month, is sufficient as a ten days' notice under the statutory rule. Bates v. Howard, 105 Cal. 173, 38 Pac. 715.

And a notice of trial served October 10, for a term of court beginning October 18, is a sufficient eight-day notice. State ex rel. Currie v. Weld, 39 Minn. 426, 40 N. W. 561.

2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 410, § 7, however, providing that notice of trial shall be served at least fourteen days before the first day of the court at which the trial shall be intended to be had, excludes the first day of the court from the count; and where the rule of court excludes the day of service, the computation must be had by excluding both the first and last day, and a notice served on the 9th for the 23d is insufficient. Small v. Edrick, 5 Wend. 137.

And in computing the ten days under the Kansas statute providing for the trial of issues at a term of court which are made up ten days before the term, the first day of the term should be excluded and the day on which the issues were made up by the filing of the last pleading included. Dougherty v. Porter, 18 Kan. 206.

And in giving the ten days' notice of agree-acting on the veto; that the governor takes no note of the hour that a bill is received or the hour when a veto is sent in. But the secretary of state noted the hour that he received the engrossed copy of house bill No. 46, and the clerk of the house noted the hour at which the veto came in." There was judgment refusing to make the writ peremptory, and dismissing the action at relators' cost. This appeal followed.

The question first arising for determination is, What constitutes a presentation of an act of the general assembly to the chief executive for his action, under the Constitution? If the act known as "House Bill No. 46" were, in the constitutional sense, presented to him on July 8, and he did not return the same, with his veto, to the house in which it originated until more than five days after such presentation, then the act must (unless an intervening Sunday—one of the five days—is excepted from the computation) be considered as having become a law, and the veto without effect to prevent that consummation. Article 41 of the Constitution is imperative that, "as soon as bills are signed by the speaker of the house and president of the senate they shall be taken at once, and on the same day, to the governor by the clerk of the house of representatives, or secretary of the senate." The bill in question was signed by the speaker of the house and president of the senate on July 8, 1898. It therefore became the duty of the clerk of the house to take it at once, on the same day, to the governor, and he did so. It was between 10 and 11 o'clock at night, it is true, but the governor was in his office at the capitol building, and it was "the same day" on which the presiding offi-ment required by rule 8 of the Minnesota supreme court the day of service and the first day of the term must both be excluded. Greve v. St. Paul, S. & T. Falls R. Co. 25 Minn. 327.

5. Notices, motions, and proceedings in general.

As to all proceedings in actions with reference to which an act is required or permitted to be done in a designated period of time, the general rule is that the first day of the period is to be excluded in the computation of such time. Phelan v. Douglass, 11 How. Pr. 193.

Thus, service of notice of motion on Thursday is a sufficient four days' notice, where the motion was to be made on the Monday following, being the first day of the term of court, though the last day of the four was Sunday. Charles v. Stansbury, 3 Johns. 261.

And under a rule of court requiring applications for a change of venue to be made by the second Wednesday of the term of court, the second Wednesday is included and an application on that day is a sufficient compliance with the rule. Walters v. Stockberger, 20 Ind. App. 277, 50 N. E. 763.

So, the statutory rule for the computation of time excluding the first day and including the last applies to a continuance for service by publication under Kan. Comp. Laws 1879, § 35, p. 708, providing that in such case the justice of the peace shall continue the cause for a period not less than thirty nor more than fifty days, and it is not necessary that there should be thirty clear days excluding both the day of adjournment and the day of trial. Warner v. Bucher, 24 Kan. 478.

And in computing the time of a notice to take depositions, either the day on which the notice is given or the day on which the depositions are to be taken is to be included. Littleton v. Christy, 11 Mo. 390.

And under the provisions of the Ohio statute notice of the taking of depositions must be one day previous to the taking, and the day of giving notice, and also the day of taking the depositions, must be excluded from the computation. Devlin v. Jelly, Tappan (Ohio) 127.

So, the time limited by Mich. Comp. Laws, § 4245, requiring notice of application for an order that a commission issue to take a deposition at least ten days before the making of such application, is to be reckoned exclusive of the day of service and inclusive of that on which the application is to be made. Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286.

And notice of such an application to take the deposition of a witness out of the state, served 40 L. R. A.

July 29 which application was to be made on August 8, is sufficient under a statute requiring such notice to be served at least ten days before the making of the application. Eaton v. Peck, 26 Mich. 57.

And in Walsh v. Boyle, 30 Md. 262, it was held that a notice in a proceeding in equity in which each party was allowed by order to take testimony upon giving one day's notice, given on the 28th of December that evidence would be taken on the following day, is sufficient.

But, under Kan. Civ. Code, § 361, providing that every deposition intended to be read in evidence on a trial must be filed at least one day before the trial, one clear day must intervene between the filing of the deposition and the commencement of the trial at which it is to be read, and both the day on which the deposition is filed and the day of the trial are to be excluded in making the computation. Garvin v. Jennerson, 20 Kan. 371.

And, under the statutory rule for the computation of time excluding the first day and including the last, a notice of the taking of a deposition, required to be for at least six days under the circumstances of the case, given on the 21st of the month, stating that the deposition would be taken on the 26th, gives insufficient time and the deposition will be quashed. Richardson v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 8 Iowa, 260.

And a notice under a writ of inquiry, given on the 9th of the month for the 23d thereof, is not a sufficient notice required by law to be given fourteen days before the day on which the writ is to be executed. Nichols v. Nichols, 10 Wend. 560.

It has been held, however, probably under the old common-law rule of computation, that where a previous notice of a motion or other proceeding in a statute is required to be given, the whole of the day on which the notice is served is included in the computation of time, and the day upon which the motion is to be made or other proceeding had is excluded. Vandenburgh v. Van Rensselaer, 6 Paige, 147.

And under that rule, where the law requires that a month's notice of an action shall be given, the month begins with the day on which the notice is served. Castle v. Burditt, 3 T. R. 623.

But the two days' notice allowed by 9 Geo. I. chap. 22, providing for actions to recover damages for injury done to premises maliciously set on fire, for giving notice of the offense, are reckoned exclusively of the day the fire occurs. Pellew v. Hundred of Wotton, 9 Barn. & C. 134, 4 Mann. & R. 130.

cers of the two houses had attached their signatures to the bill. If the clerk of the house had not taken the bill that day, at once after its signature by the presiding officers of the two houses,—certainly before 12 o'clock midnight,—to the governor, he would have failed in the duty prescribed for him by the organic law. Article 76 of the Constitution declares that "every bill which shall have passed both houses shall be presented to the governor. If he approve it, he shall sign it; if not, he shall return it, with his objections in writing to the house in which it originated," etc. The language is: "Every bill . . . shall be presented to the governor." Here the bill was carried to the governor's office. It was at night. The governor's private secretary had gone to his home, but the governor himself was there. The clerk of the house made known the object of his visit. The governor declined to receive the bill. The clerk withdrew, and returned with the bill the next day, July 9, 1898, when it was received by the governor, and a receipt signed dated July 8, 1898. It seems this receipt had been prepared by the clerk the evening previous, expecting the bill to be then received by the governor; and the next day, when it was signed, the date was not noticed. Undoubtedly, the object of the clerk of the house in going to the executive office on the night of July 8 was to fulfil his constitutional duty of presenting the bill to the governor on the same day on which the presiding officers of the two houses had signed it. When he made known the purpose of his visit to the governor, and tendered the bill, it was a presentation of it, in the constitutional sense, and the fact that the governor de-

And notice of one calendar month, required to be given of the commencement of an action, given April 28, is in time where the action was commenced on the following May 29. Freeman v. Read, 4 Best & S. 174, 32 L. J. M. C. N. S. 226, 10 Jur. N. S. 149.

And a notice given to the justice of the peace, of an intended suit, pursuant to Pa. act March 21, 1772, served on the 19th of May, when suit was brought on the 18th of June, is a sufficient thirty days' notice. Thomas v. Adick 16 Pa. 14.

But in the computation of the calendar month's notice to a justice of the peace of an action against him for wrongfully breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling house, required by 24 Geo. II. chap. 24, § 1, the day of giving the notice and the day of suing out the writ are both to be excluded. Young v. Higgon, 6 Mees. & W. 53, 8 Dowl. P. C. 212.

In the above case Castle v. Burditt, 3 T. R. 623, supra, II., was said to be overruled.

So, in computing the thirty days prior to the next term of court that a subpoena in a divorce action must issue, the day of its issue must be excluded, but the day previous to the return day, though Sunday, is to be counted. Fordham v. Fordham, 2 Del. Co. Rep. 78.

And under Neb. Gen. Stat. 265, § 7, providing that the terms of probate court shall commence on the first Monday, and that such terms shall be deemed open until the third Monday of the same month, such third Monday is included in the term, where the act also provides that on that day all causes not then finally determined shall be continued by the court until the next regular term. Ryan v. State Bank, 10 Neb. 524, 7 N. W. 276.

6. Attachment, replevin, and arrest.

The rules above given for the computation of a period of time appear to apply, with very little exception, to periods of time prescribed for the performance of acts in connection with attachment, replevin, and arrest.

Thus, under Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 123, § 57, providing that the copy of the writ and of the return of an attachment of personal property of a designated class shall be deposited in the town clerk's office within three days thereafter, the day on which the attachment is made is to be excluded. Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, 19 Am. Rep. 470.

And the proper rule for the computation of time, under Ill. Rev. Laws 1833, 87, § 11, providing that the defendant in foreign attachment shall be notified of the pendency of the attachment by publication, and in case sixty 49 L. R. A.

days shall not intervene between the first insertion of the notice and the first term of the court the cause shall be continued, is to exclude the day on which the notice was first inserted in the newspaper, and include the day on which the term commenced. Valrin v. Edmonson, 10 Ill. 270; Forsyth v. Warren, 62 Ill. 68.

So, where the statute permits the intervention of one day between the date of the jurat to an affidavit for attachment and the act or date of issuing the writ, the day does not begin to run until the expiration of the day upon which the affidavit is executed, and the writ may issue after the expiration of the intervening day. Horton v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 195, 57 N. W. 109.

And the four days from the time of the return of a writ after which a bail bond can be assigned under the English practice should be computed one of the first and last days inclusive and the other exclusive, and where the return is made on Wednesday, the bail bond cannot be assigned until Monday, the fourth day being Sunday. Bullock v. Lincoln, 2 Strange, 914.

And where the bond was excepted to on Wednesday an attachment could not regularly issue against the sheriff until the Tuesday following, Sunday being omitted. North v. Evans, 2 H. Bl. 35.

So, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 638, requiring service of the summons in an action in which an attachment has been granted within thirty days after the granting thereof, if the thirtieth day is Sunday, a service on the thirty-first day is sufficient under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 788, providing that in the computation of time if the last day occurs on Sunday it must be excluded from the count. Gibbon v. Freel, 93 N. Y. 93.

Under the old common-law rule, however, the last day of a term of court was considered as the day on which all judgments were rendered unless it appeared otherwise from the record, and in computing the thirty days from a judgment during which property attached on mesne process was holden, the day after the last day of the term was the first of the thirty. Portland Bank v. Maine Bank, 11 Mass. 204.

And in Spencer v. Champion, 13 Conn. 11, the court intimated its opinion that in computing the time limited for the continuing after final judgment of a lien on real estate created by attachment the day on which the judgment was rendered was to be included, but refused to decide the point, the case turning upon other ground.

Pennsylvania act June 20, 1883, however, providing for the exclusion of the first and the clined to then receive it did not render nugatory and ineffective this presentation. To hold otherwise would put it in the power of a chief executive to delay at will the presentation of a bill to him,—something the Constitution is careful to guard against. "If any bill," says the last clause of article 76 of the Constitution, "shall not be returned by the governor within five days after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly, by adjournment, shall prevent its return, in which case it shall not be law." The mandate of the organic law is not that the governor must act, in the way of a veto, within five days of his reception of a bill, but within five days of its presentation to him. If it were the first, he might, by not receiving a measure, hold it up until within five days of the end of a session of the general assembly, then receive it, and the adjournment taking place would prevent its return, thus defeating its becoming a law; or, in case it was returned with a veto message just prior to adjournment, action on the veto by the two houses would be prevented. But the presentation of the measure being made to him,—an offer of it to him; a tender of it to him,—it can make no difference that he does not receive it. The constitutional requirement is fulfilled, and from that moment the delay begins to run and he must act, if his purpose be to veto, within five days. See Opinion of the Justices, 45 N. H. 611. The bill in question having been presented on July 8, the governor was entitled to "five days" for its consideration. Within that period he must return it, with his objections, or else it becomes a law the same inclusion of the last day in computing time, applies to cases where the performing or doing of some act, duty, matter, payment, or thing is directed by law or by special order of the court, and does not apply to the computation of time under the act allowing attachments against non-resident debtors, providing that the attachment shall be made returnable not less than two, nor more than four, days from the date thereof; and an attachment returnable in five days is without jurisdiction, though the fourth day is Sunday. Protzman v. Wolff, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 473.

So, a replevin bond executed on the 28th of February, conditioned that three months after the date thereof the defendant will pay, etc., expires the 28th of May following, and execution will be due thereon May 29. Moor v. Covington City Nat. Bank, 80 Ky. 305.

And under Wis. Rev. Stat. chap. 120, § 84, providing that the warrant in an action of replevin shall be made returnable on the third day after it shall issue, Sundays excepted, a Sunday included within the three days must be excepted whether it is the last day for the return of the warrant or an intervening day. Lowe v. Stringham, 14 Wis. 322.

Sunday will not be counted in computing the twenty-four hours within which a replevin bond is required by law to be executed after a replevy, in a case in which the goods were replevied on Saturday. Link v. Clemmens, 7 Blackf. 479.

And a notice to appear for examination issued by a magistrate to whom application has been made for authority to arrest a debtor, required by Mass. Stat. 1877, chap. 250, § 1, to be served not less than three days before the time fixed for the examination, served on January 4, a little before 7 P. M., notifying the defendant to appear on January 8 at 9 A. M., satisfies the statute. Stewart v. Griswold, 134 Mass. 391.

7. Condition and docketing of judgments.

Judgments are sometimes required to be rendered within a designated time after the submission of the cause or some other act, and sometimes a specified period is required to elapse between the two acts. In all such cases the rules, both statutory and at common law, for the computation of time apply to the computation of such period.

Thus, the Missouri statutory rule that the time within which an act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, and if the last be Sunday it shall be excluded, applies to the computation of the 49 L. R. A.

three days after a cause has been submitted within which a justice is required to render and enter judgment by Wagner's (Mo.) Stat. 838, § 9. Hodgson v. Banking-House, 9 Mo. App. 24.

And a five days' notice, served on Wednesday, of an application for a judgment to be made on the following Monday, is sufficient under N. Y. Code, § 407, providing that in the computation of time the first day is excluded, and the last day included. Taylor v. Corbiere, 8 How. Pr. 385.

But under the New York act providing for courts held by justices of the peace, § 124, providing that in certain cases the justice shall render judgment and enter the same in his docket within four days after the cause shall have been submitted to him for his final decision, where a cause was submitted on the 28th of June, judgment rendered on Monday the 3d day of July following is too late, and therefore void, as, the fourth day being Sunday, judgment should have been rendered on the preceding day. Bissell v. Bissell, 11 Barb. 96.

And the statutory rule has no application in the computation of time under N. Y. Rev. Code, § 1228, declaring that judgment upon the decision of the court cannot be entered by the clerk until after the expiration of four days from the filing of the decision and the service upon the attorney for the adverse party of a copy thereof and notice of filing, and four days must fully expire after the decision is filed and notice served before judgment can be lawfully docketed. Marvin v. Marvin, 75 N. Y. 240.

The English practice is that a rule for judgment must have four clear days exclusive of the first and last and of Sunday, before judgment can be entered. Roberts v. Stacey, 13 East, 21.

e. To provisions for time in criminal cases and penal actions.

Though some of the statutory rules with reference to computation of time are made specially applicable to civil actions, the general rule which seems to be practically the same under the modern common-law doctrine and under the statutes seems to be applicable to criminal cases.

Thus, the general rule for the computation of time, to count the day on which the act is done when the limitation runs from the act and not from the day, is applicable to the computation of the two days mentioned in Ky. Crim. Code, § 283, providing that sentence in a felony case shall not be pronounced until two days after the verdict is rendered, unless the court is about as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly, by adjournment, shall prevent its return, etc. "Adjournment," as here used, means final adjournment at the close of the session; not adjournment for the day, or for several days during the session. Id. 45 N. H. 610. If the house in which the bill, proposed to be vetoed, originated should happen not to be in session when the governor's message arrived, delivery of the bill, with the governor's objection, to the presiding officer of the body, or to its clerk, would seem, according to the adjudicated cases, to suffice; and, in case neither the presiding officer nor the clerk can be found, its deposit on the presiding officer's table or desk or in the office of the clerk would, doubtless, likewise suffice. See Id. 45 N. H. 609, 610. The day on which the bill is presented to the governor is not to be included in the computation of the five days, but the last day of the specified period is to be computed. Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 190, 17 L. ed. 826; Corwin v. Comptroller General, 6 S. C. N. S. 394; People ex rel. Harless v. Hatch, 33 Ill. 14, 138; Price v. Whitman, 8 Call. 412, 417; Iron Mountain Co. v. Haight, 39 Cal. 541; Dwarr. Stat. 768, 769; Re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 632, 21 Pac. 475. A "day," in this sense, begins at 12 o'clock midnight, and extends through twenty-four hours to the next 12 o'clock midnight. 2 Bl. Com. 141; Black, Law Dict., verbo, Day; Opinion of the Justices, 45 N. H. 610. The governor has the whole of the twenty-four hours constituting a day. He has what is called a "natural" or "astronomical" day, not an artificial day. Bouvier, referring to "a day" as a division of time, says in its natural sense it consists of twenty-four hours, or to adjourn for the term. Bush v. Com. 80 Ky. 244.

So, a sentence of one calendar month's imprisonment for an offense expires on the day preceding that day which corresponds numerically in the next succeeding month with the day on which the sentence was passed, and if there is no such corresponding day in the next month, then the sentence expires on the last day of that month. Migotti v. Colvill, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 233, 40 L. T. N. S. 747, 27 Week. Rep. 744, 14 Cox. C. C. 305.

And where a person is sentenced to imprisonment on the 31st of October for one calendar month and for a second offense for fourteen days, commencing after the calendar month, the first sentence must be computed from midnight of the 30th of October, and expires at midnight on the 30th of November, notwithstanding the fact that he remains in prison during the whole month of November and one day besides, and his second sentence would expire on the 14th day of December, and his detention until that time is lawful. Ibid.

The day of commitment of a prisoner, however, when he was removed to prison on that day is to be reckoned as part of the term, for as the liberty of the subject is concerned the statute ought to receive a construction favorable to the prisoner. Com. v. Keniston, 5 Pick. 420.

So, where the drawing of a jury is required by law to take place not less than fourteen days before the day appointed for the holding of a term of court, it is from that day that the fourteen days are to be counted, and that day must, under the statutory construction act, be excluded; and in making the count back from that time, the day on which the drawing was to be had may properly be included. People v. Burgess, 153 N. Y. 561, 47 N. E. 889.

And where, in an indictment under 33 Geo. III. chap. 52, § 62, prohibiting officers of the East India company residing in India from receiving presents, information charges that the defendants were British subjects holding office and residing in the East Indies on the first of January, 1794, and until the 20th of November, 1795, and that while they held such office and resided in the East Indies on the 20th day of November, 1795, they received certain presents, the word "until" will be taken inclusive of the 29th of November, 1795. Rex v. Stevens, 5 East, 244, 1 Smith, 437.

But the word "until," in a charge of the illegal sale of liquor until a designated day, is exclusive, and implies a negative of that day. Wicker v. Norris, Cas. t. Hardw. 110. 49 L. R. A.

So, under the Alabama statute requiring that any person indicted for any capital crime shall have a copy of the indictment and a list of the jury delivered to him at least two entire days before he shall be tried, the two days must be exclusive of the delivery and also of the day of trial. State v. M'Lendon, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 195.

And in computing time under Texas Code Crim. Proc. art. 554, providing that no defendant in a capital case shall be brought to trial until he has had a one day's service of a copy of the names of persons summoned under a special venire facias, unless he waives the right, the day of the service and the day of trial must be excluded, and a service at half past one is not sufficient to hold the defendant to trial at three o'clock P. M. on the following day. Spear v. State, 2 Tex. App. 246.

So, where penalties are to be recovered by information before justices of the peace under a statute directing that the justices shall summon the persons informed against to appear and plead and attend the hearing of the information at a time and place named in the summons, which is to be served ten days at the least before the time appointed, there must be ten clear days between the service and the day of hearing inclusive of those days. Mitchell v. Foster, 12 Ad. & El. 472, 4 Perry & D. 150, 9 Dowl. P. C. 527.

And under the English excise act, 4 & 5 Wm. IV. chap. 51, § 19, requiring that ten days' notice at least to appear shall be given to a party accused of offenses against the excise laws, ten clear days must be given; and where the accused is summoned September 20, and September 30 the justice hears evidence and convicts the accused and imposes a penalty upon him, the conviction is void, and the justice is liable in trespass for issuing a distress warrant for the penalty. Ibid.

But the seven days which a party convicted for keeping open a beerhouse at prohibited times under 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. chap. 85, has for paying a penalty imposed upon him before a distress warrant can issue, are to be reckoned one of the first and last days exclusive and the other inclusive. Newman v. Hardwicke, 3 Nev. & P. 368, 8 Ad. & El. 124, 1 W. W. & H. 284, 2 Jur. 493.

See also supra, To statutes of limitations—In criminal prosecutions, VII., c. 2.

1. To provisions for time in proceedings for review.

1. Motions for new trial.

Motions for a new trial, as well as other prothe space of time which elapses while the earth makes a complete revolution upon its axis. Law Dict. See also Abbott, Law Dict. verbo, Day, and 33 Ill. 137. In this case the bill is held to have been "presented" to the governor on July 8. Excluding that day from computation, the five days given him by the Constitution for its consideration began at 12 o'clock midnight, just as the twenty-four hours constituting the 8th of July ended and the twenty-four hours constituting the 9th of July began. Ordinarily, then, he was entitled to the twenty-four hours, respectively, of the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th of July in which to consider it, and return it with his objections. But the 10th of July, 1898, was Sunday, and of this the court takes judicial cognizance.

As a consequence, the question next arising for determination is, Does Sunday count in the computation of the five days? Is it to be included or excluded? If the first, then the governor's veto of the measure on July 14 came too late. The bill had meanwhile become a law, and thereafter its efficacy as such could not be destroyed by the veto message. If the second, the veto message, reaching the house of representatives, where the bill originated, at any time during the hours constituting July 14, was timely. There is a rule of general, though perhaps not of universal, acceptance, that, where a limitation of time is fixed within which a particular act or thing is required to be done, if done at all, after which performance or the doing of the thing would be without effect if the time exceed a week, an intervening Sunday is to be included in the computation; if less than a week, Sunday is to be excluded. 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 10; Halcy v.

ceedings for review, are proceedings in the trial of a civil action, and therefore fall within the express provisions of the statutory rules for the computation of time, and are, of course, governed by the common-law rule in the absence of statutory provision.

Under the old common-law rule the day on which a verdict was rendered was to be computed as one of the four days which were allowed by law, in Pennsylvania, to move for a new trial. Lane v. Shreiner, 1 Blinn. 292; Burrall v. DuBois, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 229; White v. Crutcher, 1 Bush, 472.

And the day on which a verdict was given was to be reckoned inclusively in computing the three days allowed for motion in arrest of judgment, and a motion on the 15th was too late where the verdict was given on the 11th. Burrall v. DuBois, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 229.

And a motion for a new trial, made on the 4th day of June, was not within the three days allowed by Ky. Civil Code, § 371, where the verdict and judgment were rendered in the case May 31st of that year. White v. Crutcher, 1 Bush, 472.

So, under Ky. Civil Code, § 371, requiring an application for a new trial to be made within three days after the verdict or decision was rendered, the three days are juridical days, and Sunday was excluded, the intention of the legislature being to give three days, on any one of which the party could move for a new trial, and the day of the decision and the day of the motion were both computed as part of the three days given. Long v. Hughes, 1 Duv. 387.

Under the more modern rule, however, the day of the verdict or judgment is excluded, and the day of the motion is included.

Thus, in computing the four days within which a new trial may be ordered the day upon which judgment was rendered will not be included as one of the four. Hathaway v. Hathaway, 2 Ind. 513.

And the ten days within which one is required to move to set aside a default by Wagner's (Mo.) Stat. 847, § 2, is to be computed under the Missouri statutory rule by excluding the first day and including the last; and where judgment was rendered October 28, a motion to set aside a default, made on November 6, is in time. Reynolds v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 64 Mo. 70.

So, the first day of the twenty days within which, after the commencement of the succeeding term, petitions to rehear are required to be filed in North Carolina, is to be excluded from the count, and the last also when it falls on Sunday. Barcroft v. Roberts, 92 N. C. 249. 49 L. R. A.

And a motion for a new trial, required by Ohio Code, § 5307, to be filed within three days after the verdict is rendered, is too late, under the Ohio statutory rule for the computation of time, where the verdict was rendered on Friday and the motion for a new trial was filed on the following Tuesday. Chicago Label & Box Co. v. Washburn, 15 Ohio C. C. 510.

And where, in a motion for a new trial, the movant is allowed until a certain day, time, or term to prepare and file the motion and approved brief of evidence, the word "until" includes such day, term, or time, and, if proper action be taken at that time, it is in season. Rogers v. Cherokee Iron & R. Co. 70 Ga. 717.

So, the proper mode of computing time, under the Illinois statute providing that at any time within one year after a judgment in an action of ejectment, the party against whom it is rendered, his heirs or assigns, upon payment of costs, shall be entitled to have the judgment vacated and a new trial granted, is to exclude the day named and include the day on which the act is to be done; and where a judgment was rendered April 12, 1882, the one year after the judgment commenced to run on April 13, 1882, and was completed April 12, 1883. Pugh v. Reat, 107 Ill. 440.

And where the court determines the issues in a case on the 9th day of April, and ninety days are given the losing party within which to file his bill of exceptions, and he files it July 8, of that year, it is filed on the ninetieth day within the meaning of the statutory rule, and within the time fixed by the order. Sheldon Bank v. Royce, 84 Iowa, 288, 50 N. W. 986.

But the Missouri statutory rule of law concerning the computation of time, that when the last day for doing an act falls on Sunday the act may be done on the following Monday, does not apply to a motion to set aside a judgment of a justice of the peace required to be made within ten days after the rendition of the judgment, by Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 6237, so that where the tenth day is Sunday the motion must be made previously, and cannot be made on Monday. State ex rel. Kerr v. Sheehan, 55 Mo. App. 66.

Nor does it apply to the computation of the four days after trial within which motions for new trials and in arrest of judgment are required to be made by law in Missouri, where Sunday is one of the intermediate days, and not the last day. National Bank of the Metropolis v. Williams, 46 Mo. 17.

2. Appeal, error, review.

Under the old common-law rule the day on Young, 134 Mass. 366; Anonymous, 2 Hill, 375; Thayer v. Felt, 4 Pick. 354; Hannum v. Tourtellott, 10 Allen, 494; Cunningham v. Mahan, 112 Mass. 59. Consideration of this rule commends its wisdom.

The Federal Constitution allows the President of the United States ten days, Sundays excepted, to return a bill, with his objections, after its presentation to him. Many of the states of the Union allow ten days, Sundays excepted. Some allow a less number of days, Sundays excepted, and others a less number of days without mentioning Sunday. Where there has been an omission to except Sunday in the constitutional provision, and cases have gotten into the courts, no authoritative announcement of the rule to be followed has been laid down, so far as our research has extended. Indeed, no decision covering the exact case has been found anywhere. There appear to be no adjudications on the point by this court in the past, though for more than thirty years the constitutional provision has been as it is now, viz., that, if any bill shall not be returned by the governor within five days after its presentation, it shall be a law, etc., Sunday not mentioned. The Constitutions of 1868, 1879 and 1898, all so declare, while the four earlier Constitutions—those of 1812, 1845, 1852, and 1864—gave the governor ten days in which to return a bill with his objections, Sundays excepted. It would seem that, since the earlier Constitutions expressly excepted Sunday, and the later Constitutions did not, the intention of the framers of the later Constitutions was that Sunday should be counted in the five days allowed the governor. But this first impression is obliterated which a judgment was rendered was to be included in the computation of the time within which to take an appeal. Greer v. Spencer, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 409; Agnew v. Philadelphia, 2 Phila. 370; Chiles v. Smith, 13 B. Mon. 460.

And the same rule applied to an appeal from an award of arbitrators. Hampton v. Erenzeller, 2 Browne (Pa.) 18.

And where judgment was entered June 13 an appeal taken July 3 was not within twenty days, and is too late. Agnew v. Philadelphia, 2 Phila. 370.

In Smith v. Cassity, 9 B. Mon. 192, 48 Am. Dec. 420, however, it was held that in computing the time within which a writ of error might be taken the rule was to exclude the day on which the judgment or decree was rendered and include the day of suing out the writ of error.

But in Chiles v. Smith, 13 B. Mon. 460, supra, Smith v. Cassity, 9 B. Mon. 192, 48 Am. Dec. 420, supra, was overruled.

And in Frankfort v. Farmers' Bank, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 163, 49 S. W. 811, it was held that an appeal granted January 21, 1898, from a judgment rendered January 21, 1898, is too late, under Ky. Civ. Code Pr. § 745, providing that an appeal shall not be granted except within two years next after the right of appeal first accrued, as the time is to be computed from the entry of the judgment, and not from the day of the entry.

In the above case, Batman v. Megowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533, infra, VII. r. was distinguished upon the ground that that case was based upon the peculiar phraseology of the statute, the court holding that the two days next after the election meant the two next or following days.

So, in Wheeler v. Bent, 4 Pick. 187, an appeal was permitted to be entered under Mass. Stat. 1817, chap. 190, § 7, requiring such an appeal to be proceeded upon at the next term of the supreme judicial court which should be holden next after the expiration of thirty-four days after such appeal should be made, reckoning the day on which the appeal was made as one of the thirty-four.

Both under the more modern common-law rule, and under the statutory method, however, the general rule is that in computing the time within which a writ of error must be brought or an appeal taken, the day of the entry of the judgment, decree, or order appealed from should be excluded. Brainard v. Norton, 14 Ill. App. 643; Swift v. Tousey, 5 Ind. 196; Noble v. Murphy, 27 Ind. 502; Faure v. United States Exp. Co. 23 Ind. 48; Wright v. Manns, 111 Ind. 422, 12 N. E. 180; Carleton v. Byington, 10 Iowa, 588. Smith County Comrs. v. Labore, 37 49 L. R. A.

Kau, 480, 15 Pac. 577; Calvert v. Williams, 34 Md. 672; Chapman v. Allen, 33 Neb. 129, 49 N. W. 926; Young v. Whitcomb, 46 Barb. 615; John v. Hock, 6 Lanc. L. Rev. 353; Carson v. Love, 8 Yerg. 215; Bach v. Ginacchio, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 1315; Bennett v. Keehn, 67 Wis. 155, 30 N. W. 112; Smith v. Gale, 137 U. S. 577, 34 Led. 792, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; York's Case, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 503, Fed. Cas. No. 18,139.

And the last day of the period is to be included. Chapman v. Allen, 33 Neb. 129, 49 N. W. 926; Smith County Comrs. v. Labore, 37 Kan. 480, 15 Pac. 577; Carleton v. Byington, 10 Iowa, 588; Wright v. Manns, 111 Ind. 422, 12 N. E. 180; Faure v. United States Exp. Co. 23 Ind. 48.

In Wright v. Manns, supra, as reported in 9 West. Rep. 298, the ruling in Lange v. Dammler (Ind.) 9 West. Rep. 52, 11 N. E. 33, was said to have been inadvertent and of no authority.

And in computing a period of one year within which proceedings in error might be commenced, it would commence to run on the day following the day of the final rendition of judgment, and terminate on the day and month numerically corresponding with the date of the entry of judgment in the following year. Chapman v. Allen, 33 Neb. 129, 49 N. W. 926; Smith County Comrs. v. Labore, 37 Kan. 480, 15 Pac. 577.

And the rule applies to the computation of time on appeal from a decision of the alderman and justice of the peace, and the judgment day is to be excluded. Thomas v. Premium Loan Assn. 3 Phila. 425, Overruling Agnew v. Philadelphia, 2 Phila. 370, supra; Noble v. Murphy 27 Ind. 502.

And to judgments of mayors of cities. Noble v. Murphy, 27 Ind. 502.

And an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, taken May 4, is in season under the Missouri statute requiring an appeal to be taken in ten days, where the judgment appealed from was rendered April 24, excluding an intermediate Sunday. Semple & B. Mfg. Co. v. Thomas, 10 Mo. App. 457.

And so is an appeal from a justice's judgment rendered March 15, taken on the 14th day of April next following. Faure v. United States Exp. Co. 23 Ind. 48.

And in Glascock v. Boyer, 50 Ind. 391, in which judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace on the 16th of December, and an appeal bond was filed and approved on the 15th of the following January, and the transcript from the justice and the appeal bond were filed ated when we consider and apply the general rule above referred to. Under the operation of that rule, had not the framers of the earlier Constitutions expressly excluded Sundays from computation in the ten days given the governor, then Sunday would have been counted; whereas since, in the later Constitutions, five days only are allowed,—a time which does not necessarily include a Sunday,—that day (Sunday) happening to be one of the five days is excluded from the count. Where the time stipulated was such that it did not necessarily include Sunday, Sunday is excluded from the computation, without express mention of the fact. Where the time stipulated must necessarily include Sunday, to exclude that day from the computation there must be an express declaration to that effect. Such is the effect of the general rule laid down, and the framers of the several Constitutions under which the state has been governed are presumed to have intended the language and phrases used in consonance therewith. It follows on the 29th of that month. It was held that the appeal was within the thirty days required.

So, in computing the twenty days allowed by the Pennsylvania arbitration law of March 20, 1810, for an appeal, the day on which an award is entered is to be excluded. Sims v. Hampton, 1 Serg. & R. 411; Frantz v. Kaser, 3 Serg. & R. 395.

And, an appeal from a decree of the orphans' court, made the 8th of October, 1829, taken the 8th of October, 1830, is within the one year after the confirmation of the account required by Pa. act February 8, 1810. Ege's Appeal, 2 Watts, 283.

And under the Texas probate act of 1870, providing that a petition for a review of acts done on the probate side of the district court could be brought within two years from the date of the order, a petition for a review, filed October 14, 1875, is in time, where the order granting letters of administration was made October 13, 1873. Ramirez v. McClane, 50 Tex. 598.

So, where a judgment was rendered by the mayor of a city on the 3d of March, and an appeal was taken on the 2d of April following, the appeal required to be taken in thirty days is in time, as the third day of March would be excluded. Noble v. Murphy, 27 Ind. 502.

And so is an appeal from a judgment rendered by a mayor on the 24th of February, taken on the 25th of March following. Swift v. Tousey, 5 Ind. 196.

And an appeal taken on the 21st of March, from a judgment rendered before an alderman on the 1st of March, is within the twenty days allowed by law for entering an appeal. Browne v. Browne, 3 Serg. & R. 496.

And under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1231, providing that a party aggrieved may appeal from an order appointing or refusing to appoint a receiver within ten days thereafter without awaiting the final determination of the case, the filing of the record in the appellate court on the 25th day of July is in time, where such an order was made on the 16th day of that month. Hursh v. Hursh, 99 Ind. 500.

But where a decision is signed on the 27th of April, under the United States bankruptcy act, the ten days after the entry of the decree or decision within which an appeal may be taken expires on the 7th of May, the 27th of April being excluded in the computation, and an appeal not taken until the 9th of May is: 49 L. R. A.

that, if one of the five days accorded the chief executive in which to return a bill with his objections happens to be Sunday, the same is not to be computed as one of the constitutional "five days." This view is strengthened by the general policy of the law in regard to the first day of the week, and by the sentiment prevailing in Christian countries. In law, Sundays are generally excluded as days upon which the performance of any act demanded by the law is not required. They are held to be dies non juridici. And in the Christian world Sunday is regarded as the "Lord's Day," and a holiday, a day of cessation from labor. By statute, enacted as far back as 1838, this day is made in Louisiana one of "public rest." Rev. Stat. § 522; Code Prac. arts. 207, 763. This is the policy of the state of long standing, and the framers of the Constitution are to be considered as intending to conform to the same. They had the power to have written in the provisions of the organic law stipulating the time in which the too late. York's Case, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 503, Fed. Cas. No. 18,139.

So, an appeal perfected June 15, 1885, from a judgment entered June 15, 1883, is in time under a statute prescribing that appeals are to be taken within two years. Milwaukee County Supers. v. Pabst, 64 Wis. 244, 25 N. W. 11.

And an appeal taken February 20, 1867, is taken within three months from the enrolment of the decree, as required by Ala. Const. art. 4, § 30, when the decree was taken, entered, and enrolled November 30, 1866. Walker v. Walker, 42 Ala. 489.

And under § 407 of the New York Code, requiring in the computation of time that the first day shall be excluded, a notice of appeal served on June 27 is within the one month within which an appeal is authorized, where the order appealed from was entered May 27. Gallt v. Finch, 24 How. Pr. 193.

So, under the Iowa statutory rule the six months from the rendition of a judgment or order appealed from within which appeals may be taken expires, where the order appealed from was made on the 3d day of June, 1890, on the 3d day of December, 1890. Ritchey v. Fisher, 85 Iowa, 560, 52 N. W. 505.

And where judgment was rendered on the 30th day of March, and an appeal was taken on the 30th day of September following, more than the six months for taking an appeal has not elapsed within the statutory rule for the computation of time so as to invalidate the appeal, because March has thirty-one days, and the time included one day of March and the full six calendar months following it. Parkhill v. Brighton, 61 Iowa, 103, 15 N. W. 853.

And where final judgment was rendered on the 25th day of May, 1867, and the transcript was filed on the 24th of May, 1870, on which day process was issued and delivered to the sheriff and by him mailed to the sheriff of the proper county for service, the appeal was taken within the three years provided for by the Indiana statute. Crawford v. Prairie Creek Ditching Assn. 44 Ind. 361.

So, under the Ohio statutory rule, an undertaking required by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 5227, providing that a party desiring to appeal shall give an undertaking with sufficient surety to be approved by the clerk of the court within thirty days after the rising of the court, given and approved October 31, 1888, is in time where the governor should return a bill with his objections words which would have signified an intention to depart in such instance from the policy of the law, but it was not done. When they ordered merely that he must return the bill within five days after its presentation to him, they must be held to have meant days other than those of "public rest." Whatever doubt may exist in the judicial mind as to the proper meaning to be given to the words used, it is, we think, safely resolved in favor of that construction sanctioned alike by the policy of the law and by the moral sentiment of the people. The governor of the state has five days in which to consider a bill presented to him before he is compelled to return it with his objections, and in this computation of days he may exclude an intervening Sunday or other legal holiday. He vetoed the bill involved in this controversy on the 14th of July, which was timely, considering that the 10th of July was Sunday. As it was not thereafter passed by the two houses of the general assembly by the requisite constitutional vote, his veto to the contrary notwithstanding, the measure did not become a law, and the case of the relators falls.

In reaching the conclusions announced above, the fact that there is no constitutional prohibition against the general assembly sitting on Sundays has not been lost sight of. The general assembly has not heretofore generally held sessions on Sunday, and consideration of what would be the effect of a session on that day, in so far as making the same count, notwithstanding it was Sunday, in the computation of the five days allowed the governor in which to return a bill with his objections, does not properly arise herein. It is therefore unnecessary to determine the same now, and opinion is reserved.

Judgment affirmed.

Rehearing denied March 19, 1900.

court adjourned October 1, 1888. Bushong v. Graham, 4 Ohio C. C. 138.

But, under the rule of computation excluding the first day, an appeal taken on the 22d of August from a judgment rendered February 21 is not within the six months prescribed by statute therefor. Glore v. Hare, 4 Neb. 131.

And under N. Y. Code, § 253, requiring notice of appeal to be served within twenty days after judgment, where judgment is entered November 14, the time expires with the 4th of the following December, and service on the 5th is too late and worthless. Young v. Whitcomb, 46 Barb. 615.

And an appeal bond filed on the 18th day of January is too late, under the Colorado rule for the computation of time that one day shall be included and one day excluded, where the order appealed from was made on the 18th of December of the previous year, as the thirty days expired on the 17th day of January. Hax v. Leis, 1 Colo. 171.

And, under the Texas statute, requiring that an appeal bond be given within twenty days after the term of the court at which the judgment was rendered, where the term of court closes on the 16th day of July the twenty days allowed after giving the bond expires on the 5th day of August, and a bond filed on the 6th of August is too late. Burr v. Lewis, 6 Tex. 76.

So, a notice of appeal and an undertaking on appeal, filed on August 30, is not filed within sixty days of the determination and entry thereof in the record as required by law, under the statutory method of computing time in Wyoming, excluding the first day and including the last, where the judgment was entered not later than June 30. Daley v. Anderson (Wyo.) 48 Pac. 839.

Under these rules, however, an appeal the return day of which falls on a legal holiday is filed in time if filed on the following day. First Nat. Bank v. Mead, 29 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 120; Snyder v. Kemper, 15 Lanc. L. Rev. 116.

And the day a justice's judgment is rendered must be excluded in estimating the twenty days for an appeal therefrom, and Monday must be added if the twentieth day falls on Sunday. John v. Hock, 6 Lanc. L. Rev. 353, 4 Del. Co. Rep. 109.

Such an appeal is governed by the statutory rule, so that if the last day to taken such an appeal is Sunday it may be taken on the following L. R. A.

ing Monday. Buckstaff v. Hanville, 14 Wis. 78; Monell v. Terwilliger, 8 Neb. 360.

And where the four days provided for in R. I. Gen. Laws, chap. 248, § 1, providing that an appeal may be taken from a decree of a court of probate by filing bond within forty days next after the decree shall have been made, ends on Sunday, the bond may be filed on the following day. West v. West, 20 R. I. 464, 40 Atl. 6.

And the six months' limitation of time to appeal from the date of the judgment, provided for in Washington, if the last day limited falls on Sunday, will run over until Monday under the method of computation of time prescribed by Wash. Code, § 743, so that a notice served on the following Monday is in time. Spokane Falls v. Browne, 3 Wash. 84, 27 Pac. 1077.

So, where an award was filed on the 26th of February, an appeal taken on the 18th of March was taken on the twentieth day within the meaning of a provision allowing twenty days to appeal where it was leap year and the 17th of March was Sunday. Harker v. Addis, 4 Pa. 515.

And so is an appeal from a decree under Pa. act April 16, 1827, relative to the distribution of money arising from sheriffs' and coroners' sales, made on the 12th of April which was entered on the 3d of May, where the 2d of May was Sunday. Re Goswiler, 3 Penn. & W. 200.

But in computing the six months within which after the entry of an order, judgment, or decree an appeal may be taken to the circuit court of appeals by the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, the last day of the six months, though falling on Sunday, is not to be excluded in the computation; and an appeal taken on the following day is too late, as the provisions of the Federal statute extending the time when the last day falls on Sunday in the bankruptcy and other acts, clearly indicate that it was the intention of Congress that all Sundays should be counted as part of the time limited within which an act is to be done under their legislation, unless they are excluded by express provision. Johnson v. Meyers, 12 U. S. App. 220, 54 Fed. Rep. 417, 4 C. C. A. 399.

And an appeal is triable under Ga. act November 30, 1892, providing that all cases on appeal shall be returnable to and triable at the next ensuing term after twenty days have elapsed from the filing of the appeal at a term beginning on Monday, though the twenty days from the filing elapsed upon the previous Sunday, as the provision of the Code for computing time does not apply, there being nothing in this case to be done on the last day. Merritt v. Gate City Nat. Bank, 100 Ga. 147, 38 L. R. A. 749, 27 S. E. 979.

It has been held, however, that the common-law rule, including the first day and excluding the last in the computation of a period of time where an act is to be done within a certain number of days, does not apply to computations under Pa. act June 16, 1836, requiring that an appeal from the award of arbitrators shall be entered within twenty days after the day of the entry of the award on the docket, as by the terms of the statute itself the day of filing the award cannot be counted. Smalts v. Lake, 2 Phila. 245.

And under Vt. Rev. Stat. chap. 26, § 28, providing that a writ of review may be brought within three years next after the rendition of the judgment to be affected by it, the words "next after the rendition" mean next after the day of rendering, and the day of the rendering of the judgment is excluded from the computation of the three years. French v. Wilkins, 17 Vt. 341.

So, under 49 Geo. III. chap. 68, § 5, requiring ten clear days' notice of intention to appeal, the ten days are to be taken exclusively both of the day of the serving of the notice and the day of holding the session. King v. Herefordshire Justices, 3 Barn. & Ald. 581.

And the words "ten days at least," in a provision for notice of intention to prosecute an appeal, mean clear days, exclusive both of the day of giving notice and of the day upon which the act is to be done, contemplated by the notice; and such a notice, given November 2, appointing November 12 as a day for hearing, is too late. Norton v. Salisbury Town Clerk, 16 L. J. C. P. N. S. 9, 10 Jur. 970, 4 C. B. 32, 1 Lurw. Reg. Cas. 335.

And a notice under a local act requiring seven days' notice at least to be given by an appellant of his intention to bring an appeal, served December 31, January 7 being the day on which appeals were entered, is insufficient, as both the day of giving the notice and the day of holding the sessions must be excluded, the day of bringing an appeal being the day on which it is entered, and not that on which it is held. Reg. v. Middlesex Justices, 3 Dowl. & L. 109, 9 Jur. 758, 14 L. J. M. C. N. S. 139.

But the rule of the West Riding Sessions, that, in case of appeal not otherwise directed by law, ten days' notice is to be given exclusive of the day of notice and first day of the sessions, does not apply to a notice of appeal against an order for the stopping up a footway; the statute in such case requiring ten days' notice means ten days' notice, one day inclusive and the other exclusive. King v. West Riding of Yorkshire Justices, 4 Barn. & Ad. 685.

And under Michigan supreme court rule 10, providing that a writ of error may be made returnable in not less than twenty days, the time runs from and excludes the date of issue, and includes the return day; and a writ issued August 30 is properly made returnable September 19. Doyle v. Minzer, 41 Mich. 549, 50 N. W. 392.

So, in Traders' Safe & Trust Co. v. Calow, 77 Ill. App. 146, it was said that there is no rule that the first day on which an appeal was granted does not count in estimating the time within which a bond must be filed, and that counsel have until ten o'clock in the morning following the last day of the time allowed in which to file the bond.

The same rules apply in reckoning backwards from the time of commencement of the time of the appellate court.

Thus, a requirement that citation on appeal shall be served at least twenty-five days before the first day of the term of the supreme court is satisfied by service on the 19th of December, when the first day of the term falls on the 13th day of the succeeding January. Crawford v. Feder, 27 Fla. 523, 8 So. 642.

And under the Missouri statute, providing that all appeals taken thirty days before the first day of the next term of the supreme court shall be returnable at such term, the day upon which the appeal was taken is to be excluded and the first day of the next succeeding term of court is to be included, and the appeal is returnable at the next succeeding term of court, if, by such a computation, it was taken exactly thirty days before the first day of that term. St. Louis v. Hambrick, 41 Mo. App. 648.

And under the statutory rule for the computation of time, an appeal taken on the 4th day of February is returnable at the term of the supreme court beginning March 5, this being leap year. Deere v. Hucht, 32 Mo. App. 153.

And under Wagner's Stat. 850, § 20, providing that all appeals allowed ten days before the first day of the term of the appellate court next after the appeal is allowed, shall be determined at such term unless continued for cause, the ten days is to be computed under the statutory rule for computing time by including the day on which the appeal was taken and excluding the first day of the term. Hodgson v. Banking-House, 9 Mo. App. 24.

In the above case, Taylor v. McKnight, 1 Mo. 120, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that the wording of the statute considered in that case was different and peculiar.

In that case it was held that, under Mo. act December, 1820, § 14, providing that the writs of error shall be made returnable to the first day of the next term unless applied for within twenty days next preceding the term, when the same shall be made returnable to the second term ensuing the date of the writ, a writ issued on the 2d day of October, returnable to the next term thereafter, which commences on the 22d of that month, will be dismissed, as the expression, "within twenty days next preceding the term," literally means after the commencement of the twentieth day next before the commencement of the term, and as the writ is tested on the twentieth day it is clearly within the twenty days next preceding such term.

Under the Vermont statute, providing that an appeal from probate in writing shall be filed in the registrar's office at the time of returning the commissioner's report or within twenty days after such return, the party appealing is entitled to twenty days after such return, within which to file his appeal, not including the day of the return, the statute being construed as though it read "within twenty days after the day of the return." Robinson v. Robinson, 32 Vt. 738.

In computing the time within which a suspensive appeal may be taken in Louisiana, neither nonjudicial days nor the day the judgment was signed nor the day the appeal was taken are to be counted in the computation. State ex rel. Mercier v. Superior Dist. Ct. Judge, 29 La. Ann. 223; Tupery v. Edmondson, 29 La. Ann. 850; Garland v. Holmes, 12 Rob. (La.) 421.

So, in computing the six months within which a certiorari may be filed after judgment sought to be reviewed, the estimate must be made with reference to first and last days of the period by including one and excluding the other. Jones v. Smith, 28 Ga. 41.

And a certiorari filed on the 12th of September, is not within the three months after rendition of the judgment sought to be reversed as provided for by Ga. Code, § 2920, where the case was tried and judgment rendered on the 12th of January. Barrett v. Devine, 60 Ga. 632.

Nor is a certiorari filed January 12, 1881, within the three months, where the verdict sought to be reviewed was obtained on the 12th of October, 1880. Western & A. R. Co. v. Carson, 70 Ga. 388.

And a certiorari filed on the 28th of May, 1858, to review a judgment rendered on the 27th of November, 1857, is too late, as, excluding the 28th of November, the period will expire on the 27th of May. Jones v. Smith, 28 Ga. 41.

So, a notice to magistrates of an intention to apply for a certiorari to review an order made by them for the allowance of accounts of surveyors of highways on the 25th day of the month, served upon the 20th of that month, is not a sufficient six days' notice as required by 13 Geo. II. chap. 18, § 5. Rex v. Cumberland, 4 Nev. & M. 378. 1 Harr. & W. 16; Rex v. Goodenough, 2 Ad. & El. 403.

As to appeals in probate court, see also Cawfield v. Brown, 45 Ala. 552, and Field v. Gamble, 47 Ala. 443, supra, VII. 1.

8. Steps taken to perfect appeal.

The general rule that the day on which an act was done from which time is to be computed must be excluded from the count applies to the computation of the time within which appeal bonds are required to be given. Bach v. Glinacchio, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 1315; Brainard v. Norton, 14 Ill. App. 643; Ewing v. Bailey, 5 Ill. 420.

And an undertaking filed on the tenth day after the rendition of judgment is within ten days. McKinley v. Chapman, 37 Neb. 378, 55 N. W. 882.

And where the giving of an appeal bond is required to be within thirty days, performance on the 30th day is sufficient. Morgan v. Stittigan (Ohio) 10 West. L. J. 74.

But under Miss. Code 1892, § 1525, providing that when process shall be required to be served or notice given any number of days, the day of serving the process or of giving the notice shall be excluded, and the day of appearance included; and in all other cases, when any number of days shall be prescribed, one day shall be excluded and the other included, and when the last day falls on Sunday it shall be excluded; but in other cases Sunday shall be reckoned in the computation of time, when the last day of the period falls on Sunday, as it is to be excluded, the first day is of necessity included; and therefore an order made November 24, 1897, requiring additional security within sixty days from date, is not complied with by the filing of a new bond on the 24th day of January, 1898. Nickles v. Kendrick, 76 Miss. 334, 24 So. 534.

And in Bennet v. Nichols, 4 T. R. 121, it was held that a defendant has four clear days after final judgment to put in bail in error. See, also Bushong v. Graham, 4 Ohio C. C. 138; Hax v. Lels, 1 Colo. 171; Burr v. Lewis, 6 Tex. 76; and Daley v. Anderson (Wyo.) 48 Pac. 839, supra, VII. f, 2, in which it would appear that the act of filing an undertaking constituted taking an appeal.

So, the time given by the court in a case within which appellants may file their bills of exceptions is under authority conferred by statute, and the statutory rule for computing time, excluding the first day and including the last and if the last day be Sunday also excluding it, 49 L. R. A.

applies. State ex rel. McCoy v. Thorn, 28 Ind. 306; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gracy, 128 Mo. 472, 28 S. W. 736, 29 S. W. 579.

And where an appeal in chancery is entered on the 20th day of June, and on the 80th of the same month assignments of error are filed, they are filed within the time prescribed by special rule 4 of the Florida supreme court regulating appeals in chancery requiring such filing within ten days after the bill is entered. Jacksonville, M. & P. R. & Nav. Co. v. Broughton, 38 Fla. 139, 20 So. 829.

But under § 23 of the Iowa Code, providing that in computing time the first day shall be excluded and the last day included, where judgment is rendered on the 21st of October, and ten days are given to file a bill of exceptions, a bill of exceptions signed by the judge on the 1st day of November is too late. Manning v. Irish, 47 Iowa, 650.

So, where the court allows appellants thirty days' time to prepare their bill of exceptions upon the 12th day of May, and the bill of exceptions is filed on the 11th day of June following, excluding the 12th day of May and including the 11th day of June in the computation brings the filing to the thirtieth day, which is in time. State ex rel. McCoy v. Thorn, 28 Ind. 306.

In the above case, Brown v. Busan, 24 Ind. 194, supra, VII. b, 1, was distinguished upon the ground that there the question arose upon the construction of a contract, and that the doctrine of that case is not applicable to the question here presented.

And under an agreement that a bill of exceptions may be signed within sixty days after the adjournment of the court, the sixty days expire where the court adjourns on May 2, on the 1st of July following. Loosse v. Vogel, 80 Ala. 308.

And sixty days from date, given a defendant on the 9th day of August to file his bill of exceptions, expires October 8, excluding the 9th day of August from the computation; and where the bill is filed October 9, it is too late and will not be considered on appeal. State v. Harris, 121 Mo. 445, 26 S. W. 558.

And a bill filed on the 2d of February, 1874, is one day too late under such an allowance, within the Indiana rule for the computation of time, where the cause was tried December 3, 1873. Schoonover v. Irwin, 58 Ind. 287.

And so is a bill of exceptions filed on the 30th day of July, when final judgment was rendered on the preceding 30th of May. Byers v. Hickman, 36 Ind. 359.

And a bill filed on February 26 is one day too late where the motion for a new trial was overruled on the preceding 27th of December. Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Albright, 14 Ind. App. 438, 42 N. E., 1028, Rehearing denied in 14 Ind. App. 433, 42 N. E. 238.

So, under the rule for the computation of time requiring that the first day be excluded and the last day included, where ninety days' time was given to file a bill of exceptions, and the bill was presented to the judge on September 17, and signed by him on the 18th, it is one day late, where the motion for a new trial was overruled and judgment was rendered on the preceding 18th of June. Kelly v. John, 13 Ind. App. 579, 41 N. E. 1069.

And in a criminal prosecution in which the defendant was sentenced September 15, 1890, a bill of exceptions required to be filed ninety days from date was too late where it was not filed until the 15th day of December, 1890, as that was the ninety-first day, and the bill will not be deemed to have been filed. State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S. W. 169.

And so where an appellant has ninety days from the date at which a motion for a new trial was overruled in which to file his bill of exceptions, the first and last days are both to be excluded; and where the bill was presented for signature September 24, and the motion for new trial was overruled June 24, the bill is too late. Keeler v. Helms, 126 Ind. 382, 26 N. E. 81.

Likewise, in computing the time under the 28th rule of court providing that unless a declaration be filed within twelve months of the first day of the term to which an appeal is entered, a non pros. shall be entered, the first day of the term is excluded; and where appeals were filed September 16, 1850, the twelve months have not yet expired so as to authorize a non pros. on September 16, 1851. Wayne v. Duffy, 1 Phila. 367.

So, as a general rule when time is given until a day certain to file a bill of exceptions, if it is filed on or before that day it is in time. Newport News & M. Valley R. Co. v. Thomas, 96 Ky. 613, 29 S. W. 437; Gottlieb v. Fred W. Wolf Co. 75 Md. 126, 23 Atl. 198; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gracy, 126 Mo. 472, 28 S. W. 736, 29 S. W. 579; CONWAY v. SMITH MERCANTILE CO.

Though the contrary rule obtains in Indiana. Hartman v. Ringgenberg, 119 Ind. 72, 21 N. E. 464; Corbin v. Ketcham, 87 Ind. 138; Erb v. Moak, 78 Ind. 569; De Haven v. De Haven, 46 Ind. 296.

So, in computing the time given by the court to make and serve a case on appeal, the first day is excluded and the last day is included. Scruton v. Hall, 6 Kan. App. 714, 50 Pac. 964.

And where the last day of a term given by the court to a party to make and serve a case on appeal is Sunday it is excluded, and the case may be filed upon the following day. Ibid.

And where an order is granted extending the time to a designated date, the party has all of that time within which to file his case. St. Louis Commission Co. v. Calloway, 5 Okla. 393, 47 Pac. 1088.

And under an order granting a party to the 28th of January in which to file and serve a statement of facts, a statement filed on the 27th of January and served on the 28th is in season. State ex rel. Bickford v. Benson, 21 Wash. 865, 58 Pac. 217.

So, notice of application for settlement of a statement of facts, required by the Washington statute to be served not less than three days before the time of hearing, given on the 9th of July for a hearing on the 12th, is in time, under Wash. Code Proc. § 794, prescribing that in the computing of time the first day shall be excluded and the last day included. Martin v. Sunset Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 18 Wash. 260, 51 Pac. 376.

But a statement of grounds of appeal under 4 & 5 Wm. IV. chap. 76, § 81, requiring them to be served at least fourteen days before the sessions of the court to which the appeal is taken, is not duly served unless fourteen days elapse between the day of service and the first day of the sessions computed exclusively. Queen v. Shropshire Justices, 8 Ad. & El. 173.

So, it was held under Ky. Code, § 343, requiring that the record on an appeal must be lodged with the clerk of the appellate court within sixty days from the act of rendering the judgment, that the day on which the judgment was rendered must be included in the computation of the sixty days. Wood v. Com. 11 Bush, 220.

But the rule is different under the more modern cases, as well as under the statutes for the computation of time.

Thus, the rule that in computing time the day on which the time commenced to run is to be excluded, and the day to which it is to run is to be included, applies to the computation of time within which a certified copy of the record must be filed in the appellate court on appeal under the Illinois practice act, providing that if ten days shall have intervened between the date of the judgment appealed from and the commencement of the term of the appellate court, the certified record of the cause shall be filed on or before the tenth day of the succeeding term. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Evans, 39 Ill. App. 261.

And under the New Mexico statutes, requiring the record on a writ of error to be filed in the supreme court at least ten days before the first day of the term, either the day of filing or the first day of the term may be included in the computation; and if the record was filed December 27, and the court convened on the 6th of January, the rule is substantially complied with. Albuquerque v. Zeiger, 5 N. M. 518, 25 Pac. 787.

So, under Hill's (Or.) Anno. Laws, § 541, providing that upon an appeal being perfected the appellant must by the second day of the regular term of the appellate court file a transcript of the cause, such second day is included, and the filing of a transcript upon that day is in time. Wachsmuth v. Routledge (Or.) 51 Pac. 413.

But when the statute requires that where ten days intervene between the last day of the term of a court from which an appeal is taken and the first day of the term of the appellate court the record shall be filed in the appellate court on or before the 10th day of its term, the record filed on the 15th of March when the term began on the 5th is too late. Metropolitan Accl. Asso. v. Froiland, 59 Ill. App. 513.

So, Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4951, prescribing the method for the computation of a period of time, applies to magistrates, so that if the last day for filing a transcript on appeal falls on Sunday, it may be filed the next day. Riders v. Green (Ohio) 9 Am. Law Rec. 634.

And where a delay of ten days for filing a transcript is granted, and the ninth day is Christmas and the tenth day Sunday, it is sufficient to file it on the eleventh day, as the two last days of the delay, not being legal days, should not be counted. Gueringer v. His Creditors, 33 La. Ann. 1279.

And where leave is given to a defendant on the 14th day of April to file a bill of exceptions within sixty days the last day is June 13, and if that be Sunday the bill may be filed on the following Monday. Evans v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 76 Mo. App. 468.

But Ohio Code Civ. Proc. § 597, providing that if the last day to perform an act falls on Sunday, it may be done on Monday is applicable only to cases provided for in the Code, and does not apply to the filing of a transcript under § 113 of the Justices Code, Swan & S. 419, making it the duty of the appellant to file a transcript with the clerk of the court of common pleas on or before the 30th day from the rendition of the judgment appealed from; and if the 30th day falls on Sunday the transcript cannot be filed on the next succeeding day. McLees v. Morrison, 29 Ohio St. 155.

And under Mich. Comp. Laws 1871, §§ 5432, 5433, providing that a party taking an appeal from a justice's court must present to the justice an affidavit and bond within five days after the rendition of the judgment, the fact that the 5th day is Sunday does not authorize the presenting of such affidavit and bond on the following Monday. Dale v. Lavigne, 31 Mich. 149.

Under the provision of the Louisiana Code, that in all cases where delay is given either to do something or to answer, neither the day of serving the notice nor that on which the act is to be done or the answer filed is included, a transcript filed in the appellate court on the 22d of June is in season, under a rule that the record must be filed in the appellate court before the expiration of the tenth day after filing the bond where the bond was filed on the 11th of June, as there is no difference between requiring the performance of an act within ten days of a given time and a rule which requires the same thing to be done before the expiration of the tenth day of the same time. State ex rel. Solari v. Ellis, 40 La. Ann. 793, 5 So. 63.

g. To executions.

1. Notices and sale under, generally.

Where there is no provision of law for the computation of time, in order to determine whether an execution has been issued within five years after the entry of judgment, the period must necessarily commence with the day on which the judgment was entered. Aultman & T. Co. v. Syme, 91 Hun. 632, 30 N. Y. Supp. 528, 87 Hun. 295, 84 N. Y. Supp. 379.

And N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 677, as amended by Laws 1894, chap. 447, declaring that the day from which any specified number of days, weeks, or months of time is reckoned shall be excluded in making the reckoning, does not apply to a computation of years, no similar provision being made for such a computation, and the five years from the entry of final judgment during which an execution can be issued under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1377, is not to be reckoned by that rule. Aultman & T. Co. v. Syme, 163 N. Y. 54, 57 N. E. 168, 91 Hun. 632, 36 N. Y. Supp. 528.

And see Williams v. Lane, 87 Wis. 152, 58 N. W. 77, supra, VI. b. But see Grant v. Pad-dock, 30 Gr. 812, 47 Pac. 713, supra, IV. b.

So, in computing the twenty-one days during which a sheriff is required to advertise lands to be sold under execution, the day of the commencement of the advertisement and the day of sale may both be counted. Manning v. Dove, 10 Rich. L. 395.

And where execution upon a judgment was stayed for a designated number of days from the time of signing the judgment, as execution could have issued upon the judgment on the day it was signed had it not been stayed, that day must be included in the computation of the duration of the stay. Tucker v. White, 19 Ind. 253.

In the above case, it was said that this is not a case where the statute requires an act to be done, like the granting of a new trial, for example, within a given number of days, the question being simply, When did the designated number of days from the act done expire?

So, in Spencer v. Champion, 13 Conn. 11, it was said that upon notices of sales under execution the day of the publication of notice has always been computed.

But in Commercial Bank v. Ives, 2 Hill, 355, it was held that computation of the thirty days after the expiration of which from the entry of a judgment a fi. fa. may be issued, excludes the day of entering the judgment, as either the first or last day is to be counted, one exclusive and the other inclusive, and an issue of a fi. fa. on November 26 is not irregular where judgment was entered October 27, 1841.

And an advertisement of a sheriff's sale of land on the 9th of the month to sell on the 19th is a sufficient ten days' notice within the Kentucky statute, the day of posting up the notice or that of making the sale, but not both, being excluded. Sanders v. Norton, 4 T. B. Mon. 464.
49 L. R. A.

So, 2 Ind. Rev. Stat. 1876, chap. 217, § 467, providing that the time and place of making a sale of real estate on execution shall be publicly advertised by the sheriff for at least twenty days successively before the day of sale, by posting up written or printed notices, intends that the first advertisement should be made fully three weeks or twenty-one days before the sale, excluding either the day of the first publication or the day of sale in the computation. Meredith v. Chancey, 59 Ind. 466.

And the provision of the Indiana statutes requiring the advertisement of a sheriff's sale of real estate by publication in a newspaper of the county for three weeks successively intends that the first advertisement shall be made fully three weeks or twenty-one days before the sale, excluding either the day of the first publication or the day of the sale. Smith v. Rowles, 85 Ind. 264.

And notice of a sheriff's sale under that provision, published in a newspaper January 24, and 31, and February 7, is sufficient under the statutory rule for the computation of time, where the sale was to occur February 14. Hill v. Pressley, 90 Ind. 447.

But notice of a sheriff's sale, required to be given by publication once a week during three successive weeks previous to the sale, published on October 23d, sale to take place November 12, is insufficient, as the last day is to be excluded. Erle Sav. Fund & Bldg. Assn. v. Thompson, 13 Phila. 511.

And the three weeks required by Pa. act June 16, 1836, for the advertisement of the sale of real estate by the sheriff, must be computed by excluding both the first and the last days, and where the first advertisement was December 9, the counting would be of three weeks from December 10 and the last day of the period would expire on the 30th, and as the required time of publication must be previous to the day of sale, the sale could not take place until December 31. Athens Nat. Bank v. Frost, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 601.

In the above case, Duffy v. Ogden, 64 Pa. 240, infra, VII. m, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the first and last days were counted to make up the time on the ground that the notice required was measured by the terms of the act itself.

So, Ohio Code, § 597, providing for the inclusion of the last and the exclusion of the first day in computing time, does not apply to notice of the time and place of a sale on execution, required to be given for thirty days before the day of sale, as that is not a case where an act is to be done within a certain time; and in computing the time for such notice, the day of sale is excluded, and the day upon which the advertisement was first made may be included. Hagerman v. Ohio Bldg. & Sav. Assn. 25 Ohio St. 186.

But a sale under La. Sess. Acts 1817, p. 34, § 14, requiring that property should not be sold in less than thirty days after advertisement of notice, made on the thirtieth day after the advertisement, was sufficient under the rule existing in Louisiana previous to the adoption of the Code of Practice, the rule then being to exclude one day and include the other. Robinet v. Compton, 2 La. Ann. 846.

And in computing the thirty days under the Kansas statute requiring publication of notice of sheriff's sale of real estate for at least thirty days before the day of sale, the day of the first publication is to be included and the day of sale excluded, and thirty full days need not elapse between the day of the first publication and the day of sale; and where the first publication was October 13th and the sale November 12th, the notice is sufficient. Northrup v. Cooper, 23 Kan. 432.

In the above case, Garvin v. Jennerson, 20 Kan. 371, supra, VII. d. 5, was distinguished on the ground that the filing of the deposition in that case was a single and instantaneous act, while the publication in the case at bar was a repeated and continuous act.

But an execution issued on July 30 upon a judgment rendered July 26 is not issued after the expiration of four days in accordance with a provision of law therefor, under Ga. Code, § 4, providing that where the number of days is prescribed for the exercise of any privilege or the discharge of any duty only the first or last day shall be counted. Knoxville City Mills Co. v. Lovinger, 83 Ga. 563, 10 S. E. 230.

And the purpose of R. I. Judiciary act, chap. 37, § 11, providing that in case of a levy upon real estate notice thereof shall be given for the space of three months after such levy and before the real estate shall be exposed for sale, is to provide a notice of three full calendar months, and time is to be reckoned both after the levy and before the sale, excluding each, and a sale on December 5, of real estate levied on September 5, is void. Goldsworthy v. Coyle, 19 R. I. 323, 33 Atl. 466.

So, the words "without interval of more than ninety days," in the Alabama statute providing for saving and continuing the lien of an execution, mean the same as no more than ninety days, and the ninety days from the first day do not expire until the ninety-first has passed. Lang v. Phillips, 27 Ala. 312.

And where under that act the original execution was returned April 14, and an alias was issued on the 14th of July next thereafter, the lien is not lost. Ibid.

And Delaware act of 1832, providing that no person imprisoned by virtue of execution process shall be detained or kept in prison by virtue thereof longer than five days from the date of such commitment inclusive, unless fraud be alleged or recognizance entered into, requires in express terms that the day of commitment shall be excluded in computing the five days. Re Fortner, 2 Harr. (Del.) 461.

But under the rule of the mayor's court of the city of New York, requiring a ca. sa. against the principal, issued for the purpose of charging his bail, to lie four days in the sheriff's office exclusive of the return day, it is only the return day which is exclusive, and the day on which the writ is delivered to the sheriff need not also be reckoned exclusively, and it is sufficient that a writ returnable on the 19th was delivered to the sheriff on the 15th of the same month. Gillespie v. White, 16 Johns. 117.

And in reckoning the time under a statute requiring a justice to fix the day of trial of a claim of right of property in goods taken in execution which must be five days after the claim is filed, the day on which the claim was filed must be counted. Long v. McClure, 5 Blackf. 319.

And an execution dated July 29, 1819, is properly made returnable on the 28th of August, under a statute providing that thirty days at least shall elapse between the teste and return, counting the day of the teste exclusive, and the day of the return inclusive, as the statute does not provide that the thirty days shall elapse between the day of the teste and the day of the return. Ogden v. Redman, 3 A. K. Marsh. 234.

So, a constable holding an execution dated March 7 and returnable in thirty days from the date, has the whole of the 6th day of April 49 L. R. A.

within which to execute and return it, as the thirty days do not expire until that time. Homan v. Liswell, 6 Cow. 659.

And a one year period within which an execution may be returned expires upon the same day and month of the year following the one upon which the execution is dated, and where that day is Sunday the execution may be returned upon the following Monday without a breach of the sheriff's bond. Williams v. State, 5 Ind. 235.

And where a fieri facias was issued by a justice, dated on the 21st of July, the thirty-six days from the date of the execution within which the constable is bound to return it expires on the 25th of the following August, and a scire facias against the constable dated on the 26th of that month for not returning the execution is not objectionable as having issued too soon. Ryman v. Clark, 4 Blackf. 329.

But under the old common-law rule the six months during which, after the expiration of his office, a sheriff was not liable to be called upon to return process, under 20 Geo. II. chap. 37, § 2, was to be computed by reckoning the day on which he went out of office as part of the six months. Kling v. Adderley, 2 Dougl. 463.

So, a return of an execution in less than ninety days computed by the statutory rule is irregular under the Missouri statute making executions issued by a justice of the peace returnable ninety days from date. Huhn v. Lang, 122 Mo. 600, 27 S. W. 345.

And in Adams v. Cumiskey, 4 Cush. 420, it was said that there is not, and never has been, any difference in the legal effect of the different words used to prescribe the times of returning executions, and that "within," "at the end of," and "in" a certain number of days or months have the same meaning; but the question in the case was as to the right to return an execution before the prescribed time, and not as to counting the first or last day.

2. Redemption from sale under.

The modern rule, both at common law and under the statutes, is that in computing the time allowed by law for redemption from a sale under execution, the day on which the sale was made is excluded. Roan v. Rohrer, 72 Ill. 582; Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. 485; Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486; Jones v. Planters' Bank, 5 Humph. 619, 42 Am. Dec. 471; Rothwell v. Gettys, 11 Humph. 135; Backer v. Pyne, 130 Ind. 288, 30 N. E. 21. And the year provided for by the Illinois statute would include, where the sale was on the 9th of September, the 9th of September in the following year. Roan v. Rohrer, 72 Ill. 582.

A period of time prescribed for redemption from a sale under execution is computed by allowing the full number of calendar months from the date of the sale, so that where the sale was had on the 15th of August, 1822, a creditor entitled to fifteen months has the whole of the 15th of November, 1823, in which to redeem. Snyder v. Warren, 2 Cow. 518, 14 Am. Dec. 519.

Redemption of land, however, the last day for which falls on Sunday, must be made the day before. Lindenmuller v. People, 33 Barb. 548, dictum.

But where, under a statute providing that a redemption from a sheriff's sale may be made by a creditor on or after the last day of the fifteen months limited for redemption by the debtor at the sheriff's office within twenty-four hours after the making of the previous redemption, if a Sunday intervenes after the previous redemption, as the sheriff's office is not required to be kept open on Sunday, it will be deemed dies non within the contemplation of the statute, and the statute will be deemed to provide for redemption within twenty-four hours of the day or days in which the sheriff is required to be in attendance at his office to enable the creditor to exercise his right. Porter v. Pierce, 120 N. Y. 217, 7 L. R. A. 847, 24 N. E. 281.

The three months given by law to a creditor after the expiration of the year, given to a debtor to redeem from a sale under execution in New York, commences to run on the day succeeding the expiration of the year, and that day is counted inclusively, so that if the year expires on the 18th day of a month, the succeeding day is counted as part of the three months. People ex rel. Collier v. Sheriff of Broome, 19 Wend. 87.

And under a statute providing that persons seeking to redeem from a sheriff's sale shall give to the purchaser or redemptioner, as the case may be, two days' notice of his intention to apply to the sheriff for that purpose, notice given on August 4 of an intention to redeem on the 6th is sufficient, as, excluding the day of service, two clear days are left, including the day of redemption. Scott v. Patterson (Wash. Terr.) 20 Pac. 593.

h. To sales under mortgages and trust deeds.

The general rule in regard to notices of sale on foreclosure or under a trust deed is that the day of performance is to be included, and the day from which the notice begins to run is to be excluded. Gantz v. Toles, 40 Mich. 725; Magnusson v. Williams, 111 Ill. 450; Teucher v. Hiatt, 23 Iowa, 527, 92 Am. Dec. 440.

And a right to redeem mortgaged property at any time within one year from the day of the sale under the mortgage will exist up to and during the whole of the same day of the succeeding year. Teucher v. Hiatt, 23 Iowa, 527, 92 Am. Dec. 440.

So, in computing the time when a notice of sale of premises under a mortgage foreclosure shall be affixed to the door of the courthouse under a statute providing therefor, one of the days upon which the acts are to be done is excluded and the other included. Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. 347.

And a sale under a deed of trust requiring the land to be sold after an advertisement of ten days is void where the first publication was made October 8, and the sale was made October 18, as the day upon which the advertisement is first published is to be excluded in computing the time when the publication should begin. Lerch v. Snyder, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 21 S. W. 183.

So, under Md. act 1826, chap. 192, requiring at least twenty days' notice in two or more of the daily papers published in the city, of the time, place, manner, and terms of a mortgage sale, an advertisement inserted in two daily newspapers on the 2d of November, which was continued in those papers until a week previous to the day of the sale, which took place November 29, 1858, is sufficient. White v. Malcolm, 15 Md. 529.

But a sale under a trust deed passes no title where by its terms twenty days' notice was to be given, and the advertisement was published first on May 14 noticing the sale for June 2. Siemers v. Schraeder, 14 Mo. App. 346.

And when thirty days' notice by publication is required by a deed of trust, thirty days should intervene between the first day of publication and day of sale. German Bank v. Stumpf, 73 Mo. 311.

But publication of a notice of sale in a newspaper on the 25th day of June, and continuously thereafter daily to and including the 25th 49 L. R. A.

of July, on which day the sale was made at noon, is a sufficient publication under such a trust deed. Mallory v. Kessler, 18 Utah, 11, 54 Pac. 892.

And a notice of sale under a trust deed authorizing a sale on default, thirty days' notice having been previously given of the day of such sale, published on the 23d day of August, stating that the lands would be sold on the 22d day of the following September, upon which day the lands were sold, was published the requisite length of time. Magnusson v. Williams, 111 Ill. 430.

And where the day before the day for which a sale of real estate is set is Sunday, it is to be reckoned in the thirty days during which notice of sale is to be given by law. Matthews v. Arthur (Kan.) 59 Pac. 1067.

So, the notice in a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage by advertisement published August 3d, and from that time successively once in each week, to and including September 14, the day of the sale, is a sufficient six weeks' publication under the statutory rule excluding the first day of publication and including the day of sale, where there is nothing in the statute to indicate that the six weeks are to be exclusive of the day of sale. Worley v. Naylor, 6 Minn. 102, 6 Ill. 123.

And under a statute requiring notice of sale under a power in a mortgage to be published for twelve weeks previous to the time fixed for the sale, the first publication of the notice must be eighty-four days or twelve full weeks before the sale, one day being included and the other excluded, and publication must be in every intervening week, and it will not do to publish it twelve times in twelve different weeks, if twelve full weeks have not elapsed. Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. 347.

In Georgia, however, in computing the time of service of a rule nisi to foreclose a mortgage on land, the day on which the rule was served should be counted, so that if it were served on the 2d of January, 1877, the required three months would elapse before the 2d day of April, 1877, and such service would be sufficient. English v. Oxburn, 59 Ga. 392.

But a notice of publication and sale in a mortgage foreclosure under a statute requiring six months' notice, in which, in order to make six months the day of publication and sale must be both included in the computation, is not sufficient. Jackson ex dem. Hyer v. Van Valkenburgh, 8 Cow. 200.

So, personal service of notice of postponement of a mortgage sale, made on the 1st for the 15th of the month, constitutes a sufficient fifteen-day notice, as one day is included and the other excluded. Westgate v. Handlin, 7 How. Pr. 372.

And in computing the one year during which an adverse possession will foreclose a right of redemption under a mortgage, a tender on the 3d of October in one year is good, where the entry was made on the 3d of October in the previous year. Ricker v. Blanchard, 45 N. H. 39.

So, under Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 107, § 18, providing for a bill in equity for the redemption of real estate sold under mortgage at any time within three years, during which peaceable possession must be held and continued by the mortgagee in order to foreclose the right of redemption, the day of the entry is to be excluded in computing the three years. Fuller v. Russell, 6 Gray, 128.

And in computing the three years after entry for condition broken, within which a mortgagor may redeem under the Maine statutes, the day of entry is to be excluded. Wing v. Davis, 7 Me. 31.

But where, under 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 295, § 16, allowing ten years after the termination of infancy within which an heir at law may redeem lands of his ancestor under foreclosure, one who becomes of age December 13, 1841, has all that day in which to sue, and that day will be included in the computation of the ten years, so that his right of action expires with the expiration of the 12th day of December, 1851. Phelan v. Douglass, 11 How. Pr. 193.

And under Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 140, § 1, with reference to redemption of land from a mortgage providing that possession continued peaceably for three years shall forever foreclose the right of redemption, where the three years of peaceable possession expires on Sunday, a tender on the following Monday is not within the three years, and is too late. Haley v. Young, 134 Mass. 364.

1. To mechanic's liens.

The computation of time under mechanic's lien laws is, with a few exceptions, governed by the same general rules, applied to actions, contracts, statutes, etc.

Thus, under the Rhode Island statutory provision that no lien shall attach for materials furnished, unless the person furnishing them shall within sixty days after the materials are placed on the land give notice, the sixty days are to be counted as prior to the date of notice, and where notice was given on January 6, 1890, counting backward from that day and beginning with the 5th, the sixty days go back to and include November 7, 1889, so that the party entitled to the lien would be warranted in including all completed materials furnished on and after that day. Paterson v. Saint Thomas' Church, 18 R. I. 349, 27 Atl. 449.

And a mechanic's lien for materials furnished, the last item of which was delivered on the 9th of January, 1873, filed for record on the 9th of July, following, is filed before the expiration of the six months allowed by Md. Code, art. 61, § 23, in which to file a claim for lien, as the day upon which the last item is charged is to be regarded as a mere point of time, and is to be excluded in the computation of the six months. German Lutheran Evangelical St. Matthews Cong. v. Helse, 44 Md. 453.

So, in the computation of time under the New York statute requiring the filing of a new docket before a year expires from the original filing to sustain a mechanic's lien, the day of filing should be excluded, and the last day on which the same could be continued should be included. Haden v. Buddensick, 49 How. Pr. 241, 6 Daly, 3.

And in computing the ten days before the filing a lien in which a subcontractor is required by law to give notice, the first day must be excluded under the Missouri statutory rule, and the last day included. Hahn v. Dierkes, 37 Mo. 574; Schubert v. Crowley, 33 Mo. 564.

And notice served September 1 is not a sufficient ten days' notice when the lien was filed September 10. Schubert v. Crowley, 33 Mo. 564.

And in computing the six months provided for by Pa. mechanic's lien law June 16, 1836, § 14, providing that the lien remains until the expiration of six months after the work shall have been finished or materials furnished, although no claim shall have been filed therefor, either the day on which the last work is done or the day on which the claim is filed must be excluded. Re Martin, 4 Fed. Rep. 208.

And a claim filed July 23, for materials furnished January 22, is too late. Hoops v. Parsons, 2 Miles (Pa.) 241.

49 L. R. A.

So, no lien can arise for materials furnished for the improvement of realty, under Ga. Civ. Code, § 2801, unless, as provided in § 2804, the claim of lien be recorded within three months after such material shall have been furnished, and, when it was furnished on the 6th day of May, recording on the 6th day of August is too late. Jones v. Kern, 101 Ga. 309, 28 S. E. 850.

Neither the statutory nor the common-law rule with reference to excluding the last day when it falls on Sunday, however, seems to have been applied to computations of time with reference to mechanic's liens.

Thus, when the last day of the year within which, in Wisconsin, an action to enforce a lien must be brought, is Sunday, the action is not in time if not brought until the next day. Williams v. Lane, 87 Wis. 152, 58 N. W. 77.

And under N. Y. mechanic's lien law 1875, chap. 379, providing that no lien shall bind the property longer than ninety days after it is filed, unless within that time an action be commenced and a lis pendens filed and an entry of the notice made on the lien docket, lis pendens filed on the ninety-first day after the notice of lien is of no effect, though the ninetieth day fell on Sunday, as the question is not governed by the rule applicable to the computation of time for the service of bills or the publication of legal notice. Bowes v. New York Christian Home, 64 How. Pr. 509.

So, under the Missouri mechanic's lien law, the four months after an indebtedness accrues within which a lien therefor must be filed, is to be computed by excluding the first day, and including the last, so that if the last day be Sunday the filing must be done on the previous Saturday. Patrick v. Faulke, 45 Mo. 312.

And in Miner v. Tilley, 54 Mo. App. 627, it was held that the statutory rule for the computation of time does not apply to an action upon a mechanic's lien, required by Mo. Rev. Stat. § 6720, to be commenced within ninety days after the filing of the lien, and if the ninetieth day after the filing of the lien is Sunday it must be brought on Saturday or some previous day.

In the above case, Patrick v. Faulke, 45 Mo. 312, supra, was criticised, but followed.

j. To taxes.

1. Assessment and collection.

Periods of time prescribed in provisions for the assessment and collection of taxes are governed by the same general rules; though as tax laws are subject to strict construction, the rule that such a construction as will avoid a forfeiture will be adopted is frequently applied.

Thus, the proper rule for the computation of time for the service of a notice of application for confirmation of an assessment is to exclude the day on which the notice was first inserted or posted, and include the day on which the term of court commenced. Brown v. Chicago, 117 Ill. 21, 7 N. E. 108.

And such a notice given on January 30, where the first day of the next term of court was the following February 9, is in time to confer jurisdiction under a provision of the act of incorporation requiring the commissioners to cause at least ten days notice to be given. Ibid.

But where the rules of a board of equalization require a notice to be mailed to persons whose interests are to be affected, to appear within seven days from the date thereof, the time for appearance is to be computed as including the date of the notice, so that a notice mailed on the 11th of the month would give the board jurisdiction to act on such notice on the 18th. Hagenmeyer v. Mendocino County Bd. of Equalization, 82 Cal. 214, 23 Pac. 14.

And a notice for the hearing of complaints against an assessment published upon September 2, and upon each day thereafter, Sundays excepted, to and including September 16, the day appointed for the meeting, is published a whole two weeks as required by law, without counting the publication on the 16th. Klein v. Tuhey, 13 Ind. App. 74, 40 N. E. 144.

So, in Yocum v. First Nat. Bank, 144 Ind. 272, 43 N. E. 231, it was held that the rule for computation of time under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 8543, providing that the duration of the session of the board of review of a county shall not exceed eighteen days, is fixed by Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 1304, providing that the term shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last day, and if the last day be Sunday it shall be excluded; but the question in the case was as to the exclusion of intermediate Sundays.

A notice of assessors, however, that an assessment is to be raised, served on the 17th to show cause against it on the 21st, is not a sufficient five days' notice. Lewis v. Bishop, 10 Wash. 312, 53 Pac. 165.

And under a provision that when no person shall appear to discharge the taxes duly assessed on lands owned by nonresidents within nine months from the date of the assessment the collector shall certify the same to the treasurer of the town, the owner of the land is entitled to the full term of nine months to pay his taxes without additional costs; and where the assessment was made on August 14, 1844, the collector should wait during all the business hours of the 14th day of May, 1845, for the owner of the land to pay the tax upon it before making his certificate to the town treasurer. Flint v. Sawyer, 30 Me. 226.

But the words "at least five days" in the Illinois statute providing for the filing of the delinquent list at least five days before the commencement of the term of court at which application for judgment for taxes is to be made, do not affect the statutory rule for computation of time by excluding the first day and including the last, such expression not requiring that the period shall be five full days. Prior v. People ex rel. Seipp, 107 Ill. 628.

So, in computing the four days provided for in N. H. Rev. Stat. chap. 48, § 6, providing that the tax collector shall keep goods distrained for taxes four days at the cost of the owner before advertising them for sale, the day of the distraint and the day of the advertisement are both to be excluded. Lefavour v. Bartlett, 42 N. H. 555.

And in such a case if a seizure is made on Wednesday no sale could be made on the succeeding Saturday as the four days would not then have elapsed, and the sale must therefore be made on Monday. Cressey v. Parks, 75 Me. 387, 46 Am. Rep. 406.

It has been held, however, that in computing the six days' notice required to be posted for a tax sale the day of posting is to be included as one of them, and a notice posted on the 15th of the month, of a sale on the 21st of the same month, is proper and lawful. Faulds v. People, 66 Ill. 210.

But a notice of a tax sale posted April 16, when the sale was to be had May 14, does not give at least four weeks' previous notice within the meaning of Wis. Rev. Stat. § 1130, providing therefor, as the whole number of weeks designated must intervene between the days mentioned. Ward v. Walters, 63 Wis. 39, 22 N. W. 844.

And a notice of a tax sale published on the 15th of March, the sale to take place on the 14th of April following, is insufficient under Md. 49 L. R. A.

Local Code, art. 4, § 874, providing that notice of sale for the payment of taxes shall be thirty days by advertisement published twice a week in two daily papers, and that the day of sale shall be after the expiration of the thirty days' notice, as in making the computation the day of sale should be excluded from the computation; and the sale is invalid. Steuart v. Meyer, 54 Md. 454.

But a notice of a sale of land for taxes, published on the 15th of March, the day of sale specified being April 14, under N. Y. Laws 1885, chap. 405, § 1, providing that the registrar shall publish a notice at least once a week in each week for four weeks in designated papers, that the land will be sold at public auction at a time and place specified, not less than thirty days after the first publication thereof, is sufficient under the general rule for the computation of time, excluding the first day and including the last, as by excluding March 15, the statutory period still remains. Kane v. Brooklyn, 114 N. Y. 586, 21 N. E. 1053.

In the above case it was said that authorities based upon statutes requiring an act to be done after the expiration of a specified period have no application.

2. Redemption from tax sales.

The same rules apply to periods prescribed for redemption from tax sales as to other periods of time with reference to taxation, but owing to the different circumstances they are somewhat differently applied.

Thus, the rule that in the computation of time the first day shall be excluded and the last day included, applies to tax sales both under Kan. Civ. Code, § 722, and on principle, and for the purpose of preventing a forfeiture; so that when the last day of the period for redemption from a tax sale is Sunday the owner will have all of the following Monday in which to redeem. English v. Williamson, 34 Kan. 212, 8 Pac. 214.

And a redemption notice that land sold for taxes on September 4, 1878, would be conveyed to the purchaser on September 4, 1881, unless redeemed prior to that date, prevents the owner from redeeming on that day or any day thereafter, and is therefore erroneous, as in computing the time the day of sale should be excluded, and all of that day given him for redemption. English v. Williamson, 34 Kan. 212, 8 Pac. 214.

And where a tax sale was had September 4, 1878, and the redemption notice stated that the land must be redeemed on or before September 5, 1881, a tax deed issued on the latter date and filed for record at 2 o'clock P. M. of that date, is prematurely issued, and is voidable by the owner of the land, as he had three years from the day of sale, and in computing the three years the day of sale is to be excluded, and therefore he had all of September 5 within which to redeem. Cable v. Coates, 36 Kan. 101, 12 Pac. 931.

So, in Hicks v. Nelson, 45 Kan. 51, 25 Pac. 563, it was held that where land is sold for taxes on September 5, 1882, the three years for redemption expires on September 5, 1885, where that day is not Sunday, and it is immaterial that the next day is Sunday.

And in that case, in denying a rehearing, the court explained Cable v. Coates, 36 Kan. 191, 12 Pac. 931, saying that it followed English v. Williamson, 34 Kan. 212, 8 Pac. 214, but that the opinion failed to state, as it should have done, that September 4, 1881, which was the last day of the three years for redemption, was Sunday.

So, the import of Neb. Gen. Stat. 922, § 64, providing that the owner or occupant of any lands sold for taxes, or any other person, may redeem the same at any time within two years from the day of the sale, and § 67 thereof, providing that if no person shall redeem his land within two years, at any time after the expiration thereof, and on production of the certificate of purchase the treasurer of the county shall execute to the purchaser in the name of the state a conveyance of the land sold, is that the owner of land sold for taxes, or other interested person, shall have full two years after the day of the sale within which to redeem, excluding the day of the sale from the period within which redemption may be made, and where a sale was made June 15, 1874, June 15, 1870, is the last day for redemption, and a deed made on that day is unauthorized. McGavock v. Pollack, 13 Neb. 535, 14 N. W. 659.

And land sold for taxes June 10, 1850, may be redeemed June 10, 1852, under Pa. act March 13, 1815, authorizing redemption within two years after the sale. Cromellen v. Brink, 29 Pa. 523.

And where a collector's deed was given May 4, 1866, the one year for redemption from tax sales provided for by the New Hampshire statute had not expired where the sale was had May 4, 1865. Annan v. Baker, 49 N. H. 161.

In Cromellen v. Brink, 29 Pa. 523, supra, Thomas v. Afflick, 16 Pa. 14, supra, II., and Barber v. Chandler, 17 Pa. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 533, supra, VII. d, 2, were criticised and in effect overruled, and Marys v. Anderson, 24 Pa. 272, supra, VII. b, 4, was distinguished upon the ground that that case was put expressly on the understanding of the country respecting the end of a tenant's term.

So, a notice to redeem, given by a purchaser at a tax sale, required by law to be given thirty days previous to the expiration of the time for redemption or before the purchaser applies for a deed, served on the 25th day of July, fixing August 23 as the time when he would apply for a deed, gives only twenty-nine days, and under the California statute excluding the first day and including the last in the computation of time he would not be entitled to a deed, and a deed given him would be invalid. Landregan v. Peppin, 86 Cal. 122, 24 Pac. 859.

And a notice that the right to redeem under a tax sale will expire on the 3d day of November, which fell on Sunday, given under an imperative provision of the statute requiring a purchaser at a tax sale, or his assignee, to notify the persons in possession of the lands when the time of redemption will expire, is defective, and a deed issued pursuant thereto is illegal and passes no title. Gage v. Davis, 129 Ill. 236, 21 N. E. 788; Gage v. Davis (Ill.) 11 West. Rep. 612, 14 N. E. 36.

And a notice to redeem from a tax sale, stating that the time of redemption thereof will expire on the 2d day of September, and that, said last-named date being Sunday, redemption may be made on or before Monday the 3d day of September, is improper where the period of time for redemption expired on Sunday as that day being Sunday the time for redemption did not expire until the next day, and a deed issued pursuant to such notice is void. Brophy v. Harding, 137 Ill. 621, 27 N. E. 523, 34 N. E. 253.

k. To eminent domain.

The ordinary rules, both common-law and statutory, apply to the computation of periods of time prescribed by law with reference to eminent domain.

Thus, under the Kentucky statutes for the government of certain cities, § 2834, providing that no ordinance for any original improvement mentioned in the act shall pass both 49 L. R. A.

boards of the general council at the same meeting, and at least two weeks shall elapse before the passage of any such ordinance from one board to the other, the passage of an ordinance by the lower board on April 5, and by the upper board on April 19, is proper and a sufficient compliance with the statute, as the time required is between the passage by one board and the passage by the other, and not between the day on which the act is passed by one board and the day on which it is passed by the other. Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky. 380, 35 S. W. 1125.

But How. (Mich.) Stat. § 1298, providing that notice of a meeting to view premises and ascertain the necessity of opening a highway, and to appraise the damages for the taking of land for such highway, must be served ten days before the time of meeting, excludes the day on which the meeting is to be held, and the rule of computation in Michigan excludes also the day of service necessitating ten full days' notice, and therefore a notice given January 15 of a meeting to be held January 25, is improper. Coguard v. Boehmer, 81 Mich. 445, 45 N. W. 996; People ex rel. Platt v. Clay Twp. Highway Comrs. 38 Mich. 247.

And where the statute requires ten full days' notice of proceedings to discontinue a highway or lay out a new one, a notice dated May 9, when the hearing was fixed for May 19, is insufficient. Cox v. Hartford Twp. Highway Comrs. 83 Mich. 193, 47 N. W. 122.

And a notice of an application for a jury to ascertain the necessity for using property intended to be taken to continue a street must, under a statutory provision that a marshal shall make return thereof at least six days before the day appointed for the hearing, be returned six clear days before the hearing, the language being imperative, and the service being necessary to give jurisdiction. Re Powers, 29 Mich. 504.

So, in computing the five days mentioned in Mich. Pub. Acts 1875, p. 166, §§ 2, 3, defining the duty of a drain commissioner in proceedings to lay out ditches, directing him to appoint a time and place for examination, and to give notice thereof in writing to all persons interested in the ditch or drain, which notice shall be served upon each person at least five days before the day appointed, both the date of notice and examination are excluded in the computation. Lane v. Burnap, 39 Mich. 736.

And a notice of the time and place of making an application for the impaneling of a jury in condemnation proceedings under a charter provision that notice shall be given by publishing the same for three weeks in one of the newspapers of the city if personal service on all the parties interested cannot be had, the first publication of which shall be at least thirty days before the time fixed for the application, a notice first published February 22, 1890, the day of the application being fixed on March 24, 1890, is not in season, as, excluding the day of the hearing, and also the first day of the publication, there would be but twenty-nine days of the publication. Rifenburg v. Muskegon, 83 Mich. 279, 47 N. W. 231.

In the above case, Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286, and Eaton v. Peck, 26 Mich. 57, supra, VII. d, 5, were explained, the court saying that although the statute in those cases provided that the notice should be served at least ten days before the application, in all cases in Michigan where the condemnation of land has been involved, it has uniformly been held that both the day upon which notice is served and the day of the meeting are excluded.

So, a law requiring objections to condemnation proceedings to be filed at least one day prior to the meeting of the council must be construed as intending that a day shall intervene between the last publication of notice thereof and the action of the council, and where the intervening day is Sunday, and no secular day intervenes, the period granted by the statute to the owner to file objections one day before the action taken by the council is wanting, and the assessment proceedings are vitiated. Chicago v. Vulcan Iron Works, 93 Ill. 222.

1. To matters of administration of estate.

Matters pertaining to the administration of estates are also within the general common-law rules, and usually within the statutory rules.

Thus, in computing the ten days from the death of a testator within which a will is not to be admitted to probate in New Jersey the day on which the death occurred is to be excluded. Re Evans, 29 N. J. Eq. 571.

And where money is to be paid under a devise a specified period after the testator's death the day of the testator's death should be excluded in the computation of the time within which the payment is required to be made. Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 18.

So, where a testator whose will directs the income of his property to be accumulated for a term of twenty-one years from his death, dies January 5, 1820, that day is to be excluded in the computation of the term for accumulation, and any dividends on stock becoming due on the 5th day of January, 1841, are subject to the trust. Gorst v. Lowndes, 11 Sim. 434, 10 L. J. Ch. N. S. 161, 5 Jur. 457.

And where a bequest is made in trust on condition that the legatee shall, within six months after the testator's death, give security not to marry a designated person, with a provision to go over if she shall refuse or neglect to give such security, the six months are exclusive of the day of the testator's death, and where he dies on the 12th of January, and security is given on the following 12th of July, though at a later hour, it is sufficient. Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. Jr. 248.

So, in Mercer v. Ogilvie, 3 Paton. 434, cited in Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. Jr. 254, it was held that within the meaning of the act of Parliament in Scotland, 20 Geo. II. chap. 37, § 2, for regulating deeds done on death-bed, where a man had lived sixty days after the making and granting of the deed, the day on which the deed was made and granted was to be excluded.

Likewise in estimating the twenty days from the time of the making of a decree of the probate court, allowed by Ala. Rev. Code, § 2246, for an appeal, the day of the rendition of the decree should be excluded, and the filing of a bond October 11 is in season, where the decree was rendered September 22. Cawfield v. Brown, 45 Ala. 552.

And under Ala. Rev. Code, §§ 2446, 2095, providing that the confirmation of a sale made by an administrator under an order of the court of probate is such a final order as will support an appeal to the supreme court if taken within twenty-one days from its rendition, where an order is made March 10 that day is to be excluded in the computation, and the day on which the appeal bond is approved is to be excluded, and if the bond is approved March 30, it is in season. Field v. Gamble, 47 Ala. 443.

So, under 1 Purdon, Dig. 585, Pamph. Laws, 183, requiring an administrator to give notice of a sale of a decedent's real estate at least twenty days before the day appointed therefor, the day of the sale must by the terms of the 49 L. R. A.

act be excluded, and a notice advertised for the first time on August 31 is insufficient where the sale was held September 18, though the papers left the office August 30. Zech's Estate, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 250.

The object of the legislature of Missouri in the enactment of the statute of 1817, however, providing for the administration of estates, and prohibiting the sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments of the deceased until eighteen months from the death of the ancestor, was to give a stay of execution for eighteen months in order that the administrator might have an opportunity of collecting the assets of the deceased and applying them to the discharge of his debts, and the day on which the letters issued might be used for that purpose as effectually as any other, and therefore that day will ordinarily be reckoned in computing the eighteen months. Griffith v. Bogert, 18 How. 158, 15 L. ed. 307.

And a petition and notice of a guardian to sell the land of his ward, required by law to be served at least ten days prior to the time fixed for the application, served on April 18, 1870, providing that the hearing is to be had on April 28, 1870, is served in season. Howbert v. Heyle, 47 Kan. 58, 27 Pac. 116.

In the above case, Garvin v. Jennerson, 20 Kan. 371, supra, VII. d. 5, was distinguished, and said to have no application to the question before the court, for the reason that the statute there commented on required that the act to be done should be done at least one day before the day of trial, and not at least one day before the trial.

Louisiana Code of Practice, par. 318, providing that where delay is given either to do something or to answer, neither the day of serving the notice nor that on which the act is done or the answer to be filed, is included, has reference to the delay granted for the performance of certain judicial acts, and does not apply to the computation of time of a settlement between a guardian and ward under La. Civil Code, art. 361, nullifying all agreements entered into between minors arriving at the age of majority and their tutors, unless the same are preceded by an account rendered and vouchers delivered, the whole being made to appear by the receipt of the person to whom the account was rendered ten days previous to the agreement. Hodgson v. Roth, 33 La. Ann. 941.

m. To proceedings to dispossess tenant or dis-train for rent.

Proceedings to dispossess a tenant or to dis-train for rent are in the nature of a civil action, and would appear to be governed by the rules applicable to civil actions with reference to the computation of periods of time.

Thus, a tenant under an agreement to leave the leased premises on receiving ten days' notice is entitled to ten full days exclusive of the day on which notice was given before an action can be legally instituted against him to expel him from the premises. Alken v. Appleby, Morris (Iowa) 8.

And a month's notice to quit, given to terminate a tenancy at will, served on the 2d day of October, 1895, gives the tenant under the N. Y. statutory construction law of 1884, § 27, providing for the exclusion of the first day in the computation of time, all of the 2d day of November, in which to leave, and proceedings to dispossess him, commenced on the second day of November, are premature. Hungerford v. Waggoner, 5 App. Div. 590, 39 N. Y. Supp. 369.

So, a notice to quit under a lease made on the 26th of a month to continue from month to month until either party should give the other one month's notice, previous to the expiration of the then current month, served on the 26th of the previous month, is too late. Williams v. McAnany, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 128.

In Duffy v. Ogden, 64 Pa. 240, however, it was held that a notice given on the 25th of December, 1868, by a landlord, of his intention to repossess himself of demised premises, the lease of which expired March 24, 1869, is a sufficient three months' previous notice of such intention under the Pennsylvania landlord and tenant act.

So, a notice by a landlord to a tenant to quit on May 12, served February 12, is a good three months' notice. McGowen v. Sennett, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 397.

In the above case, Marys v. Anderson, 24 Pa. 272, supra, VII. c. 4, was distinguished upon the ground that that case simply ruled that a lease for one year from the first of April expires on the last day of March of the next year, that case referring to the length of the tenancy under a lease, and not to the question of notice to quit.

Likewise, the six months given to tenants to redeem under the English statutes of ejectment for nonpayment of rent are computed by excluding the day on which the writ was executed. Dowling v. Foxall, 1 Ball. & B. 193.

Though the five days allowed by law before property distrained for rent can be sold are reckoned inclusive of the day of sale. Wallace v. King, 1 H. Bl. 13.

But under 1 Stat., 2 W. & M. chap. 5, § 3, authorizing the sale of goods distrained within five days next after the taking, the five days must be calculated under the existing rule as in other cases, inclusively of the last and exclusively of the day of the taking. Robinson v. Waddington, 13 Q. B. 753, 18 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 250, 13 Jur. 537.

And the English statute requiring that a landlord shall wait five whole days before he sells goods distrained for rent is designed to give the tenant five days in order to replevy the goods; and the landlord must wait five times twenty-four hours before he sells, and where a distress is made on Friday at 2 P. M. and the sale is had on the following Wednesday at 11 A. M., such sale is wrongful. Harper v. Taswell, 6 Car. & P. 160.

So, the rule that time shall be computed excluding the day on which the act was done from which the count is to be made, applies to computation of time under Pa. act of assembly of March 1, 1772, providing that a tenant shall have five days next after a distress and notice thereof within which to replevy the goods, and in such case after such distress and notice an appraisement shall be made, after which six days' notice of sale shall be given. Brisben v. Wilson, 60 Pa. 452.

And in reckoning the five days allowed by the Pennsylvania act of assembly to a tenant to replevy his goods when distrained for rent, the day of the distress should not be included. McKinney v. Reader, 6 Watts, 34.

And an appraisement on the 2d of December when a distress was made on the 27th of November and notice given that day, is too early under Pa. act of assembly March 21, 1772, giving a tenant five days next after a distress and notice within which to replevy the goods after which an appraisement is required. Brisben v. Wilson, 60 Pa. 452.

In the above case, it was said that Wallace v. King, 1 H. Bl. 13, supra, has been expressly overruled as to the question of computation of time by Robinson v. Waddington, 13 Q. B. 753, 18 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 250, 13 Jur. 537, supra. 49 L. R. A.

So, in conducting proceedings upon a distress for rent under a statute providing that, if after the expiration of five days from the day of service of notice the rent due with costs of distress shall not be paid, and the goods shall not be replevied, the officer is to procure an appraisal to be made and then give five days' notice of sale, five days must elapse after the day on which notice of distress was given, before an appraisal can be made or notice of sale given; so that where the notice of distress was given on the 9th, the appraisal could not take place before the 15th. Butts v. Edwards, 2 Denio, 166.

And under Pa. act March 21, 1872, providing that if goods distrained are not replevied with sufficient security the person distraining may, after the expiration of five days, cause them to be appraised preliminary to selling them, if the fifth day falls on Sunday it is to be excluded from the count within the Pennsylvania statutory rule for computing time, and where the seizure was made on Tuesday, Sunday is excluded from the count, and the appraisement cannot properly be made until the following Tuesday. Davis v. Davis, 128 Pa. 100, 18 Atl. 514.

n. To bankruptcy and insolvency laws.

Special provisions have been inserted in the bankruptcy laws similar to the regular statutory rules for the computation of time, and insolvency laws would seem to be governed by the general rules, either statutory or at common law, as the case may be on that subject.

Thus, the rule for computing the number of days prescribed for the performance of an act, under the United States bankruptcy act, is, that in all cases in which any particular number of days is prescribed thereby for the doing of any act the same shall be reckoned, in the absence of any expression to the contrary, exclusive of the first and inclusive of the last day, unless the last day shall fall on Sunday, in which case the time shall be reckoned exclusive of that day also. York's Case, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 503, Fed. Cas. No. 18,139.

Under this rule, in calculating the three months under the English bankruptcy act of 1863, § 6, providing that a creditor shall not be entitled to present a bankruptcy petition against a debtor unless the act of bankruptcy on which the petition is founded has occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition, the day on which the petition is presented is to be excluded. Ex parte Foster, 56 L. T. N. S. 573, 35 Week. Rep. 456, 4 Morrill, Bankr. Cas. 98.

And the day a petition in bankruptcy was filed must be excluded in making the computation of the four months before the filing of such petition within which assignments to give preferences to particular creditors are fraudulent under the bankruptcy act. Dutcher v. Wright, 94 U. S. 553, 24 L. ed. 130.

And an attachment made on September 9, 1876, is within four months next preceding the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings by a petition filed January 9, 1877, and is dissolved thereby under the bankruptcy act. Richards v. Clark, 124 Mass. 491.

And an attachment of the bankrupt's property will be deemed dissolved under that act by subsequent proceedings in bankruptcy, where the time between the two events was four hours and ten minutes less than four months, as in such case the rule that fractions of a day will not be observed, and that the first or last day will not be computed, will not be observed. Westbrook Mfg. Co. v. Grant, 60 Me. 88, 11 Am. Rep. 181.

So, under the English bankruptcy act of 1883, § 4, subd. g, providing that a debtor commits an act of bankruptcy if a creditor has served on him a bankruptcy notice and he has not complied with it within seven days after the service, noncompliance with a bankruptcy notice by a debtor, served on him November 20, is complete so as to constitute an act of bankruptcy on November 27, under the statutory rule for computing time provided by that act, requiring that the period shall be taken exclusive of the day of the date. Ex parte Townsend, 64 L. T. N. S. 743, 40 Week. Rep. 47, 8 Morrell Bankr. Cas. 144.

And under act 1890, § 1, making it an act of bankruptcy on the part of a debtor if execution against him has been levied by seizure of his goods and the goods have been held by the sheriff for twenty-one days, the twenty-one days which the sheriff must hold are whole days in the computation of which the day of seizure is to be excluded. Re North [1895] 64 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 694, 2 Q. B. 264.

So, under Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, pars. 1200, 1204, providing that an action may be brought against certain corporations in certain cases where they have suspended business for more than one year, an action may be maintained against a bank, commenced on July 20, 1894, where the bank commissioners took possession of it July 19, 1893, though the bank ran all that day. Crocker v. Ball (Kan. App.) 59 Pac. 691.

And where the goods of a bankrupt are sold and delivered to a purchaser on the day on which the bankrupt is put in prison for debt, and the goods are paid for on the next day, the payment is defeated under the English bankruptcy act where the debtor remained in prison for two months including the day of the arrest. Saunderson v. Gregg, 3 Starkie. 72; Sadler v. Leigh, 4 Campb. 195, 2 Rose, Bankr. 287.

So, notice under 32 Geo. II. chap. 28, requiring that notice of bankruptcy proceedings shall be given to a creditor at least fourteen days before the petition is presented, must be given fourteen clear days, exclusive both of the day of service and the day of presenting the petition. Zouch v. Empey, 4 Barn. & Ald. 522.

And the protection of an order made by a commissioner in bankruptcy granting protection to a bankrupt debtor until the "29th of July next" includes the whole of the 29th of July designated. Bellhouse v. Mellor, 28 L. J. Exch. N. S. 141, 4 Hurlst. & N. 116, 5 Jur. N. S. 175.

It has been held, however, probably under the old common-law rule, that transactions had on March 14 will be deemed to have been had more than two calendar months previous to May 14, upon which a commission in bankruptcy against a party thereto issued, and such dealings and transactions will be held to be valid. Cowie v. Harris, Moody & M. 146.

And that an execution issued August 13, under which goods were sold ten days afterwards, is issued more than two months before the issuing of a commission in bankruptcy against the debtor on the 18th of October, and is therefore protected by 6 Geo. IV. chap. 16, § 81, and is not taken out of that section by the proviso in § 108, that proviso applying only to executions issued and seizure made two calendar months before the issuing of the commission. Godson v. Sanctuary, 4 Barn. & Ad. 255, 1 Nev. & M. 52.

And under 21 Jac. I. chap. 19, § 2, providing that a debtor lying in prison the two lunar months after an arrest for debt shall be adjudged a bankrupt, the computation of the two months should include the day of the arrest. Glassington v. Rawlins, 3 East, 407.

In computing the two calendar months within 49 L. R. A.

which a fiat must be issued upon the act of bankruptcy under 1 & 2 Vict. chap. 100, § 8, the day on which the affidavit of debt was filed must be included, and where affidavit was filed April 27, and the fiat issued June 27, the fiat is void as being too late, though issued earlier in the day than the affidavit was filed. Re Whitby, Mont. & C. Bankr. 671, 4 Deacon, Bankr. 139, 8 L. J. Bankr. N. S. 55.

So, under U. S. bankruptcy act, § 48, providing that when any particular number of days is prescribed by the statute for doing any act or for any other purpose, and the last day falls on a Sunday or holiday, the last day shall be excluded from the computation, application for a discharge, made by a bankrupt November 27, 1868, when an attachment was had November 26, 1867, is within the one year from the attachment required by the statute, where November 26 was Thanksgiving day. Re Lang, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 480, Fed. Cas. No. 8,056.

And under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5044, by which an assignment in bankruptcy dissolves any attachment of the bankrupt's property made within four months next preceding the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, the computation of the four months is not to be made exclusively both of the day of the attachment and of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, but is to be reckoned exclusive of the first day, and if the last day falls on Sunday exclusive of that day also. Cooley v. Cook, 125 Mass. 406.

And if the last of the three clear days' notice of an application to commit a person for contempt of court is allowed in bankruptcy proceedings for failure to obey an order to file an amended statement be Sunday, it is not to be counted in the computation. Re Ferrige, L. R. 20 Eq. 289, 44 L. J. Bankr. N. S. 96, 32 L. T. N. S. 507, 23 Week. Rep. 612.

So, under an assignment by a debtor of all his effects for the benefit of such of his creditors as shall release their debts in sixty days from the date of the assignment, the day on which the assignment was made is to be excluded in the computation of the time within which a creditor may release. Pearpoint v. Graham, 4 Wash. C. C. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 10,877.

And in the computation of time previous to the Maine Revised Statute of 1857 within which creditors were allowed to become parties to an assignment, the day of publication of notice of the assignment was to be excluded, the words "after" and "from" in the provision therefore being words of exclusion. Page v. Weymouth, 47 Me. 238.

So, in calculating the time under Pat. (N. J.) Stat. 186, § 7, providing that creditors in insolvency must file their plea within twenty days after the debtor has filed his declaration, one of the days on which the declaration and plea are filed is included and the other excluded, and a plea filed on the 17th of November is in season, where the declaration was filed on the 28th of October. State v. Jackson, 4 N. J. L. 323.

And the ten days' notice by the sheriff to a creditor to pay the board of his imprisoned debtor is to be computed by excluding the day of the notice, and where such notice is given on the 18th of October the jailor is not authorized to discharge the debtor in case of non-payment on the 28th of that month. Millard v. Willard, 3 R. I. 42.

So, in computing the five days after registration of a deed of assignment within which a schedule of preferred debts is required to be filed, in North Carolina, the first day is to be excluded and the last included, and where the deed of assignment was filed for registra-

January 6, and the schedule was not filed until January 12, it is not in time. Glanton v. Jacobs, 117 N. C. 427, 23 S. E. 335.

And under the New Hampshire rule an attachment levied October 3 is dissolved under N. H. Pub. Stat. chap. 201, § 26, providing that proceedings in insolvency shall dissolve all attachments made within three months before the beginning thereof, where the debtor was decreed to be insolvent on petition filed January 2 following. Bernard v. Martel (N. H.) 41 Atl. 183.

So, one who is entitled to discharge from imprisonment under the insolvent law upon making the requisite affidavit after he had remained in prison thirty days, who was put there on the 26th of August, cannot be discharged until the 26th of September, as entire days only can be computed. Judd v. Fulton, 4 How. Pr. 298, 10 Barb. 117.

And under the South Carolina prison bound act, 5 Stat. 78, entitling a person committed to the custody of the sheriff to the benefit of the prison-bound ordinance providing he shall within forty days render to the clerk of the court a schedule on oath or affirmation of his whole estate or of so much as will pay and satisfy the same, the forty days will be computed by excluding the day of the bond, where including it would work a forfeiture of his right to the prison bound. McKlwee v. White, 2 Rich. L. 95.

And under Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 97, § 63, providing that a prisoner in execution who gives bond shall surrender himself to close confinement if he shall not be lawfully discharged within ninety days from the day of his commitment, in computing the time of the surrender the day of the commitment is to be excluded, as he is entitled to the whole of the ninety days to obtain his discharge, and the condition of the bond is saved if he surrenders himself on the ninety-first day. Wiggin v. Peters, 1 Met. 127.

In Morley v. Vaughan, 4 Burr. 2525, however, it was said that, under 32 Geo. II. chap. 28, providing for relief of debtors with respect to imprisonment, but requiring the debtor before exhibiting his petition to give previous notice of it in writing to all his creditors, fourteen days at least before such petition is presented, the computation might be made so as to include either the first or last day of the fourteen; but the case seems to have been decided upon other grounds.

o. To poor debtor acts.

The modern common-law rule for the computation of time applies to the poor debtor acts, and the statutory rules of construction apply whenever they are applicable to the construction of statutes generally.

Thus, the day of the date of a bond given under the Maine poor debtor act of 1835 and 1836 should be excluded in the computation of the time at which the six months for the performance of the conditions thereof expires, as it was the intention of the legislature to allow the debtor full six months to fulfill the conditions of the bond. Moore v. Bond, 18 Me. 142.

And the ten days within which a poor debtor may surrender himself after giving a bond to the officer making the arrest do not commence to run until the justice to whom the poor debtor applies to be admitted to the oath of insolvency has disallowed the oath, where the debtor has done all in his power to take it, and in computing the ten days the day appointed for taking the oath is excluded. Pease v. Norton, 6 Me. 233.

So, under the New Hampshire statute pro- 49 L. R. A.

viding that a party arrested on execution may give bond conditioned that within one year from the day of his arrest he will apply to the proper authority and take the oath prescribed for poor debtors, or in default thereof surrender himself up to the creditor as prescribed by law, the year is to be computed by excluding the day of the arrest; and where an arrest was made on the 22d of November, a surrender on the 23d of the next November is within the terms of the condition. Odiorne v. Quimby, 11 N. H. 224.

And in computing the time within which he may take the oath prescribed by law for the relief of poor debtors, the day of the arrest is to be excluded. Bell v. Adams, 10 N. H. 181.

And under the New Hampshire statutory rule for the computation of time the year within which a debtor is required to take poor debtor's oath, after giving the jail bond, is computed by excluding the day of the date of the bond, and where the jail bond was given December 10, 1849, the year commenced December 11, 1849, and terminates December 10, 1850, at night, and an oath taken December 11, 1850, is too late. Scovell v. Holbrook, 22 N. H. 260.

And in computing the fifteen days at the expiration of which from the time of commitment to jail a debtor may apply to have the poor debtor's oath administered to him, the day of commitment is to be reckoned as one of the fifteen days. Priest v. Tarlton, 3 N. H. 93.

So, in computing the thirty days within which a town liable for the support of a pauper is required, under Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 40, § 15, to remove him from the town in which he has received support in order to exempt the former town from liability therefor at a greater rate than $1 per week, the day on which notice is received that the support has been furnished is to be excluded. Seekonk v. Rehoboth, 8 Cush. 371.

And in the computation of the two months mentioned in Me. Stat. 1821, chap. 122, § 17, with reference to the settlement of paupers, providing that if the removal of a pauper from one township to another is not effected or objected to in writing after notice in writing, within two months after such notice to the overseers of the town, etc., the day of giving the notice is to be excluded. Windsor v. China, 4 Me. 298.

p. To provisions for recording and filing instruments.

The usual course in computing time in recent periods has been to construe the day exclusive whenever anything is to be done in a certain time after a given event or day, and consequently the time for enrolling a specification within the six months given by the statute is reckoned exclusively of the day of the date. Russell v. Ledsam, 14 Mees. & W. 582, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 353, 9 Jur. 557.

And the six months for enrolment of deeds of bargain and sale, provided for by 27 Hen. VIII. chap. 16, is exclusive of the day of the date and any instant of the last day of six lunar months will be deemed to be within that period. Thomas v. Popham, 2 Dyer, 218b.

And in computing the eight months within which a deed of gift of slaves was required to be recorded under the Kentucky statutes, the day of the date of the deed was excluded. Pyle v. Maulding, 7 J. J. Marsh. 202.

So, under the first section of the English act requiring annuity deeds to be enrolled within twenty days of the execution, the words "within twenty days" are to be taken as exclusive of the day of execution. Ex parte Fallon, 5 T. R. 288.

And where a patent dated May 10 contains a proviso that a specification should be enrolled within one calendar month after its date, the month begins on the 11th of May and includes the 10th of June, and a specification filed on that day is in time. Watson v. Pears, 2 Campb. 294.

So, under the Ohio act requiring depositions taken relating to land to be recorded in the office for recording deeds in the county where the lands lie within sixty days, depositions taken under that act may be read in evidence if recorded on the sixtieth day after they are taken. Myers v. Anderson, Wright (Ohio) 513.

And under the Indiana statutory rule, in estimating the ten days after the execution thereof, within which a chattel mortgage must be recorded in order to make it valid against third parties, the day upon which it was executed is excluded and the day of recording included. Towell v. Hollweg, 81 Ind. 154.

And a mortgage recorded on a specified day takes precedence over a mechanic's lien in which the material furnished is alleged to have been delivered between the day of the recording of the mortgage and a subsequent day, and the day of recording the mortgage will be excluded in computation. Weir v. Thomas, 44 Neb. 507, 62 N. W. 871.

But where the year for refilling a chattel mortgage under a provision requiring such filing as against creditors expires on Sunday, that day is not excluded in the computation of the year within thirty days of the expiration of which the refilling is required. Paine v. Mason, 7 Ohio St. 206.

And the rule for the computation of time excluding the first day of the period and including the last does not apply to a computation of time under the Ohio act in relation to mortgages and bills of sale of personal property, providing that they can be kept in force as against creditors only by refilling from year to year; and under that act the year within which such an instrument must be refilled begins to run from the exact time of the preceding filing, and is completed at the corresponding day and hour of the following year. Seaman v. Eager, 16 Ohio St. 209.

And under Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 44, art. 2, p. 2, providing for the setting aside of certain mortgages on petition of any person interested, filed within six months after the mortgage or transfer is legally lodged for record, the day on which the instrument is lodged for record is included in the computation of the six months. Lebus v. Wayne Ratterman Co. 14 Ky. L. Rep. 794, 21 S. W. 652.

So, in calculating the thirty days in which an order is required by statute to be lodged before a term of court to entitle the party to a change of venue, the day of depositing the order should be included, and the first day of the term of court excluded, from the calculation. Woods v. Patrick, Hardin (Ky.) 457.

But in computing the three months within which an extent on lands is required by the Maine statute to be recorded, the day on which the levy is made should not be counted, as the statute intended to give the levying creditor fully three months within which to record his levy. Berry v. Spear, 13 Me. 187.

And under 3 Geo. IV. chap. 39, § 1, providing that warrants of attorney to confess judgment shall be filed within twenty-one days after their execution, and § 2 thereof providing that if they are not so filed, or unless judgment be signed or execution issued within the same period, they and the judgment thereon shall be fraudulent and void, as against the assignees of the party giving the warrant if he became bankrupt after the expiration of twenty-one days next after the execution of the warrant, the twenty-one days are to be reckoned exclusively of the day of execution, and a warrant executed December 9, and filed December 30, is in time. Williams v. Burgess, 12 Ad. & El. 635, 4 Perry & D. 443, 9 Dowl. P. C. 544.

So, under the Texas act requiring the return of field notes withdrawn from the land office within twelve months, a return of field notes on November 29, 1872, is within the prescribed time where the act was passed November 29, 1871. Hill v. Kerr, 78 Tex. 213, 14 S. W. 566.

And the word "by," in an order requiring that designated papers should be filed by a designated day, includes that day, so that the paper may properly be filed that day. Higley v. Gilmer, 3 Mont. 433.

And a provision that notice of the proposed incorporation of a town should be recorded for a period not less than thirty days, does not mean thirty clear days, which would exclude the day of posting, but falls within the ordinary rule of computing time within which notice must run which is to exclude the day on which the notice is given and include the day on which it expires. State v. Winter Park, 25 Fla. 371, 5 So. 818.

q. To enactment and taking effect of statutes and resolutions.

The rule that in computing time when an act has been performed within a particular time after a specified day the specified day should be excluded and the day upon which the act is to be performed included, applies in computing the ten days allowed the governor to consider bills which have been passed by the assembly and presented to him for signature, and when, on the last day thus computed the legislature adjourns, the governor would have until the first day of the next assembly to return the bill with his objections. People ex rel. Harless v. Hatch, 33 Ill. 9.

Thus, the period within which the governor is required to return a bill with his objections is to be computed by excluding the day in which the bill is transmitted to him. Corwin v. Comptroller General, 6 S. C. N. S. 390; Re Soldiers' Voting Bill, 45 N. H. 607; Iron Mountain Co. v. Haight, 39 Cal. 540; Garnett v. Bost, 39 Cal. 662. And see STATE PHARMACEUTICAL ASSO. V. MICHEL.

And under the provision of the Texas Constitution, that every bill presented to the governor one day previous to the adjournment of the legislature, and not returned to the house in which it originated before its adjournment, shall become a law and have the same force and effect as if signed by the governor, a bill which had passed both houses of the legislature, and been presented to the governor for his approval within less than twenty-four hours previous to the time of adjournment, and when an intervening day between the presentation and the adjournment could not have elapsed, does not become a law. Hyde v. White, 24 Tex. 143.

And a bill presented to the governor on the 5th of February and returned with his veto on the 17th, is returned within the ten days as required by the Constitution, under the rule excluding the first and including the last day in the computation of time, where two Sundays intervene, Sundays being expressly excepted by the Constitution. Beauden v. Cape Girardeau, 71 Mo. 392.

So, where an act provides that it shall take effect and be in force one year from and after its passage, the day of the passage of the act is excluded from the computation of the time. Duncan v. Cobb, 32 Minn. 460, 21 N. W. 714.

And the ninety days until the expiration of which after its passage a law does not take effect under the West Virginia constitutional provision should be computed by excluding the day of the passage of the act and including the ninetieth day thereafter. State v. Mounts, 36 W. Va. 179, 15 L. R. A. 243, 14 S. E. 407.

See also HALBERT v. SAN SABA SPRINGS LAND & LIVE-STOCK ASSO.

And the word "passage" in that provision relates to the date of the passage of the act by the two houses, and not to the date of its approval by the governor, so that an act passing both houses on the 27th of February would go into effect on the 28th of May following. State v. Mounts, 36 W. Va. 179, 15 L. R. A. 243, 14 S. E. 407.

So, the three months within which an act takes effect under the Nebraska Constitution expires, when the legislature adjourns on the 8th day of April, upon the 9th day of July following, so that an act passed will take effect on that day. McGinn v. State, 46 Neb. 427, 30 L. R. A. 450, 65 N. W. 46.

And in computing the time at which a statute goes into effect under Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 1, § 8, providing that laws enacted shall become effective in thirty days after the recess of the legislature passing it, the day on which the legislature adjourns is to be excluded. Simmons v. Jacobs, 52 Me. 147.

But 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 157, providing that every law, unless a different time shall be prescribed therein, shall commence and take effect on and not before the twentieth day after the day of its final passage as certified by the secretary of state, applies to the act of May 2, 1874, prohibiting appeals to the court of appeals in certain cases, not prescribing when it should take effect, so that an appeal taken on the twentieth day after the passage of the act is governed by its provisions, as it becomes a law the instant that day begins. Krom v. Levy, 60 N. Y. 126.

And a statute with relation to appeals which by a general law is to be enforced from and after its publication in the official state paper, comes into effect at the instant of the issue of the state paper containing it, so as to affect an appeal filed later that day, the day of publication being included in the computation. Leavenworth Coal Co. v. Barber, 47 Kan. 29, 27 Pac. 114.

Under the provisions of the Kansas herd law, however, that it shall go into practical operation in any particular county only after an order of the board of county commissioners to that effect has been published for four consecutive weeks, the four weeks of publication would end only on the day next preceding the fifth issue of the paper, and the law would take effect on the beginning of the 29th day after the day of the first publication. Reed v. Sexton, 20 Kan. 195.

So, a statute repealing a former statute in which it is provided that it is to take effect from and after a day named does not take effect until after the expiration of such day. Koltensbrock v. Cracraft, 36 Ohio St. 584; Handley v. Cunningham, 12 Bush, 402.

And acts performed within that day are not within its purview. Handley v. Cunningham, 12 Bush, 402.

In State v. Mounts, 36 W. Va. 179, 15 L. R. A. 243, 14 S. E. 407, however, it was held that in computing the time within which or after the expiration of which an act of the legislature is to take effect, it is immaterial whether the day of the passage of the act is included and 49 L. R. A.

the day of the ending of the period is excluded, or whether the day of the passage is excluded and the day of the ending is included.

An interval of not less than fourteen days which is to elapse between a meeting passing a special resolution of a company and that at which it is confirmed under the English company's act of 1862, § 51, is an interval of fourteen clear days exclusive of the respective days of meeting, as the word "at" means after the interval or at some time after the interval, referring grammatically rather to a point of time than a period; and a special resolution for the reduction of capital, passed at a meeting held on the 25th of February and confirmed at a meeting held on the 11th of March, is bad. Re Railway Sleepers Supply Co. 54 L. J. Ch. N. S. 720, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 204, 52 L. T. N. S. 731, 33 Week. Rep. 595.

But under a statutory provision that a resolution for designated purposes should lie over at least four weeks after its introduction, and that no action should be taken by the common council if within that time a remonstrance should be presented, a week is the period of time extending from Monday of one week to Monday of the next week following, and not until Tuesday of such week; and a resolution, if introduced on Monday, has laid over four weeks, within the meaning of the provision, when the fourth Monday thereafter arrives, and the council are then at liberty to act upon it. Wright v. Forrester, 65 Wis. 848, 27 N. W. 52.

As to time of the passage of a statute, see note to State v. Mounts (W. Va.) 15 L. R. A. 243.

r. To elections and offices.

Election notices and terms of office are construed under the same general rules, though there are some exceptions and variations, especially with reference to election notices, which are usually to be computed backward from the time of the election.

Thus, under a statute providing that certificates of nomination for candidates shall be filed with the secretary of the commonwealth at least sixty-six days before the day of the election, a certificate filed on the 13th day of September is in season within the rule for the computation of time requiring the last day to be excluded but including the first, where election was to be held November 8. Re Certificates of Nomination, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 759.

And the term "five days exclusively" in a statute providing for notice of town meeting means five days inclusive of the day on which the notice is posted, but exclusive of the day on which the meeting is to be held, so that, therefore, a meeting warned on the 26th of September, to be held on the 30th of September, is not legally warned. Brooklyn Trust Co. v. Hebron, 51 Conn. 22.

But where a voter is required by law to file an oath in a designated office at least five days before the day of election, the five days will be computed by excluding the day of filing, where including it would lead to a forfeiture of the office. State ex rel. Reitemeyer v. Gasconada County Ct. 83 Mo. 102.

So, under South Carolina act of 1819, requiring the voters of a certain place to register at least a month before the day of election, registration on August 3 is in time, where the election is held September 3, the day of the date of registration being included, as there would be a forfeiture if it were excluded. State ex rel. Stock v. Schnlerle, 5 Rich. L. 299.

And in computing the three calendar months under the Pennsylvania act of April 15, 1851, to provide for the election of justices, providing for filling vacancies by appointment and for an election by general electors at the first general election which shall happen more than three months after the vacancy shall occur, one of the terminal days of the period is to be included, and the other excluded. Com. v. Maxwell, 27 Pa. 444; Re Judges' Commission, 2 Chester Co. Rep. 317.

So, the provision of the Kentucky statute directing the sheriff to deposit the poll books within two days next after an election, excludes the day of election, the two next or following days being the days referred to, as, the election occupying the whole of the day on which it took place, the expression "within the two next days" clearly means the two days after the day of election, and both of these days are included in the time allowed for depositing the poll books, the last day as well as the day of election being excluded in the computation. Batman v. Megowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533.

Notice of an intention to contest an election of a jailer, however, who had obtained a certificate of his election from the board of examiners, required to be given within ten days after the final action of the board of examiners, given on the 16th of the month, is too late, where the final action was had on the 6th of that month. Ibid.

But a notice of illegal votes expected to be proved in an election contest provided for by Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1116, providing that a party shall not give evidence of illegal votes unless he gives his adversary at least three days before trial a written list of the number of illegal votes he expects to prove and by whom given, served on the 7th of December, can properly be relied on and proved at the trial on the 10th of December, the period being computed by including the first day and excluding the last. Misch v. Mayhew, 51 Cal. 514.

So, the statutory rule for computing time excluding the first day and including the last unless it be Sunday, when it must also be excluded, means that Sunday, when the last day, must be excluded from the count of the time, and where an election is held on November 8, and an alternative writ of mandamus to inquire into its validity is served on the 14th of that month in time for the election board to reassemble on that day, it is within the five days limited by law for the returns to be cast by the canvassing board where the 13th was Sunday. State ex rel. Steadley v. Stuckey, 78 Mo. App. 533.

And under the Canadian Interpretation act, chap. 1, § 7, subd. 27, providing that if the time limited by any act for any proceeding or the doing of any thing under its provision expires or falls upon a holiday, the time so limited shall be extended to, and such thing may be done on, the next day following which is not a holiday, a petition in an election contest required by the Dominion controverted election act to be presented not later than thirty days after the day fixed for the nomination in case the candidate or candidates have been declared elected on that day, and in the other cases forty days after the holding of the poll, to be presented in such forty days, is properly presented on the forty-first day, where the fortieth day is Sunday, Sunday being a legal holiday. Nicolet Election Case, 29 Can. S. C. 178.

Where, however, by the terms of the commission of a justice of the peace the term of office was for four years from a designated day, and he might have qualified and discharged the functions of his office on that day, his term of office begins on that day, and that day must be counted as a part of his term. Vogel v. State ex rel. Land, 107 Ind. 374, 8 N. E. 164. 49 L. R. A.

But an official act by an officer who was commissioned to hold office during the term of four years from the 2d day of March, 1845, performed on the 2d day of March, 1849, is lawful and within his term of office. Best v. Polk, 18 Wall. 112, sub nom. Rest v. Doe ex dem. Polk, 21 L. ed. 805.

And in Elmendorf v. New York, 25 Wend. 687, the court, in considering the question as to the time when the term of an officer begins to run, where he was to be sworn into office on a certain day, laid down the general rule excluding the day on which an act is to be done from time which is to be computed under a statute; but the case was decided upon other grounds.

So, under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 4735, 4736, 4737, providing that on the day following an election of certain officers the inspectors shall make out and deliver to the successful candidate a certificate of election, and that such certificate shall entitle the holder to qualify and enter upon the discharge of the duties of the office at the expiration of ten days from the date of such election, the general rule applies, and in the computation of such ten days the day of election is to be excluded. Vogel v. State ex rel. Land, 107 Ind. 374, 8 N. E. 164.

In the above case, Tucker v. White, 19 Ind. 253, supra, VII. g, 1, was distinguished and explained, the court saying that that was a case where the reason of the thing controlled.

So, statutory notice of a special election held to obtain the sentiment of a majority of the legal electors on the question of the acceptance of the provisions of an act to enable cities to supply the inhabitants with pure and wholesome water, required by law to be given at least six days previous to the day of election, given June 24, when the election was to be held June 30, is insufficient, the notice being only five days instead of six. State, Stroud, Prosecutor, v. Consumers' Water Co. 56 N. J. L. 422, 28 Atl. 575.

But notice of an election for the relocation of a county seat under an order allowing it, made and given September 1 to be held October 1, 1885, is sufficient within the Kansas rule for the computation of time, under Kan. Comp. Laws 1870, chap. 26, § 5, requiring thirty days' notice of the election. State ex rel. Lewis v. Eggleston, 34 Kan. 714, 10 Pac. 3.

And under Minnesota Special Laws 1875, chap. 132, providing for a special meeting of the legal voters of a village to vote upon the question of issuing bonds to aid in the construction of a railroad, and requiring that notice of the time, place, and subject of the meeting shall be posted in three public places at least ten days prior thereto, sufficient time is given by notice posted on the 13th of May of a meeting to be held on the 23d of the same month. Coe v. Caledonia & M. R. Co. 27 Minn. 197, 6 N. W. 621.

And a notice of election under Minnesota act of 1891 providing for the submission of the question of issuing bonds to the voters at a special election to be called by a village council, giving not less than ten days' previous notice thereof by publishing the same in some newspaper, published May 16, calling the election for May 26, is in season, as the day of the first publication is to be excluded and the day of the election is to be included. Brady v. Moulton, 61 Minn. 185, 63 N. W. 489.

So, under the Kentucky local option act, providing that an election thereunder shall not be held earlier than sixty days after an application therefor is lodged with the county judge, the time begins to run after the act of lodging the application, and not after the day on which application is lodged, and in estimating the sixty days the day on which the application is lodged must be included. Com. v. Shelton, 99 Ky. 120, 35 S. W. 128.

And under the Texas statute, requiring an election under the local option law to be held not less than fifteen nor more than thirty days from the date of making the order therefor, the day of the entry of the order should be excluded, and the day of the election included, in computing the time limited. King v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 547, 28 S. W. 201.

And a special election under the local option law, held on the 25th of November, the order for which was made on the 10th of that month, is fifteen days from the day of the order within the meaning of that act. Winston v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 59, 22 S. W. 138.

So, under Mo. Laws 1887, chap. 181, providing that notice of an election for local option shall be given by publication for four consecutive weeks, and the last insertion shall be within ten days next before such election, the computation is to be made by excluding the day of notice and including the day of election, so that a notice published December 28, 1887, of an election to be held January 24, 1888, is one day short. State v. Kaufman, 45 Mo. App. 656; State ex rel. Weber v. Tucker, 32 Mo. App. 620; Leonard v. Salline County Ct. 32 Mo. App. 633.

And the meaning of the first clause is not limited or affected by the second clause with relation to the last insertion. State ex rel. Weber v. Tucker, 32 Mo. App. 620; Leonard v. Salline County Ct. 32 Mo. App. 633.

The rule of the Ohio Code, that when the last day to perform an act falls on Sunday, the act may be done on Monday, is an exception to the general rule, and only applies to proceedings provided for in the Code itself, and does not apply to a notice of appeal in an election case under a statute providing therefor; and in such case when the last day falls on Sunday the notice must be given previous to that day. Taylor v. Wallace, 2 Ohio L. J. 115.

s. Miscellaneous provisions for time.

Where original letters patent are granted for a term of fourteen years, and dated on the 26th of February, 1825, renewal letters dated on the 26th of February, 1839, will be deemed to have been granted after the original letters patent have expired, as in computing the fourteen years the day of the date must be reckoned inclusively. Russell v. Ledsam, 14 Mees. & W. 582, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 353, 9 Jur. 557.

And the provision of § 15 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1875, that the title of lands acquired of any Indian by virtue of the act shall remain inalienable for five years from the date of the patent issued therefor, is to be so construed that in the computation of such five years the day the patent issued will be included; and where a patent issued to an Indian June 15, 1880, a deed of the lands by the Indian dated June 15, 1885, is good, and not within the limitation. Taylor v. Brown, 147 U. S. 640, 37 L. ed. 313, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 549, 5 Dak. 335, 40 N. W. 525.

Under the laws of Texas for the sale of school lands, however, after one application another cannot be made for the same land during ninety days after the first one; and where the ninetieth day is Sunday another application cannot be made until the following Monday. Monroe Cattle Co. v. Becker, 147 U. S. 47, 37 L. ed. 72, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 217.

So, an act laying an embargo for a designated number of days from and after the passing of the act may be construed to include or exclude the day of the date of the statute, and will be 49 L. R. A.

construed the one way or the other with a view of not impairing an existing contract. Lorent v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 1 Nott & McC. 503.

In computing the statutory time within which an importer must serve his protest with reference to the amount of duties to be paid on his goods, Sunday cannot be excluded and the protest served on the following Monday, as there is no Federal statute authorizing such exclusion, and the law regulating bankruptcy proceedings, providing for its exclusion in matters arising thereunder, shows the intent of Congress that it should not be excluded unless expressly so provided. Shefer v. Magone, 47 Fed. Rep. 872.

And in computing the ten days within which a collector is required to give an order to importers to return goods to the public stores to be opened and examined under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2890, if the tenth day falls on Sunday, notice given on the Monday following is too late. Hermann v. United States, 66 Fed. Rep. 721.

But under the Nebraska statute relating to the license and sale of intoxicating liquors, providing that no action shall be taken upon an application for a license until at least two weeks notice of the filing of the same has been given, the two weeks must be computed under the Nebraska statutory method of computation of time by excluding the day of publication, and where a notice was published Saturday, June 5, the two weeks would expire with Saturday, June 19, and, excluding Sunday, Monday the 21st would be the first day on which the board could take any action upon the application. Pelton v. Drummond, 21 Neb. 492, 32 N. W. 593.

And an action on the fourteenth day after the first publication of notice is premature. Pislar v. State, 56 Neb. 455, 76 N. W. 869.

But under the Indiana statutory method of computing time a remonstrance provided for by Nicholson law, with relation to intoxicating liquors, of March 11, 1897, making it unlawful to grant a license if three days before any regular session of the board of commissioners of any county it is filed with the auditor, filed Thursday, August 29, is in season, where the regular session of the board occurs Monday, September 2. Flynn v. Taylor, 145 Ind. 533, 44 N. E. 546; Conwell v. Overmeyer, 145 Ind. 698, 44 N. E. 548.

So, under the Illinois statute providing that the governor shall receive written sealed bids for certain property from all persons until a designated date, at which time all the bids received shall be opened and compared by him, his power to sell is limited to bids received before that date. Webster v. French, 12 Ill. 302.

And under a statute providing that a brook on which a mill has been erected shall be kept open and free for the passage of fish from the 5th day of May to the 5th day of July in each year, the owner of the mill is entitled to the full use of the water until the 6th day of May, the word "from" being a word of exclusion. Peables v. Hannaford, 18 Me. 106.

So, a notice to perform street labor on the 22d day of August, given in the latter part of the 19th of August, is sufficient three days' notice under a statutory method for computing time. Wahl v. Nauvoo, 64 Ill. App. 17.

But a warning given late on Saturday evening, to attend to work on the road on the following Tuesday morning, is not sufficient under Gault's Digest, 5324, providing for at least three days' actual notice, as in that case only two full days' notice is given. Jones v. State, 42 Ark. 93.

So, under the Vermont statute requiring a person who finds straying beasts to advertise the same within six days, the day when the advertisement was posted is excluded in the computation. Chaffee v. Harrington, 60 Vt. 718, 15 Atl. 350.

And a provision in an ordinance giving the owner of hogs impounded five days in which to redeem, means five days exclusive of that on which the hogs were impounded, and until the five days have expired no power is conferred to sell the hogs or proceed for their forfeiture. White v. Hawarth, 21 Mo. App. 439.

And a sale under a municipal ordinance providing for the sale of hogs running at large, requiring notice of the time and place to be given for six successive days, given on the 22d of the month, of a sale on the 28th thereof, is premature. Montgomery v. Adams, 51 Ala. 449.

So, under 2 Wm. IV. chap. 39, § 11, by which it is required that every writ of distringas shall be made returnable on some day in the term, not less than fifteen days from the teste thereof, the fifteen days should be computed exclusive both of the day of the teste and the day of the return. (Chambers v. Smith, 2 Dowl. P. C. N. S. 1057, 12 Mees. & W. 2.

And under Vt. Rev. Laws, 1450, providing that a tender of damages by trespass may be made at any time until three days before the commencement of the term in which the action therefor is returnable, neither the day on which the tender is made, nor the first day of the term, can be counted as one of the three days. Willey v. Laraway, 64 Vt. 560, 25 Atl. 435.

But a railroad company which begins to rebuild a bridge crossing a navigable river on January 7, and finishes the work on March 2, is liable for damages for obstructing navigation upon the last two days, within N. J. act 1874, Rev. p. 87, § 10, providing that the person or corporation repairing or rebuilding a bridge across any navigable water shall not be liable for obstructing navigation, provided it be done between the 1st day of January and the 1st day of March. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Mehrhof Bros. Brick Mfg. Co. 53 N. J. L. 205, 23 Atl. 170.

So, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 787, 788, providing that the time within which publication of legal notice is required to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, a notice of a meeting of directors of a corporation published on May 8 for a meeting on May 28, and on every week thereafter including the 28th is sufficient under a by-law requiring notice of the time and place of holding such meeting to be published not less than twenty days previous thereto. The Vigilancia, 68 Fed. Rep. 781.

But under a rule of a company empowered to forfeit shares of stockholders in arrear, provided that the company shall give ten clear days' notice to each stockholder of a meeting called for the purpose of declaring such a forfeiture, a notice given on the 27th of February of a meeting to be held upon the 9th of March next is insufficient to warrant a forfeiture, as it gives notice of but nine clear days. Watson v. Eales, 23 Beav. 294.

And under 33 Geo. III. chap. 95, incorporating a canal company, and providing for commissioners, enacting that no meeting whatsoever of the commissioners shall be had unless previous notice of the time, place, and purpose of such meeting shall be given in some newspaper published or circulated within designated counties, or in such manner as the company or proprietors shall direct or appoint, at least sixteen days before such meeting, a notice that a meeting will be held February 12, published in a county paper dated the 27th of January, 49 L. R. A.

is insufficient, though it appears by affidavit that copies of a newspaper like that were published and circulated on the 26th. Queen v. Aberdare Canal Co. 14 Q. B. 554, 19 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 251, 14 Jur. 735.

So, where notice of the time and place of paying stock subscriptions is required to be published in a newspaper thirty days before the time on which payment is required, but one publication is required to be made, and it is sufficient if, counting the day on which the notice was published, thirty days intervene before the day upon which payment is required; and it is sufficient, in an action upon a subscription to such stock, to allege that notice was given on March 2 for payment to be made on the 1st day of the following April, as by adopting the ordinary rule of including one of the days and excluding the other there would be a publication thirty days before the specified time. Fox v. Allensville, C. S. & V. Turnp. Co. 46 Ind. 31.

Likewise, the month provided for by 2 Geo. II. chap. 23, § 23, directing that no attorney shall commence an action for his fees until the expiration of one month or more after he shall have delivered his bill, is to be reckoned exclusively of the days on which the bill is delivered and the action is brought. Blunt v. Heslop, 8 Ad. & El. 577, 3 Nev. & P. 553.

And under the rule of Hil. 6 Wm. IV. § 5, requiring that three days' notice at the least before the commencement of the term be given to the master by persons applying to be admitted as attorneys, the three days are to be computed exclusive of the day on which the notice is given, and of the first day of the term to which it relates. Re Prangley, 4 Ad. & El. 781, 6 Nev. & M. 421, 2 Harr. & W. 65.

VIII. Conclusion.

There seems to be one general rule with reference to counting the first and last days in the computation of a period of time which, subject to exceptions based upon the language of the provision for time or upon the surrounding circumstances, seems to have remained the same throughout the whole period of the common law, and which remains practically the same under the statutes and rules of court. That rule is that in the computation of time one of the first and last days of the period shall be included and the other excluded. The question as to which of the two days shall be included and which excluded, however, has been differently decided in different periods and different jurisdictions, and has given rise to much conflict of opinion. The general common-law rule as it originally existed was that the first day was to be counted when the computation was to be from an act or event, but that it was not to be counted when the reckoning was to be from a day or from the day of an act or event. The more modern decisions have changed this rule, and, in the absence of a statute or rule of court controlling the question, the courts now compute time, as a general rule, by excluding the first day and including the last day. But this rule was subject to exceptions with reference to the language of the provision for time or the surrounding circumstances, and in many instances in which the words "within" or "between" or "at least" or "not less than" were used, both the first and last days were excluded, and such days were included or excluded, as the case might be, so as to avoid a penalty or forfeiture. This rule was subsequently put in statutory form or adopted as a court rule in most jurisdictions, but in construing the statutes and rules, though the courts could not depart from or change the language used, they generally construed them to be a re-enactment of the common-law rule on the subject, and held them to be subject to the same exceptions; and the general rule now existing, whether at common law or under the statutes, probably is that the first day of a period of time is to be excluded and the last day is to be included, but that either or both days may be either included or excluded, if the language of the provision for time is such as to require it, or if by so doing a penalty or forfeiture will be avoided.

These rules are held generally to apply to all cases. Many of the statutes were enacted with express reference to civil actions, but, with a few exceptions, they have been held to apply generally to all provisions for time, and though they are not deemed to apply the common-law rule must be resorted to which is practically the same.

The question as to what will be done when the last day falls on Sunday or a holiday is treated in a note to Brown v. Valles (Colo.) 14 L. R. A. 120, and is not included in this note. All that is here considered on that question is the construction of the statute or court rule existing in many of the states, to the effect that if the last day of a period of time should fall on Sunday or a holiday that day should be excluded from the computation, the general rule being that in such case the time is extended to include the following day. In some of the states, however, among which are Alabama and Missouri, the courts have construed the rule to mean that, Sunday being excluded, the act must be done on Saturday, or in case of a holiday other than Sunday, on the preceding day, and a few of the statutory provisions with reference to computation of days, weeks, and months have been held not to apply to years, but as a general rule they are treated as alike applicable to all periods of time. F. H. B.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

R. P. WARREN et al., Appts.,

v.

S. C. TANNER et al.

(.....Ky.....)

1. A court is not deprived of jurisdiction to grant an injunction against numerous persons, many of whom live within the county, against the violation of an exclusive ferry franchise for a ferry across a river which was a boundary of the county, merely because the franchise was granted by the county court of the adjoining county.
2. A ferry established by numerous persons, who buy ferry boats and hire a person to run the ferry within limits for which an exclusive franchise has been granted to another party, violates his exclusive privilege, although their ferry is established exclusively for themselves and families.

(Du Relle, J., dissents.)

(March 20, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for McLean County in favor of plaintiffs in a proceeding to enjoin the alleged illegal operation of a ferry. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Yeaman & Lockett, with Messrs. Sweeney, Ellis, & Sweeney, for appellants:

The ferry franchise does not prohibit persons singly or collectively from providing a boat and crossing the river, but only makes it unlawful for any person to transport persons or things for reward across the stream within 1 mile of their ferry.

Ky. Stat. § 1810; Weid v. Chapman, 2 Iowa, 524; Hargrave's Law Tracts, chap. 2, p. 6; Alexandria, W. & K. Ferry Co. v.

NOTE.—As to the right to operate a ferry without a franchise, see note to Virginia Canon Toll Road Co. v. People ex rel. Vivian (Colo.) 37 L. R. A. on page 712.
49 L. R. A.

Wisch, 73 Mo. 655, 39 Am. Rep. 535; Hunter v. Moore, 44 Ark. 184, 51 Am. Rep. 589.

The license to run the ferry is a franchise, and nothing can be implied therefrom against the rights of the citizen. The holder has no privilege that is not expressed in the statute authorizing the license.

Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. ed. 773; 3 Kent, Com. 11th ed. 592; Richmond & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Rogers, 1 Duv. 135.

In granting the license the holder did not become entitled to any particular amount of patronage, for no one was obliged to use the ferry and pay tolls. It is a franchise similar to a tavern license.

Richmond & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Rogers, 1 Duv. 135.

A riparian proprietor may use the waters of a navigable stream for all domestic purposes, and such use is a vested right of which he cannot be deprived except by voluntary grant or adverse possession.

Williamsburg Boom Co. v. Smith, 84 Ky. 372, 1 S. W. 765; Berry v. Snyder, 3 Bush, 277, 96 Am. Dec. 219; Miller v. Hepburn, 8 Bush, 328; Washburn, Easem. 4th ed. 316, 317; Pom. Riparian Rights, § 152; Benton v. Johncox, 17 Wash. 277, 39 L. R. A. 107, 49 Pac. 495; Luz v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674; Wiggins v. Muscupiabe Land & Water Co. 113 Cal. 182, 32 L. R. A. 667, 45 Pac. 160.

Messrs. Little & Little and W. A. Taylor, with Mr. Lawrence F. Tanner, for appellees:

The ferry privilege granted appellees, by the Webster county court, gives them the exclusive privilege of transporting passengers and property across Green river, within less than a mile, in a straight line of their ferry.

Ky. Stat. §§ 1800, 1802, 1820; 3 Kent, Com. 2d ed. 590; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; Chenango Bridge Co. v. Paige, 83 N. Y. 178, 38 Am. Rep. 410; Newport v. Taylor, 16 B. Mon. 779; Owens v. Roberts, 6 Bush, 608; Hazelip v. Lindsey, 93 Ky. 14, 18 S. W. 832; Lindsey v. Stevens, 5 Dana, 104; Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 550, 17 S. W. 884; Capital City Ferry Co. v. Cole & O. Transp. Co. 51 Mo. App. 228; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 549, 9 L. ed. 773; Nixon v. Reid, 8 S. D. 507, 32 L. R. A. 320, 67 N. W. 57.

Appellants had no right to band themselves together and employ one of their number, or anyone, at a fixed wage, to operate a ferry, at which they, their families, servants, and property can be crossed, without further charge, within about 200 yards of appellees' ferry.

Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black, 632, 17 L. ed. 191; Capital City Ferry Co. v. Cole & O. Transp. Co. 51 Mo. App. 228; Dinner v. Humberstone, 26 Can. S. C. 252; Norris v. Farmers' & Teamsters' Co. 6 Cal. 590, 65 Am. Dec. 535.

A ferry franchise is property, and its infringement, even by a free ferry, will be enjoined.

3 Kent, Com. 12th ed. 450; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 945, 946; Patterson v. Wollmann, 5 N. D. 608, 33 L. R. A. 536, 67 N. W. 1040; Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 550, 17 S. W. 884.

The McLean circuit court had jurisdiction of this action, and of appellants.

Galloway v. Hamilton, 1 Dana, 576; Ford v. Jefferson County, 4 Iowa, 566; Campbell v. Ayres, 6 Iowa, 339; Marvin v. Hampton, 18 Fla. 131; Lyon v. Tallmadge, 14 Johns. 511; Jourdon v. Massengill, 86 Tenn. 81, 5 S. W. 719; Herman, Estoppel, 111, 163.

On petition for rehearing.

The grant of a ferry by the sovereign is of very ancient origin, and it has always been the rule that the privilege was exclusive.

3 Bl. Com. 219; 3 Kent, Com. 590; Smith v. Barkins, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 613, 44 Am. Dec. 83; Norris v. Farmers' & Teamsters' Co. 6 Cal. 590, 65 Am. Dec. 537.

Under our statutes all regularly established ferries are exclusive.

Ky. Stat. § 1820; Nixon v. Reid, 8 S. D. 507, 32 L. R. A. 320, 67 N. W. 57; Mills v. St. Clair County, 7 Ill. 197, 8 How. 569, 12 L. ed. 1201; Com. v. Bacon, 13 Bush, 210, 26 Am. Rep. 189; California State Teleg. Co. v. Alta Teleg. Co. 22 Cal. 398; Hanson v. Webb, 3 Cal. 237; Norris v. Farmers' & Teamsters' Co. 6 Cal. 594, 65 Am. Dec. 535; Chard v. Stone, 7 Cal. 117; Murray v. Menefee, 20 Ark. 561; Power v. Athens, 99 N. Y. 592, 2 N. E. 609; Walker v. Armstrong, 2 Kan. 198; Phillips v. Bloomington, 1 G. Greene, 498.

The vitality of such a franchise lies in its exclusiveness.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & B. Bridge Co. 13 How. 518, 14 L. ed. 249; Fanning v. Gregoire, 16 How. 524, 14 L. ed. 1043; Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black, 603, 17 L. ed. 191.

If the Kentucky statutes did not in express terms make a ferry license exclusive, 49 L. R. A.

still it would be regarded as exclusive by the courts as against those operating a ferry without license.

Douglass's Appeal, 118 Pa. 65, 12 Atl. 834; Tugicell v. Eagle Pass Ferry Co. 74 Tex. 480, 9 S. W. 120, 13 S. W. 654; Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 550, 17 S. W. 884; Patterson v. Wollmann, 5 N. D. 608, 33 L. R. A. 538, 67 N. W. 1040.

The right to operate a ferry is not common to all citizens. This right emanates from the sovereign power. In the absence of a prescriptive right no one can lawfully maintain a ferry without authority from the state.

Douglass's Appeal, 118 Pa. 65, 12 Atl. 834; Mills v. St. Clair County, 8 How. 581, 12 L. ed. 1206; McRoberts v. Washburne, 10 Minn. 23, Gil. 8; Stark v. Miller, 3 Mo. 470; Power v. Athens, 99 N. Y. 592, 2 N. E. 609; Chenango Bridge Co. v. Paige, 83 N. Y. 178, 38 Am. Rep. 407; Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black, 603, 17 L. ed. 191.

No rights are taken from the public when a ferry franchise is granted.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Gordon v. Winchester Bldg. & Accumulating Fund Asso. 12 Bush, 114, 23 Am. Rep. 713; Com. v. Bacon, 13 Bush, 212, 26 Am. Rep. 189; Memphis v. Memphis Water Co. 5 Heisk. 525; Crescent City Gaslight Co. v. New Orleans Gaslight Co. 27 La. Ann. 138; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674, 29 L. ed. 525, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

A ferry franchise, being a portion of the prerogative of the sovereign, reposed in the subject, is not at all dependent on the ownership of the land at the river's edge; riparian rights and ownerships are not elements of the franchise, nor are they sufficient, or any foundation for, the ferry rights.

Columbia Delaware Bridge Co. v. Geisse, 38 N. J. L. 39; Sullivan v. Lafayette County Supers. 58 Miss. 790; Trustees of Schools v. Tatman, 13 Ill. 27; Walker v. Armstrong, 2 Kan. 198.

White, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by appellees, seeking an injunction preventing appellants from operating a ferry across Green river at Eastwood Landing, near Sebree. The lower court granted an injunction, and to reverse that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The facts, as admitted or clearly proved, seem to be that appellees are the owners of the land on either side of Green river at Eastwood Landing, and own and operate a ferry at that place under a license duly granted by the county court of Webster county. Before the granting of the present license to appellees, and after the expiration of a former license to appellees, two gentlemen by the name of Sellers established a ferry across Green river on their own land, and about 200 yards from Eastwood Landing. The Sellers gave notice, and were granted a license by the county court of Webster county to operate a ferry at Eastwood. This license to the Sellerses was declared void by an action in the circuit court. After the judgment of the circuit court enjoining the Sellerses from operating their ferry under the license, because the license was void, these appellants (about sixty-seven in number) bought the boats from the Sellerses, and the use of a half acre, and a right of way over the lands on either side of the river from the public road; and these appellants then hired a person, at the price of $150 per year, to run the ferry at Sellers Landing. It is shown by the proof that only the appellants and their families and property are ferried over this ferry, and that the only compensation paid is the $150 per year to the person employed. It is shown that the public is not permitted to use appellants' ferry at all,—neither for compensation nor free. Appellees run their ferry regularly under the license granted to them.

The questions presented are: (1) Had the McLean circuit court jurisdiction to grant the injunction to protect the ferry franchise granted by the Webster county court? (2) Is the judgment granting the injunction, on the merits of the case, the law?

We are of opinion that the circuit court of McLean county had jurisdiction of the case. Appellants, or at least many of them, reside in McLean county, and the ferry runs across Green river, at that point the boundary between Webster and McLean counties. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter as well as of the parties. The fact that the ferry franchise was granted by the Webster county court would not give the circuit court of that county exclusive jurisdiction. Nor would the jurisdiction of the McLean circuit court be precluded by reason of an injunction issued by the Webster circuit court against the Sellerses. As it here appears, the injunction against the Sellerses was against operating a ferry for toll, and it did not prohibit them from crossing the river in their own boats.

The second question presents more difficulty. Appellants jointly purchased from the Sellerses the land and right of way, taking a deed therefor. This deed is dated June 21, 1897, and the granting clause reads: "That the grantors, in consideration of four hundred dollars in hand paid, the receipt whereof is here acknowledged, do grant, sell, and convey to the grantees the right of way over their land in Webster and McLean counties, Ky., from a point on the Sebree and Beach Grove road, where a passway begins on the Webster county side, and leads to the ferry recently established across Green river by the grantors, and from the opposite bank of the river over the lands of grantors along the passway laid out to the said Sebree and Beach Grove road on the McLean county side, to be 27 feet wide on the Webster side and 27 feet wide on the McLean side, and also the use of one-half acre of land on each side of the river where said ferry is established, to be laid off in convenient shape for the management of said ferry, and the ferryboat and appurtenances now in use at said ferry, to have and to hold unto the grantees, their heirs or assigns, forever, except that the grantors retain the same interest in said property which is hereby granted to the grantees, respectively; the property hereby conveyed to be used as a passway and ferry for the parties herein named, but for no other purpose, and the grantors give no license to any of the parties named to use said ferry for the crossing of any other person for reward, direct or indirect." It will thus be observed that the use was limited to appellants, and was not assignable to others. The grant of a ferry franchise by the sovereign is of very ancient origin, and it has always been the rule that the privilege was exclusive. The reason of this exclusive grant was to insure to the traveling public that at all times ample and safe accommodation was given for crossing the stream. The owner of the ferry must execute a bond for the faithful performance of his undertaking, and his charges are fixed by the court or authority granting the license or franchise. This franchise is properly in the owner, and in his undisturbed ownership, as well as exercise thereof, the public has an interest; for it is for the public good that it is granted. The law gives a preference in the grant first to the riparian owner, and, if another than the owner desires to acquire the franchise, he must obtain the right from the riparian owner. So careful has the law been to protect the rights of the ferry, that it has provided a penalty against its violation by other persons carrying persons over the stream for reward. This penalty is both by prosecution, and—additional—by civil action. We recognize that it is held universally that any person may cross any stream by any means he can,—by fording, boat, or otherwise. Indeed, the private citizen can at any place along the river keep his private boat, and cross and recross at will. On all navigable streams he may use and enjoy the privilege of the stream in any way he desires, except he cannot in any way exercise the right to ferry persons across the river for hire. This rule applies to all persons. A person, of course, can in his own boat ferry his family, servants, and goods, in the exercise of this right. Indeed, it has been held that he might occasionally lend his boat to another, or ferry with himself a friend, in both cases without compensation. But, in our opinion, the case here presented is entirely different from any of the rights suggested as belonging to the citizen. In the case at bar some sixty odd persons combine and establish for themselves a ferry, hire a common ferryman, and, presumably, pay equally for the whole expense. In our opinion, this is but a device resorted to, to avoid the payment of ferriage at appellees' ferry; and this is not one of the rights of the citizen, reserved for himself and family, to cross and recross, or to the free navigation of the river. We are of opinion that this common ferry established, though used by appellants exclusively for themselves and families, is a violation of the exclusive grant of the privilege granted to appellees, and is such a violation as will be enjoined. The deed to appellants shows that the purchase was made for the express and only purpose of establishing a ferry. It was a combination established to evade, and to enable them to evade, the payment of ferrage to appellees. If these sixty-seven may combine, then any number may do so, and thus absolutely destroy the ferry, and leave the traveler to get across the stream as best he can. It does not follow, as learned counsel argue, that, because appellants may separately do a thing, they jointly may do the same. Each of the appellants may, separately and for himself, fix any price he pleases upon his farm products, and refuse to sell for less; but if all jointly were to agree to raise the price of corn, and refuse to sell for less than the agreed price, it would be an unlawful combination. Thus, in the case at bar, each citizen has a right to own his boat and cross at pleasure; but a joint and combined ownership of a common boat used for ferrying across the river within the prohibited distance is unlawful, and a violation of appellees' rights.

Judgment affirmed.

Du Relle, J., dissents.

Rehearing denied.

C. G. CAYE, Appt.,

v.

Philip FABEL, Assignee, etc., of John S. Pool.

(.....Ky.....)

1. A fund arising from the collection by an assignee for creditors of money on a contract, in the performance of which property subject to a carrier's lien has been used, is chargeable with such lien.
2. The lien of a common carrier for his charges upon property carried is not defeated by an assignment made for the benefit of creditors by the owner of the property shipped.
3. A delivery by a common carrier to an assignee for creditors, of property subject to the carrier's lien, is for the benefit of all creditors, including the carrier, according to their respective interests, and does not defeat the carrier's right to be paid out of the proceeds of the property.

(March 17, 1900.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce a carrier's lien upon assets of the shipper in the hands of his assignee for creditors. Reversed.

NOTE.—The above decision seems to be one of first impression as to the right of a common carrier to a lien on freight after delivery to an assignee for creditors.

40 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Newton G. Rogers for appellant.

Mr. R. C. Kinkead for appellee.

Paynter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On demurrer, the averments of the petition are taken as true, which are to the effect that the appellant, Caye, was carrying on business in Louisville, Kentucky, under the name and style of "Van Dyke Transfer Company;" that his business was to transport freight from depots to places, and deliver packages through the city at various points, and for that purpose he had a large number of horses and mules, transfer wagons, drivers, etc.; that he is a common carrier. It is further averred that it was his practice in his business to advance freight for various people upon goods consigned to them, and deliver them, and collect the money so advanced, as well as money for transporting the same; that he advances such transfer charges to the railroads which may have transported the freight, etc. He avers that he had been doing business for John S. Pool as such common carrier; that it had been his practice to advance freight for him, and, upon the full delivery of freight, Pool would pay for the deliveries, and also the amounts advanced by him. It is averred that prior to June 24, 1896, Pool had a contract with the estate of De Haven for the building and transporting of a granite monument of large dimensions; that it had been transported from Massachusetts by rail to Louisville; that the plaintiff had been hauling parts of the monument from the depot to Cave Hill Cemetery for the purpose of its erection; that on June 24, 1896, he had advanced to Pool by paying freight against the monument $209.04, and his bill for hauling was $115, making a total of $324.04; that on June 24, 1896, when Pool made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, he had in his possession a considerable portion of the monument, of the value of $800 or $900; that he had no notice that the assignment was made until the whole of the monument was delivered.

The court sustained a demurrer to the petition. We are of the opinion that it states a cause of action. The appellant was a common carrier. He was engaged in the business of transporting chattels for all persons who chose to employ and remunerate him therefor. Owners of stages, stage wagons, railroad cars, teamsters, cartmen, draymen, and porters are common carriers. Black, Law Dict.: 2 Kent, Com. 597. 1 Bouvier, Law Dict. p. 299, says that "stagecoach proprietors, railway companies, truckmen, wagoners and teamsters, carmen and porters," etc., are common carriers; and cites Story on Bailments and Kent's Commentaries to sustain the designation which he makes as to who are common carriers. The appellant had in his possession part of the monument, of the value of $800 or $900, at the time the assignment was made, and held a lien upon it for the amount of his charges, and the assignment made by Pool' for the benefit of creditors could not deprive him of that lien. The trust estate received the full benefit of plaintiff's claim for hauling and the freight advanced, and also had the benefit of that part of the monument which was delivered at the time of the assignment. Plaintiff's lien followed the fund arising from the collection of the money on the monument contract in the hands of the assignee, and he is entitled to be paid out of it the amount ascertained to be due him.

A carrier has a lien upon goods and right of detention until the freight is paid. If he parts with the possession out of the hands of himself and his agent, he loses his lien upon the goods, and cannot afterwards reclaim them. Boggs v. Martin, 13 B. Mon. 243. When these goods were assigned, they were, not only for the general creditors of Pool, but for those who held liens upon the property assigned, so the assignee received the estate to be distributed according to the rights of the parties. He was acting in the trust capacity, and one of the beneficiaries of the trust was the appellant; so the delivery of the possession of the property to the assignee was for the benefit of all of Pool's creditors, including appellant, according to their respective interests.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

City of NEWPORT, Appt.,
v.
MASONIC TEMPLE ASSOCIATION.

(.....Ky.....)

A charity which is confined exclusively to the members of the Masonic order and their families, or to the widows and children of deceased members, or those who are directly or indirectly connected with the association, is not a "purely public charity," within the provisions of Const. § 170, relating to the exemption of institutions of purely public charity from taxation.

(Paynter, J., dissents.)

(April 20, 1900.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Campbell County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover taxes alleged to be due and unpaid. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Root & Root, for appellant:

An institution of purely public charity is one that extends charity indefinitely to all persons alike without regard to membership or other considerations. The claim of the appellee to be an institution of purely public charity cannot, therefore, be maintained upon its own showing.

Masonic and similar associations are not purely public charities.

Bangor v. Rising Virtue Lodge No. 10, F. & A. M. 73 Me. 428, 40 Am. Rep. 369; Massemburg v. Grand Lodge, F. & A. M. 81 Ga. 212, 7 S. E. 636; Morning Star Lodge No. 26, I. O. O. F. v. Hayslip, 23 Ohio St. 144; Delaware County Inst. of Science v. Delaware County, 94 Pa. 163; Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306; Babb v. Reed, 5 Rawle, 151, 28 Am. Dec. 660.

In case an institution of purely public charity could have one piece of real estate and rent it out and be exempted from taxation under the Constitution, it may have an hundred pieces or any other amount of property and claim the same exemption, thus shifting the burden of taxation from itself to the shoulders of others, greatly increasing their burdens and violating the principles of equality and uniformity which lie at the foundation of every just system of taxation.

Louisville v. Louisville Bd. of Trade, 90 Ky. 409, 9 L. R. A. 629, 14 S. W. 408; 1 Desty, Taxn. 119.

Messrs. C. J. Helm and W. W. Helm, for appellee:

An institution which expends all its revenue and income in paying its debt created in acquiring the property from which its revenue is derived, and then in relieving distressed or indigent persons of a certain class, and for no other purpose, is an institution of purely public charity.

Louisville v. Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, 100 Ky. 506, 36 S. W. 995; Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Louisville, 100 Ky. 470, 40 L. R. A. 119, 36 S. W. 921; Louisville v. Nazareth Literary & Benev. Inst. 100 Ky. 518, 36 S. W. 994.

The payment of a debt on such a building would not affect such an exemption.

Henderson v. Strangers' Rest Lodge No. 13, I. O. O. F. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1041, 17 S. W. 215.

Hobson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question involved in this action is whether the appellee's property is exempt from taxation. This is the second appeal of the case. The opinion on the former appeal is reported in 20 Ky. L. Rep. 266, 45 S. W. 881. By the charter of the association enacted in the year 1886, it was provided that its property and income should be exempt from all taxation so long as it was entirely devoted to Masonic and charitable purposes. On the former appeal it was held that this provision of the charter was repealed by the present Constitution of the state, which took effect September 28, 1891. But whether the property of the association was subject to taxation or exempt under the provisions of the Constitution was not determined, as the case was not so prepared as to present this question. Section 170 of the Constitution is as follows: "There shall be exempt from taxation public property used for public purposes; places actually used for religious worship, with the grounds attached thereto and used and appurtenant to the house of worship, not exceeding one-half acre in cities or towns, and not exceeding two acres in the country; places of burial not held for private or corporate profit, institutions of purely public charity, and institutions of education not used or employed for gain by any person or corporation, and the income of which is devoted solely to the cause of education; public libraries, their endowments and the income of such property as is used exclusively for their maintenance; all parsonages or residences owned by any religious society, and occupied as a home, and for no other purpose, by the minister of any religion, with not exceeding one-half acre of ground in towns and cities and two acres of ground in the country appurtenant thereto; household goods and other personal property of a person with a family, not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars in value; crops grown in the year in which the assessment is made, and in the hands of the producer; and all laws exempting or commuting property from taxation other than the property above mentioned shall be void. The general assembly may authorize any incorporated city or town to exempt manufacturing establishments from municipal taxation, for a period not exceeding five years, as an inducement to their location."

NOTE.—For a case parallel to the above, see Philadelphia v. Masonic Home (Pa.) 23 L. R. A. 545.

On the return of the case to the court below, appellee filed an amended answer, setting up the defense that it is an institution of purely public charity. To this answer appellant filed a reply, to which the court below sustained a demurrer, and dismissed the action.

It appears from the record that appellee is the owner of a four-story brick building and the ground on which it stands; that the lower floor is rented by the United States postmaster, and used as a postoffice at an annual rent of about $1,000; that the second floor is rented out for offices and living rooms at an annual rent of about $700; and that the third and fourth floors are used by the association for the purposes of its organization. It also appears that only the first and second stories which were rented out were assessed for taxation. It is admitted in the reply that all of appellee's income and revenue is devoted—First, to the payment of the balance of debt for erecting the building sought to be taxed; second, to relieve distressed and indigent members of the Masonic order and their families. But it is alleged that the association, so far as it dispenses charity at all, confines itself exclusively to its members and their families, or, if the members are dead, to their widows and children, or to those who are directly or indirectly connected with the association; that it does not extend charity to all alike, or to those not in any way connected with the association; and that its charity is governed by the following by-law: "The master and wardens of this lodge shall constitute a charitable committee, whose duty it shall be, on application, carefully to inquire into the situation and circumstances of indigent brethren, their widows and orphans, and afford them the necessary relief; for which purpose they shall have power to draw on the treasurer in the recess of the lodge for any sum, not to exceed $10 for any one person, and they shall at the next meeting after such relief has been granted report the same to the lodge, which shall be entered on the minutes."

The question in the case is therefore whether, under these facts, appellee is an institution of purely public charity, and as such exempt from taxation, under the section of the Constitution above quoted. By the statutes in force previous to the adoption of our present Constitution all property "devoted to charitable purposes" was exempt from taxation. Gen. Stat. p. 1036. If this rule was still in force, appellee's property would, under some authorities, be exempt, as it is, in one view, devoted to charitable purposes. But the Constitution was intended to modify the exemptions theretofore allowed, and now only institutions of purely public charity are exempt. While this is a new provision in this state, it has long been in force in a number of other states. The purpose of its adoption in this state was to exclude from exemption all charities not purely public. The words "purely public" need no definition. They do not include any restricted or private charities. These may be very valuable, and the spirit prompting them is much to be commended; but the exemption of property from taxation had assumed such proportions at the time of the adoption of our present Constitution that it was seen fit not to exempt property from taxation unless devoted to a purely public charity. A Masonic lodge, which provides for its members and their families, or the widows and orphans of those who are dead, is a commendable private charity; but it is in no sense purely public. This question has often been presented to the courts, and, so far as we have seen, under provisions like ours the decisions are uniform. The Constitution of Ohio is the same as ours. In Morning Star Lodge No. 26, I. O. O. F. v. Hayslip, 23 Ohio St. 144, the facts were substantially the same as here. The court said: "A charitable or benevolent association, which extends relief only to its own sick and needy members, and to the widows and orphans of its deceased members, is not 'an institution of purely public charity,' and its moneys held and invested for the aforesaid purposes are not exempt from taxation." The Constitution of Pennsylvania is also the same as ours. In Philadelphia v. Masonic Home, 160 Pa. 572, 23 L. R. A. 545, 28 Atl. 954, the question was whether the property of the Masonic Home, open only to those who were Masons, was exempt. The court said: "When the eligibility of those admitted is thus determined, it seems to us the institution is withdrawn from public, and put in the class of private, charities. A charity may restrict its admissions to a class of humanity, and still be public. It may be for the blind; the mute; those suffering under special diseases; for the aged; for infants; for women; for men; for different callings or trades by which humanity earns its bread; and, as long as the classification is determined by some distinction which involuntarily affects or may affect any of the whole people, although only a small number may be directly benefited, it is public. But when the right to admission depends on the fact of voluntary association with some particular society, then a distinction is made which concerns not the public at large. The public is interested in the relief of its members, because they are men, women, and children, not because they are Masons. A home without charge, exclusively for Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Catholics, or Methodists, would not be a public charity. But then, to exclude every other idea of public as distinguished from private, the word 'purely' is prefixed by the Constitution. This is to intensify the word 'public,' not 'charity.' It must be purely public; that is, there must be no admixture of any qualification for admission, heterogeneous, and not solely relating to the public. . . . If this [charity] be purely public, then what is not purely public? This is not a question to be decided on sentiment; if it were, our inclinations would prompt to a different conclusion. But there is not much sentiment in the Constitution. It is a barrier erected by the whole people against encroachments on the rights of the people as a whole." In the previous case of Delaware County Inst. of Science v. Delaware County, 94 Pa. 163, an institute of science for "the promotion and diffusion of general and scientific knowledge among the community at large, and the establishment and maintenance of a library, and museum," the benefits of which were restricted to members except upon conditions prescribed by a board of managers, was held not exempt from taxation. The court said: "The plaintiff in error, so far from being a purely public charity, is not a public charity at all. It is a private corporation, for the benefit of its members, as much so as any other beneficial or literary society." In Bangor v. Rising Virtue Lodge No. 10, F. & A. M. 73 Me. 428, 40 Am. Rep. 369, a Masonic lodge was held subject to taxation under a statute much broader in its exemption than our Constitution. Among other things, the court said: "The just and honest rule in assessments for governmental purposes is equality of taxation. Whatever sacrifices it requires from the people should be made to bear as nearly as possible with the same pressure upon all. In this way only will there be the least sacrifice by all. If one bears less than his share of the public burden, some other must bear more. If one block of stores remains untaxed, the remaining stores and other taxable property must be unduly and disproportionately taxed. The more numerous the exemptions the more unequal and burdensome the taxation." Then, after showing that an exemption must be construed with the utmost strictness, and that the party claiming it must bring his case unmistakably within the spirit and intent of the exception, the court said: "It is apparent that the defendant corporation cannot be regarded as a purely public charitable institution, because it wants the essential elements of a public charity. It has other objects than charity. Whatever its ultimate purposes, they are other than charitable. Its funds are derived, not from devises and gifts as in case of a public charity, but from fees and the assessment of its members. The funds so obtained are to be distributed among the poor and needy members from whom they were collected, and among their wives and children. It is an association for the mutual benefit of its members, and not a charitable institution, within the meaning of the statute." In Babb v. Reed, 5 Rawle, 151, 28 Am. Dec. 650, an Odd Fellows lodge formed for the purpose of employing certain funds for the mutual benefit of its members and their families was held not to be an association for charitable uses. See also State ex rel. Richey v. McGrath, 95 Mo. 193, 8 S. W. 425; State v. Central St. Louis Masonic Hall Asso. 14 Mo. App. 596. In Young Men's Protestant Temperance & Benev. Soc. v. Fall River, 160 Mass. 409, 36 N. E. 57, it was held that a temperance society, which used its funds exclusively for the benefit of its members, was not exempt from taxation as a charitable institution. The same rule was followed as to a Young Men's Christian Association having a similar rule in New Jersey, in Young Men's Christian Asso. v. Paterson, 61 N. J. L. 420, 39 Atl. 655. and in Maine, in Auburn v. Young Men's Christian Asso. 86 Me. 244, 29 Atl. 992; no question of religious uses being made in either of these cases. In South Carolina, in State ex rel. Hibernian Soc. v. Addison, and State ex rel. Grand Lodge of Ancient Free Masons v. Addison, 2 S. C. N. S. 499, the same rule was followed, and it was held that neither of the appellants was entitled to the exemption. Summing up the authorities, the learned author of 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 343, says: "While there are decisions to the contrary, the preponderance of authority is in favor of the doctrine that an exemption of benevolent and charitable institutions does not extend to a society which confines its benefits to members or their families." The contrary decisions to which he refers are all under provisions exempting simply charitable institutions. In none of them was the exemption confined to institutions of purely public charity, and in several of the cases this distinction is pointed out. The case of Henderson v. Strangers' Rest Lodge No. 13, I. O. O. F. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1041, 17 S. W. 215, was decided under the statute then in force, which was materially different from our present constitutional provision. The cases of Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Louisville, 100 Ky. 470, 40 L. R. A. 119, 36 S. W. 921; Louisville v. Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, 100 Ky. 506, 36 S. W.

995, and Louisville v. Nazareth Literary & Benev. Inst. 100 Ky. 518, 36 S. W. 994, were based on grounds not appearing in this case, all these institutions being educational, and not charities, restricted to the members of any church or society; and, in view of the plain intent of the Constitution, we are not at liberty to extend the rule announced in those cases to an institution like appellee. There are many commendable organizations owning a large amount of property, and doing often much work of benevolence, such as the Knights of Pythias, the Elks, the Odd Fellows, the Red Men, Sons of Temperance, and the like; but so long as they confine their beneficence to their own members, or their widows and orphans, or are not designed for charitable purposes purely public, they cannot be regarded as institutions of "purely public charity," within the meaning of our Constitution. To so hold would be to give substantially no effect to the words "purely public" in that instrument, and leave few, if any, private charities which would not be exempt from taxation. The section is framed so minutely that it is impossible to escape the conclusion that it was designed to narrow exemptions from taxation, and to limit them to the objects expressly named. It must be fairly construed, with a view to promote its purposes, and the exemptions allowed by it cannot be extended by implication.

The judgment of the court below is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the reply, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Paynter, J., dissenting:

I dissent from the opinion of the court in this case, because it disregards the doctrine enacted in the cases of Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Louisville, 100 Ky. 470, 40 L. R. A. 119, 36 S. W. 921; Louisville v. Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, 100 Ky. 506, 36 S. W. 995; Louisville v. Nazareth Literary & Benev. Inst. 100 Ky. 518, 36 S. W. 994.

T. M. HIGHTOWER, Appt.,

v.

BAILEY & KOERNER.

(.....Ky.....)

1. The lien given to a subcontractor, materialman, or laborer by act March, 1896 (Ky. Stat. § 2463), though given irrespective of any notice of the claim, or of the state of the account between the owners and the contractors, is not unconstitutional, as to future contracts, as a taking of one

NOTE.—For constitutionality of statute creating mechanic's lien in favor of subcontractors and materialmen, see also Merrigan v. English (Mont.) 5 L. R. A. 837; and Smith v. Neubauer (Ind.) 33 L. R. A. 685.

For rights of subcontractors, see also Monroe v. Hannan (D. C.) 3 L. R. A. 549; Schroeder v. Galland (Pa.) 7 L. R. A. 711, and note; and Glass v. Freiburg (Minn.) 16 L. R. A. 335, and note.
49 L. R. A.

man's property to pay the debt of another without giving any day in court, or as an unwarrantable interference with the right to make contracts.

2. A materialman who furnishes materials to another materialman is not entitled to any lien therefor, under Stat. § 2463, giving a lien for labor performed or materials furnished under contract with the "owner, contractor, subcontractor, architect, or authorized agent."

(March 29, 1900.)

A PPEAL by claimant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Henderson County denying his lien for materials which went into a building erected for A. Waller & Co. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. H. Cunningham, for appellant:

The mechanics' lien law (Ky. Stat. § 2463), as amended by the act of March 21, 1896, is constitutional.

The validity of an act is presumed until its nullity is shown beyond reasonable doubt.

Collins v. Henderson, 11 Bush, 74; Cooley, Const. Lim. 216, 433, 434; Wellington, Petitioner, 16 Pick. 87, 26 Am. Dec. 631; Alexander v. People, 7 Colo. 155, 2 Pac. 894; Crowley v. State, 11 Or. 512, 6 Pac. 70; Kelly v. Meeks, 87 Mo. 396; Robinson v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 307, 1 N. E. 698; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Louisville v. Hyatt, 2 B. Mon. 178; Lexington v. McQuillan, 9 Dana, 513, 35 Am. Dec. 159; Waller v. Martin, 17 B. Mon. 191; Cumberland & O. R. Co. v. Barren County Ct. 10 Bush, 613.

The owner by his contract authorizes the contractor to procure all such material, and to have done such work, as is necessary; and settlement with the contractor is no defense to a claim of lien by the subcontractor and materialman.

Smith v. Neubaur, 144 Ind. 95, 33 L. R. A. 685, 42 N. E. 40; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, 2d ed. § 33; Colter v. Freese, 45 Ind. 96; Barker v. Buell, 35 Ind. 302; White v. Miller, 18 Pa. 52; Neeley v. Searight, 113 Ind. 316, 15 N. E. 598; Hamilton v. Naylor, 72 Ind. 175; Adams v. Buhler, 116 Ind. 100, 18 N. E. 269; Ferguson v. Despo, 8 Ind. App. 523, 34 N. E. 575; Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 170, 6 L. R. A. 588, 22 Pac. 509; Parker v. Bell, 7 Gray, 429; Weeks v. Walcott, 15 Gray, 54; Clark v. Kingsley, 8 Allen, 543; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 466, 16 S. W. 1045; Reeves v. Henderson, 90 Tenn. 521, 18 S. W. 242; Bardwell v. Mann, 46 Minn. 285, 48 N. W. 1120; Mallory v. La-Crosse Abattoir Co. 80 Wis. 170, 49 N. W. 1071; Albright v. Smith, 2 S. D. 577, 51 N. W. 590; French v. Bauer, 134 N. Y. 548, 20 L. R. A. 560, 32 N. E. 77; Jones v. Great Southern Fireproof Hotel Co. 58 U. S. App. 397, 86 Fed. Rep. 370, 30 C. C. A. 108.

On petition for rehearing.

The lien is given one who furnishes material by contract with, or by the written consent of, the owner, contractor, subcontractor, architect, or authorized agent. The language used was simply to guard against a claim of lien for work or material not authorized by the owner. Wherever the improvement is made with the owner's consent in writing, the lien follows through the other parties mentioned as his agents.

The legislature considered "subcontractors" as embracing all persons who contracted, whether for work or material, except those who have contracts directly with the owner.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 47.

The statute is plainly remedial, and should therefore be liberally construed.

Ky. Stat. § 460; Sutton v. Sutton, 87 Ky. 216, 8 S. W. 337.

Messrs. Yeaman & Yeaman, for appellees:

Statutes similar to the act of March, 1896, have been held unconstitutional.

John Spry Lumber Co. v. Sault Sav. Bank Loan & T. Co. 77 Mich. 199, 6 L. R. A. 204, 43 N. W. 778; Schroeder v. Galland, 134 Pa. 277, 7 L. R. A. 711, 19 Atl. 632; Benedict v. Hood, 134 Pa. 289, 19 Atl. 635; Nice v. Walker, 153 Pa. 123, 25 Atl. 1065; Waters v. Wolf, 162 Pa. 153, 29 Atl. 646; Meyer v. Berlandi, 39 Minn. 438, 1 L. R. A. 777, 40 N. W. 513; Jones v. Great Southern Fireproof Hotel Co. 79 Fed. Rep. 477; Randolph v. Builders' & Painters' Supply Co. 17 So. 721; Selma Sash, Door, & Blind Factory v. Stoddard, 116 Ala. 251, 22 So. 555.

And a stronger case is Jones v. Great Southern Fireproof Hotel Co., tried in the circuit court of the United States at Cincinnati, and reported in 79 Fed. Rep. 477, Reversed in 58 U. S. App. 397, 86 Fed. Rep. 370, 30 C. C. A. 108.

Hazelrigg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A. Waller & Co., desiring to build a grain elevator on their lot in the city of Henderson, Kentucky, contracted with Bailey & Koerner to furnish all the necessary material, and to construct the improvement.

Bailey & Koerner, who were builders and contractors, contracted with H. W. Clark, Jr., a lumber merchant at Henderson, for a large quantity of the lumber necessary for the building. Clark then contracted with Hightower, a lumber dealer at Ragan, Alabama, for a quantity of lumber for the purpose of using it in filling his contract with Bailey & Koerner.

On the completion of the work it appears that Bailey & Koerner have paid Clark in full for the lumber furnished under his contract, including the Hightower lumber, but Clark has failed to pay Hightower. The latter has therefore brought this action in the Henderson circuit court claiming a lien on Waller & Co.'s lot and building for what Clark owes him.

It is the contention of counsel that under our statute Hightower, as a materialman, has this lien without regard to the state of the account between Waller & Co. and Bailey & Koerner or between the latter and Clark. But because there was no averment in Hightower's petition, as there could not truthfully have been, to the effect that Bailey & Koerner or Waller & Co. were indebted to Clark, the chancellor dismissed the petition on demurrer, holding that while the statute as amended by the act of March 21, 1896 (Ky. Stat. § 2463), in terms gave Hightower the lien, the statute as so amended is unconstitutional, and this is the first question considered. The statute is as follows: "A person who performs labor, or furnishes materials in the erection, altering, or repairing a house, building, or other structure, or for any fixture or machinery therein, or for the excavation of cellars, cisterns, vaults, wells, or for the improvement, in any manner, of real estate by contract with, or by the written consent of, the owner, contractor, subcontractor, architect, or authorized agent, shall have a lien thereon, and upon the land upon which said improvements shall have been made, or on any interest such owner has in the same, to secure the amount thereof with costs; and said lien on the land or improvements shall be superior to any mortgage or encumbrance created subsequent to the beginning of the labor or the furnishing of the materials; and said lien, if asserted as hereinafter provided, shall relate back and take effect from the time of the commencement of the labor or the furnishing of the materials: Provided, that such lien shall not take precedence of a mortgage or other contract, lien or bona fide conveyance for value without notice, duly recorded or lodged for record according to law, unless the person claiming such prior lien shall, before the recording of such mortgage or other contract, lien or conveyance, have filed in the clerk's office of the county court of the county wherein he shall have performed labor or furnished material, or shall expect to perform labor or furnish materials as aforesaid, a statement showing that he has performed or furnished, or that he expects to perform or furnish, such labor or materials, and the amount in full thereof, and his lien shall not, as against the holder of said mortgage or other contract, lien or conveyance, exceed the amount of the lien claimed, or expected to be claimed, as set forth in such statement."

"The liens provided for herein shall in no case be for a greater amount in the aggregate than the contract price of the original contractor; and should the aggregate amount of liens exceed the price agreed upon between the original contractor and the owner, then there shall be a pro rata distribution of the original contract price among said lien holders."

This statute is radically different from our former laws on this subject, and has not heretofore been before this court for construction.

The preceding statute, while giving liens to contractors, subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers, practically thereby provided a process of garnishment in the hands of the owner of any money he might owe the contractor. Its purpose was merely to substitute the subcontractor, materialman, and laborer to the rights of the contractor, and was effectual only in the event the owner was indebted to the contractor. It was entirely safe for the owner, without notice of the claims of others, to pay his contractor when he pleased, even in advance.

The present statute was clearly meant to fasten, and does fasten, on the property of the owner a lien for the claim of the subcontractor, materialman, and laborer, although the owner has no notice of such claims, and may owe the contractor nothing.

When applied to the facts of this case, assuming that Hightower is a materialman and Clark a subcontractor within the meaning of the statute, the law gives to Hightower a lien on the lot and improvement of Walling & Co., without regard to the state of account between the owners and the contractors or the contractors and Clark. This is, in effect, argue counsel, the taking of Waller & Co.'s property to pay the debt of another, and gives them no day in court, and is, moreover, an unwarrantable interference with the right of Waller & Co. to make such contract as they pleased with Bailey & Koerner, and discharge their obligations when and as they pleased. This contention is not without authority to support it. The Ohio courts seem to so hold, and perhaps also the courts of Michigan. But the weight of authority seems the other way. In Laird v. Moonan, 32 Minn. 358, 20 N. W. 354, the constitutionality of an act from which our act seemingly is copied is elaborately discussed and the act upheld. In Wisconsin the same conclusion was reached. Mallory v. La Crosse Abattoir Co. 80 Wis. 170, 49 N. W. 1071. So in Massachusetts, in Donahy v. Clapp, 12 Cush. 440; Bowen v. Phinney, 162 Mass. 593, 39 N. E. 283.

In Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 466, 16 S. W. 1045, the court said: "It is true that a lien is provided for persons with whom the owner is supposed to have no direct contractual relations, but the fact alone does not invalidate the act; for the owner must be held to a knowledge of the existing law on the subject, and to the presumption that he employed the original contractor, and gave out his work with reference to that law. The right of lien to subcontractors and materialmen is, by operation of law, incorporated into and made a part of the owner's contract, as much as if expressly included and written therein. He contracts about a subject in which the law declares certain advantages to all persons concerned, whether by direct contract with him or by the employment of his contractor. The law declares that a lien shall exist in favor of the subcontractor and materialman in certain contingencies; hence the owner who makes the contemplated contract cannot justly complain of the legal result, especially when he receives the benefit of the labor and material of those for whom the lien is provided, and who often have no other means of compensation. The enforcement of this law does not necessarily result in loss to the owner, nor take from him something for nothing."

49 L. R. A.

In Colter v. Freese, 45 Ind. 96, the same conclusion was reached after an exhaustive examination. So, also, in Hicks v. Murray, 43 Cal. 515, the court thought the act constitutional. To the same effect are the cases of Atwood v. Williams, 40 Me. 409; Gurney v. Walsham, 16 R. I. 699, 19 Atl. 323; Roanoke Land & Improv. Co. v. Karn, 80 Va. 589; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Howison, 81 Va. 125; Spokane Mfg. & Lumber Co. v. McChesney, 1 Wash. 600, 21 Pac. 198; Paine v. Tillinghast, 52 Conn. 532. So, also, in Maryland in Treusch v. Shryock, 51 Md. 162.

An elaborate and learned discussion of this question is found in Jones v. Great Southern Fireproof Hotel Co. 58 U. S. App. 397, 86 Fed. Rep. 370, 30 C. C. A. 108, considered in the United States circuit court of appeals before Judges Lurton and Taft and District Judge Clark. After reviewing the authorities, the learned judge (Lurton) said: But "the validity of such statutes however, need not be rested upon mere authority. They find sanction in the dictates of natural justice, and most often administer an equity which has recognition under every system of law. That principle is that everyone who, by his labor or materials, has contributed to the preservation or enhancement of the property of another, thereby acquires a right to compensation. . . . The legal effect of the contract [between the owner and contractor] is to give a lien to all who, at the instance of his contractor, shall be employed to furnish labor or materials for the work which he has let out. So far as such a statute is limited to future contracts, it cannot be said to impair the obligation of a contract. If the law be subject to no other objections, it impairs no contract, for all thereafter made are entered into upon the basis of the law. . . . Neither can the owner be said to be thereby deprived of his property without due process of law. He has voluntarily made a contract with the law before him. He has thereby subjected his property to liability for certain debts of the contractor. His own voluntary consent is an element in the transaction. He knows what the law is, and makes a contract under the law. It is idle to say that under such circumstances he is deprived of his property without due process of law."

In Henry & C. Co. v. Evans, 97 Mo. 47, 3 L. R. A. 332, 10 S. W. 868, Judge Barclay, in an able opinion overruling a former and contrary opinion (Henry v. Hinds, 18 Mo. App. 497), sustained the validity of a statute similar to the Kentucky statute. Under the Nebraska statute the owner is liable for labor and material without regard to the state of the account between himself and the contractor. Ballou v. Black, 21 Neb. 131, 31 N. W. 673. So, in Nevada, Hunter v. Truckee Lodge, No. 14 I. O. O. F. 14 Nev. 24.

In Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, 3d ed. § 65, the author thus states the doctrine: "The lien of the mechanic being a remedy by which the property of one man may be taken for the benefit of another, it necessarily follows that it can only arise by the free consent of him to whom it belongs. . . . It is, however, no more necessary that the contract from which the lien is to follow as an incident should be the personal act of the owner than in other matters. Necessity has created, and the law sanctioned, the performance of the affairs of life by means of agents duly authorized by principles. . . . This agency may be implied as well as expressly created. Every man must necessarily be presumed to know the public laws in existence, and to contract with reference to their provisions. Whenever, therefore, from public policy, it is found necessary to extend by statute a lien against the property of an owner, to answer to a subcontractor, or others with whom he is not in privity, and the owner shall thereafter make such contract from which the statute declares the lien to subcontractors and others shall flow, the original contract of the owner will be conclusively presumed to imply the consent that his property may be taken to pay indebtedness to subcontractors thus imposed by the law. On this ground contractors have been allowed to pledge the credit of property to subcontractors and materialmen."

An admirable statement of the grounds on which such statutes rest is found in Albright v. Smith, 2 S. D. 577, 51 N. W. 590.

We regard the authorities cited, and there are many other cases in point, as entirely sufficient to uphold the constitutionality of the statute. Notwithstanding this, we think the chancellor acted properly in dismissing the petition.

Whilst the case seems to have been heard below on the theory that Clark was a subcontractor and Hightower a materialman within the meaning of the statute, the pleadings do not sustain such theory. Hightower is a lumberman and furnished materials, it is true, but he furnished them to Clark, another materialman. The petition avers that he furnished the lumber to Clark at his special instance and request, and for which he agreed to pay the purchase price; and he so furnished it to Clark for the purpose of being used, and it was used, in building for A. Waller & Co. a certain elevator. He further avers that he filed his statement in the clerk's office as required by law, showing that he claimed a lien for the materials furnished Clark as subcontractor. But the averments of the pleading do not show that Clark was a subcontractor, but do show that he was merely a materialman, under contract with the contractors Bailey & Koerner to furnish certain lumber for the elevator. Clark and Hightower were both materialmen, but the statute does not give a lien to a materialman who furnishes materials to another materialman. The materials for which the statute gives a lien are those which are furnished to an owner, a contractor, subcontractor, architect, or authorized agent. We cannot extend the statute beyond its plain language and evident meaning. The hardships to owners are apt to be considerable, even under the terms of the statute. If the right to the lien be extended beyond the terms, then it can be extended indefinitely, and there would be no safety in contracting for the erection of a building. The statute so extended would be impracticable.

In Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, 3d ed. § 51, it is said "that a lumber dealer, employed merely to furnish lumber, whether manufactured or not, is not a contractor for the erection of the building or any division of it. He is a materialman merely, or a workman, if he works up his lumber into frames, doors, etc., and is not employed to erect or put up the building or any of its primary divisions."

In Merriman v. Jones, 43 Minn. 29, 44 N. W. 526, it was held that one who sells materials to the dealer who has contracted to supply the contractor is not a subcontractor within the meaning of the Minnesota statute, and has no lien. This statute, we have seen, apparently furnished the model for the Kentucky statute.

A strict application of this rule should be made in this case because it appears from the plaintiff's pleadings that when he shipped the first lumber to Clark he did not know for what particular purpose or for whose building the lumber was intended, and he could not therefore have sold it on the credit of the building of Waller & Co. to be erected, but trusted alone in Clark's credit. It was simply an ordinary sale of lumber by one lumber merchant to another like merchant, and apparently on the sole credit of the purchasing merchant.

Wherefore the judgment denying the lien is affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

William S. TAYLOR, Appt.,
v.

J. C. W. BECKHAM et al.

John MARSHALL, Appt.,
v.

J. C. W. BECKHAM et al.

J. C. W. BECKHAM et al.
v.

William S. TAYLOR et al., Appts.

(.....Ky.....)

1. The governor has no power to adjourn the legislature, when there has been no disagreement between the two houses.

NOTE.—For right to remove officers summarily, see Trainor v. Wayne County Auditors (Mich.) 15 L. R. A. 95, and note.

For proceeding to declare election void, see Mason v. State ex rel. McCoy (Ohio) 41 L. R. A. 291.

For denial of right to jury in contest for office, see People ex rel. Akin v. Kipley (Ill.) 41 L. R. A. 775.

under Const. § 36, providing for sessions to be held at the seat of government, "except in case of war, insurrection, or pestilence, when it may by proclamation of the governor assemble for the time being elsewhere," which seems to refer, not to an adjournment, but to a provision for a place to assemble and organize, and § 80, authorizing him to adjourn the legislature in case of disagreement between the two houses with respect to the matter.

2. The death of a governor elect pending a contest to determine the election of governor and lieutenant governor will not defeat the right of the person elected lieutenant governor to have the contest determined, and thus entitle him to the office of governor.
3. Evidence assailing the integrity of legislative journals which the Constitution requires to be kept, by showing the falsity of entries as to the presence of members when determining an election contest, is inadmissible, since the court is without jurisdiction to go behind the record made by the legislature under the Constitution.
4. It must be presumed that the legislature did its duty, and had before it such evidence as was satisfactory to it in determining an election contest on a report by a contest board, where the question required evidence, and the journals are silent as to what evidence the legislature heard.
5. A determination of an election contest for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor by the legislature, which by Const. § 90, is made the sole tribunal to determine such contest, and which proceeds under Stat. § 1596a, subs. 8, by referring the matter to a board, and receives its report before determining the contest, cannot be reviewed by the courts on the grounds that the notice of contest or the evidence was insufficient, or that the contest board was not fairly drawn by lot, as required by statute, or that the election should have been held void, where the findings by the legislature do not show that it was void.
6. A determination against the claim of a right to an office is not a deprivation of life, liberty, or property within the provision of U. S. Const. 14th Amend. as to due process of law.

(Du Relle, J., dissents.)

(April 6, 1900.)*

APPEAL by Taylor et al. from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of Beckham et al. in proceedings to determine the title to the offices of governor and lieutenant governor and to enjoin attempted illegal action on the part of persons not elected to such offices. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. O. Bradley, W. H. Yost, D. W. Fairleigh, A. E. Willson, and Breckenridge & Shelby, with Messrs. Helm, Bruce, & Helm, for appellants:

Where previously existing rights, whether of life, liberty, or property, are involved, there is no tribunal in the commonwealth which has the absolute power to take away such a right and then claim "absolute immunity from judicial inquiry" as to how or why this was done.

Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. ed. 377; United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 27 L. ed. 171, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

When plaintiff alleges that the general assembly "adjudged and determined" that Taylor was not entitled to the office to which the certificate of election then showed him to be entitled, and further "adjudged and determined" that Beckham was entitled to this office, and that the man who claims to have been elected by a majority of the people should be ousted from office, we have a right to inquire into the proceedings by which this adjudication was reached, and to see whether or not it was done "in conformity to the Constitution."

Jones v. Jones, 12 Pa. 350, 51 Am. Dec. 611.

Notice of some kind, actual or constructive, is essential, even in proceedings in rem.

Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, 23 L. ed. 914.

If the contest tribunal reached its conclusion that Goebel was elected by holding that there had been no election in the thin ballot counties, and that he had been elected by the remainder of the state, such a conclusion was so palpably contrary to the law of the land as not to be "authoritative."

Neocum v. Kirtley, 13 B. Mon. 515; Hocher v. Pendleton, 100 Ky. 726, 39 S. W. 250; People ex rel. Wallace v. Salomon, 46 Ill. 415.

Every ground of contest set forth in the notice was such a ground as, if established by proof, would simply show that the election was not "free and equal," and would vitiate the whole election, which, of course, would defeat the title of Goebel.

Leeman v. Hinton, 1 Duv. 37.

If the adjudication or determination of the general assembly was void, it can be of no effect or avail in any form of procedure.

The answer alleges that the determination of the general assembly was the result of a conspiracy entered into prior to the institution of the contest, by which it was agreed between the contestants and many of the members of the general assembly that such determination should be had.

A judgment rendered pursuant to an agreement made in advance between the judge and the litigant is fraudulent, and certainly voidable, if not absolutely void.

Slacum v. Simms, 5 Cranch, 363, 3 L. ed. 126; Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, 23 L. ed. 914; Allsmiller v. Freutchenicht, 96 Ky. 198, 5 S. W. 746; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 234, 41 L. ed. 983, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435.

Arbitrary power and the absence of due process of law are convertible phrases.

Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 536, 28 L. ed. 238, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 292; Brown v. Hummel, 6 Pa. 80; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 386, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Slaugh-

*An appeal from this decision was dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States on May 21, 1900, in an opinion reported in 178 U. S. 548, 44 L. ed. 1187, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 890. 49 L. R. A.

ter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356.

Messrs. T. L. Edelen and W. H. Sweeney also for appellants.

Messrs. Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., W. S. Pryor, Aaron Kohn, Zack Phelps, John K. Hendrick, and James A. Scott, with Mr. Lewis McQuown, for appellees.

Hobson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the November election, 1899, appellant W. S. Taylor and William Goebel were opposing candidates for governor of Kentucky. Appellant John Marshall and appellee J. C. W. Beckham were opposing candidates for lieutenant governor. On the face of the returns, Taylor received a majority of 2,383 over Goebel, and Marshall a somewhat larger majority over Beckham. The state canvassing board, on the face of the returns, issued certificates of election to Taylor and Marshall. Goebel and Beckham then gave notice of contest, and the matter was brought before the general assembly, which, under the Constitution, is the tribunal to determine contests for these offices; § 90 providing as follows: "Contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by both houses of the general assembly according to such regulations as may be established by law." The statute passed pursuant to this provision of the Constitution regulating the determination of such contests is found in § 1596a, subsec. 3, Ky. Stat., and provides that on the third day after the organization of the general assembly a board shall be chosen by lot, and have power to send for persons and papers. Its decision shall be reported to the two houses, and the general assembly shall then determine the contests. The general assembly convened on January 2, 1900, and on the third day after its organization, as shown by the journals of the two houses, a board of contest was appointed pursuant to the statute. The journals also show that on February 2, 1900, the board in each of these contests reported to the two houses that they had heard all the evidence offered by the contestants and contestees, and that William Goebel had received the highest number of legal votes cast for governor; that J. C. W. Beckham had received the highest number of legal votes cast for lieutenant governor, and that they were duly elected, and entitled to said offices. The journals further show that on the same day both houses, with a quorum present, approved and adopted separately and in joint session the reports of the contest board, and declared that William Goebel and appellee J. C. W. Beckham were duly elected governor and lieutenant governor at the election referred to. Goebel and Beckham were on that day sworn in accordingly. On January 30, William Goebel was shot by an assassin, receiving a wound from which he afterwards died on February 3. On January 31, appellant Taylor, as governor, issued a proclamation declaring that a state of insurrection existed at Frankfort, Kentucky, adjourning the general assembly to February 6, and ordering it to then assemble at the town of London, in Laurel county. The sessions of the general assembly on February 2 were not held at the state house for the reason that it was held by a military force of appellant Taylor that would not allow the assembly to meet there, and for this reason they met on that day at the Capital Hotel, in the city of Frankfort. On February 19 the legislature met again at the state house, and the senate on that day adopted the following resolution: "Whereas, on the 31st day of January, 1900, the acting governor of the commonwealth of Kentucky, by the use of armed force, dispersed the general assembly, and has until recently prevented the senate and house from assembling at their regular rooms and places of meeting; and whereas, the general assembly, and each house thereof, after public notice, met in joint and separate sessions in the city of Frankfort, a full quorum of such bodies being present, and adopted the majority reports and resolutions of the boards of contests for governor and lieutenant governor of the commonwealth of Kentucky, unseating the contestees, W. S. Taylor and John Marshall, as governor and lieutenant governor, and seating the contestants, William Goebel and J. C. W. Beckham, as governor and lieutenant governor, respectively, all of which proceedings, reports, and resolutions are set out in the journals of the two houses of the general assembly; and whereas, this joint assembly is now enabled to meet in its regular place of meeting, and, whilst it adheres to the belief beyond doubt that the action of the general assembly heretofore taken in reference to said contests is valid, final, and conclusive, to remove any doubt that may exist in the minds of any of the people of the commonwealth: Now, be it resolved, by the general assembly of the commonwealth of Kentucky in joint session assembled, to the end that all doubt may be removed, if any exists, as to the validity and regularity of the action and proceedings at the times and places shown by the journals of the two houses other than its regular rooms, provided by law, that all the acts, proceedings, and resolutions of the senate and house and of the joint assembly of the two houses upon or touching the report of the majority of the boards of contest for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, unseating the contestees, and seating William Goebel and J. C. W. Beckham, and declaring them to have been elected governor and lieutenant governor, respectively, on the 7th day of November, 1899, is hereby reenacted, readopted, reaffirmed, and ratified at this, the regular place of meeting provided by law, at the seat of government in Frankfort, Ky." This resolution, though not filed with the exhibits in these cases, is copied in the petition, and is admitted by the answer to have been entered on the senate journal. The same resolution was adopted by the house, and by both houses in joint session, on February 20.

Appellants insist that all these proceedings were void, and did not affect in any way their rights to the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. A great many matters have been presented in the argument, but only such as seem decisive can be considered without unduly extending this opinion. It is insisted: (1) That the proceedings of the legislature on February 2 are void, because the legislature had then been adjourned by the governor until February 6, and no legal session could be held in the meantime. (2) That, Goebel having died on February 3, the contest for the office of governor thereby abated, and the action of the legislature on February 19 and 20 was therefore void. (3) It is averred that the legislature took no action on February 2, and that the journals of these meetings were fraudulently made by the clerk, and pursuant to a conspiracy between certain members of the assembly and the contestants. (4) It is averred that the general assembly acted without evidence, and arbitrarily. These contentions will be considered in the order stated.

1. As to the governor's power to adjourn the legislature. If the governor had the power to adjourn the legislature from January 31 to February 6, of course no valid action could be taken by it in the interim. It is therefore necessary to determine whether he had such power. The only authority relied on to sustain his action is § 36 of the Constitution, which is as follows: "The first general assembly, the members of which shall be elected under this Constitution, shall meet on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in January, 1894, and thereafter the general assembly shall meet on the same day every second year, and its sessions shall be held at the seat of government, except in case of war, insurrection, or pestilence, when it may, by proclamation of the governor, assemble, for the time being, elsewhere." At first blush it must strike anyone that the thing in the mind of the framers of this section was not an adjournment of the general assembly after it had assembled, but a provision for a place of assembling. Until an assembly is organized, it cannot control its movements; and in case of an insurrection or pestilence preventing it from meeting at the capital it was necessary for someone to have power to name another place at which it might assemble for the time being, and organize. This seems, on its face, to be all the section was intended to provide for, and that it was not intended to authorize such action as was taken in this case is clear from § 80, which provides, among other things: "In case of disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, he [the governor] may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper, not exceeding four months." From this provision it is clear that the governor had no power over the time of adjournment of the two houses, except in case of disagreement between them. There had been no disagreement between the two houses here, and, if the governor could have adjourned them from January 31 to February 6, he might have made the time one month or four months, and then, by a similar proclamation, adjourned them again, and indefinitely prevented action upon the contest. It is also to be observed that, while the Constitution gives the governor power with respect to the time of adjournment in case of disagreement between the two houses, it confers upon him no such power to name another place than that in which the legislature may be sitting. Section 41 provides: "Neither house, during the session of the general assembly, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which it may be sitting." Under familiar rules of constitutional construction, either house, by virtue of this section, may, with the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, or to any other place than that in which it is sitting. It was never intended by the Constitution that the two houses might name a time or place of adjournment, and that the governor could also have like power; for this would be, not only to create confusion, but to destroy the independence of the legislative branch of the government. By § 27, the powers of the government are divided into three distinct and independent departments, and by § 42 the regular sessions of the general assembly are limited to sixty legislative days. If the governor can, without its consent, adjourn it from time to time, or from place to place, as he may see proper, he might be able to prevent it from taking any action that he might be opposed to. The legislative branch of the government more nearly represents the people than any other branch, and it is charged by the Constitution and laws of this state with many important interests directly affecting the people, to secure which their independence of the executive is absolutely necessary. Section 41, above referred to, is taken literally from the Federal Constitution. After showing that Congress is, with the single exception of a disagreement between the two houses in respect of the time of adjournment, wholly independent of the President, Judge Story adds: "In no other case is the President allowed to interfere with the time and extent of their deliberations. And thus their independence is effectually guarded against any encroachment on the part of the executive." 1 Story, Const. § 843. The reasons leading to the insertion of such a clause in the Constitution of the United States and in all the Constitutions of this state were the danger of executive control over the legislature, and the fact that the colonial governors exercised this power to destroy the effectiveness of the colonial legislatures. We are clearly of the opinion that the state Constitution was intended to maintain the absolute independence of the legislative branch of the government; that the power claimed by the appellant Taylor is in conflict with both the letter and the spirit of the instrument, and that his attempt to adjourn the legislature from January 31 to February 6 was void, and did not interfere with the right of the legislature to proceed with its sessions at Frankfort.

2. As to the death of Goebel. The death of Goebel on February 3 did not affect the right of the appellee Beckham. If Goebel was elected governor and Beckham lieutenant governor, in November, Beckham, upon Goebel's death on February 3, became entitled to the office of governor, and had the right to continue the contest to secure what the Constitution guaranteed to him. So that, if the legislature had not acted until February 19, it had a right then to act upon the contest, and its action would be none the less valid because not taken in Goebel's lifetime. But, as the legislative action of February 19 and 20 is assailed on substantially the same grounds as that on February 2, this view of the case is not important, as the question remains, Was either action valid? This brings us to the consideration of the third point.

3. As to the validity of the entries in the journal, and the effect to be given them. It is alleged that the journals are fraudulent, the work of a conspiracy between the clerks of the two houses, certain of the members, and the contestants, and that the facts shown by the journals as to the presence of the members of the two houses, and the action taken by them, are untrue. The question is, therefore, Can the court hear evidence of this character assailing the integrity of the legislative journals? Section 40 of the Constitution provides: "Each house of the general assembly shall keep and publish daily a journal of its proceedings; and the yeas and nays of the members on any question shall, at the desire of any two of the members elected, be entered on the journal." The journal of each house of the general assembly, kept pursuant to this provision of the Constitution under the supervision of the house, is, when approved by the house, not the act of the clerk, but the act of the house itself, and is entitled to the same respect as any of its other official acts. So far as we have seen, the authorities are uniform that evidence cannot be received in court to impeach the verity of the record provided by the Constitution as evidence of legislative proceedings. Thus, in Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 221, it is said: "And although it sometimes has been urged at the bar that the court ought to inquire into the motives of the legislature where fraud and corruption were alleged, and annul their action if the allegations were established, the argument has in no case been acceded to by the judiciary, and they have never allowed the inquiry to be entered upon. The reasons are the same here as those which preclude an inquiry into the motives of the governor in the exercise of a discretion vested in him exclusively. He is responsible for his acts in such a case, not to the courts, but to the people." In Wright v. Defrees, 8 Ind. 293, which was a quo warranto proceeding, involving the exercise of a franchise under an act of the general assembly, it was alleged that the act was secured by fraud, corruption, and bribery. The court refused to hear the evidence. It said: "The powers of the three departments are not merely equal,—they are exclusive in respect to the duties assigned to each. They are absolutely independent of each other. It is now proposed that one of the three powers shall institute an inquiry into the conduct of another department, and form an issue to try by what motives the legislature was governed in the enactment of a law. If this may be done, we may also inquire by what motives the executive is induced to approve a bill or withhold his approval, and, in case of withholding it corruptly, by our mandate compel its approval. To institute the proposed inquiry would be a direct attack upon the independence of the legislature, and a usurpation of power subversive of the Constitution." A similar question was presented in McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 424, where not only fraud, corruption, and bribery were alleged, but also that one member of the assembly, whose vote was recorded in the affirmative, in fact voted in the negative, and that, without his vote, the bill did not receive a constitutional majority. The court said: "The facts thus alleged raise the question whether the journals of the houses of the general assembly can be contradicted or impeached on the ground of mistake or fraud. The affirmative of this inquiry cannot, in our opinion, be maintained. Article 4, § 12, of the Constitution requires each house to keep a journal of its proceedings, and publish the same. This journal must be held conclusive evidence of the facts which appear on its face; because it must be presumed that the members, as a body, inspected it, and made all necessary corrections, before they allowed it to assume the character of a journal of their proceedings. As well might evidence be received to contradict a statute, to show that it contained certain provisions inserted through mistake, as to contradict an entry made upon the journal. The house keeping the journal is the only tribunal by which it can be corrected, and, until corrected by such authority, it must be considered conclusive as to the facts which it contains. State ex rel. Loomis v. Moffitt, 5 Ohio, 358; Turley v. Logan County, 17 Ill. 151. We must therefore hold that the members alleged to have been absent when the bill passed over the governor's veto were present and voted as averred in the journal, and that McMurray did vote in favor of the bill on its final passage in the house." In the case of State ex rel. Loomis v. Moffitt, 5 Ohio, 358, above referred to, the question was whether Lemuel Moffitt had been elected judge of the common pleas court by the general assembly. The senate journal showed his election by the senate, but the house journal showed the election of Samuel Moffitt. Depositions from members and officers of the general assembly were offered to prove that Lemuel and not Samuel Moffitt was the individual actually voted for and elected in the house, but the court held the evidence inadmissible to impeach the journal, and that Lemuel Moffitt was not entitled to the office. The court said: "In the ninth section and first article of the Constitution it is required that 'each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings and publish them.' This journal, when taken in connection with the laws and resolutions, would seem to be the appropriate evidence of legislative action. It is not the action of a single member of the legislature of which I speak, but of the whole body of the 'general assembly.' The former might, with propriety, be proved by parol testimony, but the latter is evidenced by evidence of a higher nature. The testimony of an individual member could not be received to contradict a statute, and, if not, why receive it to contradict an entry upon the journal?" In Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269, it was alleged that only nineteen senators voted aye on the passage of the bill, and that it did not receive, in fact, the affirmative vote of two thirds of the senators present, and never became a law, although the contrary appeared on the senate journal. The court said: "In the face of this solemn record, in which the senate of Virginia certifies its proceedings,—in a matter of fact,—relating to its own conduct,—in the apparent performance of its legal functions,—this court is asked to inquire into or dispute the veracity of that certificate. To do this would be to violate both the letter and the spirit of the Constitution; to invade a co-ordinate and independent department of the government, and to interfere with the separate and legitimate power and functions of the legislature." In a similar case the supreme court of Pennsylvania also said, where fraud and corruption were charged on the legislature, and the court was asked to hold its action void for this reason: "We cannot hesitate a moment on this question. We have no such authority, and ought not to have. However far the legislature may depart from the right line of constitutional morality, we have no authority to supervise and correct their acts on the mere ground of fraudulent or dishonest motives. We know of no such check upon legislation, and would not desire to see such an one instituted. The remedy for such an evil is in the hands of the people alone, to be worked out by an increased care to elect representatives that are honest and capable. If the judiciary have such authority, then every justice of the peace is competent to sit in judgment upon every act of legislation which disorderly moralists or knavish or ignorant anarchists may choose to charge as fraudulent. Nay, more, if the question may be raised in a judicial proceeding, the judges and justices of the peace will be bound to investigate and decide it, and the principal judicial business might then become that of testing, not cases by the standard of the law, but the standard itself by the infinitely various and uncertain judicial notions of morality." [Sunbury & E. R. Co. v. Cooper, 33 Pa. 283.] Any number of similar quotations may be made from other state courts. The decisions are all uniform. The same rule has been applied by the United States Supreme Court. Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162; Ex parte McCordle, 7 Wall. 506, 19 L. ed. 264; United States

v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 466, 37 L. ed. 523, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; United States v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. 142 U. S. 544, 35 L. ed. 1109, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308. In the case last cited the court said that "the knowledge and good faith of a legislature are not open to question. It is conclusively presumed that a legislature acts with full knowledge, and in good faith."

The learned counsel for the appellants do not question the soundness of these decisions, but seek to distinguish them from the case before us on the ground that appellants have a pre-existing right, and that the rule referred to only applies to legislative acts operative for the future. But none of the cases rest on this ground. The ground of all the decisions is that the judiciary have no power to sit in judgment upon the motives of an independent branch of the government, or to deny legal effect to the record of its action solemnly made by it pursuant to the Constitution. If this were allowed, it would soon follow that the independence of the legislature would be destroyed altogether. When our system of government was formed, not a few publicists pronounced it impracticable, and foretold that sooner or later one of the three equal departments of the government would overshadow and supervise the others. So far these prophecies have proved groundless, but, if the contention of appellants were sustained, this court would, in substance, assume supervisory power over the action of the legislature; and, as our jurisdiction is only appellate, the same power might be exercised by every subordinate court in the state in cases within its jurisdiction. The Constitution of this state creates the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. It provides how they shall be filled by election. It also provides how the result of that election shall be determined. In each of the four Constitutions of this state the general assembly has been made the exclusive tribunal for determining this matter. This shows a clear and settled purpose to keep this political question out of the courts. We have no more right to supervise the decision of the general assembly in determining the result of this election than we have to supervise the action of the governor in calling a special session of the legislature, or in pardoning a criminal, or the action of the legislature in contracting debts, or determining upon the election of its members, or doing any other act authorized by the Constitution. There is no conflict between the action of the state canvassing board and that of the legislature in these cases. The state canvassing board were without power to go behind the returns. They were not authorized to hear evidence, and determine who was in truth elected, but were required to give a certificate of election to those who, on the face of the returns, had received the highest number of votes. For the state board to have received evidence to impeach the returns before them would have been for them, in effect, to act as a board for trying a contested election; and, if they had done this, they would have usurped the power vested in the general assembly by the Constitution, for by its express terms only the general assembly can determine a contested election for governor and lieutenant governor. But the certificate of the state board of canvassers is no evidence as to who was in truth elected. Their certificate entitles the recipient to exercise the office until the regular constitutional authority shall determine who is the de jure officer. The rights of the de jure officer attached when he was elected, although the result was unknown until it was declared by the proper constitutional authority. When it was so declared, it was simply the ascertainment of a fact hitherto in doubt or unsettled. The rights of the de facto officer, under his certificate from the canvassing board, were provisional or temporary until the determination of the result of the election as provided in the Constitution; and upon that determination, if adverse to him, they ceased altogether. Such a determination of the result of the election by the proper tribunal did not take from him any pre-existing right, for, if not in fact elected, he had only a right to act until the result of the election could be determined. We are therefore unable to see how this case can be distinguished from any other legislative action taken in a matter over which the Constitution has given the legislature exclusive jurisdiction, and are therefore of the opinion that the courts are without jurisdiction to go behind the record made by the legislature under the Constitution. Such a record seems to us entitled to every presumption in its favor that the records of this court kept under its supervision would be entitled to receive at the hands of the legislature in a matter before it.

4. As to the action of the assembly being void because without evidence and arbitrary. The report of the contest board to the general assembly shows that it heard the evidence offered by the contestants and contestees, but the report does not, on its face, show that the evidence taken by the board was submitted by it to the general assembly. The journals also fail to show this fact. It is insisted that therefore the general assembly acted without evidence in determining the contest. But there is a clear distinction between the failure of the journal to show a fact where the journal is merely silent on the subject, and a fact expressly shown in the journal. Here the journals are only silent as to what evidence the general assembly heard, and, as it was a question requiring evidence for its proper determination, it must be presumed that the legislature did its duty, and had before it such evidence as was satisfactory to it. Thus, in Cooley on Constitutional Limitation, it is said, in disposing of the question of the constitutional power of the legislature: "In any case in which this question is answered in the affirmative the courts are not at liberty to inquire into the proper exercise of power. They must assume that the legislative discretion has been properly exercised. If evidence was required, it must be supposed that it was before the legislature when the act was passed, and, if any special finding was required to warrant the passage of the particular act, it would seem that the passage of the act itself might be held equivalent to such finding." Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 220. In McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 433, the court well said: "Presumptions are often indulged, in support of the proceedings of courts, and it would be difficult to perceive why their proceedings should be entitled to more favor than those of the legislature. It has been repeatedly decided that, where the record of a court possessing general powers is silent as to whether a party defendant had notice of suit, it will be presumed that the steps necessary to give jurisdiction of the person were properly taken. There is, indeed, no reason why legislative records should be more full and perfect than judicial." In those states where the enrolled bill is not held conclusive, it is uniformly held, where the journals are merely silent, that the presumption is absolute that the required steps were in fact taken. Lafferty v. Huffman, 99 Ky. 88, 32 L. R. A. 203, 35 S. W. 123. Under these principles it must be presumed that the legislature in the case before us did its duty. A copy of the proof taken before the contest board has been filed with this record, comprising about 1,700 typewritten pages. Of course, it is not presumed that each member of the legislature read all this. It is only meant that the legislature should learn the facts of the case from those appointed for that purpose, for this is all that is practicable in such bodies. There is nothing in the record before us to raise the presumption that this was not done.

It is also insisted that the notice of contest was insufficient, and that the evidence was equally insufficient; but these were matters to be determined by the legislature, which the Constitution has made the sole tribunal to determine such a contest. Whether their decision in these matters was right or wrong we have no power to inquire. In the distribution of the powers of the government certain power was, by the Constitution, assigned to the courts, and other powers to the general assembly. For us to attempt to review its action would be as improper as for it to interfere in a case that this court had decided. It is said that, if this is true, great injustice might be done by the legislature. To this the supreme court of Indiana, in Evans v. Brown, 30 Ind. 514, 95 Am. Dec. 710, responded thus: "Public authority and political power must, of necessity, be confided to officers, who, being human, may violate the trust reposed in them. This perhaps cannot be avoided absolutely; but it applies also to all human agencies. It is not fit that the judiciary should claim for itself a purity beyond others; nor has it been able at all times with truth to say that its high places have not been disgraced. The framers of our government have not constituted it with faculties to supervise co-ordinate departments, and correct or prevent abuses of their authority. It cannot authenticate a statute; that power does not belong to it; nor can it keep the legislative journal. . . . It is neither modest nor just for judges thus to impeach the integrity of another department of government, and to claim that the judiciary only will be faithful to its obligation." Speaking of contested elections for public office, this court, in Batman v. Megowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 538, said: "The law has designated the manner in which such questions shall be ascertained and determined. A board is to be constituted as prescribed by the statute to examine the poll books and issue certificates of election. Another board is to be organized in the case of a contested election for determining the contest between the claimants. Upon this last-mentioned board the law devolves the duty and confers the power of deciding who is entitled to the office. The courts have no right to adjudicate upon these questions, or to decide such contests." In the later case of Stine v. Berry, 96 K. 63, 27 S. W. 809, this court again said: "We understand, and so adjudge, that the statute in regard to contested elections for state and county officers is exclusive. . . . Such statutes are enacted with remedies providing for the speedy determination of such questions, and to take from the courts all original supervisory power over such contests." See also Anderson v. Likens, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1001, 47 S. W. 867; Booe v. Kenner, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1343, 49 S. W. 330. This whole subject was fully examined in the case of Baater v. Brooks, 29 Ark. 173, which was, like this, a contest for the office of governor. The court said: "The office of governor does not exist by virtue of the common law. It is a creation of the Constitution. And it is well settled that where a new right, or the means of acquiring it, is conferred by a constitution or a statute, and an adequate remedy for its infringement is given by the same authority which created the right, the parties injured are confined to the redress thus given." In a review of this contest, quoted in this opinion, Judge Cooley said (page 186, 29 Ark.): "To our mind, there can be no plausible suggestion that the decision of the general assembly on such a contest is open to judicial review afterwards; but it may not be inappropriate to refer to Grier v. Shackelford, 2 Treadway, Const. 642; Batman v. Megowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533; State ex rel. Grisell v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 134; Powell ex rel. Royce v. Goodwin, 22 Mich. 496,—as in point."

It is also argued that the contest board was not fairly drawn by lot; that certain of the board were liable to objection on the score of partiality, and that, therefore, this board was not properly constituted. If any of these objections were well founded, the general assembly had full power to take such action as was proper in the premises. It does not appear that any of the objections urged were presented to the general assembly, but, if they were, and it refused to make a correction, it must be presumed that it had sufficient reasons for its action. Besides, the board was only a preliminary agency to take evidence, and report the facts to the general assembly. The assembly itself finally determined the contest.

It is also urged that under the specifications of the notice of contest, if all were true, the election was void, and the general assembly should have so determined. But we have no means of knowing that the general assembly reached such a conclusion. The presumption is in favor of their judgment, and when they have found as a fact that the contestants received the highest number of legal votes cast at the election in controversy we are not at liberty to go behind their finding. In Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush, 725, the board found that Jones had accepted a challenge to fight a duel, and was therefore disqualified to hold office. But as, under the Constitution, a conviction of the offense was necessary to disqualify Jones from holding office, this court disregarded the finding of the board, for the reason that it related only to an immaterial matter. In this case, however, the legislature finds the fact that determines the rights of the parties. There is nothing in their finding to show the election was void, and, as we cannot go behind it (10 Bush, 747, 748), the cases of Leeman v. Hinton, 1 Duv. 38, and Hocker v. Pendleton, 100 Ky. 726, 39 S. W. 250, have also no application.

It is also insisted that the legislative proceedings are in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." The office of governor being created by the Constitution of this state, the instrument creating it might properly provide how the officer was to be elected, and how the result of this election should be determined. The provisions of the Constitution on this subject do not abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States. Such an office is not property, and in determining merely the result of the election according to its own laws the state deprives no one of life, liberty, or property. In creating this office the state had a right to provide such agencies to determine the result of the election, and it had a right to provide such a mode of procedure as it saw fit. It is wholly a matter of state policy. The people of the state might, by an amendment to their Constitution, abolish the office altogether. The determination of the result of an election is purely a political question, and, if such suits as this may be maintained, the greatest disorder will result in the public business. It has always been the policy of our law to provide a summary process for the settlement of such contests, to the end that public business shall not be interrupted; but, if such a suit as this may be maintained, where will such a contest end? To illustrate, § 38 of the state Constitution provides: "Each house of the general assembly shall judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its members, but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as shall be directed by law." Whatever inherent power either house might have had to determine the election of its members if the Constitution had been silent, its power under this section is limited to the grant. It will be observed that the phraseology is substantially the same as § 90, relating to contested elections of governor and lieutenant governor. Suppose these suits had been brought by two members of the general assembly, alleging, in effect, the same facts as are alleged in this case, would anybody suppose that the judiciary of the state would have the power to go behind the legislative journals, or to supervise the propriety of the legislative action, in determining the election of its members? Could a member of the general assembly, who had received a certificate from the canvassing board, and been afterwards ousted from the house to which he belonged on a contest, allege and show that the house had acted arbitrarily, depriving him of a pre-existing right, and denying to him the emoluments of the office for the term? Could it be maintained that such action by either house of the general assembly violated any protection afforded him by the Constitution of the United States, or that for this cause the action of the state authorities under the state Constitution, by virtue of which he claimed to have been elected, might be overruled? This question was presented to the United States Supreme Court in Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435, where an officer arbitrarily removed from office applied to that court for redress. His case was dismissed for want of jurisdiction. If the state may arbitrarily remove an officer once appointed, we see no reason why it may not provide such means as it sees proper for the determination of its own elections. If it has not such power, then its sovereignty as a state exists only in name. The Congress of the United States has, by the Constitution, the power to judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its members. In not a few cases it has been supposed to have acted arbitrarily in such matters, but it was never maintained that one who was ousted of his seat in Congress on a contest could take the matter into the courts to supervise the action of Congress on such grounds as are alleged in this case. Yet the power of Congress, under the Constitution, in determining which of two claimants was in fact elected to a seat in that body, both being admittedly qualified, is, under the Constitution, just the same as the power of our general assembly in determining a contested election for governor and lieutenant governor.

It is earnestly argued that the general assembly was wrong in its decision of this case, and that it is a very serious matter thus to overthrow the will of the people. Whether the assembly was right or not in 49 L. R. A.

its decision, it is not our province to determine. But a much more important question is involved in the case, which is the integrity of our form of government as founded by our forefathers. If the action of the legislature may be disregarded by the courts, then it is no longer an equal and independent branch of the government within its constitutional jurisdiction, but the courts become the final depository of the supreme power of the state. Judicial tyranny is no less tyranny because couched in the forms of law. There was great wisdom in dividing the powers of a republic between three equal and independent sets of officers. One operates as a check upon the other, and no greater blow to the perpetuity of our institutions could be given than to destroy this check.

For these reasons we are of the opinion that the courts of this state are without authority to enter into the inquiry sought in this case, and that the journals of the general assembly are conclusive of the controversy.

The judgment of the lower court, being in accordance with these views, is therefore affirmed.

Burnam, J., concurring:

The general demurrer to the answer and amended answer of contestees, which was sustained by the chancellor in this proceeding, admits that on the 9th day of December, 1899, W. S. Pryor, as chairman, and W. T. Ellis, as member, of the state board of election commissioners, certified that William S. Taylor and John Marshall had received the highest number of votes given for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, respectively, and were duly and regularly elected to fill these offices for the term prescribed by the Constitution; that at the election, under the operation of the statute known as the "Goebel Election Law," the entire election machinery of the state was in the hands of the friends and partisans of contestants; that all of the election officers, from the highest to the lowest, were selected by the state board of election commissioners, or by their appointees; that the members of the state board of election commissioners were themselves fellow partisans of contestants; that by the action of the election officers on the day of the election contestees were illegally, and in many cases fraudulently, deprived of a large number of votes in the various voting precincts of the state; that, subsequent to the election, contestants had entered into a conspiracy with divers members of the legislature to nullify this election of the people by the institution of a fraudulent contest before them; that, pursuant to this conspiracy so entered into, the contest boards were selected by a fraudulent device, not by lot, as required by law; that as a result of this trick ten out of the eleven members selected for the trial of the governor's contest were partisans of the contestant, and nine out of the eleven members selected as a contest board for the trial of the lieutenant governor's contest were partisans of the contestant; that a number of the members of the general assembly selected on both of these contest boards were disqualified from sitting on the ground that they had advised that such contests should be made, and had promised to render them effective; that at least one member of the board selected to try the contest for the office of governor had wagered money on the result of the election; that the contest boards, in the trial of the contests, had acted throughout in an illegal, tyrannical, and arbitrary manner in the admission and rejection of testimony, and in the whole conduct of the trial; that they did not report to the general assembly any of the testimony which had been taken upon the trial; and that the general assembly, at the time they approved the decisions of the contest boards, did not have a particle of testimony before them, were not familiar with the facts, refused to hear argument, held their alleged meeting at which the contests were determined at a secret place without the knowledge of either contestees, or more than one third of the entire membership of the general assembly, who were thereby excluded from any participation in the action so taken at the time of the alleged determination of the contests in favor of contestants. It is also admitted that at the time the alleged action was taken by the general assembly on the 2d day of February, 1900, the legislature had been previously adjourned by the governor to meet in London, Kentucky. It is hard to imagine a more flagrant and partisan disregard of the modes of procedure which should govern a judicial tribunal in the determination of a great and important issue than is made manifest by the facts alleged and relied on by contestees, and admitted by the demurrer filed in this action to be true; and I am firmly convinced, both from these admitted facts and from knowledge of the current history of these transactions, that the general assembly, in the heat of anger, engendered by the intense partisan excitement which was at that time prevailing, have done two faithful, conscientious, and able public servants an irreparable injury in depriving them of the offices to which they were elected by the people of this commonwealth; and a still greater wrong has been done a large majority of the electors of this commonwealth who voted under difficult circumstances to elect these gentlemen to act as their servants in the discharge of the duties of these great offices. But we are met at the threshold of this case with the contention that the courts of the state, under the limitations imposed by the Constitution, have no power to go behind the legislative journals, and review the judgment of the general assembly in a proceeding over which they are given, by the Constitution, exclusive jurisdiction, and from whose determination of the question no appeal is provided. The Constitution defines the duties and limits the powers of each of the three co-ordinate departments of government, and in the discharge of these duties and exercise of these powers each department must, of necessity, be independent of the other so long as they remain within the constitutional limitations, and, "no person or collection of persons being of one of these departments can exercise any power properly belonging to either of the others, except in the instances expressly directed or permitted." See §§ 27 and 28 of the Constitution. By § 90 of the Constitution the determination of contested elections for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor is imposed upon the general assembly, to be exercised in accordance with such regulations as may be established by law. Pursuant to this provision of the Constitution, the legislature has, in § 1531 and subsections thereunder of the Kentucky Statutes, prescribed the regulations for their guidance in the determination of such contested elections; and it appears from the exhibits filed with the petition that the general assembly have, pursuant to these regulations, decided the contests for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor in favor of the contestants, and if no appeal or power to review their finding is given to the courts by the Constitution, which is the basis of all power both in the legislature and in the courts, their finding would seem to be conclusive of the question. Similar questions to that at bar have been before this court in quite a number of cases, beginning with the celebrated case of Batman v. McGowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533, in which the opinion was written by one of the ablest and most celebrated lawyers which ever adorned this bench; and after a careful consideration of all of these cases, and numerous authorities which have been cited from elementary writers and courts of last resort in other states, I have been led with some reluctance to the conclusion, and not without some misgivings as to its correctness, that there is no power in the courts of the state to review the finding of the general assembly in a contested election for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor as shown by its duly-authenticated records. Many questions have been raised and discussed with great ability by learned and eloquent counsel for appellants, but it will be unnecessary for me to consider them in view of the conclusion which I have reached on this fundamental question.

49 J. R. A.

Gaffy, J.:

I concur in and adopt the foregoing as my view of the question involved.

Du Relle, J., dissenting:

Since Kentucky has had a government, the powers of the government have been divided into three distinct departments, and each of them is confined to a separate body of magistracy, to wit, those which are legislative to one, those which are executive to another, and those which are judicial to another. These departments are co-ordinate and coequal. The magistracy of each department is confined to its own powers and duties. As a matter of course, and in the nature of things, these co-ordinate departments are in some respects interdependent. From the very nature of things it results that, while the legislative branch is supreme in saying what shall be law, and the executive in the execution of the laws enacted by the legislature, the power must rest somewhere of saying whether those departments have exceeded their powers, or have assumed powers which properly and constitutionally belong to another department. Were the sections of the Constitution (27 and 28) the only ones which limited the powers of the departments, such inquiry and determination would be limited to the decision of whether any of the three departments had transgressed upon the domain of one of the others. But the Constitution contains other limitations, and contains also grants of power which are exceptions to the fundamental division of powers. One of these exceptions is the grant to the legislature of power to determine contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor. In § 90 it is provided: "Contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by both houses of the general assembly according to such regulations as may be established by law." This is a grant to one of the departments of power which under the general division would not belong to it. A contest is a litigation over a right. The decision of a litigation over a right claimed by one party and denied by another is, in its essence, judicial. In the absence of express grant of power to the members of the body of magistracy who constitute the legislative department, they could not exercise this power. Therefore, when power of this description, judicial in its essence, is, by the organic law, delegated to the members of that body of magistracy, there is no implication of a grant beyond the letter of the granting clause, except as to such matters as are of necessity implied in the grant, and essential to the execution of the power. But this grant is not merely a grant of power. It is a grant of power with express limitations. It endows the persons who constitute the body of magistracy to whom are confided legislative powers with an additional power taken from the judicial department, and by the terms of the grant subjected to two limitations. One limitation is made by the statement of the power which is granted. The grant is of power to determine contested election for these two offices. The word "contest" as used in constitutions and statutes is a word of art having a well-defined meaning. It means a litigation between two parties who claim property or right. It carries with it distinctly the idea of a plaintiff, a defendant, and a thing in controversy. A contested election is a controversy between two over the question which one of them was elected,—which one of them received the highest number of legal votes at the election. That is a contest; and that, in the nature of things, is all that an election contest can be. The second limitation in the grant is that contested elections for these offices shall be determined by the grantees of this power "according to such regulations as may be established by law." Accordingly, we find that regulations have been established by law regulating the procedure, and providing for pleadings. A notice in writing must be given within a limited time, must state the ground of contest, and none other shall be heard as coming from such party. Ky. Stat. 1535. This notice is the declaration or petition. The same rule which applies to all other litigations applies to this. An issue must be made, either by the law or by the pleadings of the parties. In this litigation it is provided that it may be made in either way. A counter notice, equivalent to an answer or plea, may be given, or, if not given, the law denies the averments of the declaration, and the contestee may defend without actually filing a counter notice. Other regulations of a procedure in determining such a litigation are established by law, but they are not material to the present discussion, except as they tend to further illustrate the fact that this is a litigation before a tribunal. In exercising the powers granted of determining this contest, the legislature was a mere contest board exercising powers granted with both express and implied limitation, and powers which were not, in any sense, legislative. The legislature was, as to this matter, a tribunal created by the Constitution to try a litigation. In the exercise of this power, this tribunal was confined to the jurisdiction conferred. If it went beyond its jurisdiction, its action was void; just as void as if it had undertaken to grant a divorce in defiance of the constitutional inhibition, or as would be the judgment of a county court to sell land in Switzerland. Now comes the question, Who can determine whether this contest board has exceeded its jurisdiction, and upon what evidence of transgression can this determination be made? In the nature of the government it must be that this power rests with the courts, and with the courts alone. Universally, it is conceded that this power of determination, whether one of the departments has gone beyond its jurisdiction as defined by the Constitution, or has transgressed constitutional inhibitions upon its exercise, rests with the courts. In arriving at their determination upon a question of this kind, there is much dispute as to what evidence the courts may consider, and to what extent such evidence is conclusive upon them. But, in the nature of the government, it is essential that the power of determining whether constitutional limitations have been transgressed is with the courts, and the courts only. If the governor issues an edict, and undertakes to enforce it as law, the courts will declare it void. If the Constitution limited his power of pardon to specific cases, and inhibited its exercise in others, the courts would declare a pardon of one of the forbidden offenses void. It has been reiterated so many times that the repetition is wearisome, that the courts will not lightly, nor in a doubtful case, hold the action of a co-ordinate branch of the government unconstitutional; but, on the other hand, it has often been held that, when convinced that the legislature has exceeded its power,—has violated the inhibitions of the Constitution,—or invaded the powers of co-ordinate branches of government, no court will hesitate to declare that the legislature acted without jurisdiction, and its action was unconstitutional and void; and this is done as to matters purely legislative. But in this matter the legislature or its members are not acting as a legislature. They are acting as a contest board. Now, if this contest board exceeds its jurisdiction, there can be no question of the power of the courts to inquire into the validity of its determination, and to say whether that determination—that judgment—was valid or void. Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush, 725.

In this case a suit is brought to recover an office, and as the basis for such recovery a record is relied upon,—the record of a so-called "trial and determination" by the legislature sitting as a contest board. Upon this record it is claimed that the contestant appears entitled to the office of governor. What does the record show? It shows that the contestee was duly certified to have received the highest number of votes as shown by the returns, and was thereupon duly inducted into office. After his qualification, his title to the office was perfect. I do not care whether, after the notice of contest was given, it be said he was governor de jure or governor de facto. Until that notice was given, he was governor by undisputed title. The record then shows that a notice of contest was given contesting the election, and claiming the office upon the ground that in the city of Louisville and some forty counties there was no legal election; that the election was void; that in the metropolitan city of the state, the equivalent in population and voters of thirty or forty counties of ordinary size, the election was void because of intimidation by the military, and interference by the judiciary, and no valid election was held there; that in some forty counties of the state the election was void because, in violation of the law, thin ballots were used. All other grounds alleged in the notice are merely cumulative to these, and the averment that the original contestant was duly elected is a mere deduction from the averment that the election in these counties was void. Now, if this be true,—and upon the verity and sufficiency of these averments the record stands,—there was no election in Kentucky, for the Constitution provides that the governor shall be elected by the qualified voters of the state, and, if the declaration of notice in this record is true, the qualified voters of the state had no election, for somewhere in the neighborhood of 50 per cent of the qualified voters of the state either had no opportunity to vote legally, or were intimidated from exercising the right of suffrage freely. The notice, therefore, in substance, alleges that there was no election in the state of Kentucky, and that, therefore, the contestant was entitled to the office. This is the fair construction of the language used in the notice. This is what the record relied on shows, and this record and the judgment which was claimed to be rendered upon it 40 L. R. A.

is the basis of this litigation to secure the actual possession of the office. The record on which this suit is brought shows on its face that the question presented to the tribunal which rendered the decision was not one which it had jurisdiction to try. It had jurisdiction to try a contest. The only authority given to it was to try the question, Which candidate received the highest number of votes? A contest board cannot try the question whether there was an election, or whether an election was void. That is not for its consideration. The only question a board of contest has authority to try is, Which of the two litigants received the highest number of legal votes cast? That question was not presented to it, and its action upon any other question was a nullity; as much a nullity as if it had undertaken to grant the contestant a divorce upon an averment that the election was void. Where there is a lawful election in a part only of the territory over which the election should be held, the election is void in its entirety. People ex rel. Wallace v. Salomon, 46 Ill. 415. See also Hovee v. Perry, 92 Ky. 263, 17 S. W. 575. Now, if the election was void because it was not free and equal in the whole or any substantial part of the territory, because in any considerable extent of the territory the voters were prevented by intimidation of troops or judges from exercising freely their right of suffrage, because in any considerable extent of the territory the officers of election did not do their duty, and violated the requirements of the Constitution as to secrecy in the ballot, and thereby deprived the voters of the privilege of legally casting their votes, what tribunal can decide the question that there was no election? The most recent utterance of this court is the case of Hocker v. Pendleton, 100 Ky. 726, 39 S. W. 250. That case was a bill in equity to declare an election void because sufficient ballots were not furnished by the officers to enable all the voters to express their preferences, and therefore the election was not free and equal. The sole authority relied on by counsel who sought to have the election declared void was the case of Leeman v. Hinton, 1 Duv. 37. In the Hocker Case this court held distinctly that a court of equity had the power to declare that there had been no election. The averments in the record relied on in this suit admit of the application of no other remedy. It is not a contested election. It is a litigation of the question whether there was an election or not. It is not a litigation over an office. It is a litigation to determine whether any office was filled by the people. Properly, this jurisdiction, as is abundantly shown by the cases of Leeman v. Hinton and Hocker v. Pendleton, belongs to courts of equity. Now, it is true that in Wilson v. Hines, 99 Ky. 221, 35 S. W. 627, 37 S. W. 148, one division of this court held that, where an election tribunal decided that the law under which the election contested was held was unconstitutional, it was not exceeding its powers. This was a short cut to practically the same end, which might have been obtained by the proper procedure. The contest board decided the act under which the election was held to be unconstitutional, and dismissed the contestant's case. What it ought to have done was to refuse to act at all, upon the ground that no election had been held, for an election under an unconstitutional law is no election. When the case was appealed, the appeal should have been dismissed, for the proper procedure of the party who thought himself aggrieved was by mandamus to compel the election board to act. The practical result, however, was the same; and this court, in the subsequent appeal, affirmed the judgment of the circuit court. But in the Hocker Case the court returned to the true doctrine that the question whether an election had been held at all, or whether the election attempted to be held was void, was a matter for courts of equity to determine, as has been the law of Kentucky for forty years, and was the undisputed law at the time the present Constitution was adopted by the people. It is objected that the legislature is given plenary power to determine a contested election as to these two offices, and that, having determined it, no inquiry can be made into the regularity of the procedure. If § 90 had read, "Elections for governor and lieutenant governor . . . shall be determined by both houses of the general assembly," this would be a grant of plenary power, and there would be no question in this case except the question whether the action of the legislature had been the exercise of arbitrary power, or had been taken as to the contestee without due process of law. But it is a power with limitations, given to a contest board. The question is not here presented whether the courts shall interfere to prevent the exercise of legislative power. It is a question whether that body, acting, not as legislature, but as a board of contest, has acted within its jurisdiction. In its delicacy as to invading the jurisdiction of the co-ordinate legislative branch of the government this court seems to me to have been somewhat over-nice. No question of the propriety or infamy of a legislative act has been suffered to resolve doubt of its constitutionality into certainty. Neither the criminal purpose of the present election law, nor its potential spawn of force and fraud, now realized, availed to engender anything beyond mild doubt of its constitutionality. But it should be remembered that while the legislature is co-ordinate and co-equal, the judiciary has rights also. It is also a co-ordinate and co-equal branch of the government, and should be a little jealous of its own rights; and one of the essential rights of the judiciary is its right and power, not only to restrain itself within constitutional limitations, but to announce when other departments go beyond them; to say finally and authoritatively when either of the other branches of the government has exceeded its jurisdiction.

In my opinion, the record upon which the petition in this case is based shows on its face affirmatively that the board of contest had not jurisdiction of the matter which it undertook to try. It is not a mere defective notice. It excludes the possibility of jurisdiction. I think, therefore, that the demurrer to the answer should have been carried back to the petition, and sustained.

The brief time between the consultation and the delivery of the opinion renders it impossible for me to discuss any of the questions involved in this case except the question of jurisdiction of the contest board, and that but briefly. There are many questions of grave interest which I should be glad to discuss if time permitted, notably the question whether the procedure described at length in the answer in this case afforded the contestee the due process of law guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, and the question whether the action of the contest board was the exercise of arbitrary power.

SEASONGOOD, STIX, KROUSE, & COMPANY, Appt.,

v.
TENNESSEE & OHIO RIVER TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

(.....Ky.....)

1. That freight is destined to a point beyond its line will not authorize a carrier to refuse to accept it when tendered to it for transportation.
2. An agreement between rival carriers that each will accept only freight destined to points within certain specified limits will not absolve one from liability to shippers for refusal to accept freight destined for points within another's territory.
3. A carrier refusing to accept freight tendered may be held liable for its loss by theft before the owner has opportunity, after notice of refusal, to make some safer disposition of it than to leave it in the warehouse at the wharf.
4. A carrier which knowingly permits one to act as its agent in such manner and for such length of time as to induce a person of ordinary prudence to believe that such assumed agent is in fact a general agent will be bound by his acts within the apparent scope of his authority.

(Du Relle, J., dissents.)

(December 8, 1890.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Crittenden County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover for the loss of goods tendered to,

NOTE.—As to the duty of a carrier to transport goods when offered, see note to Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 321.

On the question when the liability of a railway carrier of goods ceases to be that of a carrier, see East Tennessee. V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly (Tenn.) 17 L. R. A. 691, and note; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nevils (Ark.) 28 L. R. A. 80; Hardman v. Montana Union R. Co. (C. C. A. 9th C.) 39 L. R. A. 300.

As to the authority of a carrier's agent to make contracts, see Rudell v. Ogdensburg Transit Co. (Mich.) 44 L. R. A. 415.

but refused by, defendant for transportation, and stolen from a warehouse in which they were then deposited. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. S. Nunn, for appellant:

A shipper is justified in assuming that a person in charge of the carrier's usual place of receiving goods has authority to accept such goods and contract for the carrier.

Hale, Bailm. 316, 317; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 805; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Black, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 363, 27 S. W. 830.

Any combination or agreement, the object of which is to destroy or interfere with free competition in any line of business, is void.

Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375, 6 L. R. A. 390, 12 S. W. 670; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Freight Carriers, p. 692.

The courts refuse to make the acceptance of goods marked for shipment beyond a carrier's line a basis for a contract for through carriage.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Tarter, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 229, 39 S. W. 698; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Freight Carriers, 365; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 806; Snow v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. 109 Ind. 422, 9 N. E. 702; Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 102a, 103b.

But appellee was not asked to "accept goods for carriage farther than his own line." It was its duty to accept and carry the goods to Evansville and deliver to the next carrier to forward.

Hale, Bailm. p. 463.

The law makes no distinction between local or way freight and freight consigned to points beyond the carrier's line; the duty of the carrier to accept it in both cases is the same, and there is no reason for the distinction, for the liabilities assumed in each case are the same.

Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Freight Carriers, p. 383; Hale, Bailm. p. 467.

McCafer's, Campbell & Campbell for appellee.

Guffy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is alleged in the petition that the appellant delivered to the agent of appellee at the steamboat landing on the Ohio river at the mouth of Hurricane creek, or Tolou, in Crittenden county, Kentucky, a box of goods consigned to plaintiff, at Cincinnati, Ohio, to be carried by the defendant on its boat, for hire, for plaintiff. It is further alleged that the agent of defendant received said box, and placed same in the warehouse in which defendant kept its goods for shipment, and while in said warehouse, in possession of defendant, thieves broke in, and stole and carried away the goods. It is further alleged that one of appellee's boats upon which it carried freight stopped at said landing on said date after said goods had been received for shipment, and the same was tendered said boat or said officers for shipment by its said agent, when the defendant wrongfully refused to carry said goods, and by reason thereof said goods were lost. The answer of appellee denies the delivery 49 L. R. A.

of the goods to the agent; denies that it was its duty to carry the same, or that it was in any wise responsible for the damage or loss to appellant, if it had sustained any. After the issues were fully made up, a jury trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellee; and, appellant's motion for a new trial having been overruled, it prosecutes this appeal.

The principal grounds relied on by appellant for a reversal are as to the instructions given and refused. It will be seen from the pleadings (and the testimony conduces to prove the same) that one McGrew was the owner of a warehouse at the mouth of Hurricane creek, which was the only point at which the goods were delivered to and from steamboats in that immediate vicinity, and that it was the custom of appellee, as well as other boats, to receive freight from said warehouse, and that McGrew was furnished with blank bills of lading, and collected freight bills. The collection, however, was done at the cost of the debtors. He was also employed by appellee to carry the United States mail from the steamboat landing to the postoffice at Tolou. It appears from the testimony that on a certain evening appellee's boat landed at the landing aforesaid, and that the clerk of the boat asked McGrew what he had, and McGrew replied that he had "some chickens and eggs for Evansville, and a box for Cincinnati, and do you want them?" The clerk replied, in substance, that he would take the chickens and eggs, but would not take the box; that appellee had an arrangement with another company that carried freight between New Orleans and Cincinnati not to take freight to any point beyond Evansville, and that the other company would not take freight within the boundary between Evansville and Cairo or Paducah; and it further appears that the goods were stolen the same night that appellee refused to take them. It is the contention of appellee that it was not required by law to accept the box tendered, for the reason, as now relied on, that it could not be required to receive freight destined to a point beyond the end of its own line, which it appears in this case was Evansville, Indiana. It is true that the appellee was not bound to undertake to deliver the box to the consignee at Cincinnati, but it was its duty to accept the box, if tendered to it as a common carrier; for it was then its duty to carry the same to the end of its line, and there deliver, or offer to deliver, the box to some common carrier engaged in such business, to be by it forwarded or carried to Cincinnati. It is clear that the agreement between appellee and the other company did not furnish any excuse for its failure to receive the goods. Such an agreement is illegal and not enforceable even between parties thereto. Much less can it excuse a party for refusing to discharge its duty as a common carrier as to the third party. Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375, 6 L. R. A. 390, 12 S. W. 670.

Instruction "A." asked by appellant, correctly presented the law in the case, and should have been substantially given.

It can hardly be doubted but that the loss of the goods was the direct result of appellee's refusal to accept same, or, at any rate, appellee should be held to account therefore if appellant's theory is true, that it had no reasonable opportunity after notice of such refusal to make some other safe disposition of the goods; and the evidence conduces to show that it was impracticable, if not impossible, to make any safer disposition of the goods than to leave them in the warehouse. It is said in Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Freight Carriers, p. 383, that, "in the absence of any contract by an initial carrier to deliver perishable goods at their destination, the carrier's common-law liability is to deliver the goods in good order to the connecting carrier within a reasonable time." The instructions given by the court do not conform to this view of the law. They are also erroneous as to the agency of McGrew.

The third instruction is objectionable for the further reason that it calls special attention to certain evidence, and also requires the jury to believe that appellee had authorized or directed McGrew to receive freight for shipment on its boat, before they could hold appellee liable for his acts as to the box in question. It is said in 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 805, that "since most of the carrier's business, both as to the receipt of goods and the making of contracts for their transportation, must be conducted by agents, there is necessarily a large delegation of authority to them; and it is reasonable that the consignor should have the right to presume that they have the necessary authority to act for the carrier." It seems to be the settled rule of law that if a party knowingly permits a person to apparently act as his agent in such manner and for such a length of time as to induce a person of ordinary prudence to believe that such an assumed agent is in fact a general agent, then in such case the principal must be held to be bound by the acts of such agent.

For the errors indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to award the appellant a new trial, and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Du Relle, J., dissents from so much of the opinion as holds the carrier obliged by law to contract to forward freight beyond its line.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

E. A. CASSARD

v.

William R. TRACY, Plff. in Certiorari.

E. A. CASSARD

v.

F. C. ZACHARIE, Plff. in Certiorari.

(52 La. Ann. 835.)

(Nichols, Ch. J., and Monroe, J., dissent.)

- *1. The moment the Constitution of 1898 went into effect, appeals then pending in the court of appeals became entitled to consideration, not from the point of view of the jurisdiction conferred upon the court by the Constitution of 1879, but from the point of view of the jurisdiction conferred upon the court by the Constitution of 1898.
2. Under the Constitution of 1879 appeals to the court of appeals for the parish of Orleans in cases involving less than $500 were upon questions of law alone. Under the Constitution of 1898 the court has jurisdiction in all cases, both of the law and the facts.
3. Where an appeal in a case for less

*Headnotes by BLANCHARD, J.

NOTE.—For change of law as affecting pending appeals, see also McClain v. Williams (S. D.) 43 L. R. A. 287.

For change of remedies as affecting pending actions, see also Farley v. Gelsecker (Iowa) 6 L. R. A. 533; and Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones (Ill.) 24 L. R. A. 141.

As to vested right in statute of limitations, see McEldowney v. Wyatt (W. Va.) 45 L. R. A. 809, and note.
49 L. R. A.

than $500 was pending in the court of appeals for the parish of Orleans when the Constitution of 1898 went into effect, but the evidence upon which it was tried in the district court had not been taken down in writing, and no statement of facts could be agreed upon, it became the duty of the court of appeals to remand the case, in order that on a second trial the testimony might be reduced to writing, and thus, in case of a second appeal, the court would be in a position to discharge its constitutional duty of adjudging the facts as well as the law of the case.

(November 20, 1899.)

WRITS of certiorari to review judgments of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans, division D, requiring defendants to pay the amounts assessed against them for street paving. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Francis C. Zacharie for plaintiffs in certiorari.

Mr. Albert Voorhies for respondent.

Monroe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears from the record that E. A. Cassard brought suits against relators upon paving contracts for sums exceeding $100, but not exceeding, in the aggregate, $500; that the suits were consolidated, by consent, and tried together in division D of the civil district court, before the adoption of the present Constitution, and that there was judgment against Tracy for $56, and against Zacharie for $155. Under the Constitution then in force the cases were appealable upon questions of law alone, which were required to be taken up by means of bills of exception or assignments of error, accompanied by statements of fact agreed on or prepared by the trial judge. The defendants, however (relators here), reserved no bills of exception, nor did they agree upon or obtain from the trial judge any statements of fact. When the judgment was rendered against them, they moved for a new trial, but alleged no other grounds than that the judgment was contrary to law and the evidence, and that they were aggrieved thereby, and the new trial was refused. A suspensive appeal was then taken, and, after lodging the record in the appellate court, an assignment of error was filed setting forth that the judge quo had given judgment on quantum meruit, when, as appellants alleged, he ought either to have given judgment on the contracts sued on, or else have rejected plaintiff's demands. The cases were fixed for trial May 30, 1898, eighteen days after the new Constitution went into effect; and upon that day appellants filed a motion to remand them to the trial court, for reasons the substance of which will appear from the following excerpts from the opinion of the court of appeal, to wit: "A motion to remand is made on two grounds: (1) That there is no evidence in the record, the testimony in the lower court not having been taken down in writing, and that there is no statement of facts in the record, for the reason that opposing counsel could not agree upon the same, and the trial judge declined to make the same, although applied to therefor, for the reason, assigned by his honor, that he could not recall to memory the facts testified to. It is sufficient answer to this to say that the record does not disclose that any application was ever made, to court or counsel, for a statement of facts, and that we may not, properly, look beyond the record. We may add, however, that the proper course would have been to invoke, at the time, supervision of the action of the district judge, by writ in aid of our appellate jurisdiction. (2) That, under the new Constitution, the right is vested in defendants and appellants to have a trial, hearing, and judgment on this appeal and in this cause, both on the merits of the law and the facts. We have repeatedly ruled adversely to that contention, and our ruling has been sustained by the supreme court on a writ of review in the case of Rosetta Gravel Pav. & Improv. Co. v. Kennedy, 51 La. Ann. 1535, 26 So. 468. . . . Motion denied." The court then proceeded to decide the cases upon their merits, and affirmed the judgment appealed from. An application for rehearing was made and refused, and the appellants then made, to this court, the application which we are now considering, for the review of the judgment of the court of appeal upon the motion to remand; and in support of said application they urge that the provisions of the present Constitution, conferring jurisdiction on said court, apply to their cases, and entitle them to a hearing, etc., on the facts; and that, in order to obtain the same, it is necessary that said cases be remanded to, and retried in, the lower court.

The relator's proposition is, in effect, that the provisions of the present Constitution—which became operative May 12, 1898—shall be so construed as to deprive Cassard, and relieve them, of the judgment which had been rendered by the district court against them on March 22, 1898. The question which first suggests itself is whether the constitutional provisions invoked by relators are properly susceptible of the construction suggested. It is plain that the effect of this construction will be to give to those provisions a retroactive operation, and to undo something which had been lawfully done before they were brought into existence. The judgment obtained by Cassard in the district court had been so obtained agreeably to the then existing law, constitutional and statutory. At that time, and under that law, he might have been deprived of it by the action of the appellate court, exercising the legal discretion vested in it; by an adverse judgment in an action to annul, founded upon pre-existing causes, specified by law; or by allowing said judgment to become prescribed. These conditions were as though written into the title by which he acquired, but they were the only conditions by which it was affected. Otherwise, and by the textual provisions of our law, the judgment was his property by an indefeasible title. Our Code of Practice (art. 548) reads: "A judgment, when once rendered, becomes the property of him in whose favor it has been given, and the judge cannot alter the same except in the mode provided by law." After the judgment was signed, the judge by whom it was rendered was powerless to alter it, save through an action of nullity, and for pre-existing specified causes. When the appeal was perfected, he was ousted of jurisdiction except for certain limited purposes, and jurisdiction of the cases was vested in the appellate court. In the exercise of that jurisdiction it was competent for the appellate court to have amended or reversed it, or if, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, that court had reached the conclusion that the interests of justice would be best subserved thereby, it might have set the judgment aside, and have remanded the case to be tried de novo. But no authority was vested in any other department of the government either to set the judgment aside or to control the discretion vested in the appellate court in the premises, or in any other manner, without due process of law, to deprive Cassard of his property. If the convention which, after his acquisition of said judgment, adopted the present Constitution, could, by conferring jurisdiction upon a court created by it, impose upon such court the obligation to annul or destroy said judgment, it would seem to follow that it might have annulled or destroyed it by direct action, or by a general provision couched in some such language as the following, to wit: "All judgments heretofore rendered by any of the courts of this state, and which are pending on or subject to appeal, are hereby annulled and set aside, and the causes in which they were rendered shall be tried de novo." And if it was competent to have annulled such judgments in order that the causes should be tried again in another way, it is difficult to perceive why, as a question of principle, they might not have been thus annulled for any other reason, or for no reason at all, the answer to all objections being that such action would merely affect the remedy. Nor would the situation, so far as the present cases are concerned, be in any wise altered if the defendants had taken a devolutive appeal twelve months, less a day, after the rendition of the judgment, instead of a suspensive appeal; or had taken no appeal at all; for, if the argument relied on be sound, it would, in either event, be the duty of the trial or appellate court, as the case might be, to set aside the judgment in order to meet the new conditions.

It is evident that such retroactive operation is likely to work injustice and hardship. Those who had gained their causes before the enactments in question went into effect were subjected to the usual trouble, delay, and expense of one trial; and the setting aside of their judgments, in order to meet conditions subsequently created, will subject them to further trouble, further delay, and further expense, and will give their opponents, who have lost, an unfair advantage, since the latter may demand new trials when they find it to their interest, for purposes of delay or otherwise, to do so, while those who have already gained their cases can have nothing better to hope for, and may lose, upon a second trial, by reason of the failure of their witnesses, or other untoward circumstances, all that they had gained upon the first. In addition to which, if the cases are, like the present, on appeal, the unfortunate appellees may be made liable for the costs of appeal, though the judgments appealed from were correct when rendered. It is in view of consequences such as these that all writers upon the construction of law concur in the opinion that, whether constitutional or statutory, it should be construed to operate prospectively only, unless such construction is absolutely precluded by the language used. Judge Cooley says: "We shall venture also to express the opinion that a Constitution should operate prospectively only unless the words employed show a clear intention that it should have a retrospective effect. This is the rule in regard to statutes, and it is 'one of such obvious convenience and justice that it must always be adhered to in the construction of statutes, unless in cases where there is something on the face of the enactment putting it beyond doubt that the legislature meant it to operate retrospectively.' Retrospective legislation, except when designed to cure formal defects, or otherwise operate remedially, is commonly objectionable in principle, and apt to result in injustice; and it is a sound rule of construction which refuses lightly to imply an intent to enact it. And we are aware of no reasons applicable to ordinary legislation which do not, upon this point, apply equally well to Constitutions." Cooley, Const. Lim. 62 [6th ed. p. 77]. Mr. Sedgwick repeats, again and again, that "the judiciary will give all laws a prospective operation only, unless their language is so clear as not to be susceptible of any other construction." Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. p. 173. Mr. Black, in a recent work, says: "A constitutional provision should not be construed with a retrospective operation unless that is the unmistakable intention of the words used, or the obvious design of the authors." Black, Interpretation of Laws, p. 20. From Mr. Sutherland we take the following: "Retrospective Laws. Such statutes, when not forbidden by the Constitution, may be valid, but there is always a strong leaning against giving them a retrospective operation, and this proceeds from the presumption that the legislature does not intend what is unjust. 'Those whose duty it is,' says Erle, Ch. J., 'to administer the law, very properly guard against giving to an act of Parliament a retrospective operation, unless the intention of the legislature that it should be so construed is expressed in clear, plain, and unambiguous language.' Such laws are looked upon with general disfavor. In Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 506, Kent, Ch. J., said: 'There has not been, perhaps, a distinguished jurist or elementary writer within the last two centuries, who has had occasion to take notice of retrospective laws, either civil or criminal, but has mentioned them with caution, distrust, or disapprobation.' Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 406. 'If, before final decision, a new law as to procedure is enacted and goes into effect, it must, from that time, govern and regulate the proceedings. But the steps already taken, the status of the case, as to the court in which it was commenced, the pleadings put in, and all things done under the late law, will stand, unless an intention to the contrary is plainly manifested; and pending cases are only affected by general words as to future proceedings from the point reached when the new law intervened.' Id. § 482, citing authorities. It must be presumed that the members of the convention which adopted the Constitution of 1898 were familiar with these commonly accepted canons of construction, and that, when they intended any particular provision incorporated in that instrument to operate retrospectively, they formulated it in such language as to leave no room for doubt. Coming, then, to the provisions which are here invoked, it may be remarked that under the late Constitution there was a court of appeals for the parish of Orleans, which had appellate jurisdiction on questions of law alone in cases where the amount in dispute, or fund to be distributed, exceeded $100, and was less than $500; and upon both law and facts where the amount in dispute, or fund to be distributed, exceeded $500, and was less than $2,000; and that the change made by the present Constitution (in so far as concerns the matter at issue) was to confer upon the court which was created as the successor of the one mentioned jurisdiction as to facts, as well as law, in cases where "the amount in dispute or fund," etc., exceeds $100 and is less than $500. Counsel for relators refers to the following as the provisions in the new Constitution upon which he relies:

"Art. 131. There shall be a court of appeal to be known and designated as the court of appeal for the parish of Orleans."

"Art. 325 . . . Seventh. The supreme court, court of appeal, and district courts provided for by this Constitution are declared to be, and shall be construed to be, the same courts as those of the same name created by the Constitution of 1879, and all writs, orders, and process issued from said courts, which shall be pending, or in course of execution at the date when this Constitution goes into effect, together with all the records and archives of said courts, shall at once, and by virtue of this article, be transferred to, and held to be cases pending in, and writs, orders, and process issued from, and in course of execution under the authority of, and records and archives of, said courts, respectively, as organized under this Constitution."

"Art. 98. The courts of appeal, except as otherwise provided for in this Constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall extend to all cases, civil and probate, when the matter in dispute, or funds to be distributed, shall exceed one hundred dollars exclusive of interest, and shall not exceed two thousand dollars exclusive of interest."

"Art. 103. All cases on appeal to the court of appeal shall be tried on the original record, pleadings, and evidence."

It cannot be said of the language of these articles that it so clearly expresses the intention that they shall operate retrospectively as to be susceptible of no other construction. Upon the contrary, there is not an affirmative expression, or a word having an affirmative signification, which even remotely indicates such intention. That meaning can be arrived at only by a process of ratiocination, the argument being somewhat as follows: "The cases now under consideration were pending in the court of appeals before the adoption of the present Constitution. That court had, however, jurisdiction only as to the law. By the operation of the new Constitution they became cases pending in the present court of appeal, upon which court the obligation is imposed to exercise jurisdiction as to the facts as well as the law, but the jurisdiction as to the facts cannot be exercised in the present condition of the cases, for the reason that the facts are not disclosed in the record; hence the judgment rendered in said cases by the district court before the adoption of the present Constitution must be set aside, and the cases must be remanded and tried de novo, and in such a manner as to enable the court of appeal to pass on the facts." This amounts to saying: "We must give to these provisions the prospective operation contemplated by their framers, and, in order to do so, we must give them the retrospective operation for which the relators contend." If the relators' cases were the only ones to which the provisions in question were intended or could be held to apply, there would be no answer to this argument, for, unless they were applied as suggested, they would be entirely without effect. But the relators' are not the only cases to be affected. Construing them to operate prospectively only, the enactments will affect all cases which, being within the limit as to amount, may hereafter be filed, as long as the Constitution remains unchanged; as also all cases filed before the adoption of the Constitution, but which were untied in the district courts at that time; and with respect to such cases the law will bear equally and equitably upon all litigants, and will work no hardship. The only other cases to which the new law, by giving it a retroactive effect, could be made to apply, are those which had been tried and decided, but which had not been appealed, before its adoption, and those which had been tried and decided, and which were pending on appeal. Of this latter class it would be doing no violence to probability to assume that the larger proportion had been taken up on statements of fact agreed on by the opposing counsel, so that we have left cases pending on appeal on statements of fact prepared by trial judges, cases pending on appeal where no statements of fact had been agreed on or obtained from the trial judges, and cases decided in the district courts, and not appealed when the Constitution was adopted; and to the last two classes, inconsiderable in number, by comparison, and exceptional as to status, the constitutional provision invoked can be applied only by giving them a retroactive operation, which will have the effect of undoing that which has been lawfully done, and of depriving citizens, by mere legislation, of that which our law declares to be property lawfully acquired.

49 L. R. A.

It will be conceded, however, that the intention of the lawmaker can be properly arrived at only by construing the different provisions of the law together, so that no one provision shall be entirely sacrificed in order to give an extreme, or supposed full, effect to another. Observing this rule, we find in article 325 (the "Schedule"), to which relators' counsel has referred us, a paragraph not mentioned in the reference, which reads as follows: "Second. All writs, actions, causes of action, proceedings, prosecutions, and rights of individuals or bodies corporate and of the state, when not inconsistent with this Constitution, shall continue as valid and in full force and effect." This seems to be a distinct manifestation of solicitude for the preservation of existing conditions and existing rights, and a declaration that the Constitution is to operate as little disturbance of those conditions and rights as may be consistent with the enforcement of the instrument as a whole. The "right of individuals, . . . when not inconsistent" with the law, would have remained "valid and in full force and effect" without any affirmative declaration on the subject. The declaration is, therefore, made ex industria, as a rule of construction, applicable to the entire instrument, and, read in connection with the provisions which we have been considering, expresses the intention of the framers of the Constitution in language just the reverse of that required to entitle those provisions to the retroactive operation claimed for them. But the case is made still stronger by one of the articles to which we are especially referred by relators' counsel, to wit: "Art. 103. All cases on appeal to the court of appeal shall be tried on the original record, pleadings, and evidence." How can this article be applied in the cases now before us, or in any case which had been tried and decided before its adoption, and the "original . . . evidence" in which had not been preserved? The original record or pleadings in such cases may be obtained and used, but the original evidence, delivered orally, and not taken down, belongs to the past, and is beyond recall. The judge a quo, we are told by the relators' counsel, is unable to remember it, and the opposing counsel were unable to agree upon it. We have no means of knowing that the witnesses who testified can now be found, and not even those witnesses themselves, if found, could, with the best intentions, assure us that they would be able, upon a second trial, to give the same testimony as was given by them on the first. The original evidence, applying those words prospectively (from the date of the adoption of the Constitution), no doubt has been and will be taken down and preserved in all cases subject to appeal on the law and the facts, and thereafter tried or to be tried; but with respect to cases tried before the adoption of the Constitution, appealable only on questions of law, the original evidence, delivered orally, and not taken down, is no longer within human reach, and, to construe the articles of the Constitution which confer jurisdiction on the court of appeal to mean that such cases shall be tried by that court upon such original evidence, would be to hold that the framers of the Constitution intended to require an impossibility, in order to work an injustice. There are many irreconcilable decisions upon the general subject of retrospective legislation. Upon one branch of it—i. e., the proper application of the term "ex post facto"—even the convention which framed the Federal Constitution seems for a while to have labored under some misapprehension. Mr. Justice Miller, speaking as the organ of the Supreme Court of the United States, makes the following comment: "As the clause was first adopted, the words concerning contracts were not in it, because it was supposed that the phrase ex post facto included laws concerning contracts as well as others. But it was ascertained, before the completion of the instrument, that this was a phrase which, in English jurisprudence, had acquired a signification limited to the criminal law, and the words 'or any law impairing the obligation of contracts' were added, to give security to rights resting in contracts. 2 Bancroft, History of the Constitution, 213." Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed. 506, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443. While, therefore, an ex post facto law is retroactive in the sense that it operates upon a subject not liable to it at the time the law was made, the term is uniformly and exclusively applied by the courts to penal and criminal legislation, and, so applied, is defined to be a law which, in relation to an offense or its consequences, alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage. Generally speaking, the prohibition against ex post facto laws does not, therefore, apply where the effect of the enactment is to modify the rigor of the existing law. And where there is involved merely a question of penalty, in which the state alone is concerned, an enactment abolishing such penalty pending proceedings for its enforcement is competent, and leaves the court, upon which is imposed the obligation of rendering the final judgment, without legal authority to impose such penalty. But, having jurisdiction of the case,—i. e., the right to declare the law,—the court must hold that the law does not authorize the penalty, although it may have authorized it when the proceedings were commenced, and when, by the judgment appealed from, it was imposed. Such a case presents simply a question of the power of the sovereign by whom the penalty was imposed to remit it, or to repeal the law imposing it, at discretion, and does not involve the impairment of any obligations of the contracts of individuals or the divestiture of individual rights of property. This is the view which has been taken of laws authorizing imprisonment for debt. Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648; Van Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 552, sub nom. United States ex rel. Van Hoffman v. Quincy, 18 L. ed. 409; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 478.

A different question arises when the law imposing the penalty also establishes a basis upon which individuals may be said to acquire rights with respect to its enforcement; as, for instance, where the law gives a proportion of the fine to be recovered to the informer, who brings a qui tam action for the recovery. It has been held, in such cases, in England, that the rights of the plaintiff become vested by the bringing of the action, and that they would not be considered as affected by subsequent legislation unless it was so declared in express terms. Crouch v. Jeffries, 4 Burr. 2460. And so, in New York, it has been held, where an action was brought against the sheriff for a penalty for permitting the escape of a prisoner, and, pending the action, a law was passed to the effect that a return or recaption before suit should be a good defense, and it was claimed that such law operated retrospectively, that it should not be so construed. Thompson, J., as the organ of the court, said: "It may, in general, be truly observed of retrospective laws of every description that they neither accord with sound legislation nor the fundamental principles of the social compact. . . . How unjust, then, the imputation against the legislature that they intend a law to be of that description, unless the most clear and unequivocal expressions are adopted." And these views were concurred in by Judge Kent. Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 477; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 167. Mr. Sutherland states the general doctrine upon this point in the following language: "If a penal statute is repealed pending an appeal, and before the final action of the appellate court, it will prevent an affirmance of a conviction, and the prosecution must be dismissed, or the judgment reversed. A final judgment before repeal is not affected by it. The repeal operates as a pardon of all offenses against it, and a bar to any subsequent prosecution. . . . Where a statute imposes a penalty for an injurious act done to the rights of others, such penalty to be recovered by the party aggrieved, it is in the nature of a satisfaction to him, as well as a punishment of the offender. In such a case the plaintiff is said to have acquired a vested right to the penalty as soon as the offense is committed, and a general repeal of the statute after action accrued does not affect that right." Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 166.

When the statute to be construed will impair the obligations of a contract by having a retrospective operation attributed to it, such construction is inadmissible, because it would bring the act in conflict with the prohibition of the Constitution of the United States. More than this, it has been held, and may be considered settled, that "the remedy, for the enforcement of a contract, to which a party is entitled under state statutes in force when the contract was made, cannot be subsequently taken away by decisions of the state courts giving those statutes an erroneous construction, any more than by subsequent legislation. Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall. 575, sub nom. United States ex rel. Butz v. Muscatine, 19 L. ed. 490." Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 478. Whether a judgment is to be regarded as a contract is a question which has been differently determined in different jurisdictions. In so far as concerns the Constitution of the United States, it may be considered as having been definitely answered in the negative, since the Supreme Court of the United States has so decided. Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 38 L. ed. 925, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54. In this state it has been more than intimated that a judgment is to be regarded as a contract, though not where it is the outcome of an action in damages for a tort. In Scott v. Duke, 3 La. Ann. 253, Mr. Justice Rost, as the organ of the court, said: "The distinction between laws impairing the obligation of contracts or of judgments which the law holds to be contracts, and laws modifying the remedy given by the legislature to enforce the obligation, was fully recognized by Judge Marshall in the case of Sturges v. Crowninshield [4 Wheat. 200, 4 L. ed. 549]." But in State v. New Orleans, 32 La. Ann. 709, where the question was distinctly presented, it was held that a judgment for damages for a tort could not, in any manner, be considered a contract; and this doctrine was approved by the Supreme Court of the United States in the same case on writ of error. Louisiana ex rel. Folsom v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 211. There seems to be no reason to doubt, however, that a judgment is to be considered as "property," within the meaning of the 14th Amendment. In the case last above cited, Mr. Justice Bradley, in a concurring opinion, said: "But an ordinary judgment of damages for a tort, rendered against the person committing it in favor of the person injured, stands upon a very different footing. Such a judgment is founded upon an absolute right, and is as much an article of property as anything else that a party owns, and the legislature can no more violate it without due process of law than it can any other property. To abrogate the remedy for enforcing it, and to give no other adequate remedy in its stead, is to deprive the owner of his property, within the meaning of the 14th Amendment." Louisiana ex rel. Folsom v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 211. In Gilman v. Tucker, 128 N. Y. 190, 13 L. R. A. 304, 28 N. E. 1040, it was said: "We must bear in mind that a judgment has been rendered, and the rights flowing from it have passed beyond the legislative power, either directly or indirectly, to reach or destroy." In Greenwood v. Butler, 52 Kan. 424, 22 L. R. A. 465, 34 Pac. 967, it was said: "Speaking generally, it is the province of the legislature to establish, within constitutional limits, the rules, not only of procedure, but for the determination of rights by which the courts shall be governed. These rules must, in the very nature of things, precede the action of the courts in the orderly determination of the rights of parties. Those interested in any controversy are given their day in court. At the appointed time the court hears their proofs, the presentation of their views as to the law fixing their rights, and thereupon proceeds to determine all questions, both of fact and of law, presented. This determination is entered of record, and becomes a final settlement and determination of the controversy. It hardly seems necessary to cite authorities to support the proposition that a final judgment so entered is not to be changed or set aside by the lawmaking power. Our form of government does not contemplate an appeal from the judgment of the courts to the legislature, nor does it contemplate nor authorize, by a sweeping act of the legislature, a change in the force and effect of a great class of judgments already entered." See also Weaver v. Lapsley, 43 Ala. 224; Merchants' Bank v. Ballou, 1 Va. S. C. Rep. 102, 44 L. R. A. 306, 32 S. E. 481. In McCabe v. Emerson, 18 Pa. 111, it was claimed that a right of appeal had been granted by statute in a case in which judgment had been rendered under a law which allowed no appeal. Mr. Justice Rogers, as the organ of the court, said: "My respect for the legislature is too great to allow me for a single instant to suppose that they designed so great a wrong as, by a retrospective act, to make that right which was clearly wrong. But, granting the intention to be clearly expressed, I have no hesitation in saying that the act is unconstitutional and void." See also, to the same effect, People v. Carnal, 6 N. Y. 463; Lawrence v. Miller, 2 N. Y. 245. Mr. Sedgwick, in summing up his presentation of this particular question,—i. e., how far remedial legislation, or legislation regulating procedure, may be permitted to affect acquired rights,—says that no general rule can be laid down, and that "at present all that can be done is to bring each case to the test of previous decisions and of principle, and, as far as possible, to endeavor to restrict the operation of laws to future cases." [P. 661.] Mr. Sutherland says: "No attempt has been made to fix definitely the line between alterations of the remedy which are to be deemed legitimate and those which, under the form of modifying the remedy, impair substantial rights; every case must be determined on its own circumstances. . . . Vested rights cannot be destroyed, devested, or impaired by direct legislation. Their protection is one of the primary purposes of government. They are secured by the Bill of Rights and the constitutional limitations upon the exercise of the sovereign powers. There is a vested right in property which one owns, and it cannot be legislated away. A vested right is property as tangible things are when they spring from contract or the principles of the common law. There is a vested right in an accrued cause of action; in a defense to a cause of action; even in the statute of limitations when the bar has attached, by which an action for a debt is barred. . . . When a right has been perfected by judgment, the fruits of recovery cannot be diverted by new legislation, nor subjected to new hazard by reviving a new right to appeal, or some other mode of review." Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 478, 480. Mr. Black says: "But, as has been already stated, statutes which would impair or destroy vested rights will not be allowed to operate retrospectively, if that result can be avoided by any reasonable construction. And this rule is applicable to laws relating to remedies and the course of procedure and practice in the courts in respect to their applicability to pending suits." Black, Interpretation of Laws, p. 267.

It is suggested that, as the judgment obtained by Cassard in the district court was subject to appeal, and had, in fact, been appealed, when the new Constitution was adopted, it cannot be regarded as a final judgment, and hence that Cassard had no such vested or property right therein as to bring this case within any rule which can be found applicable to the case of a final judgment from which no appeal could be taken. The judgment in question decided all the points in controversy between the parties, and had been duly signed by the trial judge, and was, therefore, "final," according to the text of the law. Code Prac. arts. 539 et seq. It is true that it was not final in the sense of having passed beyond the reach of judicial scrutiny, since it was awaiting review in the appellate court. But, as has been already stated, the plaintiff acquired said judgment as property, subject to certain conditions specified in the law under and by virtue of which he obtained it; and that it might be reviewed and reversed on appeal was one of those conditions. Except in so far as it might be affected by those specified conditions, however, the judgment was declared to be his property, and it was so by an indefeasible title. It is unnecessary to inquire what difference, if any, it would make if there existed no specific declaration of our law that "a judgment, when once rendered, becomes the property of him in whose favor it is given," or if that declaration applied only to judgments rendered by courts of last resort, or which are unappealable. If we should suppose that, in either of these other cases, the judgment in question would be regarded as merely one stage in the plaintiff's progress in the prosecution of a remedy which the state was as free to withdraw as it had been free to provide, and that the plaintiff would have no right to complain of a modification of that remedy which required him to begin over again, this would be merely to suppose a case, the conditions of which are different from those of the case which we are called on to decide. It is one thing to provide, or withhold, or modify, a remedy, and quite another thing to declare what is and what is not property, and to establish the conditions under which it may be acquired and held. A remedy may be provided to-day, and modified or abolished to-morrow. But a right of property, once vested in an individual, is not to be dealt with in that way. The fundamental reason for the establishment of any and all government is to prevent just such action, and to secure to the individual citizen the enjoyment of his property and his life free from molestation and arbitrary interference. The law provides how property may be acquired, and that, when acquired, it cannot be taken from the owner save by due process of law; and bald legislation is not due process of law. If, then, the judgment in question is property, it falls within the protecting rule. And the law declares, in terms, that it is property, for the text and the jurisprudence are conclusive that article 548 of the Code of Practice applies to judgments rendered by the trial judge, whether the cases decided are appealable or not. It may be that in other jurisdictions such judgments are not declared to be property, and that they are regarded as mere incidents pertaining to a remedy, the whole of which is at all times under the control of the state; but that has nothing to do with the question before us. The state of Louisiana, acting in her sovereign capacity, has made her declaration upon the subject, and the rights of the citizens of Louisiana who are parties to the present controversy are to be determined upon the basis of that declaration. She has said that the judgment of the trial judge, when it becomes final so far as he can make it so, and whether appealable or not, is the property of him in whose favor it is given; and there is no more reason, as far as we can see, for denying full effect to this declaration than there would be for denying that real estate purchased at sheriff's sale is the property of the purchaser. The case of Dunning v. West, 51 La. Ann. 618, 25 So. 307, was appealed directly to this court, and the conclusion was reached that the interests of justice would be best subserved by remanding it in order to obtain additional testimony. It was a fact, of which the court took notice, that, after the judgment in the lower court, the plaintiff's wife, upon whose account the action had been brought (being an action in damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by her), had been made, by law, a competent witness, whereas she had been unable to testify upon the original trial. Whether the case should or should not be remanded for that or for any other reason was, however, a matter within the legal discretion of the court, and it was so dealt with. And so it was a matter within the legal discretion of the court of appeal to have remanded the case which we are now considering, if, in the opinion of that tribunal, the interests of justice would thereby have been best subserved. But the discretion thus vested in this court, and exercised in remanding the Dunning Case, and vested in the court of appeal, and exercised by it in refusing to remand the instant case, is not subject to legislative control; and it is that sort of control which is invoked when we are asked to order the court of appeal to remand this case, which, exercising the judicial discretion vested in it, it has refused to remand. As a matter of course, the judgment rendered by the trial judge in the Dunning Case having been set aside, the case, when tried again, will be tried according to the law regulating the competency of witnesses which may be in force at the time of such trial, and the act of the legislature by which married women became competent witnesses in certain cases to which their husbands are parties, is given a retroactive effect, quoad that case; but it will be observed that the case was not re-opened in recognition of the supposed obligatory force of that statute, and, in so far as the reasoning might be construed as pointing in that direction, it must be considered as controlled by the views herein expressed.

A review of the other authorities to which we have been referred by the learned counsel for relators fails to disclose their applicability. There are many instances in which statutes regulating procedure may properly affect pending cases,—indeed, it may be said that this is so generally; but the line must be drawn in any specific case where, “under the form of modifying the remedy” or regulating the procedure, substantial rights, legally acquired, are impaired or divested. The authorities cited belong to the former class, the instant case to the latter.

The counsel concludes his brief with an argument upon the subject of the action of the court of appeal (in deciding the case upon its merits) upon his assignment of error. 49 L. R. A.

We think the question presented is not properly before us. The alleged error complained of in the pleadings was the refusal of the court of appeal to remand, and the prayer of the petition is that said court be ordered to remand, the case. We have concluded that there was no error in the refusal to remand, and the subsequent action of the court, affirming the judgment appealed from, formed no part of the issue there presented and decided. It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the demand of the relators herein be rejected, and this proceeding dismissed at their cost.

Breaux, J., concurs in the decree. Watkins, J., dissents, adhering to the views expressed in Dunning v. West, 51 La. Ann. 618, 25 So. 307.

Watkins, J., dissenting:

In my opinion the doctrine announced by the court in Dunning v. West, 51 La. Ann. 618, 25 So. 306, is the correct one, and strictly applicable to the instant case.

A rehearing having been had, Blanchard, J., on February 19, 1900, delivered the following additional opinion:

A reconsideration of these cases has led to a conclusion at variance with that announced in the former opinion of the court. When trial was had in the district court, and when a suspensive appeal from the judgment there rendered in favor of the plaintiff was taken in each of the causes to the court of appeals, and lodged in the latter tribunal, the Constitution of 1879 was in force. That Constitution (art. 128) provided that “said appeals [meaning from the district court of the parish of Orleans to the court of appeals] shall be upon questions of law alone in all cases involving less than five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, and upon the law and facts in other cases.” (Italics ours.) The amount involved in each of these cases was less than $500. As, in case of appeal, the court of appeals would not have jurisdiction to sit in judgment upon the facts, the evidence adduced on the trial in the district court was not taken down in writing. Consequently, when appeal by defendants to the court of appeals followed the adverse judgment of the district court, it went up on the law alone. Shortly after the causes were lodged in the court of appeals, and before their trial there, the Constitution of 1898 went into effect, superseding the Constitution of 1879. The superseding Constitution changed the court of appeals for the parish of Orleans in some respects,—among others, increased the number of its judges from two to three, and enlarged its jurisdiction. Under the new Constitution its jurisdiction extends to all cases, civil or probate, when the matter in dispute or the fund to be distributed exceeds $100, exclusive of interest, and does not exceed $2,000, exclusive of interest. Article 98. And it is provided that all cases on appeal to the courts of appeal shall be tried on the original record, pleadings, and evidence. Article 103. A further provision is to the effect that all causes pending in the court of appeals as constituted under the Constitution of 1879 were to be transferred to, and held to be causes pending in, the court of appeals as organized under the Constitution of 1898; and this was to be the case at once upon the going into effect of the latter Constitution. § 7, art. 325. By the terms of its own declaration, the Constitution of 1898 went into full force and effect from and after May 12, 1898, except as therein otherwise provided. § 8, art. 325. It thus appears that by operation of the new Constitution the appellants in the cases at bar became entitled to the judgment of the court of appeals on the facts as well as on the law of their cases. But the testimony had not been reduced to writing in the trial court, nor had any statement of facts been agreed upon. It was therefore impossible, in the then state of the record, for the court of appeals to discharge its constitutional duty of pronouncing judgment upon the facts of the cases, and appellants were not willing to submit the same upon the law alone.

This being the situation, appellants filed in the court of appeals a motion to remand the cases; suggesting their right, under the Constitution of 1898, to have a trial, hearing, and judgment on their appeals both on the law and facts, and praying that the causes be sent back to the district court, with instructions to be there tried anew, to the end that the evidence might be reduced to writing, in order that, in case of a second appeal, the appellate court might perform its constitutional duty of passing judgment on both the facts and the law. This motion was denied, and the court of appeals, proceeding to adjudge only the law of the case, affirmed the judgments appealed from. This was error. The motion to remand should have been granted. The moment the Constitution of 1898 went into effect, these appeals, then pending in the court of appeals, became entitled to consideration, not from the point of view of the restricted jurisdiction conferred upon the court of appeals by the Constitution of 1879, but from the point of view of the enlarged jurisdiction conferred upon that court by the Constitution of 1898. And inasmuch as there could be no judgment pronounced upon the facts, because of the lack of evidence or of an agreed statement of facts in the record, the court should have proceeded to put itself in a position where it could discharge its whole constitutional duty to the litigants. Obviously, the only way it could do this was to set aside the judgments appealed from and remand the cases, with instructions for trial de novo, and the taking down of the evidence offered. Then, if a second appeal followed, it would be in a position to judge both the law and the facts. To hold otherwise is to decree that these appeals were determinable under the jurisdiction vesting in the court of appeals under the Constitution of 1879, which Constitution, as the organic law of the state, had been entirely superseded, in all particulars having any bearing upon these cases, by the later Constitution, and was no longer in force. The language of the Constitution of 1898 is plain and emphatic, to the effect that all cases on appeal to the court of appeals shall be tried on the original record, pleadings, and evidence. On appeal when? Obviously, at the time of and subsequent to the date when the new Constitution became operative. In these cases there were the original records and pleadings, but no original evidence. It cannot be said the evidence was lacking through laches or neglect of the appellants. No, it was lacking because of the fact that when trial was had in the court of the first instance no appeal was allowable on the facts, and hence no necessity to reduce the testimony of witnesses to writing. But before trial was had in the appellate court the remedy on appeal was enlarged. The appellants became entitled to the judgment of the higher court on the facts as well as the law. It was competent for the new Constitution to so ordain. The judgments which plaintiffs had recovered in the trial court were not final judgments. No vested rights had yet accrued. No indefeasible title in anything had passed. A suspensive appeal was pending, when, through the adoption of a new organic law, the state declared a change of public policy,—that appeals in causes under $500, then pending or thereafter to be pending, should be determined by the court of appeals upon the facts as well as the law, just as was the case with appeals in cases over $500. For the court of appeals to try these cases “on the original evidence,” in the language of the Constitution, it must have the evidence before it, and the only way possible to bring this about was to remand.

That the articles of the Constitution of 1898, providing an enlarged remedy on appeal in the cases under consideration, are not violative of any guaranty of the Federal Constitution, we think clear. The rule that the terms of a statute or Constitution are not to be interpreted as having a retrospective or retroactive operation, unless the language used plainly conveys that intention and is susceptible of no other interpretation, finds no application to remedial statutes or to the remedial provisions of organic laws. Remedial laws are an exception to the general rule, and may have retroactive or retrospective force. The text writers so declare. Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. 469 (*376); Id. 476 (*381); Black, Interpretation of Laws, 265 et seq.; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. p. 221, §§ 164, 165, 482; Wade, Retroactive Laws, § 198; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 451; Id. p. 506; 1 Marcade, No. 55, p. 43. And the doctrine finds confirmation in the jurisprudence of this state. Scott v. Duke, 3 La. Ann. 253; Kilgore v. Planters' Bank, 3 La. Ann. 693; Commercial Bank v. Markham, 3 La. Ann. 698; Featherstonh v. Compton, 8 La. Ann. 285; Todd v. Landry, 5 Mart. (La.) 463, 12 Am. Dec. 479; Ashbridge's Succession, 1 La. Ann. 206; State v. Kling, 12 La. Ann. 593; Frey v. Hebenstreit, 1 Rob. (La.) 565; Baldwin v. Bennett, 6 Rob. (La.) 309; Cooper v. Hodge, 17 La. 476; Borgsted v.

Nolan, 17 La. 593; Hoa v. Lefranc, 18 La. Ann. 397; Walmsley v. Nicholls, 36 La. Ann. 790; State ex rel. Bonnet v. Mathews, 33 La. Ann. 103; Goodwill v. Elkins, 51 La. Ann. 522, 25 So. 317; Dunning v. West, 51 La. Ann. 618, 25 So. 306. In the last case cited (very recently decided) the court used this language: "The only question, really, is whether the law enacted after the ruling in the court below should be considered as now applying. We think it does apply. The law is entirely remedial, and affects none of the vested rights of anyone." And in denying the application for rehearing it was said: "But the accepted canon of construction of retroactive laws, or those to which a retrospective effect is given, is that 'whatever relates to the manner of conducting and trying a suit is always within the control of the legislature, who can at any time make any change or modification they may think conducive to the public good, and a proper administration of justice in our courts.'"

The court of appeals cites, in support of its ruling denying the motion to remand, the opinion of this court in Rosetta Gravel Pav. & Improv. Co. v. Kennedy, 51 La. Ann. 1535, 26 So. 468. The main question there did not arise on a motion to remand in order that the evidence might be taken down in writing so that the court of appeals may on a subsequent appeal pass on the facts as well as the law of the case, but did arise in relation to certain testimony offered in the trial court and excluded, to which exclusion no sufficient bill of exceptions was taken, so as to reserve the point and bring it properly before the appellate court for its ruling. There are, however, in the opinion handed down in that case on the application for rehearing, statements of the law in conflict with the rule announced in this opinion, and in the opinion of the court in Dunning v. West, 51 La. Ann. 618, 25 So. 306; and, in so far as this is so, the Rosetta Gravel Co. Case must be considered overruled.

For the reasons assigned, it is ordered that the former decree of this court herein be set aside, and it is now ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment of the court of appeals be annulled and vacated, and that this cause be remanded to the court of the first instance for further proceedings according to law, and with instructions to take down in writing the testimony offered on the second trial of the case there, to the end that, should an appeal be prosecuted to the court of appeals from the judgment rendered, that tribunal may be in a position to pass upon both the law and the facts of the case. It is further ordered, etc., that the costs herein incurred in the court of appeals and in this court be borne by plaintiff; those of the district court to abide the final determination of the cause.

Watkins, J., concurring:

The application for certiorari and writ of review having been vacated by the decree of this court, a rehearing was subsequently granted; and it becomes necessary for us to again examine the grounds on which that opinion rests, and to decide whether same should be reinstated and maintained, or a different decree entered.

The case presented is as follows: The plaintiff, Cassard, instituted two suits—one against Tracy and another against Zacharie—upon paving contracts, and same were consolidated in the district court for trial and judgment; the amounts involved in said suits being in excess of $100, but less than $500. Same were tried together in the civil district court prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1898, and there was a judgment rendered against Tracy for $56, and against Zacharie for $155. Under the terms of the Constitution of 1879, which was in force when said suits were instituted and judgment rendered, an appeal could be prosecuted in such cases on questions of law alone, to be taken to the court of appeals on bills of exception or assignments of error, accompanied by a statement of facts applicable to such questions of law. The defendants in said cases (relators here) reserved no bills of exceptions in the course of the trial in the district court, nor was there any agreed statement of facts prepared and filed therein conformably to law; but when the judgment was rendered against them they moved for a new trial upon the sole ground that the judgment rendered was contrary to law and evidence, and that they were aggrieved thereby. The applications for new trial were refused by the trial judge, and thereupon the defendants obtained an order for a suspensive appeal to the respondents' court; and after lodging the record therein they filed an assignment of errors, setting forth "that the judge a quo had given judgment on a quantum meruit, when, as appellants alleged, he ought either to have given judgment on the contract sued on, or else have rejected plaintiff's demands," altogether. The consolidated cases were fixed for trial in the respondents' court on May 30, 1898, eighteen days after the Constitution of 1898 had gone into effect; and upon that day appellants filed a motion to have the cause remanded to the district court for a retrial, for the reasons (1) that there is no evidence in the record (the testimony in the lower court not having been reduced to writing), and that there is no statement of facts in the record; (2) that under the Constitution of 1898 the appellants have the right to a trial and judgment on their appeal in the respondents' court, based on both the law and the facts. The respondents heard and considered said motion to remand, and declined to grant the same: (1) Because there is no evidence in the record, or statement of facts, and that "he could not recall to memory the facts testified to," same having been tried in their court de novo; (2) because the provisions of the Constitution of 1898 conferring jurisdiction on their court to pass upon the law and the facts had no application to a case situated as the one under consideration was,—citing Rosetta Gravel Pav. & Improv. Co. v. Kennedy, 51 La. Ann. 1535, 26 So. 468. Thereupon the respondents proceeded to decide the case upon its merits, and affirmed the judgment appealed from, and an application for rehearing was made and refused, whereupon the appellants made the application to this court for certiorari or a writ of review.

The contention of relators is that the provision of the Constitution of 1898, conferring jurisdiction on courts of appeal to try and decide appeals from the civil district court of the parish of Orleans on the law and facts, is applicable to cases which are now under consideration, and that the respondents erred in declining to take jurisdiction thereof and so decide, and that it was further in error in declining to vacate the decree appealed from, and to remand the case to the civil district court for retrial, in order to obtain the evidence upon which they relied, or an appropriate statement of facts.

In the opinion of this court originally rendered, the decision of the respondents was affirmed, upon the theory (1) that the judgment appealed from was property of the plaintiff, Cassard, in the sense of the law, the title to which could not be taken away from him otherwise than by due process of law; and (2) that the provision of the Constitution of 1898 relied upon could operate prospectively only, and was not intended by the framers of the Constitution to have any retroactive effect; and, (3) if said provision be applied to the instant controversy, it would be giving to same a retrospective operation and effect, contrary to the intention of the framers of the organic law, and in violation of plaintiff's right of property in the judgment rendered. It will be sufficient to say that in support of each of said propositions numerous decisions were cited and quoted from; and it is readily admitted that same affirm the principles announced, with perfect unanimity, and, further, that we do not feel disposed to question their correctness. In our view, a judgment which is suspensively appealed from, and pending trial and disposition in the appellate court, is not property by an indefeasible title, in the sense of the law, and that applying to the cause in the respondents' court the provisions of the Constitution of 1898 is not to give to same a retroactive effect. We think that the question under consideration must be determined on the principle announced in Dunning v. West, 51 La. Ann. 618, 25 So. 306, which is to the effect that remedial laws have effect in any pending litigation, or, in other words, a law, either constitutional or statutory, which is remedial in character, must be construed to have application to all controversies pending and undetermined at the date of its promulgation.

The first question is as to the effect of a suspensive appeal upon the judgment appealed from. The Code of Practice declares that a judgment from which a suspensive appeal has been taken cannot be executed. Code Prac. art. 575. That same is not a final and definitive judgment. The very object of the appeal is to keep the controversy open, obtain a review of the law and evidence upon which same is predicated, and, if possible, to obtain a different decree in 49 L. R. A.

the appellate court. The effect of an appeal was very thoroughly considered in the case of Beaird v. Russ, 34 La. Ann. 315. A judgment which cannot be executed, and which may be reversed on appeal, cannot, certainly, possess any value as a piece of property, inasmuch as the title is defeasible and conditional. The very object of taking a suspensive appeal is to prevent the decree having any effect, and to prevent its execution. This being the case it is not readily perceivable upon what ground the argument is predicated that a law enacted during the interim of the suspensive appeal would have the effect of impairing the right of the judgment creditor, the right being defeasible and conditional. The argument on the other side is that a law, enacted during the pendency of a suspensive appeal, which only enlarges or alters the remedy of the parties to the suit, whether appellant or appellee, is applicable to pending suits, whether in courts of the first instance or on appeal, but that laws affecting the rights of parties, and not remedial in character, cannot have such an effect. As appertaining to the situation of the relators' case on appeal, we make the following extract from the opinion of the court in the instant case: "It is suggested that as the judgment obtained by Cassard in the district court was subject to appeal, and had in fact been appealed, when the new Constitution was adopted it cannot be regarded as a final judgment, and, hence, that Cassard had no such vested or property right therein as to bring this case within any rule which can be found applicable to the case of a final judgment; from which no appeal could be taken. The judgment in question decided all the points in controversy between the parties, and had been duly signed by the trial judge, and was therefore 'final' according to the text of the law. Code Prac. arts. 539 et seq. It is true that it was not final in the sense of having passed beyond the reach of judicial scrutiny, since it was awaiting review in the appellate court. But, as has been already stated, the plaintiff acquired said judgment as property, subject to certain conditions specified in the law, under and by virtue of which he obtained it, and that it might be reviewed and reversed on appeal was one of those conditions. Except in so far as it might be affected by those specified conditions, however, the judgment was declared to be his property, and it was so by an indefeasible title." We are not prepared to assent to the proposition stated in respect to the indefeasibility of the plaintiff's title to the judgment. On the contrary, we think the statement justifies a contrary opinion; that is to say, that his title thereto was not indefeasible. The plaintiff's right to the judgment necessarily depended upon its affirmance in the appellate court; for, if same should be reversed in the court of appeals, or by this court in reviewing the same, there would be no property in it at all. The right of property in a judgment of the district court, suspensively appealed from, would be necessarily extinguished by its reversal. We make a further extract from the opinion, which relates to the case of Dunning v. West, to wit: "The case of Dunning v. West, 51 La. Ann. 418, 25 So. 306, was appealed directly to this court, and the conclusion was reached that the interests of justice would be best subserved by remanding it in order to obtain additional testimony. It was a fact of which the court took notice that after the judgment in the lower court the plaintiff's wife, upon whose account the action had been brought (being an action in damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by her), had been made by law a competent witness, whereas she had been unable to testify upon the original trial. Whether the case should or should not be remanded for that or any other reason was, however, a matter within the legal discretion of the court, and it was so dealt with. And so it was a matter within the legal discretion of the court of appeal to have remanded the case which we are now considering, if, in the opinion of that tribunal, the interests of justice would thereby have been best subserved. But the discretion thus vested in this court, and exercised in remanding the Dunning Case, and vested in the court of appeal and exercised by it in refusing to remand the instant case, is not subject to legislative control, and it is that sort of control which is invoked when we are asked to order the court of appeal to remand this case, which, exercising the judicial discretion vested in it, has refused to remand. As a matter of course, the judgment rendered by the trial judge in the Dunning Case having been set aside, the case, when tried again, will be tried according to the law regulating the competency of witnesses which may be in force at the time of such trial; and the act of the legislature by which married women became competent witnesses in certain cases to which their husbands are parties is given a retroactive effect quoad that case; but it will be observed that the case was not reopened in recognition of the supposed obligatory force of that statute, and, in so far as the reasoning might be construed as pointing in that direction, it must be considered as controlled by the views herein expressed."

From the foregoing extract it clearly appears that the burden of the same was to overthrow the opinion in Dunning v. West. This much is plainly inferable from the language used, if it be not so declared in terms. And it further appears that, if the Dunning Case be not considered as reversed thereby, the ruling of the court therein is distinctly rested upon the ground that the court exercised a judicial discretion, only, in deciding as it did in that particular case, and therefore same is not to be considered applicable to like cases in the future, or to be consulted as a precedent in the instant case. Consequently we have two propositions to consider: (1) Whether the provision extracted from the Constitution of 1898 is to be viewed as a retroactive law; (2) whether this court, in deciding the case of Dunning v. West, merely exercised a legal discretion, and so dealt with that case. It seems to me that the two positions are somewhat inconsistent and irreconcilable with each other. I find upon an examination of the opinion in Dunning v. West this statement: "There is no question here of a new fact or of newly-discovered evidences. The only question really is whether the law enacted after the ruling in the court below should be considered as now applying. We think it does apply. The law is entirely remedial, and affects none of the vested rights of anyone,"—citing Baldwin v. Bennett, 6 Rob. (La.) 309. From the opinion upon the application for rehearing it appears that our decision related to the effect to be given to § 1 of act 190 of 1898, amending the provisions of Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2281, relative to the competency of the wife to testify for or against her husband in civil suits for damages on account of personal injuries sustained by her. We find the following statement therein, to wit: "Our opinion held that that 'law is entirely remedial, and affects none of the vested rights of anyone;' citing Baldwin v. Bennett, 6 Rob. (La.) 309. This conclusion was not hastily reached, but after the most mature deliberation. The present contention of defendant's counsel is that, as the statute was enacted subsequent to the rendition of judgment in his favor in the district court, the interpretation now given it has the effect of divesting a vested right of property he acquired therein. But the accepted canon of construction of retroactive laws, or those to which a retrospective effect is given, is that 'whatever relates to the manner of conducting and trying a suit is always within the control of the legislature, who can at any time make any change or modification they may think conducive to the public good and a proper administration of justice in our courts,' etc. In our opinion, this statute furnishes an apt illustration of that rule, and that our decree was a proper one." The foregoing extracts from Dunning v. West disclose the fact to be that the court acted with perfect deliberation in holding that the effect to be given to the statute under consideration was that of a purely remedial statute, and not of a retroactive law. Consequently, in my view, our opinion therein answers, at one and the same time, both the propositions which were entertained in the original opinion of the court in the instant case. The foregoing views therein are entirely inconsistent with the uniform current of decision in this court from a very early date, and it may be crystallized in the following statement, to wit: "Whatever relates to the manner of conducting and trying a suit is always within the control of the legislature, who can at any time make any change or modification they may think conducive to the public good and a proper administration of justice in our courts." Baldwin v. Bennett, 6 Rob. (La.) 309; Cooper v. Hodge, 17 La. 476; Borgsted v. Nolan, 17 La. 594; Frey v. Hebenstreit, 1 Rob. (La.) 565; Scott v. Duke, 3 La. Ann. 253; Kilgore v. Planters' Bank, 3 La. Ann. 693; Featherstonh v. Compton, 8 La. Ann.

285; State v. King, 12 La. Ann. 594; Hoa v. Lefranc, 18 La. Ann. 397. The question here raised was substantially considered and decided in Goldman v. Goldman, 51 La. Ann. 761, 25 So. 555.

Monroe, J., dissents; adhering to the views expressed in the original opinion of the court.

Nicholls, Ch. J., dissenting:

I dissent from the opinion rendered in this case, but I am of the opinion that to a certain extent, and under proper limitations and conditions, the constitutional convention could have adopted an article of the Constitution affecting judgments then on appeal before the court of appeals. A judgment rendered by a district court, appealable to the court of appeals, is not a finality, though signed. An appeal from the judgment opens the issues in the cause, which remain open until finally disposed of by the appellate court. Lacroix v. Menard, 7 Mart. N. S. 347; Rose's Succession, 48 La. Ann. 422, 19 So. 450. It has been held that a statute which creates a new court, or extends the jurisdiction of an existing court, is not unconstitutional. Com. v. Phillips, 11 Pick. 28; State v. Sullivan, 14 Rich. L. 281; McClain, Crim. L. § 78. Our opinion in Goldman v. Goldman, 51 La. Ann. 778, 25 So. 555, was based upon the correctness of that proposition as applied to the facts of that case. My reasons for dissenting are that the question of the power of the convention in respect to this subject is not, in my opinion, involved in this litigation; for, whatever might have been the convention's power, it was not exercised. I do not think the enlarging of the jurisdiction of the court was intended to take effect retroactively on appeals then before the court of appeals, at least to the extent which is asserted and declared in the opinion of the majority of the court. I do not think it was intended to operate at once upon appellants situated as this appellant was, and to confer upon them the right to demand from the court, as a matter of absolute right, which had vested in them by the Constitution, that their causes be remanded. While I think the court, in the exercise of its already existing discretion to remand causes, could, if, in its opinion, the ends of justice would have been, by so doing, subserved, have, in view of the enlarged jurisdiction granted to it, reopened this cause and sent it back for a new trial, I do not think it was compelled to do so by force of any constitutional requirements upon it. I think it had the legal right to refuse the application to remand, and I think, in the condition in which this particular case stood, it acted properly in refusing it. It is intimated that so holding would be in direct opposition to what we have recently announced in the case of Dunning v. West, 51 La. Ann. 618, 25 So. 306. I see no parallelism in the two cases, and no inconsistency whatever in refusing to accede to the demand presently made upon this court 49 L. R. A.

to remand this case as a matter of right, and in its having in the Dunning Case, of its own motion, thought proper to remand that cause, in the interest of justice. We did not act in the Dunning Case under the pressure of any law making it our duty to remand, but because we thought the condition of the evidence was unsatisfactory, and we desired to be further informed as to the matters in controversy. Our action in remanding was strictly within our legal, discretionary powers, independently of the fact that, pending the appeal before us, Mrs. Dunning had become a competent witness, when she was not such when the case was tried. That fact was a mere circumstance which we took into consideration in deciding what course it would be best to take. There was no necessity for the court, in remanding, to have made mention of or allusion to the new statute. We could well have left the question as to whether Mrs. Dunning would on the new trial be a competent witness to be raised and decided at that time. If we did not pursue that course, it was simply to speed the litigation, and our action was merely advisory in character. We had a fixed opinion that she would on that trial be a competent witness, and we so declared. Had we not done this, but left the case to come to us a second time, with this particular question as one of the questions to be passed upon by us, we would have unquestionably decided rightly that Mrs. Dunning was a competent witness, and the discussion now before us would probably have never arisen. I entertain the same opinion now as to the competency of Mrs. Dunning as a witness on the second trial of the Dunning Case which I entertained when the case was remanded. See West v. His Creditors, 1 La. Ann. 365. I have said that, in dealing with the question of the propriety of (not the power or duty of) remanding this case, the action of this court in the Dunning Case afforded no precedent. The situation of the two cases was essentially different. In the Dunning Case the testimony taken on the first trial had been perpetuated in writing. In this case the testimony was not taken in writing, the witnesses have scattered, and the appellee would be placed in duriori casu. The original testimony could not be availed of, and whether the same testimony would be obtainable was certainly problematical, to say the least. This court, in speaking through Mr. Justice Porter in Cow v. Williams, 5 Mart. N. S. 142, said: "We cannot see the difference between depriving a man of his property, and depriving him of the evidence which establishes his right to it;" and McClain, in his work on Criminal Law (§ 78), citing numerous authorities, defines an ex post facto law as one which, with reference to a crime already committed, makes it harder for a defendant to defend himself.

I think the action of the court of appeals was within its discretionary powers, and that its action was in this case correct, and that we should sustain it.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT

SWEDISH AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK, Appt.,

v.

DICKINSON COMPANY et al., Respts.

(6 N. D. 222.)

*1. The facts embodied in a supplemental complaint under the Code must relate to the cause of action set forth in the original complaint, and must be in aid thereof.

2. It is not proper to bring into a case, by supplemental complaint, new facts which have arisen since the action was commenced, and which by themselves constitute a new and independent cause of action, without reference to the facts alleged in the original pleading.

*Headnotes by CORLISS, J.

NOTE.—Right to set up judgment in other court by amendment or supplemental complaint in a pending action.

Since methods are usually provided for making a judgment recovered in any court in a state effective throughout the state, the only cases in which the right to amend a complaint so as to set up a judgment recovered since it was filed would become a vital question are those in which the matter at issue has been determined in a collateral way between slightly different parties, or in a different form of action in the same state, and where a judgment has been obtained on the same cause of action between the same parties in another state.

Of the former class Jenkins v. International Bank, 127 U. S. 484, 32 L. ed. 189, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1196, affirming 111 Ill. 470, is a good illustration. In that case a subsequent decree in another action establishing the amount of a bankrupt's indebtedness to a bank was permitted to be set up in a suit by the bank to foreclose collaterals to defeat the plea of usury in the original indebtedness, notwithstanding the statute would have barred a suit to enforce such subsequent decree, the court saying it was competent for complainant to bring the decree forward by supplemental bill as conclusive evidence of the amount due for which it was entitled to take a decree. It was strictly new matter arising after the filing of the bill in support of the relief originally prayed for. It can in no sense be considered as a new cause of action. It was not a bill to enforce the decree, nor was complainant obliged to rely upon it as the sole ground of recovery on the ground that the original cause of action had become merged in it.

Of the second class of cases, SWEDISH AMERICAN NAT. BANK V. DICKINSON CO. contains the best discussion of the principle which has yet appeared. In view of the interesting character of the question involved, the scarcity of cases upon the subject is somewhat remarkable.

It is well established that the recovery of a judgment in another state for the same cause of action may be pleaded in bar of a pending suit, and it then becomes a vital question whether the effect of this plea can be neutralized by amending the complaint in such a way as to sue upon the judgment rather than the original cause of action. The few cases which have been decided seem to agree that in the absence of express statutory permission this cannot be done.

49 L. R. A.

3. Accordingly, held, that when, pending an action upon notes, judgment thereon was recovered in another state, the plaintiff could not file a supplemental complaint alleging recovery of such judgment, but that the rendition thereof constituted a bar to the further prosecution of the action.

(November 19, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Cass County refusing to permit the filing of a supplemental complaint, in an action to recover the amount alleged to be due on certain promissory notes. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Newman, Spaulding, & Phelps, for appellant:

The power of the court to allow amend-

In Barnes v. Gibbs, 31 N. J. L. 317, 80 Am. Dec. 210, the question was directly raised whether, in case a merger of the original cause of action has taken place by the entry of a judgment in another state, the writ and pleadings can be amended so as to transform the action from assumpsit to debt, and permit the judgment to become the foundation of the suit; and the court said, allowing the utmost amplitude to the powers of the court to alter forms and correct errors, "the present application seems to be much beyond the scope of such power. It is obvious the proposition is not to amend defects, but to substitute one cause of action for another. Besides, even if the court should permit the proposed commutation to be made, it would not avail the plaintiffs, because the ground of action sought to be substituted has arisen since the commencement of this suit. No record could be framed which would support a judgment, exhibiting a cause of action accruing to the plaintiff after the purchase of his writ. Such defect would be pleadable in abatement, or, at the trial, the plaintiffs could be nonsuited, or, if it was disclosed in the declaration, the defendants might demur, or move in arrest of judgment, or assign it for error."

In Green v. Starr, 52 Vt. 426, it was decided that, in an action upon the common counts for breach of contract, a special count could not be filed setting up a recovery of a judgment in another state for such breach subsequently to the bringing of the action. The court says: "The cause of action in the original declaration and the special count are not the same."

In Watson v. Thibou, 17 Abb. Pr. 184, the action was upon certain promissory notes, and the defense was that the notes had been paid by bonds, whereupon the plaintiff sought to file a supplemental complaint setting up the record of a judgment upon the bonds in a foreign country, but this was refused upon the ground, inter alia, that it would be setting up a cause of action arising since the pending suit, which could not be permitted. In view of the holding in Eastern Townships Bank v. Beebe, 53 Vt. 177, 38 Am. Rep. 665, that a foreign judgment is not a debt of higher degree than the original cause of action, and therefore does not merge it, the statements in Watson v. Thibou, refusing to permit the setting up of the judgment in the amended complaint, may need re-examination. However, since the defense was payment of the notes by the bonds, the decision was doubtless correct.

H. P. F.

ments of the complaint and supplemental complaints before trial is the same.

Rev. Codes, §§ 5297, 5301.

The limitation in each case is that the allegations shall be material to the case.

At common law but few amendments were allowed.

Tidd, Pr. p. 651; Haynes v. Morgan, 3 Mass. 210.

In those states which have not adopted the Code of Procedure the ruling has been practically uniform that no amendment could be allowed which changed the nature of the action, as assumption to debt, case to debt or trespass, and so on, and amendments in actions at law have only been allowed when they did not change the form of the action.

Carpenter v. Gookin, 2 Vt. 495, 21 Am. Dec. 566; Barnes v. Gibbs, 31 N. J. L. 317, 86 Am. Dec. 210; Haynes v. Morgan, 3 Mass. 208.

Under the Code there is no such thing as changing the form of an action for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress of private wrongs.

Rev. Codes, § 5181.

There is but one form of action, and the object of that form of action is the redress of private wrongs.

Beardsley v. Stover, 7 How. Pr. 295; Troy & B. R. Co. v. Tibbits, 11 How. Pr. 170; Union Nat. Bank v. Bassett, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. 360; McQueen v. Babcock, 3 Keyes, 428; Brown v. Leigh, 49 N. Y. 78; Ford v. Ford, 35 How. Pr. 321; Mason v. Whitely, 1 Abb. Pr. 85; Watson v. Rushmore, 15 Abb. Pr. 51; Wyman v. Remond, 18 How. Pr. 273.

In the case at bar the proposed supplemental complaint did not change the cause of action, and was material to the plaintiff's case.

The supplemental complaint did not even change the cause of action. It simply changed the manner of stating the cause of action.

Latham v. Richards, 15 Hun, 129; Third Ave. R. Co. v. New York Elev. R. Co. 19 Abb. N. C. 261; Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 483; Kimball v. Bryan, 56 Iowa, 632, 10 N. W. 218; Sibley v. Young, 26 S. C. 415, 2 S. E. 314; Bogle v. Gordon, 39 Kan. 31, 17 Pac. 857; School Dist. No. 2 v. Boyer, 46 Kan. 54, 26 Pac. 484; Wilson v. Smith, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 235, 14 N. Y. Supp. 628; Jenkins v. International Bank, 127 U. S. 484, 32 L. ed. 189, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1196.

The allowance of an amendment or supplemental complaint is usually within the discretion of the court, but should always be allowed when it tends to the furtherance of justice.

Fleischmann v. Bennett, 79 N. Y. 579; Harding v. Minear, 54 Cal. 502; Schouweiler v. Hough, 7 S. D. 163, 63 N. W. 776.

Messrs. Ball, Watson, & Maclay, for respondents:

The supplemental complaint sets up a new cause of action.

The cause of action given by the note is based upon the contract of the parties alone, and the evidence which may be adduced in its favor, or against it, is almost unrestricted in scope. That given by the judgment 40 L. R. A.

risers, not at all by contract of the parties, but is the final pronouncement of the judicial department of the state upon matters contained in the record. Although it has sometimes been called a contract, or quasi contract, it is only so by legal fiction.

Freeman, Judgm. § 4.

The notes are merged in the judgment.

The judgment is to be regarded as a new debt.

Freeman, Judgm. 215-217, 221; McGillvray v. Avery, 30 Vt. 537; Child v. Eureka Powder Works, 45 N. H. 547; Boston India Rubber Factory v. Hoit, 14 Vt. 92; Andrews v. Varrell, 46 N. H. 17; Bank of North America v. Wheeler, 28 Conn. 433, 73 Am. Dec. 683; Cissna v. Haines, 18 Ind. 496.

One of the proofs that the cause of action is new lies in the fact that evidence of a totally different kind is necessary to sustain it.

1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 556, note 2; Foste v. Standard Ins. Co. 26 Or. 449, 38 Pac. 617.

An amendment or supplemental complaint setting up a new cause of action is not allowable.

Dexter v. Ivins, 133 N. Y. 551, 30 N. E. 594; Freeman v. Grant, 132 N. Y. 22, 30 N. E. 247; Shafarman v. Jacobs, 15 Misc. 10, 36 N. Y. Supp. 428; Zboynski v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 10 Misc. 7, 30 N. Y. Supp. 540; Sanford v. American Dist. Teleg. Co. 13 Misc. 88, 34 N. Y. Supp. 144; Burns v. Walsh, 10 Misc. 699, 31 N. Y. Supp. 788; Zoller v. Kellogg, 66 Hun, 194, 21 N. Y. Supp. 226; Lau v. Pemberton, 9 Misc. 219, 29 N. Y. Supp. 605; Rowell v. Janorin, 69 Hun, 305, 23 N. Y. Supp. 481; Shaw v. Bryant, 65 Hun, 57, 19 N. Y. Supp. 618.

In the great majority of the states, including those having the Code provisions, the common-law rule against the introduction of a new cause of action is adhered to.

1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 547, 548, and notes.

In addition to the fact that the supplemental complaint set up a new cause of action, it was also objectionable on the ground that it was a cause of action which accrued subsequent to the commencement of the action. The only matters which can be set up in the supplemental complaint are such as are consistent with, and in aid of, the cause of action contained in the original complaint.

Barnes v. Gibbs, 31 N. J. L. 317, 86 Am. Dec. 210; Watson v. Thibou, 17 Abb. Pr. 184; Gleason v. Gleason, 54 Cal. 135; Buchanan v. Comstock, 57 Barb. 582; Tiffany v. Bowerman, 2 Hun, 643; Pinch v. Anthony, 10 Allen, 470; Lowry v. Harris, 12 Minn. 255, Gil. 166; Meyer v. Berlandi, 39 Minn. 438, 1 L. R. A. 777, 40 N. W. 513; Noonan v. Orton, 21 Wis. 283; Shinners v. Brill, 38 Wis. 648; Milner v. Milner, 2 Edw. Ch. 114; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. United Lines Teleg. Co. 47 Hun, 315; Fickett v. Cohu, 14 Daly, 550, 1 N. Y. Supp. 436; Randall v. Christianson, 84 Iowa, 501, 51 N. W. 253.

The argument of hardship to the appellant should not be considered.

1 Chitty, Pl. 197; McGillvray v. Avery, 30 Vt. 538; Barnes v. Gibbs, 31 N. J. L. 317.

86 Am. Dec. 210; Child v. Eureka Powder Works, 45 N. H. 547; C. H. Fargo & Co. v. Cutshaw, 12 Ind. App. 392, 39 N. E. 532; Fairfield v. Baldwin, 12 Pick. 388; Freeman v. Creech, 112 Mass. 180.

Corliss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The sole question of law at issue on this appeal relates to the extent of the power of the district court to allow a plaintiff to file a supplemental complaint. The causes of action set forth in that pleading in this case were promissory notes. While this suit was pending the plaintiff recovered in the state of Minnesota, against the same defendants, a judgment upon the identical causes of action embraced in the complaint. Thereafter its counsel applied in this action to the district court for permission to file a supplemental complaint, averring the recovery of this judgment. The court refused to grant this motion, on the sole ground of a want of power. The correctness of this ruling is the only question before us. Should we reach the conclusion that the power exists, it would be our duty to reverse the judgment and order appealed from, and direct the district court to bring to bear upon the application its judicial discretion. But, in our judgment, the court did not err in its decision. A few fundamental principles of law control this case. It has long been the doctrine that a final judgment merges, within the jurisdiction in which it is rendered, the original cause of action on which it is founded. 1 Freeman, Judgm. §§ 215-217; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 336. This rule applies in this country to judgments rendered in the different states, on the ground that, under the provisions of the Federal Constitution, they are practically assimilated to domestic judgments. 1 Freeman, Judgm. § 221; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 341; Barnes v. Gibbs, 31 N. J. L. 317, 86 Am. Dec. 210; Bank of United States v. Merchants' Bank, 7 Gill, 415; Bank of North America v. Wheeler, 28 Conn. 433, 73 Am. Dec. 683; Rogers v. Odell, 39 N. H. 452; McGilvray v. Avery, 30 Vt. 538; Child v. Eureka Powder Works, 45 N. H. 547; 2 Black, Judgm. § 864. A different rule applies in the case of a foreign judgment. 2 Black, Judgm. § 847. The origin of this rule was the technical basis of the doctrine of merger. It was supposed to rest upon the principle that a higher security or evidence of liability swallowed up that of inferior character. A foreign judgment not being regarded in England as technically a matter of record the foreign judgment was not there looked upon as an evidence of indebtedness superior to the claim on which it was founded. See cases cited in 2 Black, Judgm. § 847; 2 Freeman, Judgm. § 220; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 341, note 7. In this country, there has been a disposition to follow the English decisions in all cases not falling within the class of judgments specified in the Federal Constitution. See 2 Black, Judgm. § 847. But if a foreign judgment is, on sound principles of private international law, conclusive between the parties, there is no reason, save an extremely technical one,—a reason unsuited to jurisprudence in its present stage of development,—why such a judgment should not in every civilized country be treated as merging the original cause of action upon which it rests. As Chief Justice Beasley said in Barnes v. Gibbs, 31 N. J. L. 317, 86 Am. Dec. 210: "The doctrine of merger arises out of the quality of a judgment which renders it conclusive upon the parties as to the questions which it involves." See also Freeman, Judgm. § 220; Jones v. Jamison, 15 La. Ann. 35.

From these elementary principles to which we have referred, we are forced to deduce the conclusion that, the moment the judgment was recovered in Minnesota, the plaintiff's causes of action on the notes sued upon were utterly extinguished. This judgment would, if pleaded by the defendants, constitute a complete bar to the further prosecution of the action. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 341, note 5; Rogers v. Odell, 39 N. H. 452; McGilvray v. Avery, 30 Vt. 538; Bank of North America v. Wheeler, 28 Conn. 433, 73 Am. Dec. 683; Child v. Eureka Powder Works, 45 N. H. 547; Bank of United States v. Merchants' Bank, 7 Gill, 415.

How the plaintiff can gain any advantage by setting forth in its own pleading facts which, if averred in the answer, would constitute a perfect defense to the further prosecution of the suit, is beyond our comprehension. The office of a supplemental bill in equity was to bring into a case, by a new pleading, facts which had occurred or become for the first time known to the plaintiff subsequently to the commencement of the action, and which related to the case set forth in the original bill. Just how far the courts of chancery would go in permitting new facts to be brought by supplemental bill into a pending suit in equity has never been stated with the utmost precision. But there are two general classes of cases with respect to which the law on this subject has been for many decades very clearly settled. If the original bill is not defective in substance, new facts may, by supplemental bill, be incorporated into the cause of action, although they necessitate an enlargement or change in the character of the relief originally sought. But in every decision on this point the qualification is stated or plainly to be inferred from the opinion that a new cause of action cannot be substituted for the one set forth in the original pleading. Jacob v. Lorenz, 98 Cal. 332, 33 Pac. 119-121; Candler v. Pettit, 1 Paige, 168, 19 Am. Dec. 399; Jacques v. Hall, 3 Gray, 194; Winn v. Albert, 2 Md. Ch. 42; Edgar v. Clevenger, 3 N. J. Eq. 258. But in the case at bar the plaintiff does not seek to enlarge its relief, or to alter the character thereof. It merely asks that it be allowed to obviate a perfect defense to its causes of action on the notes, and recover the same money judgment upon an entirely distinct cause of action, not in existence when he brought the suit, but arising subsequently to its commencement. No adjudication, no statute, no principle of law or equity, can be found to sustain its contention in this behalf. In interpreting our statute permitting the filing of supplemental complaints, we must fall back upon the settled practice in chancery before the adoption of the Code. The statute embodies the rule of procedure in equity. It has merely made applicable to actions at law, as well as suits in equity, the rules prevailing in chancery with respect to supplemental pleading. Counsel for plaintiff does not claim that our statute has any wider scope; and he could not successfully make such contention in view of the language of the statute that the new facts must be material to the case, and the fact that in other states similar provisions have been uniformly treated as merely voicing the existing rule of practice in equity. Prouty v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 N. Y. 272-275; Buchanan v. Comstock, 57 Barb. 583; Watson v. Thibou, 17 Abb. Pr. 184; Bowery Nat. Bank v. Duryee, 74 N. Y. 491-495; Gleason v. Gleason, 54 Cal. 135, 136; Jacob v. Lorenz, 93 Cal. 332, 33 Pac. 119-121; Eastman v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. 17 Minn. 48, Gil. 31; Bull v. Rothschild, 16 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 356, 4 N. Y. Supp. 826; Tiffany v. Bowerman, 2 Hun, 643-646; Cohn v. Husson, 67 How. Pr. 461. In this connection it is well to state the other general rule on the subject of supplemental bills in equity. It is a rule of limitation of power. The plaintiff cannot, by supplemental pleading, bring into the action a distinct cause of action arising since the beginning of the suit. Every one of the decisions last above cited recognizes this rule. And in most of these cases it is enforced under a statute identical in its language with ours. If the original bill is defective in substance, the plaintiff cannot, by supplemental bill, bring into the case new facts constituting a distinct cause of action, which has arisen since the suit was instituted. Milner v. Milner, 2 Edw. Ch. 114; Putney v. Whitmire, 66 Fed. Rep. 338; Bernard v. Toplitz, 160 Mass. 162, 35 N. E. 673; Fahs v. Roberts, 54 Ill. 195; Patten v. Stewart, 24 Ind. 332-343; Orton v. Noonan, 29 Wis. 547; Story, Eq. Pl. § 339.

The groundwork of this doctrine is that the plaintiff cannot recover on a cause of action which does not exist when he sues. He must dismiss his action, and plead anew. It follows from this that the rule that a new cause of action, which had not accrued when the writ was served, cannot be brought into the case by supplemental complaint, applies not only to cases where no cause of action existed at all when the suit was brought, but also to cases where a cause of action was in existence, and was set forth in the original complaint, and the plaintiff seeks to abandon that cause of action, and inject into the suit an entirely different cause of action; and the authorities cited below fully sustain this proposition. Indeed, this practice of changing the cause of action has never been sustained, even in a case where the new cause of action was in existence when the suit was commenced. Much less should this be allowed when the cause of action sought to be made the basis of the suit by supplemental complaint arose during the pendency of the case. Milner v. Milner, 2 Edw. Ch. 114; Eastman v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. 17 Minn. 48, Gil. 31; Prouty v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 N. Y. 272-275; Buchanan v. Comstock, 57 Barb. 583; Watson v. Thibou, 17 Abb. Pr. 184; Cohn v. Husson, 67 How. Pr. 461, 462; Gleason v. Gleason, 54 Cal. 135; Bull v. Rothschild, 16 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 356, 4 N. Y. Supp. 826; Tiffany v. Bowerman, 2 Hun, 643-646. In this last case the court said: "It seems only necessary to state the facts, in order to show that the motion for leave to file this supplemental complaint for such a purpose should have been at once denied. A supplemental complaint must be consistent with, and in aid of, the case made by the original complaint. A new and substantive cause of action cannot be set up, by way of supplemental complaint, as a ground of recovery; more especially a cause of action to which the plaintiff was not entitled when he commenced the action." In Prouty v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 N. Y. 272, the court said: "The principle invoked by the appellant to sustain this theory is the well-established doctrine that the plaintiff cannot file a supplemental bill to introduce new facts which have occurred since the filing of the original bill, and upon which a decree can be had without reference to the original bill; and in such case the original bill should be dismissed and a new one filed." In Gleason v. Gleason, 54 Cal. 135, the court said: "This is, therefore, a new controversy between them,—a new and independent cause of action about the title to property acquired since the judgment; and it is not allowable to substitute a new and distinct cause of action by way of supplemental complaint." In Eastman v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. 17 Minn. 48, Gil. 31, the court states the rule to be that "a supplemental complaint must be for the same substantive cause of action as that set out in the original complaint." The doctrine as it was enunciated by the vice chancellor in Milner v. Milner, 2 Edw. Ch. 114, has never been questioned, and is undoubtedly sound. The vice chancellor said: "The question in my mind is whether the complainant, upon her intending to rely upon the new facts, must not file an entirely new bill. I consider it not a case for amendment or a supplemental bill. The latter is generally filed to continue the original suit, or is, in its matter, directly connected with it, and because of the original bill being somewhat defective. But here there is new substantive cause of action, upon which a decree can be had without connecting it with the original bill. The complainant is here wanting to go entirely upon new ground; in fact, to make a new case. If this is to be done, it must be by a dismissal of the present bill, and the filing of a new one. I must refuse this motion." The decision of the court in Barnes v. Gibbs, 31 N. J. L. 317, 86 Am. Dec. 210, is directly in point. The court was called upon to decide whether a supplemental complaint could be filed setting up the recovery of a judgment upon the claim sued upon, and the ruling of that tribunal was that this could not be done. Chief Justice Beasley, speaking for the full bench, said: "The case certified calls for the opinion of this court on a second point, viz., whether, upon the assumption of a merger having taken place, the writ and pleadings in this case can be so amended as to transform the action from assumpsit to debt, and to permit the judgment obtained in New York to become the foundation of the suit? Allowing the utmost amplitude to the power of this court to alter forms and correct errors, the present application seems to be much beyond the scope of such power. It is obvious the proposition is not to amend defects, but to substitute one cause of action for another. Besides, even if the court should permit the proposed commutation to be made, it would not avail the plaintiffs, because the ground of action sought to be substituted has arisen since the commencement of this suit."

But it is urged that there is authority for the proposition that a supplemental complaint may embrace such matters as are sought to be incorporated in the complaint in the case at bar, and that such authority should be followed. To sustain this claim, the case of Jenkins v. International Bank, 127 U. S. 484, 32 L. ed. 189, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1196, is cited. But, in our opinion, that case is plainly distinguishable from the case now before us. That action was instituted to foreclose a lien upon certain property pledged as collateral to a debt. Pending this action, a decree was rendered in another case which so adjudicated the amount due upon the claim to secure which the collateral security had been given as to preclude the relitigation of that question in the pending suit. The supreme court of Illinois and the Supreme Court of the United States both held that it was proper to incorporate in a supplemental bill the fact of the rendition of this decree. But it is obvious that there is no parallel between that case and the action which is before us. The cause of action in that case was not indebtedness, but the lien. The object of the action was to foreclose that lien. The plaintiff did not seek to change the object of the action, nor did he attempt to incorporate in his supplemental bill a new cause of action. The lien constituted his sole cause of action before the supplemental bill was filed, and it still remained his sole cause of action after the decree had been rendered, and after the fact that it had been rendered was brought into the case by the supplemental bill. The action was not originally brought upon the indebtedness, but it was founded upon the lien; and this continued to be the cause of action after the supplemental bill had been filed. The lien was not divested by the decree which conclusively established the amount due. 2 Freeman, Judgm. §§ 229, 230, and cases cited. In both of these courts the distinction was made which we here outline. Had the action been, not to foreclose a lien, but to recover a money judgment on the indebtedness, it is apparent from the language of both these tribunals that their decisions would have been different. The Illinois supreme court said on this point at pages 470 and 471, 111 Ill. (Jenkins v. International Bank): "We do not consider the supplemental bill as introducing a new cause of action. The indebtedness is the same. The evidence of it at the time of filing the original bill in this case consisted in notes from Walker to the bank. The notes have since, as said, become merged in the Wilshire decree. There has been, then, a change in the evidence of the indebtedness,—from notes to a decree upon them. That is all. The collaterals sought to be foreclosed by sale of them were pledged for the payment of the indebtedness. A decree upon the notes, and the running of the statute of limitations against the decree, is not any payment of the indebtedness. The simple effect is that the statute is a bar to a suit upon the decree. The collaterals may be held until the indebtedness is paid according to the terms of the pledge. We do not consider that there has been any new suit brought upon the decree, but that there is, under the supplemental bill, the assertion of the right to claim the benefit of the Wilshire decree as res adjudicata, and that the statute of limitations set up is not a bar to that right." And in the Federal Supreme Court the same distinction is stated in the following language: "In support of this proposition, it is argued, on behalf of the plaintiff in error, that the supplemental bill set out and sought a recovery upon a cause of action distinct from that stated in the original bill. The original bill prayed for a decree against Walker upon his notes held by the bank, and, for the satisfaction thereof, a sale of the property held as security therefor. During the pendency of that bill, precisely the same matters were put in issue in the Wilshire suit between Walker and the bank, and in that suit a decree was rendered finding the amount due. That decree in the Wilshire suit stands unreversed, and operates as an estoppel by way of res adjudicata between the parties. By way of proof or in pleading, it would be good as a bar in any subsequent suit between the same parties upon the same issues. Having been rendered after the institution of the present suit, it was competent for the complainant to bring it forward, by a supplemental bill, as conclusive evidence of the amount due, for which it was entitled to take a decree, and as a complete answer to the defense set up by the plaintiff in error, as the assignee of the bankrupt, to the relief prayed for in the original bill, and to the relief sought by the cross bill. It was strictly new matter arising after the filing of the bill, properly set up by way of supplemental bill, in support of the relief originally prayed for. It can in no sense be considered as a new cause of action. It was not a bill to enforce the decree, nor was the complainant obliged to rely upon it as the sole ground of recovery, on the ground that the original cause of action had become merged in it. If the notes were merged in the decree, it was simply a change in the nature of the evidence to support the complainant's title to relief. The indebtedness remained the same, and the equity of the complainant to a foreclosure and sale of the securities remained unchanged." In fact, the courts in that case were but applying the familiar rule that the holder of collateral security may, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, recover a personal judgment upon his claim, and thereafter foreclose his lien notwithstanding such judgment. See 1 Freeman, Judgm. §§ 229, 230; Bank v. Brown, 112 Ind. 474, 481, 482, 14 N. E. 358. The cause of action in such a foreclosure suit being the lien, the recovery of a judgment on the debt before or after the commencement of the foreclosure action does not create a new cause of action; does not extinguish the old. The original lien continues in existence, securing the new evidence of the debt the same as it did the old. By the recovery of a judgment, the cause of action is not wiped out. The only effect is to conclusively establish the amount which the lien secures. It is a significant fact that in New York the legislature has, in express terms, incorporated into the statute regulating the filing of a supplemental complaint a provision that the plaintiff may in this way bring into the case "the judgment or decree of a competent court, rendered after the commencement of the action determining the matters in controversy or a part thereof." N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 544. It is evident that in New York the law was considered to be settled the other way, in the absence of an explicit statute on the point. Our Code merely permits the plaintiff to set up in his supplemental bill "facts material to the case." Rev. Codes, § 5301. What in this action is "the case" of the plaintiff as his suit was originally brought? The answer is obvious. It is the cause of action set up in his complaint. That constitutes his case. Another and entirely distinct cause of action does not constitute his case, as it appears in his original pleading. As we have already seen, the decisions are unanimous to the effect that, under just such a statute as ours, the plaintiff cannot, by supplemental complaint, introduce a new and distinct cause of action.

The argument of hardship does not appeal to us with any force. It is true that in this case—and it will likewise be true in many other cases—a refusal to allow the subsequent recovery of the judgment to be set up in a supplemental complaint will result in the loss of priority of lien upon property secured by an attachment in the action, because the plaintiff will be compelled to dismiss his action upon the claim, and bring a new suit upon the judgment itself. This same argument was advanced in Bank of North America v. Wheeler, 28 Conn. 433, 73 Am. Dec. 683, against the proposition that the effect of the recovery of a judgment in one state was to extinguish the original cause of action in every other state. It will be observed that the precise question here presented was there involved, for if the judgment extinguishes the original cause of action, and creates a new cause of action, there is no logical escape from the conclusion that the suit cannot be kept alive by supplemental complaint. On this point of hardship the court says: "The plaintiffs urge the inconvenience arising from holding the judgment in New York to be a defense in the present suit, in consequence of the loss of the security obtained by attachment in the latter. We are not, however, at liberty to impair the effect which the Constitution and laws of the United States give to judgments rendered in the several states, although it may be attended with inconvenience, or even apparently unjust consequences. The remedy is elsewhere. When suits are pending in different states upon the same cause of action, the plaintiff must elect in which he will proceed to final judgment." And in two other cases, in which it was held that the recovery of a judgment upon the claim sued for was fatal to the further prosecution of the action, it appears that the attachments had been issued and levied, and that, of course, the liens secured thereby would be lost. Bank of United States v. Merchants' Bank, 7 Gill, 415; Child v. Eureka Powder Works, 45 N. H. 547 (see 549, 550).

The recovery of the judgment in Minnesota was the result of the voluntary act of the plaintiff. It could have kept alive this action by refraining from entering judgment in the Minnesota suit, and in this way it could have preserved its lien. But it did not see fit to do so. It frequently happens that the judgment rendered is not a personal judgment in more than one state, jurisdiction being acquired in other states solely over property by attachment or garnishment. A judgment purely in rem would not merge the cause of action on the original claim, and therefore would not constitute a bar to an action thereon in another jurisdiction. Whittier v. Wendell, 7 N. H. 257; Fitzsimmons v. Marks, 66 Barb. 333; Rangely v. Webster, 11 N. H. 209; 1 Freeman, Judgm. §§ 218, 219. In many cases there will therefore be no hardship to the creditor. In many others he will hold in his own hands the power to prevent a merger. And, over against the loss of priority of lien which may in a few cases result from this doctrine, it is proper to set the moral right of the debtor not to be harassed by numerous suits upon the same demand at the same time. The rule being settled that the pendency of an action in a foreign state or country does not constitute a good plea in abatement, the debtor has no legal protection against the institution of any number of actions against him in different jurisdictions upon the same claim. It would therefore seem to us not a matter for regret that his moral right to be exempt from undue harassment should receive some slight legal sanction. If, however, it be thought that a different rule should prevail, the arguments in that behalf should be addressed to that body whose province it is to make, and not to the department whose duty it is to declare, the law.

The order and judgment of the District Court are in all things affirmed.

All concur.

A petition for rehearing was subsequently filed, in response to which the following opinion was handed down on December 28, 1896:

Counsel for plaintiff very earnestly press upon us the reconsideration of the point which seemed to us so clear that we did not discuss it at length. They concede the doctrine of merger, and the rule that the supplemental bill must not embody facts creating an independent cause of action. Their whole contention ranges around the question, What is the real cause of action in this case? They insist that the debt is the primary right, and that this right, in connection with defendant's failure to respect it, constitutes the cause of action. Hence it follows, they urge, that that cause of action was not extinguished by the judgment, but exists to-day as much as ever it did, despite the fact that it has assumed a new form. There is much ambiguity on this subject. Jurists have found it difficult to define with precision the meaning of the phrase "cause of action." While it may be that this is a difficulty which inheres in the subject itself, and is therefore unsurmountable, yet we do not consider that there should be, notwithstanding this fact, much controversy in a case like this as to the cause of action set up in the original complaint. If counsel's claim that the debt is the cause of action be sound, then there is no distinction between an action for services, for goods sold, and for money loaned. In each case there is a debt. But in no two of these suppositive cases did the debt grow out of the same facts. In each of these cases the peculiar distinctive facts out of which the obligation arises are what constituted the cause of action, when coupled with the omission of the defendant to respect the plaintiff's rights thereby established. It is not the mere existence of a debt—an element common to them all—which constitutes the cause of action in either of these cases. If the debt were the cause of action, it would be unnecessary for the plaintiff to do more than aver in his complaint that the defendant was indebted to him in a specified sum. On this theory the same complaint would do for all actions belonging to these three classes. All that it is necessary for the pleader to do in any case is to set forth the facts constituting his cause of action. No one would think of stopping with a bare allegation of indebtedness; and yet this is all that is required if that indebtedness alone constitutes the cause of action. There is an element common to all causes of action; but it does not of itself constitute a cause of action. In every case there is present the fact that the defendant has neglected to observe his legal duty to the plaintiff. In an action at law to recover money, the cause of action is not simply the withholding of the money from the plaintiff by the defendant. In a sense, that may be said to be the legal wrong for which the law furnishes a remedy.

49 L. R. A.

But why is it a wrong of which the law takes cognizance? Because, and only because, by reason of certain antecedent facts, the plaintiff has become vested under the law with a right to demand the money. In seeking for one element of the cause of action, we must go back of the mere right to demand that the money claimed shall not be withheld, and ascertain what are the particular facts out of which that right springs. When we have discovered these facts, we have found out that which differentiates the particular cause of action from another, which, while showing, perhaps, an indebtedness of like amount, arises out of different circumstances. The cause of action is always disclosed by the answer to the inquiry: "How did the defendant become liable to be prosecuted by the plaintiff in this particular action?" It is true that a cause of action is not in cases of contracts complete until the defendant has failed to pay in accordance with his legal obligation. But the foundation for it is, in all such cases, laid before the default occurs; and in many instances this element of default is not a constituent part of the cause of action, as in tort cases, where the cause of action accrues the moment the wrong is committed. No one would speak of the failure of a slanderer of character to indemnify the person vilified as constituting the latter's cause of action. It is the slander which forms the plaintiff's cause of complaint in such a case. A plaintiff may have three different causes of action against the same defendant,—one for money loaned, one for goods sold, and one for services rendered. If in each case the withholding of the money alone is the cause of action, then all of the causes of action are identical in character. Would this be seriously claimed by anyone?

We have used these few observations for the reason that the plaintiff's counsel seem to take the position that in this case the withholding of the money constitutes the cause of action. We will now turn to the plaintiff's contention that the debt, coupled with defendant's default, is the cause of action. If the mere fact that there is a debt, independently of the circumstances out of which such debt arose, constitutes the cause of action in any case, then all legal distinctions are in this regard obliterated. The real essence of this contention is that, in all cases to recover money, it is the original obligation to pay, in connection with defendant's default, which constitutes the plaintiff's cause of action. If this be so, then a cause of action for libel is not affected by the fact that the defendant has, in full settlement of the claim, given his note for a certain sum of money. A note is not actual payment. The original obligation to pay damages lies at the basis of such note. It is, in substance, the same claim as the original claim for damages. So, it is after judgment upon the note. But the cause of action is not the same in each case. The statute of limitations as to each is different. The action for libel would have to be brought within two years after that cause of action accrued. The action upon the note would have to be commenced within six years after that new cause of action, resting upon different facts, accrued. And the action upon the judgment could be instituted within ten years after that cause of action, based upon still different facts, had accrued. Rev. Codes, §§ 5200, 5201, 5203. Sections 5199 to 5201, Rev. Codes, differentiate a cause of action upon a judgment from the cause of action upon the claim upon which it was rendered. Under these provisions, an action upon contract must be brought within six years after that cause of action accrues; and an action upon a judgment rendered upon the same contract may be brought within ten years after that cause of action—that new and distinct cause of action—accrues. How can it be said that a cause of action upon a judgment accrues if no cause of action upon it does in fact accrue, but the old cause of action, for the original claim, still continues unaffected, and the judgment is only the same cause of action in another form? No judgment for money ever has been, or ever can be, rendered of which it cannot be as truthfully said as of this judgment in the case at bar that it is only the original claim in another form. Is it a fact that lawyers, judges, and codifiers have so long been mistaken in supposing that a distinct cause of action upon a judgment accrues when the judgment is rendered. The fact that the same debt lies at the foundation of distinct causes of action does not render them identical. If one who has borrowed money fails to pay it, a cause of action against him for money loaned exists. If his creditor thereafter takes the debtor's note in full payment, the old cause of action is extinguished, and a new one is created. The fact that there was an original debt is important only for the purpose of showing a consideration for the note. But an action upon such a note, under such circumstances, cannot be regarded as an action for money loaned. The original cause of action in the case supposed has been wiped out. If, in turn, a bond should be executed in payment of the note, the cause of action on the note would, in turn, be destroyed. If judgment should finally be recovered upon such bond, the cause of action upon the bond would likewise be extinguished. In the case supposed, there would exist, in succession, four distinct causes of action, all founded upon the same debt, which had at no time been paid, despite all the various changes which had taken place in the form of the evidences of such indebtedness. Would counsel for plaintiff seriously contend that in such a case there existed at all times only one cause of action,—the original cause of action, for money loaned? Pushed to its logical consequences, the doctrine contended for would make it necessary for a court to apply to an action upon the judgment here involved the statute of limitations applicable to the original cause of action, the six-years statute of limitation. All must agree that no action upon the notes can be maintained after judgment. This is conceded. All will 49 L. R. A.

assent to the proposition that the action must be maintained upon the judgment. And yet if it is the same cause of action as that upon the notes, or for the original debt, the six-years' statute of limitation governs. This will be true in all cases. The consequence will be that in every instance the statute of limitations applicable to the cause of action upon which the judgment is founded will govern in actions upon such judgment. Would counsel for plaintiff concede that their cause of action upon this judgment would be barred in six years? Here is a decisive test.

It is urged that the facts set up in the supplemental complaint do not of themselves constitute a cause of action, independently of the facts alleged in the original complaint; that the execution of the notes or the existence of the original debt is an essential element of the cause of action upon the judgment. We can see no force in this claim. The judgment is the cause of action irrespective of the character of the claim on which it rests. No averment as to the nature of such anterior cause of action is necessary or even proper. Such an allegation would be stricken out as surplusage. In an action upon a judgment, the only inquiry which a court will make is whether there is a valid judgment, unsatisfied and unpaid. The test as to the necessity of an allegation in a complaint is whether that specific fact need be proved to make out a case. When a judgment is sued upon, it is a matter of no moment what lies behind the judgment, if it is valid; or, indeed, whether there was any claim behind it at all. That question is forever foreclosed by the judgment itself. If an allegation as to the existence of the notes set forth in the original complaint is vital to the cause of action upon the judgment, then issue upon that fact might be taken by the defendant. Will it be urged that the defendant would be allowed to go into that question in a suit upon the judgment which had forever set that question at rest? Section 5201, Rev. Codes, provides that the plaintiff cannot unite in the same complaint a cause of action for slander and another cause of action based upon a contract. If the same defendant should thrice slander the same plaintiff, and judgment for one of such slanders should be recovered by the plaintiff, and the defendant should give him his note in settlement of the damages sustained by him by reason of another thereof, would it be contended that thereafter the plaintiff might, in the same complaint, join the cause of action upon the judgment and the cause of action upon the note with the cause of action for the third slander, on the ground that the note and the judgment had not changed the essential nature of the original causes of action for the two slanders, but had merely given the original obligations to pay damages for such slanders another form? In all causes of action there exist, as we have before observed, two fundamental elements. There are the facts which create the obligation. There is the other fact that that obligation has not been respected. In this action, as originally instituted, upon the notes, the fact which constituted the obligation was the execution and delivery of notes for a consideration. The default of the defendant was in failing to pay them when due. But neither of these particular elements enters into the cause of action upon the judgment. The obligation in the latter case is created by the judgment, and not by the notes. The default is the failure to pay such judgment, and not an omission to pay the notes, which can no longer be paid, because the judgment has as completely extinguished any cause of action upon them as payment would have done. How can a cause of action based upon one kind of obligation arising out of a certain fact, coupled with a failure to discharge that obligation, be the same cause of action as that which rests upon another and different obligation, springing out of a new fact, coupled with a failure to comply with such new obligation. Every cause of action is the invasion of the plaintiff's rights by the defendant, or the latter's failure to discharge some legal duty to the plaintiff. If a defendant assaults a plaintiff, he invades his rights. If he omits to pay when due his note held by the plaintiff, he fails to discharge a legal duty to the plaintiff. In each case, these respective elements constitute the plaintiff's cause of action. A court, in determining whether the defendant has invaded plaintiff's rights, or neglected to discharge a legal duty which he owes the plaintiff, must make the preliminary inquiry as to the facts out of which plaintiff's alleged right arises. If that right rests upon the defendant's obligation to pay a note, it is that particular right, in connection with defendant's failure to respect it, that constitutes the plaintiff's cause of action. If it rests upon the defendant's obligation to pay a judgment rendered against him upon such note, it is that particular right, in connection with the defendant's disregard of it, which constitutes that particular cause of action. This is the utmost scope of Prof. Pomeroy's language in his work on Remedies and Remedial Rights (§ 453). The primary right therein referred to is the plaintiff's right in the particular case. If it rests upon contract, it must stand upon the particular contract sued upon. A plaintiff's primary right in an action upon a note is the defendant's duty to him which the note creates. When a judgment is rendered upon such note, the primary right is the defendant's duty to the plaintiff created by such judgment, and not by the note, which has ceased to be the source of any duty of the defendant to the plaintiff.

Counsel essay to distinguish the case of Watson v. Thibou, 17 Abb. Pr. 184, from the case at bar. We are unable so to distinguish it. It is true that the notes in that case were not extinguished by a judgment, but by bonds received in payment thereof. But wherein does this difference affect the principle? The original debt had not been paid by the bonds, any more than the original debt in this case has been paid by the judgment. Accepting such bonds in satisfaction of the notes is strictly analogous to recovering judgment upon notes in the case at bar, and thus extinguishing them as subsisting obligations. Each act is the voluntary act of the creditor. Whether he, in terms, extinguishes the original cause of action, or invokes the powers of a court of justice to do that which has the same effect,—i. e., render a judgment upon such original cause of action,—is immaterial. Nor does it make any difference that the act of extinguishing the original cause of action by accepting a new obligation is called "novation," whereas the act of destroying such cause of action by the recovery of judgment is not called "novation," but "merger." The vital question is: Has the original cause of action been destroyed, and a new one substituted for it? The very argument made by counsel for plaintiff in this case could have been employed by the court in the Watson Case to justify the allowance of plaintiff's motion that he be permitted to file a supplemental complaint. The court could have said with as much truth as can be here asserted that the original debt had not been affected, but only a new evidence of indebtedness substituted for the old. But this was not regarded by the court in that case as at all important. The court saw and held that a cause of action upon bonds was not the same as a cause of action upon notes previously given, although the same debt furnished the consideration for each of these classes of obligations.

It is urged that we did not speak with precision when, in distinguishing the case of Jenkins v. International Bank, 127 U. S. 484, 32 L. ed. 189, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1196, we asserted that the cause of action in that case was the lien sought to be foreclosed. We fail to discover our error in this respect except that we should have spoken of the lien as constituting the cause of action when coupled with defendant's failure to perform his legal duty to satisfy the lien. It is said that if the lien constituted one element of the cause of action in that case, in contradistinction from the debt, the indebtedness need not have been set up in the complaint therein; that it would have been necessary to refer to nothing but the lien in the bill. But a lien presupposes a debt. It cannot exist without one. A lien is the legal grip of a debt upon property. When it is said that a lien constitutes an element in a cause of action in a particular case, the assertion is made that this grip of a debt upon property is the cause of action which the plaintiff is seeking to enforce by a foreclosure suit. In an action to foreclose a lien, the lien is the main thing. It is illogical to speak of the lien being a mere incident of the debt in such a case. The debt is a component part of the lien, and not something separate from it, of which the lien is a mere incident. One who has secured a lien upon property is vested with an equitable cause of action, distinct from his mere legal cause of action to recover a personal judgment against the debtor. It is the lien, and not the mere debt, which gives him that equitable cause of action. If the indebtedness costitutes the cause of action in such a case, then an action to foreclose a lien is an action at law, the same as an action against the debtor to recover a mere money judgment, for the cause of action in each case is the same,—i. e., the debt. A plaintiff brings an action on a note, and also an action to foreclose a lien which secures such note. Are the two actions the same? All know that they are not. What distinguishes them is the lien. When the suit is to foreclose the lien, the cause of action is the lien to be foreclosed, coupled with defendant's default. When the object of the action is to obtain a money judgment merely, the note, coupled with defendant's default, constitutes the cause of action. If, in a foreclosure action, the lien is not one of the elements in the cause of action, in contradistinction from the debt, we are at a loss to know what, in such a case, does, in fact, constitute one of the elements of the cause of action. If a complaint in a foreclosure action should fail to allege the existence of the lien, it would be demurrable. When it does properly set forth the fact of a lien, it necessarily contains an averment as to the debt, for this is an essential ingredient in every lien. A lien is not alleged unless a debt of some character is set up. But the debt is not stated in the pleading as the substantive cause of action, but merely to make complete the allegations of the complaint as to the existence of a lien, the lien being the real cause of action sought to be enforced by the suit, when coupled with defendant's failure to satisfy it. A cause of action is that which enables the plaintiff to maintain the particular action he seeks to prosecute. What is it that gives the plaintiff a right to institute and carry on a suit to foreclose a lien if it is not the lien itself, in connection with the debtor's default?

It is insisted that the change proposed to be made by the supplemental complaint is one which relates to the form of the action only. We are unable to assent to this view. If the plaintiff had brought debt upon the judgment in question after the same had been rendered, and if forms of action had not been abolished by the Code, and if it were the doctrine in this country, as in England, that a foreign judgment is not a record, and hence that an action of debt would not lie thereon, then in case the plaintiff should seek to change his action from debt to assumpsit, we would have the mere question of a change in the form of the action, the cause of action remaining the same. But it is not a change of this character which is attempted in this case. The plaintiff is not essaying to alter the mere form of his action (a thing never done by supplemental complaint,) but to bring into the case an entirely new cause of action. He seeks to eliminate from the complaint a cause of action which, since the commencement of this action, has been extinguished, and substitute in its place a new cause of action, which accrued after this action was instituted.

It is urged that the New Jersey case is not in point, for the reason that no radical changes had been made by statute in that state in the rules of procedure. But we have seen—and counsel for plaintiff assent to this conclusion—that the statute of this state regulating the filing of supplemental complaints has not altered the old rule that a new cause of action cannot by such means be substituted for the old. Nor is there anything in the language or spirit of our Code which in any manner affects the significance of the phrase "cause of action." On the contrary, several provisions of the Code, to which we have referred, conclusively show that the old meaning of that phrase has not been disturbed. That which before the Code system was adopted was not the cause of action is not now the cause of action. It is, therefore, apparent that the statutory regulations of practice in this state have in no respect affected the two inquiries which lay at the foundation of the decision in the New Jersey case, and which also lie at the basis of our judgment in this cause,—i. e.: Can a new cause of action be substituted for the original by supplemental complaint? Does a new cause of action arise in this country when a judgment is recovered upon a claim in any of the courts thereof? The importance of this question to the profession is our apology for the length of this additional opinion. The petition for a rehearing is denied.

Wallin, Ch. J., concurs.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

MAINE WATER COMPANY

v.

City of WATERVILLE.

(93 Me. 586.)

1. A municipal corporation having authority to contract for a water supply may agree to pay a portion of the taxes assessed for any year against a water company in addition to a specified amount for water to be supplied by the company, if the consideration for the agreement is reasonably adequate, and the contract is reasonable and fair and for a reasonable length of time.

NOTE.—For power of municipalities to exempt property from taxation, see Whiting v. West Point (Va.) 15 L. R. A. 860, and note; McTwiggan v. Hunter (R. I.) 29 L. R. A. 526; State ex rel. Realty Co. v. Cooley (Minn.) 29 L. R. A. 777; also Frederick Electric Light & P. Co. v. Frederick City (Md.) 36 L. R. A. 130. 49 L. R. A.

2. An unconstitutional exemption from taxation is not effected by an agreement by a municipal corporation to pay the taxes assessed against a water company in return for a supply of water which constitutes an adequate consideration for the agreement.
3. Public policy will not avoid a contract by a municipality to pay for a reasonable length of time a portion of the taxes assessed against a water company as part consideration for a water supply, merely because the gross and annual amounts to be paid are uncertain and the return to be received is also uncertain, where the contract is limited to the taxes assessed on the property owned by the company at the time of its execution and on pipe lines, hydrants, and fixtures thereafter laid.

(February 9, 1900.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Kennebec County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of an action brought to recover the amount of taxes upon plaintiff's property which defendant had agreed to pay as part consideration for a water supply. Judgment for plaintiff.

As a special defense to the action defendant alleged that the contract under which plaintiff claimed was not made upon the consideration therein expressed, but that the expression of consideration therein was fraudulently inserted for the purpose of concealing the true character of said contract, and making it appear to be legal and proper, when in truth and in fact the real agreement and understanding between the parties who subscribed and executed the contract was illegal and improper. That the real purpose of the contract was to exempt plaintiff's property from taxation in contravention of the principles of the Constitution pertaining to such subjects, and to illegally limit and control the action of the assessors of the city in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by law; that the pretended contract is utterly illegal and void for want of power or authority on the part of defendants' agent who pretended to execute the same.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Heath & Andrews, for plaintiff:

There was no exemption from taxation, direct or indirect. There was no evasion, direct or indirect, of the rule against exemption.

There can be no taint of illegality in a contract that never has worked, and never can work, an actual exemption from taxation, either direct or indirect.

Cartersville Improvement Gas & Water Co. v. Cartersville, 89 Ga. 683, 16 S. E. 25; Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396; Utica Waterworks Co. v. Utica, 31 Hun, 431; People ex rel. Mills Waterworks Co. v. Forrest, 97 N. Y. 97; Portland v. Portland Water Co. 67 Me. 135; New Orleans v. New Orleans Waterworks Co. 36 La. Ann. 432; Ludington Water-Supply Co. v. Ludington, 119 Mich. 480, 78 N. W. 558.

The discretion of municipal corporations within the sphere of their powers is as wide as that possessed by the government of the state.

St. Louis v. Boffinger, 19 Mo. 13; Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 505, 24 Am. Rep. 756.

It was for the city to adjudge of the necessity.

Kelley v. Mihoaukees, 18 Wis. 83.
49 L. R. A.

The general assembly is a co-ordinate branch of the state government, and so is the law-making power of municipal corporations within the prescribed limits. It is no more competent for the judiciary to interfere with the legislative acts of the one than the other.

Brush v. Carbondale, 78 Ill. 74; Cape May & S. L. R. Co. v. Cape May, 35 N. J. Eq. 419; Moses v. Risdon, 46 Iowa, 251; Bridgeport v. Housatonic R. Co. 15 Conn. 475; Spaulding v. Lowell, 23 Pick. 71; Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. 184, 22 Am. Dec. 421; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; Methodist Protestant Church v. Baltimore, 6 Gill, 391, 48 Am. Dec. 540; Sheidley v. Lynch, 95 Mo. 497, 8 S. W. 434; Horton v. Nashville, 4 Lea, 39, 40 Am. Rep. 1.

In contracting to supply itself with water a city is not exercising its governmental or legislative powers, but its business powers.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 27; Cincinnati v. Cameron, 33 Ohio St. 336; Safety Insulated Wire & Cable Co. v. Baltimore, 25 U. S. App. 166, 66 Fed. Rep. 140, 13 C. C. A. 375; Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City, 40 U. S. App. 257, 34 L. R. A. 518, 76 Fed. Rep. 271, 22 C. C. A. 171; Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 132 Ind. 114, 16 L. R. A. 485, 31 N. E. 573.

Such contracts, even in the absence of legislative authority, for a reasonable term of years, are sustained and held to be only within the discretion of the city council, and, in the absence of fraud, not reviewable by the court.

Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 132 Ind. 114, 16 L. R. A. 485, 31 N. E. 573; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. New Orleans, 42 La. Ann. 188, 7 So. 559; East St. Louis v. East St. Louis Gaslight & Coke Co. 98 Ill. 415, 38 Am. Rep. 97; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 419; Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Atlantic City, 48 N. J. L. 378, 6 Atl. 24.

While such a contract might appear unreasonable to the court, yet, if debatable and one on which prudent men might differ, the court, in the absence of fraud, cannot annul the bargain.

Terre Haute v. Terre Haute Waterworks Co. 94 Ind. 305; Gale v. Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344, 9 Am. Rep. 80.

The municipal officers have a large and wholesome discretion in determining the necessity and price to be paid for public service, with which the courts have no right to interfere, except where it is clearly about to be abused.

Memphis v. Memphis Water Co. 5 Heisk. 528; Warren v. Chicago, 118 Ill. 329, 9 N. E. 883.

Mr. Harvey D. Eaton, for defendant:
The plain meaning and intention of the parties executing this contract was not what is stated in the final draft as executed, but rather an illegal purpose to exempt plaintiff's property from taxation, and limit and restrain the assessors in the performance of their statutory duties.

Such contracts are void.

Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62,

16 Am. Rep. 395; Dill v. Wareham, 7 Met. 477; Thorndike v. Camden, 82 Me. 39, 7 L. R. A. 463, 19 Atl. 95; People ex rel. Eckerson v. Zundel, 157 N. Y. 513, 52 N. E. 570; Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 392, 52 Am. Dec. 120.

It is contrary to public policy, and therefore void, for a city to contract to pay annually for many years a sum of money the gross and annual amounts of which are both uncertain, and more especially so when the return to be received is also uncertain.

Garrison v. Chicago, 7 Biss. 480, Fed. Cas. No. 5,255; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 97; Richmond County Gaslight Co. v. Middletown, 59 N. Y. 228; Milbau v. Sharp, 27 N. Y. 628, 34 Am. Dec. 314; Davis v. New York, 14 N. Y. 533, 67 Am. Dec. 186; Gale v. Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344, 9 Am. Rep. 80; Brick Presby. Church v. New York, 5 Cow. 538; Gosler v. Georgetown, 6 Wheat. 597, 5 L. ed. 339.

Wiswell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On May 5, 1887, the Waterville Water Company, the predecessor of the plaintiff corporation, entered into a written contract with the inhabitants of the then town of Waterville, by the terms of which the water company contracted, among other things, to construct a safe and suitable reservoir in the town, with a capacity of at least 2,000,000 gallons of water, the bottom of which reservoir should be at least 175 feet above the level of the street at the postoffice; to force water to such reservoir from either the Mesalonskee stream or the Kennebec river, and keep therein at all times water sufficient to supply the hydrants to be established in the town of Waterville for extinguishing fires, and also sufficient to supply the inhabitants of the town with water for domestic and other uses; to convey the water from the reservoir through cast-iron pipes of adequate size and strength, to be laid by it in certain named streets of the town; and to connect such pipes with fifty hydrants of the most improved pattern, to be furnished and placed in position by the company wherever located by the town, and to furnish water for such hydrants.

The water company therein further contracted to furnish, free of charge, except for the consideration hereinafter referred to, water for three watering troughs, and a limited supply of water for the seven schoolhouses in the village, the town hall, selectmen's office, engine houses, a fountain, and to supply one street sprinkler. The town, upon its part, in consideration of the agreements made by the water company, agreed to pay $40 per annum for each of the fifty hydrants referred to, and $30 per annum for each additional hydrant that the town might need and require to be set. It was further provided that the contract should continue in force for a period of twenty years from the time said works are completed, and said hydrants are supplied with water sufficient to render a reasonably efficient fire service.

49 L. R. A.

At a meeting of the board of aldermen of the city of Waterville held April 2, 1889, the town having in the intervening time become a city by act of the legislature, this communication from the water company was presented and read:

"To the City Council of Waterville: The Waterville Water Company respectfully represents that the valuation put upon its property and plant for the purposes of taxation for the year 1888 was excessive, and pray that a reasonable abatement of its tax for that year may be ordered. Said company also pray that a reasonable fixed valuation may be decided upon by the city council for a definite term, upon which said company's tax shall be based."

This communication was signed in the name of the Waterville Water Company, by its treasurer.

Thereupon, at the same meeting, the following order was presented in the board of aldermen, and upon the same day passed in concurrence by both branches of the city council:

"Ordered: That the mayor be and hereby is authorized and instructed to propose to the Waterville Water Company, that if said company will furnish to the city water for flushing the public sewers whenever necessary, the city will fix a valuation of not exceeding $25,000, upon which to tax said company's property. Said valuation to continue so long as the water company shall furnish water for flushing the sewers, not exceeding the remainder of the term of the contract now subsisting between the city and said water company, and if said proposition is agreed to by said company, to contract in writing in behalf of the city with said company in accordance with this order."

On April 12, 1889, a supplemental contract was entered into between the city and the water company, substantially in accordance with the order above quoted, except that the terms of the contract in relation to the supply of water to be furnished for schoolhouses and public buildings were considerably more liberal for the city than the terms of the original contract. It contained a provision in relation to the furnishing of water for flushing sewers, as stipulated in the order passed by the city council, and a further agreement to supply water for a proposed new city building.

The language of the contract relative to the obligation of the city was as follows: "The city of Waterville, the party of the second part, for and in consideration of the use of water furnished (free of charge) by the party of the first part as hereinbefore mentioned, hereby contracts and agrees with said party of the first part, through Nathaniel Meader, mayor of said city, its agent hereunto duly appointed and authorized, that the annual valuation of said company's works and the property now owned by said company in said Waterville, for the purpose of taxation, shall not exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, for and during the continuance of the original contract for a supply of water made between said company and the town of Waterville, and dated May 5, 1887." This contract was subsequently ratified by a resolution passed in concurrence by both branches of the city council.

At a meeting of the board of aldermen held November 5, 1889, the following order was presented, and laid upon the table:

"Whereas, the Waterville Water Company on the twelfth day of April, A. D. 1889, made a contract with the city of Waterville to furnish certain water service for said city, as expressed therein, and whereas, doubt has been expressed as to the validity of said contract on account of the terms in which the same is expressed, therefore, be it ordered:

"That in consideration that said Waterville Water Company has furnished said water service to the present time and shall furnish the same for the term expressed in said contract, said city will pay therefor a sum of money annually which shall be equal to the tax annually assessed against said company by said city on such a portion of said company's valuation as shall be in excess of twenty-five thousand dollars. This agreement shall take effect and become operative when said company shall express its assent thereto and shall include the present year, and the mayor is hereby authorized to make a formal contract with said water company in accordance with the spirit and terms of this order."

This order received a passage by both branches of the city council on November 11, 1889.

Upon January 21, 1890, a new contract was entered into between the city and the water company as authorized by the foregoing order, wherein the agreements of the water company were substantially identical with those contained in the contract of April 12, 1889. The contract, upon the part of the city, was as follows: "The city of Waterville, the party of the second part, for and in consideration of the use of water furnished by the party of the first part, as hereinbefore mentioned, hereby contracts and agrees with said party of the first part, through Nathaniel Meader, mayor of said city, its agent hereunto duly appointed and authorized, to pay said water company each year a sum of money equal to all taxes assessed for that year upon the property now owned by said company in said city, and all pipe lines with hydrants and fixtures hereafter laid by said water company in said city, in excess of the tax assessed upon a valuation of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000) for and during the remainder of the term of the original contract for a supply of water made between said company and the town of Waterville, and dated May 5, 1887." It was further provided therein "that this contract is substituted for the contract entered into by and between said city and said water company April 12, 1889."

The Waterville Water Company was incorporated by an act of the legislature approved March 16, 1881. By act of the legislature approved February 8, 1887, its charter was amended by the addition of the following section: "Said towns of Waterville, Winslow, and Fairfield village corporation, or either of them, are hereby authorized to contract with said Waterville Water Company for such supply of water as is contemplated by said act of incorporation, and as herein amended, and to pay to such company such compensation therefor as may be agreed upon by said company and said town or towns."

For a number of years succeeding the execution of the contract last referred to, the city yearly paid to the company an amount equal to all taxes assessed upon the company's property in excess of the tax assessed upon a valuation of $25,000, and exclusive of the tax upon new property acquired by the company subsequent to the time of the execution of this contract. But in the year 1897, the tax upon the company's property having been paid by the company, the city refused to pay the company the amount provided by the contract, and this suit was brought to recover the same.

It is urged upon the part of the defense that the contract of January 21, 1890,—the one upon which this suit is based,—was illegal and void, because its purpose and effect were to exempt from taxation a considerable portion of the water company's property, or to limit and restrain the assessors of taxes from placing a true valuation upon its property.

If this were true (that is, if the terms of the last contract were merely intended as a cover, and if the real intent and purpose of the contracting parties was to grant an exemption from taxation, in whole or in part), we should have no question of the correctness of the defendant's position.

By the Constitution of this state, "all taxes upon real and personal estate, assessed by authority of this state, shall be apportioned and assessed equally, according to the just value thereof." [Art. 9, § 8.] Although this section applies specially to real estate, yet the very idea of taxation implies an equal apportionment and assessment upon all property, real and personal, according to the just value thereof. Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62, 16 Am. Rep. 395. All property which is the subject of taxation under the authority of the state must bear its just and due proportion of the burden thereof.

Nor, perhaps, is there any doubt that the contract of April 12, 1889, was invalid, whatever may have been its purpose or the consideration therefor, because therein the city of Waterville attempted to limit the official action of the assessors of that city,—an entirely independent tribunal created by authority of law, and over which the city council of Waterville had no control whatever.

But the question here is whether or not a municipality may make a valid contract with a water company, wherein, in consideration of the contract of the company to furnish a supply of water for municipal purposes, it agrees to pay therefor, in addition to a specified sum of money, another sum each year equal to the amount of tax for that year assessed against the company provided that the consideration for this agreement upon the part of the municipality is reasonably adequate. We think that such a contract, if reasonable and fair, and for a reasonable length of time, may be made.

It was decided by this court in Portland v. Portland Water Co. 67 Me. 135, that, in pursuance of legislative authority, the city of Portland might exempt from taxation for a term of years the property of the water company, in consideration of an undertaking and agreement by the company to furnish free of cost to the city a supply of water for its public and municipal purposes. The court pointed out that the legislative action, followed by the vote of the city council in pursuance of it, partook of the nature of a contract with the defendant corporation and distinguished the case from that of Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62, 16 Am. Rep. 395, which was much relied upon by the plaintiff.

The great distinction between these two cases (Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, and Portland v. Portland Water Co.) is obvious. In the former case the municipality attempted, undoubtedly because it was believed that thereby benefits would ultimately, but indirectly, accrue to the people of the town, to exempt the defendant from its just share of the burden of taxation, while in the latter case the city only paid for benefits received by the municipality, as such, by the so-called exemption.

But in the case under consideration the contract neither provides for nor means exemption from taxation, if the consideration for the agreement upon the part of the city is reasonably adequate. The term "exemption" implies a release from some burden, duty, or obligation. "It is a grace, a favor, an immunity; taken out from under the general rule, not to be like others who are not exempt; to receive, and not make a return." Bartholomew v. Austin, 52 U. S. App. 512, 85 Fed. Rep. 359, 29 C. C. A. 568. But it cannot be said that a corporation that, for a valuable and adequate consideration, obtains the agreement of another to reimburse it for the amount of taxes that it is obliged to pay, is thereby exempted or released from the burden of paying its just proportion of taxes.

A lessor provides in his lease that, as a partial payment for the use of the demised premises, the lessee shall reimburse him for the amount that he shall be obliged to pay as a tax upon such premises. Is the lessor or his property exempted or released from any burden of taxation? Certainly not. The payment of a tax by the lessee is only the payment of a partial consideration for the use of the premises. No more, we think, can it be said that this contract under consideration has the effect of exempting the property of the plaintiff corporation from taxation, provided that there was an adequate consideration for the contract.

If, as was decided in Portland v. Portland Water Co. 67 Me. 135, a city may make full compensation for a water supply needed and received by it, by offsetting the tax against the service rendered, why may not a valid contract be made to pay in part for such service by the payment of a sum equal to the tax assessed upon the company's property, in addition to the payment of a definite sum, when, by reason of the extent of the water service rendered, a sum equal to the tax assessed would not be a fair equivalent therefor?

We can see no distinction in principle. True, in Portland v. Portland Water Co. the legislature specifically authorized such a contract; but no objection is made to this contract because of a lack of authority given by the legislature, as, we have already seen, the town of Waterville was authorized by an amendment to the charter of the original company to contract with that company for a supply of water.

Our conclusion that such a contract is valid, when made for an adequate consideration, is abundantly sustained by numerous decided cases.

In Cartersville Improvement, Gas, & Water Co. v. Cartersville, 89 Ga. 683, 16 S. E. 25, the city agreed that it would exempt or cause to be exempted from municipal taxation all the property of the gas and water company for a term of years, and that "if the city should at any time during the five years find itself obliged, by a decree of any court or by operation of law, to assess and collect a tax against the property mentioned, then the city agreed that, in consideration of the reduced prices at which the gaslight was to be furnished it and its citizens, it would pay or return to the illuminating company, its successors or assigns, all sums of money which it or they might have been obliged to pay, and which might have been levied or assessed against the property by the city in violation of the spirit of this contract." In an action brought by the company to recover from the city the amount which it had been obliged to pay as taxes assessed upon its property, it was held by the court as follows: "While a city cannot exempt a gas company from municipal taxation, it can contract to pay for gas a stipulated sum per lamp, and in addition thereto a sum for all the lamps supplied, equivalent to the amount of taxes imposed upon the company, provided this additional sum is a fair and just allowance to compensate for the actual value of the light service, and the stipulation is bona fide and not in the nature of an evasion of the law prohibiting exemption from taxes." The court further held: "The present action is not brought to recover money voluntarily paid as taxes, but for a balance due under the contract for lighting the city: this balance being measured in part by the amount of taxes assessed and collected by the municipal government from the gas company."

In Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396, an ordinance of the city of Davenport provided that the water company should, during the life of the grant, furnish water free of charge to all public schools and to all city buildings, and for certain fountains and watering troughs: "And in consideration of the foregoing provisions the said company, during the term of twenty-five years, shall be exempt from all municipal taxation on the franchise hereby granted, and all property owned by said company and actually required for the economical management of the works aforesaid."

The court held that this ordinance was a valid one, saying in its opinion: "But it seems to us that, when the whole ordinance is construed together, it does not amount to an exemption from taxation. It, in effect, applies the taxes as they would otherwise become due in part payment of, or in part consideration for, the water rent. The city pays the amount of money specified, and the taxes upon the franchise and the property required for the management of the works as water rent. It might have required the payment of the taxes, and then returned the amount as part pay for water rent. The manner of doing it cannot defeat the power to do it."

In Bartholomew v. Austin, 52 U. S. App. 512, 85 Fed. Rep. 359, 29 C. C. A. 568 (a case decided by the circuit court of appeals for the fifth circuit), the contract between the water company and the city provided that the city should have the right to use water, free of charge, from the hydrants, for the purpose of flushing sewers, for the fire department buildings, city hall, and all public schools, and for watering places and fountains, "in consideration for all of which the property of the City Water Company shall be, and the same is hereby, exempted from municipal taxation during the full term for which the contract is executed." The courts sustained the contract, and held that the meaning of the provision above referred to was not to grant an exemption from taxation. Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396, and Portland v. Portland Water Co. 67 Me. 135, were both cited by the court in its opinion with approval.

In Utica Waterworks Co. v. Utica, 31 Hun, 431, the contract between the water company and the city provided that, for the water service furnished by the company for municipal services, the company was to receive a definite sum each year, and in addition thereto a sum equal to one half of its taxes paid in excess of $1,000. The court sustained the contract. In the opinion of the court it is said: "The contract furnished a mode of computation by which the sum to be paid annually by the city could be ascertained. . . . The effect of the contract is not to relieve the company from the payment of taxes in whole or in part, at the expense of other taxpayers, but it is to adopt the amount of taxes paid by the company as a partial measure of compensation for the water supplied by it. . . . It is not a remission of taxes, but simply a resort to the amount of taxes as a measure of compensation."

In New Orleans v. New Orleans Waterworks Co. 36 La. Ann. 432, the act of the legislature incorporating the waterworks company provided that the city should be allowed water free of charge for fires and other public purposes, "and in consideration thereof the franchises and property of said New Orleans Waterworks Company used in accordance with this act shall be exempt from taxation—state, municipal, and parochial." A contract was made between the company and the city in accordance with the legislative enactment, but the city subsequently assessed, and brought suit against the company for, the taxes. The court held that the city was entitled to judgment, since, by express provision of the Constitution, property could not be exempted from taxation unless it was "actually used for church, school, or charitable purposes," but that the water company could compel the city to pay for water used a sum equal to the amount of the taxes thus recovered, as the latter amount was made by the act of the legislature and by the parties the exact consideration for the free supply of water.

In Ludington Water-Supply Co. v. Ludington, reported in 119 Mich. 480, 78 N. W. 558, the question considered was identical in principle with the one here presented. The court decided that a contract whereby a city, as part consideration for a water supply, agrees to pay all taxes levied against the property of the water company in excess of a certain amount, during the continuance of the contract, is not invalid, as an attempt to exempt a company's property from taxation, in excess of the amount named. The court says in its opinion: "It is contended that the provisions relating to taxes are invalid, for the reason that the city has no power, under its charter, to exempt property from taxation, and that this contract is an attempt to exempt the property of the plaintiff, in excess of a certain amount, from its share of the public burden. The contract does not purport to provide that the property of plaintiff shall not be assessed. Its terms indicate that it was intended by both parties that it would be assessed, and that the plaintiff would pay the taxes on the property up to a certain amount, and the defendant all in excess, as a part of the consideration for the supply of water. The city no more exempts the property of the plaintiff from taxation, by such an agreement, than does the mortgagor, who agrees to pay the taxes levied against the mortgaged property, exempt the mortgaged property from taxation."

It is true that the courts of some states where the question has arisen have come to a different conclusion, and have regarded a contract similar to this, in substance, as an attempt to exempt the property of the corporation contracting with the city from taxation. That such may be true in any given case, and that such a contract may be merely intended to cover with the semblance of legality an illegal attempt to exempt property from taxation without a fair return therefor, we do not question.

But what we hold is that a municipality may, for a reasonably adequate consideration, in the way of service rendered to it for municipal purposes, agree to make compensation therefor, for a term of years not unreasonably long, either in whole or in part, by reimbursing the company, in whole or in part, the amount that the company performing the service may be obliged to pay as taxes assessed upon its property. We think that this conclusion is sustained both by reason and the weight of authority.

This view leads us to an examination of the question of fact as to the adequacy of the consideration for the city's agreement in this case, but about this there is apparently no controversy. It is sufficient to say, upon this branch of the case, that the undisputed testimony of witnesses produced by the plaintiff shows that a fair compensation, according to the prevailing rates, for the water supplied by the company during the year 1897 under the contract of January 21, 1890, in addition to that which was provided for in the original contract of May 5, 1887, would be far in excess of the amount that the company can recover in this action under the terms of the latter contract. According to this testimony, this compensation would amount to over $3,000, while the amount that can be recovered in this action is less than $1,000.

As to the years preceding 1897, it is admitted that the value of the water service rendered by the company was equal each year to the amount that the city under the last contract reimbursed the company for taxes paid. In view of this evidence and admission, and the further fact that the counsel for the city raises no question of adequacy of consideration, either by evidence or argument, we may safely assume that during the remaining years of the contract the city will receive at least an equal equivalent for the amount that it will be obliged to pay.

We are therefore forced to the conclusion, from the value of the water service that has been actually furnished,—than which no better evidence could be produced,—that the contract when made was fair and reasonable; that the city thereby received an amply adequate consideration for its agreement, and has since received a fair equivalent for its payments; and that the contract was not intended as the cover of an illegal attempt to exempt the company's property from taxation.

It is further urged that this contract was void because "it is contrary to public policy for a city to contract to pay annually for many years a sum of money, the gross and annual amounts of which are both uncertain, and more especially so when the return to be received is also uncertain."

We do not think that the contract involved in this case is contrary to public policy. It is not for an unreasonably long period of time. In many cases it is absolutely necessary for a city or town to make a water contract for a term of years, in order to obtain the great benefits of a sufficient water supply for the protection of the property of its inhabitants against fire, to provide for the health of its citizens by a proper sewer system, and for other municipal purposes. Without a contract extending over a period of years, it would, we believe, frequently be the case that no individuals or corporation could be found who would go to the expense of constructing a suitable and sufficient water plant that would answer the requirements for public purposes as well as for domestic uses.

Such a contract must contain some elements of uncertainty as to compensation, because of the uncertainty of the extent of water service that may be required in the future by reason of the growth of the municipality in population and the increase of its needs. There is no very great uncertainty under this contract as to the amount that will have to be paid each year by the city according to its terms. The provision of the contract relative to the repayment of a portion of this company's taxes only applied to "the property now owned by said company in said city, and all pipe lines with hydrants and fixtures hereafter laid by said water company in said city." It does not affect the considerable amount of property that has been acquired by the company since the execution of the contract; and while the pipe lines and hydrants of the company may have increased, and very likely will increase, in length and number, it is reasonable to believe that there will be a corresponding increase of service rendered to the city. There is undoubtedly some uncertainty in the contract, both as to the extent of service that may be required and rendered and the amount of compensation that will have to be paid therefor; but this uncertainty is inevitable in such a contract, and is certainly not of such a character as to make the contract contrary to public policy. As was said in several of the cited cases, the amount of taxes is only adopted as a measure by which to determine the amount of compensation.

It is unnecessary in this case to inquire whether a city council, in making such a contract as this, is exercising its governmental powers or its business powers, or whether a city council may, without legislative authority, enter into a contract with a water company for a term of years, because in this case, as we have already seen, legislative authority was given for the then town of Waterville to make a contract with the water company for a supply of water. Two contracts were made,—one providing for the payment of a specified sum for each hydrant, the other for the payment of a sum to be measured each year by the amount of taxes for such year in excess of a certain amount. Both contracts were fair and reasonable, and entered into without fraud.

There is no controversy as to the amount to be recovered in this action if the action is maintainable. That amount is $924, and interest thereon from September 23, 1897, upon which day, it is admitted, demand was made.

Judgment for plaintiff for $924 and interest, as above.

Peters, Ch. J., concurring:

I have concurred in the opinion in this case, but not without some hesitation.

I think the principle is so likely to be abused in practice, that it would be wise in the legislature to interfere, to prevent such contracts in the future. To my mind, there is much in the argument that such contracts are not in accordance with good public policy.

As many of our cities and towns have already incurred an indebtedness up to the constitutional limit, they are tempted to purchase the privileges of light and water at extravagant rates in this way. I appreciate a difference between a lessee paying a part of his agreed rent by assuming taxes assessed on the rented property by a third party, and taxes assessed by the lessee himself or by agents and officers in his behalf. Here the taxes to be paid are not merely such as pertain to the property leased, but are the taxes assessed on all the property of the lessors.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Leonard HOWARTH, Receiver of the Traders' Bank of Tacoma, Appt.,

v.

Benjamin LOMBARD, Jr.

(.....Mass.....)

1. The construction of a statute imposing liability upon stockholders for debts of a corporation, made by the highest court of the state in which it was enacted, is binding upon the courts of another state in which it is sought to be enforced.
2. The liability imposed by statute upon stockholders for debts of the corporation is contractual as well as statutory, and may be enforced in foreign jurisdictions, if the statute requires no preliminary local proceedings to adjust equities.
3. Collection may be made from stockholders wherever they may be found, after the preliminary proceedings required by statute, and the adjustment of the rights and liabilities of the corporation, creditors, and stockholders under a statute imposing liability for corporate debts upon stockholders after proceedings showing the insolvency of the corporation and the need of payment by stockholders to satisfy the claims of creditors.
4. A nonresident holder of stock in a corporation is bound by the action of the court in appointing a receiver for it and determining the amount necessary to satisfy the statutory liability of stockholders for its debts.
5. A receiver appointed to enforce the statutory liability of stockholders of an insolvent corporation, who, under the statute, has legal title to the fund as trustee for creditors, and who is the only person who can legally demand and collect the money, may bring actions against stockholders in his own name in courts of other states.

(March 28, 1900.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court for Suffolk county sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action to enforce defendant's liability as stockholder in an insolvent corporation. Reversed.

The facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. John Walter Saxe and Hollis R. Bailey, for appellant:

The decree fixing the assessment is binding upon the defendant, even though he was not personally served with process in the state of Washington. Service was made upon the corporation of which he was a member, and also by publication in the state of Washington.

Howarth v. Ellwanger, 86 Fed. Rep. 54; Howarth v. Angle, 25 Misc. 551, 55 N. Y. Supp. 1108; Glenn v. Williams, 60 Md. 93; Vanderwerken v. Glenn, 85 Va. 9, 6 S. E. 806; Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 319, 33 L. ed. 184, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Howard v. Glenn, 85 Ga. 238, 11 S. E. 610; Priest v. Glenn, 4 U. S. App. 478, 51 Fed. Rep. 400, 2 C. C. A. 305; Bennett v. Glenn, 8 U. S. App. 419, 55 Fed. Rep. 956, 5 C. C. A. 353; Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Phœnix Furniture Co. 108 Mich. 170, 34 L. R. A. 694, 66 N. W. 1095; Parker v. Stoughton Mill Co. 91 Wis. 174, 64 N. W. 751; Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 986, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810; Shcafe v. Larimer, 79 Fed. Rep. 921; Dexter v. Edmands, 89 Fed. Rep. 467; Brown v. Trail, 89 Fed. Rep. 641; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414, 44 N. E. 349.

The question as to what effect this decree of the court in the state of Washington is entitled to have in Massachusetts is a Federal question upon which the decisions of the United States Supreme Court are binding upon the courts of Massachusetts.

Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Phœnix Furniture Co. 108 Mich. 170, 34 L. R. A. 694, note, 66 N. W. 1095.

In Commonwealth Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Wood, 171 Mass. 484, 51 N. E. 19, it was decided that an assessment made upon a policy holder, after notice by publication, was binding, although the policy holders failed to receive any actual notice.

NOTE.—For right to enforce stockholder's liability outside of the state of incorporation, see note to Cushing v. Perot (Pa.) 34 L. R. A. 737; also footnote to Howarth v. Angle (N. Y.) 47 L. R. A. 725.

For receiver's right to enforce stockholder's liability, see Howarth v. Angle (N. Y.) 47 L. R. A. 725; Hirschfeld v. Fitzgerald (N. Y.) 40 49 L. R. A.

L. R. A. 839; Wyman v. Eaton (Iowa) 43 L. R. A. 695; Minneapolis Baseball Co. v. City Bank (Minn.) 38 L. R. A. 415; Runner v. Dwiggs (Ind.) 36 L. R. A. 645; also cases in note to Cushing v. Perot (Pa.) 34 L. R. A. 737; and Republic L. Ins. Co. v. Swigert (Ill.) 12 L. R. A. 328.

Defendant is liable under the Constitution and statutes and law of Washington apart from the decree levying assessment.

The liability sought to be enforced is in no sense penal or in the nature of a penalty.

Flash v. Conn, 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224.

Such a liability as this is customarily held to be contractual in its nature.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 872.

That the statutory liability of a stockholder in a corporation can be enforced outside of the state where the corporation was organized,— Cuykendall v. Miles, 10 Fed. Rep. 342; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 57 Fed. Rep. 279; Rhodes v. United States Nat. Bank, 24 U. S. App. 607, 34 L. R. A. 742, 66 Fed. Rep. 512, 13 C. C. A. 612; McVickar v. Jones, 70 Fed. Rep. 754; National Bank v. Whitman, 76 Fed. Rep. 697; American Freehold Land-Mortg. Co. v. Woodworth, 82 Fed. Rep. 269; Rhode Island Mortg. & T. Co. v. Moulton, 82 Fed. Rep. 979; Ferguson v. Sherman, 116 Cal. 169, 37 L. R. A. 622, 47 Pac. 1023; Dexter v. Edmands, 89 Fed. Rep. 467; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 172 Mass. 39, 42 L. R. A. 396, 51 N. E. 207.

Under the national bank act the liability of a stockholder is several, and not joint; the liability is contractual or quasi contractual.

Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 673, 24 L. ed. 168; United States v. Knox, 102 U. S. 422, 26 L. ed. 216; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 55, 30 L. ed. 873, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788; Bailey v. Sawyer, 4 Dill. 463, Fed. Cas. No. 744; Brown v. Smith, 88 Fed. Rep. 565.

The courts in Massachusetts, as a matter of comity, will enforce a contractual liability existing under the statutes of another state where no rule of public policy is violated.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978.

It is not against public policy in Massachusetts to enforce the statutory liability of the defendant in this case.

Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 86, 11 N. E. 540; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414, 44 N. E. 349, 172 Mass. 39, 42 L. R. A. 396, 51 N. E. 207.

The usual mode of procedure under the United States bank act has been by separate actions at law brought by the receiver against different stockholders.

Bailey v. Sawyer, 4 Dill. 463, Fed. Cas. No. 744; Kennedy v. Gibson, 8 Wall. 498, 19 L. ed. 476; Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 673, 24 L. ed. 168.

A decree in equity for a fixed sum of money is a good basis for an action at law to enforce payment of the same.

2 Black, Judgm. § 902.

49 L. R. A.

A foreign receiver, as a matter of comity, may sue.

Smith, Receiverships, 1897, p. 167; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 242; Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. v. Langdon, 44 Minn. 37, 46 N. W. 310; Dyer v. Power, 39 N. Y. S. R. 136, 14 N. Y. Supp. 873; Wilkinson v. Rutherford, 49 N. J. L. 241, 8 Atl. 507; Maibon v. Ongley Electric Co. 156 N. Y. 196, 50 N. E. 806.

The United States courts have frequently allowed a foreign receiver to sue.

Cuykendall v. Miles, 10 Fed. Rep. 342; Rogers v. Riley, 80 Fed. Rep. 759; Avery v. Boston Safe-Deposit & T. Co. 72 Fed. Rep. 700; Schultz v. Phenix Ins. Co. 77 Fed. Rep. 375, 42 U. S. App. 483, 80 Fed. Rep. 337, 25 C. C. A. 453; Sheafe v. Larimer, 79 Fed. Rep. 921; Hewarth v. Ellwanger, 86 Fed. Rep. 521.

Plaintiff can sue in his own name as receiver, and need not sue in the name of the corporation.

Wilson v. Book, 13 Wash. 683, 43 Pac. 939; Hardin v. Sweeney, 14 Wash. 132, 44 Pac. 138.

Plaintiff can sue in Massachusetts as receiver.

Taylor v. Columbian Ins. Co. 14 Allen. 353; Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 267, 96 Am. Dec. 747; Wilson v. Welch, 157 Mass. 77, 31 N. E. 712; Bunsell v. Supreme Sitting O. of I. H. 161 Mass. 229, 23 L. R. A. 846, 36 N. E. 1065; Andrews v. Morn, 162 Mass. 294, 38 N. E. 505; Fort Payne Coal & I. Co. v. Webster, 163 Mass. 134, 39 N. E. 786; Ewing v. King, 169 Mass. 97, 47 N. E. 597.

Messrs. Russell Bradford and Edwin G. Melnes, for appellee:

The Washington court never had jurisdiction over this defendant to make or authorize an assessment that would bind him in any way, or in any way to determine the amount of his liability.

The United States Supreme Court has drawn a sharp and logical distinction between suits to enforce liability for unpaid subscriptions to stock where the corporation without judicial proceedings had a right to levy the assessment, and suits to enforce an additional personal liability imposed by statute on stockholders, and not enforceable by the corporation. In the one case they have held that the stockholder was not a necessary party to proceedings to compel the corporation to lay the assessment needed. In the other case, if the stockholder was not before the court, the proceedings have been held to be void against him.

Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 319, 33 L. ed. 184, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Glenn v. Liggett, 135 U. S. 533, 34 L. ed. 264, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 867; Glenn v. Harbury, 145 U. S. 499, 36 L. ed. 790, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Wilson v. Seligman, 144 U. S. 41, 36 L. ed. 338, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 541; Great Western Telcg. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 986, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810; Great Western Telcg. Co. v. Loewenthal, 154 Ill. 261, 40 N. E. 318, 51 Ill. App. 447.

Whether a receiver can enforce the alleged statutory liability, whether he can sue in this jurisdiction, and, if so, whether he can maintain the action in his own name, are all questions of procedure and remedy, and are governed exclusively by the law of the forum.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 876; Story, Conf. L. § 556; Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 34 L. R. A. 757, 42 N. E. 419; Tuttle v. National Bank of the Republic, 161 Ill. 497, 34 L. R. A. 750, 44 N. E. 984; Hollings v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. 150 U. S. 371, 37 L. ed. 1113, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127; Parker v. Moore, 3 Edw. Ch. 234; High, Receivers, § 406; 5 Thomp. Corp. §§ 6839, 6848; Falmouth Nat. Bank v. Cape Cod Ship Canal Co. 166 Mass. 550, 44 N. E. 617.

The statutory liability runs directly and immediately from shareholders to creditors. The receiver has no power to enforce the liability.

Beach, Receivers, Alderson's ed. 1897, § 459; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 218; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 869; First Nat. Bank v. Hingham Mfg. Co. 127 Mass. 563; Chamberlin v. Huguenot Mfg. Co. 118 Mass. 532; Farnsworth v. Wood, 91 N. Y. 308; Arctz v. Weir, 89 Ill. 25; Jacobson v. Allen, 20 Blatchf. 525, 12 Fed. Rep. 454; Liberty Female College Assn. v. Watkins, 70 Mo. 13; Umsted v. Buskirk, 17 Ohio St. 113; Lane v. Morris, 8 Ga. 468; Bristol v. Sanford, 12 Blatchf. 341, Fed. Cas. No. 1393; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3,560; Beach, Priv. Corp. § 716; Waite, Insolvent Corp. § 233; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414, 44 N. E. 349; American Freehold Land-Mortg. Co. v. Woodworth, 82 Fed. Rep. 269; Nierne v. Atherton, 7 Kan. App. 20, 51 Pac. 791.

A receiver cannot sue in a foreign jurisdiction.

High, Receivers, 3d ed. 1894, § 239; Andrews v. Moen, 162 Mass. 294, 38 N. E. 505; Buswell v. Supreme Sitting O. of I. H. 161 Mass. 229, 23 L. R. A. 846, 36 N. E. 1065; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 35 L. ed. 112, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525; Harvey v. Varnacy, 104 Mass. 436; Ayres v. Siebel, 82 Iowa, 347, 47 N. W. 989; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Motherwell Iron & Steel Co. 95 Tenn. 172, 29 L. R. A. 164, 31 S. W. 1002; Stockbridge v. Beckwith, 6 Del. Ch. 72, 33 Atl. 620; Moreau v. DuBellet (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 503; Parker v. C. Lamb & Sons, 99 Iowa, 265, 34 L. R. A. 704, 68 N. W. 686; Filkins v. Nunnemacher, 81 Wis. 91, 57 N. W. 79; Rogers v. Haines, 103 Ala. 198, 15 So. 606.

In any event the receiver cannot maintain the action in his own name in this state.

Glenn v. Marbury, 145 U. S. 499, 36 L. ed. 790, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Wilson v. Welch, 157 Mass. 77, 31 N. E. 712; High, Receivers, 3d ed. § 200; Ewing v. King, 169 Mass. 97, 47 N. E. 597.

This action cannot be maintained under the settled law of this commonwealth.

The alleged liability arises wholly by the statutes of Washington, it being "clear that 49 L. R. A.

at common law the corporation only would be liable."

Andrews v. Callender, 13 Pick. 490.

This suit involves the relation between the corporation, its creditors, and its stockholders, and complete justice only can be done by the courts of the jurisdiction where the corporation was created.

Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 86, 11 N. E. 540.

In effect an assessment is attempted to be laid upon the stockholders according to the alleged law of Washington, and the "courts of that state alone can afford complete and effectual judicial relief."

Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 86, 11 N. E. 540.

The suit concerns the relation between the corporation and its stockholders, and upon that the court will not undertake to pass.

Pierce v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 145 Mass. 56, 12 N. E. 858; Coffing v. Dodge, 167 Mass. 231, 45 N. E. 928; Andrews v. Moen, 162 Mass. 294, 38 N. E. 505.

The jurisdiction of the Washington court as against this defendant can go no further than to determine that certain claims presented to it are valid obligations of the corporation. It cannot determine the validity or invalidity of claims not presented to it for adjudication, nor, as against this defendant, the time when the claims arose, the amount of stock outstanding when they arose, or what amount of stock this defendant holds, or how long he has held it.

D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. 165, 13 L. ed. 648; Gregory v. Stetson, 133 U. S. 579, 33 L. ed. 792, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 422; Pendleton v. Russell, 144 U. S. 640, 36 L. ed. 574, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 743; Sugg v. Thornton, 132 U. S. 524, 33 L. ed. 447, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 163; Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co. 147 U. S. 165, 37 L. ed. 123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271; Goldie v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 39 L. ed. 517, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 34 L. ed. 670, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92; Hale v. Hardon, 89 Fed. Rep. 283; Wilson v. Seligman, 144 U. S. 41, 36 L. ed. 338, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 541; Great Western Tel. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 986, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810.

The equality that justice demands would surely be no more likely to be reached by suits at law against individual stockholders than by a bill in equity against all the stockholders within reach of process. And such suits have been repeatedly dismissed by this court.

Coffing v. Dodge, 167 Mass. 231, 45 N. E. 928; Erickson v. NeSmith, 15 Gray, 221, 4 Allen, 233; Hutchins v. New England Coal Min. Co. 4 Allen, 580; Halsey v. McLean, 12 Allen, 438, 90 Am. Dec. 157; New Haven Horse-Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. 142 Mass. 340, 7 N. E. 773; Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 86, 11 N. E. 540; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 56, 27 N. E. 1015; State Nat. Bank v. Saycard, 86 Fed. Rep. 45; Elkhart Nat. Bank v. Con- verse, 58 U. S. App. 83, 87 Fed. Rep. 252, 30 C. C. A. 632.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought by the plaintiff, as receiver of the Traders' Bank of Tacoma, in the state of Washington, to recover the amount of an assessment laid by the superior court of that state upon the defendant as a stockholder. A demurrer was filed, which was sustained by the superior court, and the case comes before us on an appeal from a judgment for the defendant.

The Constitution of Washington contains this provision: "Each stockholder of any banking or insurance corporation or joint stock association shall be individually and personally liable, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporation or association accruing while they remain such stockholders, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares." Wash. Const. art. 12, § 11. A statute which is made a part of the plaintiff's declaration is in these words: "Each and every stockholder shall be personally liable to the creditors of the company to the amount of what remains unpaid upon his subscription to the capital stock, and not otherwise, provided that the stockholders of every bank incorporated under this act, or the territory of Washington, shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably," etc. (then following the exact language of the Constitution). 1 Hill's Anno. Stat. & Codes (Wash.) § 1511. It is averred that this statute was in force at the time of the organization and incorporation of the Traders' Bank, and has been ever since. The statutes do not more particularly define the nature of this liability, and they contain nothing as to the means of enforcing it. The meaning of the language in reference to the particular nature of the obligation and the method of enforcing it was left to be determined by the courts. Several decisions of the supreme court of Washington have been made in regard to it. In one case the court uses this language: "It will be seen that there is no language which in express terms gives the creditors the immediate, or any, right of action. The liability is not on, but for, the contract, debt, or agreement. That the liability so provided is in addition to that flowing directly from the holding of stock which has not been fully paid for. The latter, in event of the insolvency of the corporation, is held to be a trust fund for creditors, and there is no good reason why the same should not be held as to the former. No satisfactory reason can be given for holding one to be a trust fund and the other not to be. There is no principle by which the two classes of liability can be distinguished other than that one is primary and the other secondary: for while it is true that one can be enforced by the corporation itself, and the other only by creditors, yet they were both created for the benefit of the corporation in carrying on its business, and to secure to creditors the payment of its obligations. If the liability which is clearly primary must be treated as a trust fund for the benefit of all of the creditors of the corporation, greater reason exists why a liability which is secondary only, and created entirely for the benefit of the creditors, should likewise be treated as such trust fund. There is nothing in our Constitution which defines the method by which this liability shall be made available. Hence the method must be determined by the courts, and their aim should be to prescribe one which will accomplish the object of the provision with the least inconvenience to the creditors, without unnecessary annoyance to the stockholders." Wilson v. Book, 13 Wash. 676-679, 43 Pac. 939. See also Watterson v. Masterson, 15 Wash. 511, 46 Pac. 1041. It is decided that this liability cannot be enforced directly by individual creditors, but only by a receiver duly appointed, and by him only after the application of the available assets of the corporation to the payment of its debts. This construction of the statute, made by the highest court of the state in which it was enacted, is binding upon us.

The principal question in the case is whether such a liability can be enforced against stockholders in this commonwealth. It is familiar law that statutes do not extend, ex proprio vigore, beyond the boundaries of the state in which they are enacted. If they are merely penal, they cannot be enforced in another state. If they furnish merely a local remedy for the invasion of a recognized right which is protected elsewhere in other ways, they cannot be given effect in another jurisdiction. Richardson v. New York C. R. Co. 98 Mass. 85-89. The fundamental question is whether there is a substantive right originating in one state, and a corresponding liability which follows the person against whom it is sought to be enforced into another state. Such a right, arising under the common law, is enforceable everywhere. Such a right, arising under a local statute, will be enforced ex comitate in another state unless there is a good reason for refusing to enforce it. It will be enforced, not because of the existence of the statute, but because it is a right which the plaintiff legitimately acquired, and which still belongs to him. If the statute creating the right is against the policy of the law of the neighboring state, that is a sufficient reason for refusing to enforce the right there. In the neighboring state, in such a case, it will not be considered a right. If the enforcement of a statutory right in a neighboring state in the manner proposed will work injustice to its citizens, considerations of comity do not require the recognition of it by the courts of that state. If the right, by the terms of the statute creating it, is to be enforced by prescribed proceedings within the state, the right is limited by the statute, and can only be enforced in accordance with the statute. If it is of such a kind that, with a due regard for the interests of the parties, a proper remedy can be given only in the jurisdiction where it is created, it will not be enforced elsewhere. But if there is a substantive right, of a kind which is generally recognized, courts, through comity, ought to regard it and enforce it as well when it arises under a statute of another state as when it arises at common law, unless there is some good reason for disregarding it. These seem to be the reasons and principles which govern the action of the courts in cases of this kind. See Erickson v. Nesmith, 15 Gray, 221, 4 Allen, 233; Halsey v. McLean, 12 Allen, 438, 90 Am. Dec. 157; Higgins v. Central New England & W. R. Co. 155 Mass. 170, 20 N. E. 534; Walsh v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 160 Mass. 571, 36 N. E. 584; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336-342; Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 86, 11 N. E. 540; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 56, 27 N. E. 1015; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414, 44 N. E. 349, 172 Mass. 39, 42 L. R. A. 396, 51 N. E. 207.

The question whether the liability in cases of this kind is contractual, or only statutory, has been answered differently in different jurisdictions. In Burch v. Taylor, 1 Wash. St. 245-248, 24 Pac. 438,—a case which has since been modified in other particulars,—it is said that the liability is contractual; and, although in the other decisions of that state we have seen no other direct statement upon the subject, we understand them virtually to hold the same thing. It is not the statute which directly and proximately creates the liability. It is the voluntary action of the stockholders under the statute, followed by action of creditors which is founded on the action of the stockholders. This statute was in existence before the Traders' Bank was organized. The stockholders subscribed for their stock with full knowledge of the statute, and they must be held impliedly to have agreed to be bound by it. The statute enters into and forms a part of their undertaking as stockholders, and their implied agreements in that relation conform to it. It is to be noticed, under this statute, that stockholders, merely by subscribing for stock, without an express promise to pay for it, are bound, in all corporations to pay the amount of their unpaid subscriptions, if needed, and in banking corporations to pay as much more, if it is called for, to satisfy creditors. In this respect their undertaking is like that of stockholders in many other states, but unlike that of stockholders in Massachusetts, who become such under statutes which provide for the collection of stock subscriptions by selling the stock to pay the assessment upon it. See New Haven Horse-Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. 142 Mass. 349-354, 7 N. E. 773. Although the liability is founded on a statute, there is a contractual element entering into it. The undertaking is as if one subscribing for stock expressly agreed to take and hold it under a previously prepared contract in writing that all who should become holders of the stock should pay the amount of their subscriptions to the corporation when needed, and should pay the additional sum to create a fund for creditors if the corporation should become insolvent, and a receiver should be appointed to collect it. It was said by Mr. Justice Field in Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341-344, 59 Am. Rep. 86, 11 N. E. 545, that such an obligation is quasi ex contractu. In Concord First Nat. Bank v. Hawkins, 174 U. S. 364-372, 43 L. ed. 1007-1011, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 742, Mr. Justice Shiras says: "Undoubtedly the obligation is declared by the statute to attach to the ownership of the stock, and in that sense may be said to be statutory. But, as the ownership of the stock in most cases arises from the voluntary act of the stockholder, he must be regarded as having agreed or contracted to be subject to the obligation." In Hawthorne v. Calef, 2 Wall. 10, 17 L. ed. 776, it is decided to be contractual, in the sense that under the Constitution no subsequent statute can impair the obligation. See also Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414, 44 N. E. 349; Flash v. Conn. 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 673, 24 L. ed. 168; United States v. Knox, 102 U. S. 422, 26 L. ed. 216; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27-55, 30 L. ed. 864-873, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788; Deater v. Edmonds, 89 Fed. Rep. 467; Howell v. Manglesdorf, 33 Kan. 194-199, 5 Pac. 759; Ferguson v. Sherman, 116 Cal. 169, 37 L. R. A. 622, 47 Pac. 1023. The weight of authority is in favor of holding this statutory liability to be also contractual. At all events, it is a liability which corresponds to a substantive right that grows out of voluntary action which is in the nature of an implied promise to the corporation that is being formed, and to those who may become creditors of the corporation. This action is followed by the completion of the organization of the corporation, and the giving of credit to the corporation by those who trust, in part, at least, to the implied promise of the stockholders. If the voluntary action is a purchase of stock, instead of an original subscription for it, the principle is the same. Such a right ought to be enforceable. Inasmuch as the nature of it and the methods of enforcing it depend upon the statute which enters into the implied contract, we must look to the statute to ascertain its extent and the manner of enforcing it. If it is of such a nature as to call for local proceedings in the state where the corporation is, in order to adjust equities, such proceedings must be had, and it cannot be made effectual without them. Most of the cases in which creditors of foreign corporations have been refused relief in this commonwealth have shown rights which, under the statutes creating them, could not properly be enforced without proceedings in the foreign state whereby equities could be adjusted. In the present case as the statute has been construed, it is plain that no action can be maintained against a stockholder until after proceedings in a court of Washington, showing the insolvency of the corporation, and the need of payment to satisfy the claims of creditors. After such proceedings, and an adjustment of the rights and liabilities of the corporation, of creditors, and of stockholders, collection can be made from stockholders wherever they are found. In Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414, 44 N. E. 349, 172 Mass. 39, 42 L. R. A. 396, 51 N. E. 207, the plaintiff was allowed to recover because a substantive right had grown up, which had been held by the court of Kansas to be contractual, and because the preliminary proceedings in Kansas had been taken, which were necessary under the statute to the enforcement of the right in other jurisdictions. These proceedings, which were merely the recovery of a judgment against the corporation, with proof that it could not be collected in the ordinary way, removed the only limitation upon the right to proceed by action against any stockholder, wherever he might be found. All having been done that the statute required to be done, it was held that, as against one who had become a stockholder in a corporation governed by such a law, there was no injustice in allowing the plaintiff to proceed in our courts.

In the case at bar a receiver of the Traders' Bank has been appointed, the amount of its assets and liabilities has been judicially determined, the necessity for an assessment upon stockholders and the amount of the required assessment have been ascertained, an assessment upon all stockholders has been made, and the receiver, who is to hold this fund in trust for creditors, has been directed to collect it. We see no injustice to the defendant in holding him here to the performance of the obligation which he voluntarily assumed in another state. The question arises, how far these proceedings in the court of Washington are binding on the defendant. The stockholders must be assumed to have understood the statute from the first as it has been construed by the court. They must be presumed to have agreed that on the insolvency of the corporation a receiver might be appointed by the court, and the affairs of the corporation administered, and the amount of its assets and liabilities determined, and the deficiency ascertained under the order of the court, and an assessment to meet this deficiency made ratably upon all who were then stockholders. This is the only proper way of accomplishing the object of the statute, and the statute as construed by the local courts, means this as plainly as if every part were expressed. Under the statute the stockholders impliedly agreed that, if their subscriptions were in part unpaid when they were needed for creditors, they would pay the balance to the corporation or its legal representative, and that if more was needed they would also pay their proper share, up to the amount of their subscriptions, to the trustee of this additional fund, for the benefit of creditors. The determination of the questions involved is a part of the proceedings of the court in the administration of the affairs of a local insolvent corporation. The court of Washington, acting under its general authority in such administration, is the only tribunal which has jurisdiction to determine the amounts due creditors, and to collect and apply the assets of the corporation. The undertaking of the stockholders relates directly to the payment of amounts so to be ascertained. The ascertainment is like a common case of a judgment against a corporation, which is binding on stockholders. The members of such corporations, as well as the corporations themselves, are within the jurisdiction of the local court, so far as is necessary for the determination of the rights and liabilities of the corporation and its members among themselves. In reference to this kind of liability such decisions and orders are binding on stockholders who are not before the court otherwise than by virtue of their membership in the corporation. Elderkin v. Peterson, 8 Wash. 674, 36 Pac. 1089; Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 319, 33 L. ed. 184, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329-336, 40 L. ed. 986-990, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810; Glenn v. Liggett, 133 U. S. 533, 34 L. ed. 264, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 867; Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56-58, 23 L. ed. 220, 221; Marson v. Deither, 49 Minn. 423-426, 52 N. W. 38; Lewis v. Glenn, 84 Va. 947, 979, 6 S. E. 806; Hamilton v. Glenn, 85 Va. 901, 9 S. E. 129; Glenn v. Williams, 60 Md. 93-116. That such adjudications are binding upon absent stockholders in reference to assessments for unpaid subscriptions has often been expressly decided. See cases last above cited. The rule is discussed at length in Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 319, 33 L. ed. 184, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739. Under the statute now before us, we can see no difference in principle between the secondary liability and the primary liability referred to in the opinion of the supreme court of Washington. Each grows out of the same statute and the same undertaking. Each is founded on an implied promise made in pursuance of the requirements of the statute. In reference to each, the subscriber for stock contemplates the same kind of proceedings, and a collection by the same officer, who represents, not only such assets as the corporation has for all purposes, but the right to a special fund, which is an asset that can be collected and used for creditors only. In Cole v. Satsop R. Co. 9 Wash. 487, 37 Pac. 700, and Hardin v. Sweeney, 14 Wash. 129, 44 Pac. 138, it is held that the receiver is the only person who can collect this fund. This is equivalent to saying that it can be collected only of those who are stockholders at the commencement of the proceedings, and that while it is not, in the narrow sense, an asset of the corporation, it is an asset to be used by the receiver and the court for the benefit of the corporation and of the creditors, in administering the affairs of the corporation. See Wilson v. Book, 13 Wash. 676-679, 43 Pac. 939; Irons v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 21 Fed. Rep. 197. There is as much reason for holding the proceedings of the court binding upon absent stockholders in this part of the administration of the affairs of the corporation as in the collection of unpaid subscriptions. The primary fund and the secondary fund are both to be administered under the order of the court. The court, in making assessments for unpaid subscriptions, does not act merely as the representative of the directors, who might have made such an assessment, but by virtue of its general power to do all that is proper in settling the affairs of the corporation. These assessments are, in principle, like the assessments made by the court upon the members of insolvent mutual fire insurance companies under the laws of this commonwealth, which are binding upon the members to whom no actual notice is given. Commonwealth Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Wood, 171 Mass. 484, 51 N. E. 19. The only difference is that our statutes in regard to mutual insurance companies prescribe the manner of making an assessment, while in the case at bar the court acts under the general provisions of the statutes. The general liability under the statute in Washington is like that under the national banking act of the United States, and the court has construed the statute in such a way as to make the practical application of it substantially the same. Under that act assessments made by the comptroller are binding upon stockholders, although made without notice to them. United States Rev. Stat. § 5234; Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 673, 24 L. ed. 168; United States v. Know, 102 U. S. 422, 26 L. ed. 216; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27-55, 30 L. ed. 864-873, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788; Bailey v. Sawyer, 4 Dill. 463, Fed. Cas. No. 744; Brown v. Smith, 88 Fed. Rep. 565. The reason for holding them binding is that the obligation is contractual, and that it contemplates the possibility of such an assessment. Of course, the defendant may show, if he can, that he is not a stockholder of this bank, or not a stockholder for so large an amount as alleged, or may make any other defense that is personal to himself. But we are of opinion that, as a member of the corporation, he is bound by the decision of the court of the state where the corporation was organized, made in administering its affairs in insolvency, and determining the amount of its assets and liabilities, and the amount of the assessment which should be made upon the stockholders.

The remaining question is whether an action upon the liability so determined can be maintained by the receiver in his own name. It has been held that an ordinary appointment as receiver, made in another state, will not enable the appointee to sue in this commonwealth in his own name. Wilson v. Welch, 157 Mass. 77, 31 N. E. 712. If he has a right of property as assignee, he may maintain an action. Fort Payne Coal & Iron Co. v. Webster, 163 Mass. 134, 39 N. E. 786; Ewing v. King, 169 Mass. 97, 47 N. 49 L. R. A.

E. 597. Under a recent statute, an assignee of an ordinary chose in action may sue in his own name. Stat. 1897, chap. 402, § 1. The tendency is towards greater liberality in this respect. Buswell v. Supreme Sitting, O. of I. H. 161 Mass. 224-229, 23 L. R. A. 846, 36 N. E. 1065. In the present case the receiver is called by the court in Washington a "quasi assignee for creditors." He is charged with the administration of a trust fund which does not take form nor come into actual existence until after his appointment, and he is the only person who can collect it. By virtue of his official relation to the corporation and its creditors, he is the owner of the legal title to this fund, as a trustee for the creditors. A suit could not have been brought in the name of the corporation, and he is the only person who can now, or who ever could, legally demand and collect the money. We are of opinion that the action is rightly brought in his name. In a case brought by this plaintiff to collect a part of this same assessment, the court of appeals in the state of New York, affirming a decision of the appellate division of the supreme court of that state (Howarth v. Angle, 39 App. Div. 151, 57 N. Y. Supp. 187), has recently held that the plaintiff may recover in an action at law against a stockholder in that state. Howarth v. Angle, 162 N. Y. 179, 56 N. E. 489. A similar decision has also been made in favor of this plaintiff against another stockholder by the United States circuit court for the northern district of New York. Howarth v. Ellwanger, 86 Fed. Rep. 54. On this last question the judge in the opinion says: "The defendant Woodworth was not a party. But, whether parties or not, the law seems clear that the stockholders are bound by the order making the assessment." See also, to the same effect, Sheafe v. Larimer, 79 Fed. Rep. 921. On the general question many similar decisions under various statutes have been made elsewhere. Whitman v. National Bank, 176 U. S. 559, 44 L. ed. 587, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Farnum, 176 U. S. 640, 44 L. ed. 619, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Hale v. Hardon, 95 Fed. Rep. 747, 37 C. C. A. 240; Bell v. Farwell, 176 Ill. 489, 42 L. R. A. 804, 52 N. E. 346; Western Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, 117 Mich. 669, 76 N. W. 105; Whitman v. National Bank, 51 U. S. App. 536, 83 Fed. Rep. 288, 28 C. C. A. 404; Guerney v. Moore, 131 Mo. 650, 32 S. W. 1132; Rhodes v. United States Nat. Bank, 24 U. S. App. 607, 34 L. R. A. 742, 66 Fed. Rep. 512, 13 C. C. A. 612; Bagley v. Tyler, 43 Mo. App. 195; McVickar v. Jones, 70 Fed. Rep. 754; National Bank v. Whitman, 76 Fed. Rep. 697; American Freehold Land Mortg. Co. v. Woodworth, 79 Fed. Rep. 951; Schiffer v. Columbia College, 87 Fed. Rep. 166; Mechanics' Sav. Bank v. Fidelity Ins., Trust & S. D. Co. 87 Fed. Rep. 113, 91 Fed. Rep. 456; Brown v. Trail, 89 Fed. Rep. 641; Platt v. Larter, 94 Fed. Rep. 610; Western Nat. Bank v. Reckless, 96 Fed. Rep. 70; and cases above cited. Other somewhat similar cases which have been decided in favor of the defendant either differ materially from the present case in their facts, or rest upon reasoning which does not seem to us convincing. See Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y.

9, 34 L. R. A. 757, 42 N. E. 419; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Farnum, 20 R. I. 406, 40 Atl. 343; Crippen v. Laighton (N. H.) 46 L. R. A. 467, 44 Atl. 538.
Demurrer overruled.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Mary Lovina SHAW, by Charles B. Lamb, Her Next Friend,
v.

CHICAGO & GRAND TRUNK RAIL-ROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Knowledge by a carrier of a dangerous practice by its employees is implied from an allegation in a complaint that it, by its servants, made a practice of permitting and allowing the act to be done in a manner and at a place which subjected the person or persons who might chance to be lawfully upon the premises to hazard.
2. An allegation in pleading which is not deemed sufficiently specific should be demurred to.
3. To render previous acts of a mail agent in ejecting mail from a moving train admissible in evidence in an action for injuries caused by the bag going through a window in the station building and injuring an intending passenger, it is not necessary that they show the prior occurrence of such an accident; it is sufficient if they indicate that in common prudence the carrier ought to have anticipated that such an accident was liable to happen.
4. A railroad company must not permit the continuance of dangerous habits of a mail agent in delivering heavy packages from the car in such manner as to endanger persons lawfully on its premises.
5. Continuance for a considerable length of time of a practice by mail agents to deliver mail bags from the car in such a manner as to endanger persons on the premises will charge the carrier with notice.
6. Evidence that other persons had been struck by mail thrown onto the platform is admissible in an action for injuries to an intending passenger by a mail bag going through the station window, and its admission cannot be made erroneous by merely showing on cross-examination that such accidents were at remote periods of time, but advantage of that fact must be taken by motion to strike out or to limit.
7. Misuse of a paper admitted in evidence by counsel in argument wrongfully construing it as an admission of defendant's liability is not reversible error if the judge cautioned the jury not to put that interpretation on it.
8. Seven thousand dollars is not so grossly excessive as to require interference by the appellate court, as damages for injuries to an intending railway passenger by a mail bag thrown through the station window, which were very painful and caused permanent disfigurement to, and loss of sight of, one eye.

(April 24, 1900.)

NOTE.—For injury by mail sack thrown from train, see also Galloway v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 23 L. R. A. 442, 40 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Eaton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Geor & Williams, with Mr. E. W. Meddaugh, for plaintiff in error:

The declaration fails to state a cause of action. It fails to state defendant's duty. It states inferences, and not facts.

Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 77 Mich. 136, 43 N. W. 911.

The court erred in permitting witnesses to testify as to what they had observed at the station about where the mail bags had been thrown off.

McKee v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 83 Iowa, 616, 13 L. R. A. 817, 50 N. W. 209; Koontz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 65 Iowa, 226, 21 N. W. 577; Loftus v. Union Ferry Co. 84 N. Y. 459, 38 Am. Rep. 533; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Locke, 112 Ind. 404, 14 N. E. 391; Nelson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 30 Minn. 74, 14 N. W. 360; Schroeder v. Michigan Car Co. 56 Mich. 132, 22 N. W. 220; Sjogren v. Hall, 53 Mich. 274, 18 N. W. 812; Werbowski v. Port Wayne & E. R. Co. 86 Mich. 236, 48 N. W. 1097; Whalen v. Michigan C. R. Co. 114 Mich. 512, 72 N. W. 323; Redmond v. Delta Lumber Co. 96 Mich. 545, 55 N. W. 1004.

In cases where injuries have been received when the passenger was standing upon the depot platform, and the mail bag was discharged upon the platform, recovery has been denied.

Muster v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Wis. 325, 21 N. W. 223; McGrath v. Eastern R. Co. 74 Minn. 363, 77 N. W. 136; South-ern R. Co. v. Rhodes, 58 U. S. App. 349, 56 Fed. Rep. 422, 30 C. C. A. 157.

When counsel misstates the evidence, and the attention of the circuit judge is called to it, and he fails to correct the statement or pay any attention to it, it is reversible error.

Rickabus v. Gott, 51 Mich. 227, 16 N. W. 384; McDuff v. Detroit Evening Journal Co. 84 Mich. 1, 47 N. W. 671; Sullivan v. Deiter, 86 Mich. 404, 49 N. W. 261; Jones v. Portland, 88 Mich. 598, 16 L. R. A. 437, 50 N. W. 731; Thompson v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 91 Mich. 255, 51 N. W. 995; Geist v. Detroit City R. Co. 91 Mich. 446, 51 N. W. 1112; Rutter v. Collins, 96 Mich. 510, 56 N. W. 93; Anderson v. Michigan C. R. Co. 107 Mich. 591, 65 N. W. 585; Britton v. Michigan C. R. Co. 118 Mich. 491, 76 N. W. 1043; Amperse v. Fleckenstein, 67 Mich.

247, 34 N. W. 564; Pringle v. Miller, 111 Mich. 663, 70 N. W. 345; Mott v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (Mich.) 6 Det. L. N. 87, 79 N. W. 3.

Messrs. Dean & Hooker for defendant in error.

Montgomery, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff went to defendant's station at Millett at about the hour of 7:30 A. M. on the morning of July 4, 1898, to take a local train for Lansing, due at Millett at 8:17 A. M. Defendant's train No. 1, west-bound, was due at Millett at 7:35 A. M. This train carried mail but was not scheduled to stop at Millett. Mail had been carried on this fast train since some time in 1893, during which time the mail sack had been thrown off and picked up at this station while the train was in motion. The plaintiff was in the station, sitting near the window at the northeast end of the building. The bottom of the window was 3 feet above the floor, and the window was near the center of the east wall of the building, which was 16 feet in width and 32 feet in length. The platform in front of the building was 12 feet in width, and the rail nearest the platform would be about 3 feet distant from the platform. The evidence shows that the mail bag was either kicked or thrown from the car door, and went about 18 feet to the east and 30 feet to the southeast. In other words, it was thrown from the car when the train was 30 feet distant from the station, and was thrown 18 feet away from the car. The mail pouch did not strike the ground, but went through the air sufficiently high to go through the window 3 feet above the ground, breaking the sash and panes out. The glass from the broken window struck the plaintiff in the eye, which has resulted in total loss of sight in that eye, and caused a disfigurement of the eye. In an action against the railroad company plaintiff recovered a verdict of $7,000, and defendant brings error.

It is insisted that the declaration states no cause of action, and that error was committed in admitting any evidence under the declaration. The declaration contains the following averments: "That while the said plaintiff was lawfully upon the premises of said defendant upon said day and year aforesaid, and while seated within said depot of said defendant, next to the window at the northeast end of said depot, upon a seat placed in said depot for the convenience and use of prospective passengers of said railroad company aforesaid, a certain fast west-bound train, commonly known as a 'mail train,' and scheduled to arrive at the station of Millett aforesaid at 7:35 o'clock, or thereabout, in the morning of the day and year aforesaid, and each day of the week during which time it was so scheduled to arrive, passed through said station of Millett aforesaid at a high rate of speed, which said train was scheduled by said railroad company not to stop at said station of Millett aforesaid, but to pass through said place or settlement without stopping, and which said train carried mails of the government of the United States of America, and from which train it was the practice of the agent or mailing clerk on said west-bound train to eject a mail pouch or bag at said station of Millett, from the mail car attached to and a part of said train, while said train was in motion and running at a high rate of speed; and said mailing clerk or agent, on the said 4th day of July, 1898, aforesaid, ejected said mail pouch or bag aforesaid from the door of said mail car aforesaid at said station of Millett aforesaid in manner aforesaid. That it was the custom and practice of said defendant, through its servants, to allow said mail pouch or bag aforesaid to be ejected from its said fast west-bound mail train so scheduled to arrive at and pass through said station of Millett as aforesaid, without stopping, while running at a high rate of speed. And thereupon, to wit, the 4th day of July, 1898, and upon all such days upon which said west-bound mail train was scheduled to arrive at and pass through said station of Millett aforesaid without stopping, and at the said station of Millett aforesaid, it became and was the duty of said defendant to manage and conduct its said west-bound mail train aforesaid, by its said servants or servant, with all due care, caution, and diligence, and in a manner which would afford safety to those persons or that person who might be lawfully upon the premises of said defendant aforesaid. Yet the said defendant did not regard its duty, and use due care, caution, and diligence, but, on the contrary thereof, by its said servants or servant, made a practice and custom of allowing and permitting said mail pouch or bag aforesaid to be ejected from said west-bound mail train in a manner and at a place which subjected the persons or person who might chance to be lawfully upon the premises of said defendant at the time and place aforesaid, or upon any day upon which said west-bound mail train aforesaid was scheduled to so arrive, to hazard and danger or injury; and upon the said 4th day of July, 1898, while the said plaintiff was so seated in said depot of said defendant as aforesaid, at said station of Millett, the plaintiff being then and there lawfully, and in and about her proper business, and in the exercise of due care, caution, and diligence, and without negligence or fault on her part, the said defendant, through its negligence and the negligence of its said servants or servant, allowed and permitted said mail pouch or bag to be so ejected from said west-bound mail train aforesaid, while in motion and while running at a high rate of speed and at such a place on said premises, that it struck the said window upon the northeast end of said depot aforesaid, and, breaking through said window aforesaid, caused said plaintiff to be struck in the left eye by said mail pouch or bag aforesaid." It is said that the declaration fails to state defendant's duty; that it states inferences, and not facts; that there is no averment that the defendant knew of the dangerous practice of discharging the mail bag. It is alleged, however, that the defendant, by its servants, made a practice of permitting and allowing the mail pouch to be ejected in a manner and at a place which subjected the person or persons who might chance to be lawfully upon the premises to hazard. This averment implies knowledge, and, if not deemed sufficiently specific, should have been demurred to. See Fox v. Spring Lake Iron Co. 89 Mich. 387, 50 N. W. 872.

The plaintiff offered testimony tending to show that for a considerable period of time the mail agent had, in ejecting the bag, occasionally thrown it so that it struck upon the platform intended for passengers, at times struck the depot building, and once or twice it was known to go into the open door of the depot. It is contended that this evidence was incompetent "and immaterial, for the reason that it did not furnish a basis for the jury to find that the defendant knew that the practice of discharging the mail bag at this station was likely to cause the injury complained of here; that is, that the defendant might anticipate or expect that the mail bag would be thrown through the window, and injure some person on the inside of the waiting room." It is said that "the most that defendant could have anticipated or expected (if the evidence was properly admitted) would be that some person who might be standing on the platform or cinder bed might be hit by the mail bag." It is true that on no previous occasion did the mail bag go through the window, but it did strike against the end of the building. The building was 16 feet wide, and the window in the center so that, in striking against the corner of the building, it must have struck near the window. We think it not necessary that the plaintiff show that the mail bag had previously struck at this precise place. The test to be applied should be, Were the previous acts such that in common prudence the defendant ought to have anticipated that such an accident was liable to happen? And the evidence in this case was such as to make it proper to submit the question to the jury as the circuit judge did. This question has never been presented to this court before, but in a number of the states almost the precise question has been passed upon. We think a fair statement of the law as established by the decisions is this: The railroad company is not primarily liable for the negligence of the mail agent, but it does owe the duty of not permitting dangerous habits of the agent in delivering heavy packages from the car in such manner as to endanger persons lawfully on its premises to continue; and evidence of such a practice continued for a considerable period is notice to the company. Snow v. Fitchburg R. Co. 136 Mass. 552, 49 Am. Rep. 40; Galloway v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 56 Minn. 340, 23 L. R. A. 442, 57 N. W. 1058; Carpenter v. Boston & A. R. Co. 97 N. Y. 494, 49 Am. Rep. 540. The cases cited by defendant's counsel (Muster v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Wis. 325, 50 Am. Rep. 141, 21 N. W. 223; McGrath v. Eastern R. 49 L. R. A.

Co. 74 Minn. 363, 77 N. W. 136; Southern R. Co. v. Rhodes, 58 U. S. App. 349, 86 Fed. Rep. 422, 30 C. C. A. 157) do not, as we read them, deny any of the propositions above stated.

Mr. Crane, a witness for plaintiff, was asked whether he was present at one time when an old gentleman was hit by a mail bag on the platform. It was objected to as immaterial and incompetent. The answer was given in the affirmative. On the cross-examination it developed that this transaction occurred some thirteen or fourteen years before the trial. The cross-examination developed that the transaction was remote from the time of the injury to plaintiff, and a motion to strike out would have been proper; but no such motion appears to have been made. The question itself was not improper, nor did the defendant's counsel ask to have the question limited as to time, or suggest that the time was too remote. There was no error in the ruling.

The plaintiff called as a witness the mail agent who threw the bag causing the injury, and in connection with his testimony offered in evidence a notice given by the attorney of the company notifying him of the pendency of the suit, stating among other things, "You are notified that your act caused said injury, and your negligence, if any, occasioned said actions," and stating that he would be held responsible to answer and pay any verdict recovered, and tendering him control of the suits. The purpose of introducing this paper is not stated. It may have been to show the interest or bias of the witness; but, as his interest already appeared, it is difficult to see how the paper became important. We do not discover how its bare introduction could have damaged defendant. The paper contained no admissions of liability on the part of the company.

In the argument plaintiff's counsel referred to this notice as follows: "Why did they serve notice on him to come in and help defend the suit? They knew a judgment stared them in the face. They knew their negligent acts made them liable and responsible for it." This was excepted to. The circuit judge began his charge as follows: "Before I give you the law in the case, I think I had better suggest to you something briefly regarding one suggestion made by Mr. Dean in his argument, and that is about the notice served upon Mr. Fulton. I thought possibly, in his zeal, he might have said something that you might misconstrue. As a matter of fact, he did not say anything really out of place. That notice the railroad company had a perfect right to serve. It was a fair and proper thing for it to do. It was not served on the government. It was served on Mr. Fulton, an employee of the government, to protect its legal rights. Should a judgment be rendered against it, if it desired or felt that Mr. Fulton was the man that should pay any damages, should any be rendered, it had a perfect right to serve that paper. I want to call to your attention more particularly that the fact of serving that paper is not an admission that it is liable, and you ought not to find it so from the fact of serving that paper." While it is manifest that counsel made an improper use of this paper as evidence of an admission by defendant, it is equally manifest that the court took pains to remove any false impression from the minds of the jury. We do not think the judgment should be disturbed on this ground, as we feel satisfied that the jury could not have failed to understand the caution of the court.

Other exceptions were noted to the argument of counsel. We do not find in it any such abuse of privilege or distortion of the evidence as called for the interposition of the court.

Error is assigned on the refusal of the court to grant a new trial. We do not find the verdict so clearly against the evidence as to justify us in reversing it on that ground. We also think that there was evidence to support the theory given to the jury by the charge.

As to the claim that the verdict was excessive, it is true that $7,000 is a large sum. The injury is, however, severe. Besides being very painful, it caused permanent disfigurement to the eye and loss of sight. We do not think the award of damages so grossly excessive as to justify us in interfering.

The judgment will be affirmed, with costs.

Hooker, J., did not sit. The other Justices concur.

Eldridge F. BACON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

William REICH.

(.....Mich.)

1. The doctrine of merger will not be applied to prevent the use of the original cause of action for breach of contract on which a judgment for damages has been recovered, as a counterclaim to a suit for the contract price of the articles covered thereby by one who took an assignment of the claim before recovery of the judgment, where the assignor was insolvent, and the judgment was taken against it without notice of the assignment for protection against liability on the contract, since the assignee, although not in privity as to the judgment, is so as to the cause of action on which it was based.

2. Objections that testimony is incompetent and immaterial will not justify reversal on the ground that the plea was not sufficiently definite to warrant its admission.

(Grant, Ch. J., and Montgomery, J., dissent.)

(October 3, 1899.)

NOTE.—For set-off against assigned claim of debtor's demand against assignor, see Bradley v. Thompson Smith's Sons (Mich.) 23 L. R. A. 306, and note.

For set-off against judgment in hands of assignee, see Benson v. Haywood (Iowa) 23 L. R. A. 335, and note.
49 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action for the purchase price of certain articles in which defendant sought to recoup damages for breach of the contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bacon & Palmer for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Louis C. Wurzer, for defendant in error:

There is no showing whatever that the plaintiff was misled by any defects in the notice of recoupment, if there are any.

Hopkins v. Briggs, 41 Mich. 175, 2 N. W. 199; 14 Enc. Pl. & Fr. p. 1090.

A defect or insufficiency of formal notice is overcome by actual notice.

Goodwin v. White, 1 Browne (Pa.) 273.

The doctrine of merger applies only to parties and privies to a judgment.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 336; Freeman, Judgm. § 162; Armour Bros. Bkg. Co. v. Ad-dington (Ind. Terr.) 37 S. W. 100.

A judgment does not drown the debt, but only becomes a higher evidence of it—but a higher evidence only against those against whom it may be used, and who are bound by it; toward those against whom this higher evidence cannot be used, the next best evidence, that is, the claim itself, must and may be used. And even against the parties themselves, where justice requires it, a judgment will be construed, not as a new debt, but an old debt in a new form.

Johnson v. Provincial Ins. Co. 12 Mich. 216, 86 Am. Dec. 49; Owens v. Bowie, 2 Md. 457; Donald v. Kell, 111 Ind. 1, 11 N. E. 782; Freeman, Judgm. § 244.

With respect to merger no inflexible rule can be formulated. The question depends upon the interests and intent of the parties, and demands of justice and equity.

Franklyn v. Hayward, 61 How. Pr. 43; Sheldon v. Edwards, 35 N. Y. 279; Brennan v. Tietsort, 49 Mich. 397, 13 N. W. 790; Rinkelberg v. Peterson, 76 Mich. 112, 42 N. W. 1080; Morehouse v. Baker, 48 Mich. 335, 12 N. W. 170; Huntoon v. Russell, 41 Mich. 316, 2 N. W. 38.

The assignee of a chose in action stands exactly in the shoes of the assignor, and he acquires no greater rights than the assignor had in the thing assigned.

Storey v. Dutton, 46 Mich. 539, 9 N. W. 844; Hovell v. Medler, 41 Mich. 641, 2 N. W. 911; Edson v. Gates, 44 Mich. 257, 6 N. W. 645; McKenna v. Kirkwood, 50 Mich. 545, 15 N. W. 898.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant recovered a judgment against the Architectural Iron Works for a breach of a contract. He was afterwards sued by the assignee of the iron works for the price of the articles furnished to him under the contract, the assignment being made before his action for damages was instituted. In this action he sought to set off or recoup his damages, which was permitted by the trial court. The plaintiff has appealed the case, contending that the claim for damages is merged in the defendant's judgment, and therefore will not again support an action or defense, and that the judgment cannot be set off against the plaintiff, for the reason that there is a want of privity. It is also claimed that the plea was insufficient to warrant the admission of this proof. It must be admitted that the plaintiff is not privy to the judgment, because he acquired his rights, whatever they are, before plaintiff began his action. Bartero v. Real Estate Sav. Bank, 10 Mo. App. 76; Powers v. Heath, 20 Mo. 319; Mathes v. Cover, 43 Iowa, 512; Todd v. Flournoy, 56 Ala. 99, 28 Am. Rep. 758; Marshall v. Croom, 60 Ala. 121; Cook v. Parham, 63 Ala. 456; Coles v. Allen, 64 Ala. 98; Winslow v. Grindal, 2 Me. 64; Weed Sewing Mach. Co. v. Baker, 1 McCrary, 579, 40 Fed. Rep. 56; Rigelow, Estoppel, 135, 136. He is privy, however, to the injury upon which defendant's judgment rests. It is also true that the claim of the defendant was merged in the judgment against the iron works, and the judgment would be a bar to another action, or an attempt to recoup the damages against the Architectural Iron Works. But the judgment could be set off in an action brought by the iron works, or an action might be brought upon it. We deem it unnecessary to cite authorities in support of these principles, which are elementary. It is nevertheless true that the plaintiff took this claim subject to the equitable right of the defendant to have his damages applied upon it, and all that can prevent is the technical rule that they are merged in a judgment against plaintiff's assignor. Theoretically, this may be said to be no hardship, because, if the defendant shall pay the plaintiff's claim, he would yet have the right to collect his judgment for damages, which would work out exact justice to all. Practically, however, this is not so, because he cannot collect his judgment. The iron works is insolvent, and was at the time the plaintiff, who was a stockholder in the concern, took his assignment, and the defendant cannot collect his judgment in any other way than to set it off against his contract obligation. Furthermore, the record contains evidence that he was ignorant of the assignment at the time he took his judgment, and had a right to suppose that by obtaining the judgment he had settled the question of his liability on the contract, and was led to do so to avoid liability in a garnishment suit which was adjourned for the purpose. But for the previous assignment, this would have been so, because the judgment would have bound all persons afterwards acquiring title to the claim from the iron works. According to more recent cases, the doctrine that claims become merged in judgments "is supported on the grounds that the allowance of a new suit is a superfluous and vexatious encouragement to litigation, injurious to the defendant, and of no benefit to the plaintiff." 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 339, and cases cited. The doctrine, if rigorously applied, 49 L. R. A.

may work hardship and injustice, and it seems to be lawful to disregard it in some cases. Thus, a foreign judgment does not bar an action upon the original claim. Vanquelin v. Bouard, 15 C. B. N. S. 341c; Wilson v. Tunstall, 6 Tex. 221; Wood v. Gamble, 11 Cush. 8, 59 Am. Dec. 135; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. McHenry, 21 Blatchf. 400, 17 Fed. Rep. 414. See also Olcott v. Little, 9 N. H. 259, 32 Am. Dec. 357. In Eastern Township's Bank v. Beebe, 53 Vt. 177, 38 Am. Rep. 665, it is said that "a foreign judgment, when shown in evidence upon a matter within the jurisdiction of the court, and in which the court had jurisdiction of the parties, so that they were personally bound by the judgment in the country where rendered, is conclusive upon the matter therein adjudicated. But it at the same time is held that the original cause of action is not so merged by that judgment that it is incapable of being the subject of a suit in a country foreign to that in which the judgment was recovered. The books are uniform in making the distinction between merger of the cause of action and conclusiveness of effect, as matter of evidence, when the effect of a foreign judgment is brought in question in a suit upon the same original cause of action." In cases where, through mistake or fraud, it would be inequitable to treat such judgments as a bar, the doctrine cannot be invoked. The case of Ferrall v. Bradford, 2 Fla. 508, 50 Am. Dec. 293, is in point. We quote: "The plaintiffs in the court below took judgment against only one of the joint obligors, and, when that fact is pleaded by the defendants in bar, they reply that they did only do so because their attorney was circumvented, and induced to dismiss the proceedings as to the other defendants, in consequence of the fraudulent representations of one of the defendants. It matters little as to the mode or manner in which fraud is effected. A court must look to the effect, and ask if the result is a consequence of the fraud. Here the defendants seek to avail themselves of a legal defense, arising from a state of facts which they themselves, by their fraud, have produced. They admit, virtually, by their demurrer, that the plaintiffs have been deprived of a legal right by their fraud, and they seek now, by their defense, to take advantage of their own wrong,—a defense admitted to arise from their own fraudulent act. The question now is, Will such a defense be available, tolerated, or allowed? Law, reason, justice, and morality unite in a negative response." "At the first blush, we thought we discovered some difficulty arising from the fact that only one of the defendants is alleged to have been guilty of the fraud, but it soon disappeared; for we find this principle broadly laid down,—that interests gained by one person by the fraud of another cannot be held by them; otherwise, fraud would always place itself beyond the reach of the court." Clark v. Rowling, 3 N. Y. 216, 53 Am. Dec. 290, denies the unyielding character ascribed to merger, as shown by the following extract from the opinion of Mr. Justice Hurlbut:

"It is true that the notes as evidence of an indebtedness were merged in the judgment, which, being greater security, operated to extinguish the lesser; but does it therefore follow that the judgment to all intents became a new debt, and that the merger or extinguishment of the notes was so complete as that, for the purpose of protecting the defendants in an equity connected with their original indebtedness, we may not look behind the judgment, and see upon what it was founded? A judgment, instead of being regarded strictly as a new debt, is sometimes held to be merely the old debt in a new form, so as to prevent a technical merger from working injustice. And this exception to the doctrine contended for by the plaintiff has obtained, especially in cases of insolvency and bankruptcy, for the protection as well of the creditor as the debtor, and has been applied impartially for the benefit of both." In Stevens v. Damon, 29 Vt. 521, it was held that "the judgment of the justice in such a suit will not be a bar to a subsequent suit for the recovery of the account of the plaintiff which was not presented, if its presentation was omitted by mistake, or for any other sufficient reason." See Cramer v. Singer Mfg. Co. 93 Fed. Rep. 636, 35 C. C. A. 508; Fox v. Althorp, 40 Ohio St. 322; Kane v. Morehouse, 46 Conn. 300 (closely resembles Stevens v. Damon); Wyman v. Mitchell, 1 Cow. 316, and other cases cited in the case of Clark v. Rowling, 3 N. Y. 216, 53 Am. Dec. 290; also Johnson v. Provincial Ins. Co. 12 Mich. 216, 86 Am. Dec. 49.

In the case before us, there is evidence from which it might be found that the course taken by the defendant in procuring a judgment for the breach of the contract was due to the concealment on the part of the iron works of the fact of the transfer of the claim, or, at least, of the mistake of the defendant in supposing that it belonged to the iron works at that time. We think the hardship and injustice of a strict application of the rule of merger are so apparent that we are justified in considering the case within the principle of the cases cited, and holding that, although the plaintiff was not strictly in privity as to the judgment, he was as to the cause of action upon which it was based, and that the defense made was proper. We think this conclusion renders it unnecessary to discuss the subject of election of remedies raised by the briefs.

The further point is made that the defense was not admissible under the pleadings. The case began in justice court. The plea was presumably oral, and consisted of "the general issue, notice of set-off, and recoupment." This was not a sufficiently definite plea, under the case of Kerr v. Bennett, 109 Mich. 546, 67 N. W. 504, but it was amendable, and, had attention been called to it, doubtless would have been amended.

The objections shown in the record do not indicate that the sufficiency of the plea was attacked. They are simply that certain questions and testimony were incompetent and immaterial. That might mean that the plea was insufficient or that the defense of 49 L. R. A.

recoupment could not be proved, because of the former judgment, which seems to have been, then, as here, the main contention. Such objections are admirably adapted to the concealment of the real point relied upon, and we have often held that they will not justify a reversal. The authorities are collected in the recent case of Detzur v. Stroß Brewing Co. 119 Mich. 282, 77 N. W. 950.

The judgment should be affirmed.

Moore and Long, JJ., concurred.

Grant, Ch. J., dissenting:

This suit originated in justice court. Defendant entered into a contract with the Architectural Iron Works, a corporation, by which it agreed to furnish defendant certain iron trusses for the sum of $400. The iron works, being indebted to the plaintiff, assigned the amount due upon the contract to him. The justice returned that "the defendant pleads the general issue, notice of set-off, and recoupment." Defendant, claiming a breach of contract, sued the iron works, and recovered a judgment for $358 damages, from which no appeal was taken, and the judgment remained in full force and effect. It was admitted that $100 was due upon the contract. The court permitted the defendant to recoup damages, and verdict and judgment were rendered for him.

1. The notice of recoupment was too indefinite to permit any evidence under it. Kerr v. Bennett, 109 Mich. 546, 67 N. W. 504; Roethke v. Philip Best Brewing Co. 33 Mich. 340; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Roberts, 72 Mich. 49, 40 N. W. 53; Darrah v. Gow, 77 Mich. 16, 43 N. W. 851. Had objection been seasonably made, it should have prevailed, unless defendant had asked leave to amend. But the record discloses that this point was not raised until the testimony was concluded, and then the plaintiff requested the court to instruct the jury "that, under the plea and notice filed in this case, the defendant cannot be allowed for any of the items of his claim." Under the record as it now appears, plaintiff saw fit to go to trial in both the justice and circuit courts without any objection to the sufficiency of the plea and notice. We think a plaintiff should not be permitted to raise such an objection at the close of the trial.

2. Defendant, claiming damages for violation of contract on the part of the Architectural Iron Works, had two courses open to him. He could have waited until the iron works or its assignor sued him, and then have recouped his damages, or he could have brought an independent action for damages. He chose the latter. The tort became merged in the judgment, which became a new debt, unaffected by the claim upon which it was based. Judgments are contracts, and are subject to set-off in actions of assumpsit. 1 Freeman, Judgm. § 217; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 338, 339. The latter authority states the rule as follows: "And the present rule undoubtedly is that no second suit can be maintained on the same cause of action, irrespective of the question whether the judgment in the first suit was of a higher or lower nature than the cause of action, the reason for the rule being that the judgment is a judicial determination of the rights of the parties, into which the plaintiff has voluntarily elected to transform his claim." The authorities in support of this are cited in note 7. The general rule, as above stated, is admitted, but it is urged that there are exceptions to it, and that the present case forms one of the exceptions. In Eastern Townships Bank v. Beebe, 53 Vt. 177, 38 Am. Rep. 665, the opinion recognizes the rule, but appears to limit it to domestic judgments. The opinion says: "It [the judgment] is not so merged unless it has become a debt of record, so that the record itself has become a cause of action. . . . The books are uniform in making the distinction between merger of the cause of action and conclusiveness of effect, as matter of evidence, when the effect of a foreign judgment is brought in question in a suit upon the same original cause of action." The same rule was announced by this court in Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371, 80 Am. Dec. 90. We are not dealing with a foreign judgment, and the rule of those cases does not apply. In Ferrall v. Bradford, 2 Fla. 508, 50 Am. Dec. 293, suit was brought against three parties upon a joint bond. The Bradfords, by fraud, procured a judgment to be rendered against the other obligor alone. The court would have applied the maxim, Transit in rem judicatum, but for the fraud of defendants. In that case there was no judgment against the defendants, but only against their joint obligor. So, it was held in Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371, 80 Am. Dec. 90, that a judgment rendered against two joint debtors in the state of New York, one of whom was not served with process and did not appear, did not bind the party not appearing, and did not prevent the plaintiff from suing upon the original cause of action in this state. In Clark v. Rowling, 3 N. Y. 216, 53 Am. Dec. 290, the sole question was the effect of a discharge in bankruptcy upon a judgment rendered after the petition in bankruptcy was filed, the decree in bankruptcy being rendered after judgment was taken. The basis of the decree in Clark v. Rowling is found in Wyman v. Mitchell, 1 Cow. 316, where the same question arose. Of that case the court in Clark v. Rowling says: "And the court held that, although the original undertaking of the defendant was so merged in the judgment that no suit could be maintained upon it, yet that it was proper to inquire into the time and circumstances of the contract upon which the first judgment was founded, for the purpose of taking the case out of the operation of the defendant's discharge." All the cases there cited involve the effect of a discharge in bankruptcy. In Stevens v. Damon, 29 Vt. 521, the sole question litigated was whether items omitted by mistake from an account sued upon in justice court were merged in the judgment, upon the ground that a party cannot split up his cause of action. It is there said: "Ordinarily, such a judgment will bar a subsequent suit on the 49 L. R. A.

account so omitted, as the plaintiff cannot divide his account and make it the subject of several actions." A like case is Kane v. Morchouse, 46 Conn. 300. In Fox v. Althorp, 40 Ohio St. 322, the sole question was the right of the plaintiff to maintain four suits for monthly instalments for overdue rent. Four suits had been begun before a justice of the peace for the instalments due on the 1st days of September, October, November, and December. Judgment was rendered on the suits involving the September and October instalments, and the justice then rendered verdict upon the same evidence in each of the other suits. Defendant paid the judgments for the instalments due in November and December, and appealed the other judgments to the common pleas, and there pleaded satisfaction of the judgment in bar. The court found that practically the four suits were tried as one, and the court based its judgment upon the ground that the defense was purely technical, and that defendant acquiesced in the severance. In Oramer v. Singer Mfg. Co. 93 Fed. Rep. 636, 35 C. C. A. 508, the sole question was whether a party was bound by a judgment rendered in a suit brought by him against another company, and was res judicata as to the latter suit. The decision was based upon the fact that the real party defending had not done so openly, to the knowledge of the opposite party, and therefore was not bound by the judgment. In these cases it was not sought to reopen the judgments for the purpose of contesting the original causes of action, where judgments had been rendered against defendants who had been served with process, or who had appeared and contested the suits. Nor do they involve a case like the present, where the party, having a choice of two remedies, has chosen to bring his suit for damages. Defendant Reich had been garnished, and evidently disclosed in the garnishment suits his claim for damages, which was greater than the amount due upon the contract. Evidently, at his request, the garnishment suit was held to permit him to establish in a separate suit his claim for damages. I see no reason why he could not have made that defense in the garnishment suit, which would have wiped out the claim assigned to Bacon. I find no evidence of fraud or deception on the part of Bacon or his assignor in the assignment of this claim, or any evidence that it was assigned for the purpose of defeating Reich. The rule of law involved cannot, in my judgment, be changed by the fact that the iron works has become insolvent. The original cause of action in Reich against the iron works, has, in the language of Eastern Townships Bank v. Beebe, become so merged in the judgment "that the record of itself has become a cause of action." The only office which that judgment can now serve is as a set-off. Huntoon v. Russell, 41 Mich. 316, 2 N. W. 38. Judgment should be reversed, and new trial ordered.

Montgomery, J., concurred with the Chief Justice.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

J. S. WHEELER, Appt.,
v.
TRADERS' DEPOSIT BANK.

(.....Ky.....)

One who, at the request of the principal debtor, places his name as surety on a note after the signatures of several makers, guarantees the genuineness of such signatures to an innocent payee, and cannot be released from liability on the ground that one signature is a forgery.

(February 24, 1900.)

NOTE.—Guaranty, by one signing obligation as surety, of the genuineness of other signatures.

- I. Introductory.
- II. Promissory notes.
 - a. Prior signatures.
 - b. Subsequent signatures.
- III. Bonds.
 - a. Prior signatures.
 - b. Subsequent signatures.

I. Introductory.

The main case, to the effect that one signing an obligation as surety guarantees the genuineness of preceding signatures, is supported by nearly all of the cases. Those holding the contrary have either been repudiated in the states in which they were rendered, or were decided on the ground that the agent of the obligee procured the signatures.

One case, that of Sharp v. Allgood, 100 Ala. 183, 14 So. 16, holds that a surety signing a note on condition that another specified person shall sign it as comaker is not liable where such person's name is forged, even though the payee did not know of the condition; but this case seems to have been decided on the ground that the condition was not fulfilled, rather than on the ground of the forgery.

On this question as to the effect of a parol agreement that the execution of an instrument by a surety shall not take effect until others have signed it, see Benton County Sav. Bank v. Boddicker (Iowa) 45 L. R. A. 321, and note.

On the question of the drawee's duty to know the signature of the drawer, see Germania Bank v. Boutell (Minn.) 27 L. R. A. 635, and note.

As to implied guaranty of genuineness on sale of negotiable paper, see Strauss v. Hensley (D. C.) 36 L. R. A. 92, and note.

On the liability of person whose signature is forged on commercial paper, see Traders' Nat. Bank v. Rogers (Mass.) 36 L. R. A. 539, and note.

II. *Promissory notes.*a. Prior signatures.

There seems to be no exception to the rule that one signing a note as surety guarantees the genuineness of every preceding signature, and is liable notwithstanding the forgery, if the payee had no notice thereof, as held by the main case, which states that the payee has the right to presume that the surety would not have signed if any other name was forged.

Thus, Selsor v. Brock, 8 Ohio St. 302, holds that one who signs a note as surety after other APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to hold defendant liable as surety on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. F. Day, for appellant:

The appellee having, through its cashier, W. W. Thompson, loaned the money to Stacy, and delivered to said Stacy and had him to sign and take the paper sued on, and carry it to Morgan county to secure the signatures of sureties, and he, the said Stacy, having returned said note, purporting names, which it is claimed were forged, distinctly sanctions and affirms their genuineness, although he does not warrant it, and he is liable to the payee if the latter knew nothing of the forgery.

And in Schmidt v. Archer, 113 Ind. 365, 14 N. E. 543, the court states, by way of argument, that one who signs a note as surety in the belief that the preceding forged names were genuine would be bound, where the obligee accepted the instrument without notice of the forgery.

And in Chase v. Hathorn, 61 Me. 505, holds that one who signs a note as surety is liable, although the preceding signatures of the purported principals on the faith of which he signed were forgeries.

And Des Moines Nat. Bank v. Chisholm, 71 Iowa, 875, 33 N. W. 234, holds that one who signs an accommodation note under the belief, induced by the fraud of the person accommodated, that a prior forged signature is genuine, is liable to a holder for value without notice of the forgery.

And Trevathan v. Caldwell, 4 Heisk. 535, holds that one who signs an accommodation note as surety under the names of other apparent parties with ample means of knowledge of the facts of the case is liable, although one of the preceding signatures was forged, where the payee was innocent of all wrong in the matter.

And in Helms v. Wayne Agricultural Co. 73 Ind. 325, 38 Am. Rep. 147, which was an action on a note joint in form, but which the defendant had signed as surety, an instruction that the law implies an assertion on the part of each signer that all names are genuine, was held proper, the court also holding that one signing such a note is liable notwithstanding the forgery of a preceding signature, if the obligee accepted the note without notice of the forgery.

This case was followed in Wayne Agricultural Co. v. Cardwell, 73 Ind. 555, in which the same note was involved.

Stoner v. Millikin, 85 Ill. 218, holds that one who refuses to sign a note as surety unless the principal first gets another specified signer, and then signs in reliance on a forgery of such other person's signature, is not released because of the forgery, as the creditor assumes only the risk resulting from the loss of the security whose name is forged.

And Wheeler v. Barr, 7 Ind. App. 381, 34 N. E. 591, holds that a surety cannot escape liability on the ground that a name preceding that of the surety to the note was forged, although he believed the signature to be genuine, where the payee accepted the note without knowledge of the forgery, and the principal did not act as the payee's agent in forging such signature, although the payee had asked the principal to obtain the signature, and failed to notify ing to be signed by Gevedon, appellant, and others, and having passed the signature of Gevedon as genuine, and having received the proceeds of the note, and placed the same to his own account, and having deceived, and by fraudulent representations while so acting for appellee procured the signature of appellant to said paper, the appellant is released, unless he, either by some act, induced the appellee to accept said note and part with its money or did something after the note was accepted by the appellee by which it was delayed in the collection of the note, by which it lost. Stacy was the agent of the bank to procure the signature of sureties, and the bank, upon reasonable inquiry, had the evidence before it to have determined whether or not the signature of Gevedon to the note sued on was genuine or a forgery.

There must be a purpose or intention to the person whose name was forged that he had a note signed by him on subsequently seeing him.

And Mosher v. Carpenter, 13 Hun. 604, holds that the indorser of a genuine note, who, at the request of the payee, signs as cosurety a note which such payee had forged and transferred, is liable to a subsequent bona fide transferee of the forged note, although he signed under the belief that it was the genuine note, where he had the opportunity to examine it before signing, as the warranty of genuineness of preceding signatures applies to a surety as well as to an indorser.

In Talbot v. Wilkins, 52 Ark. 437, 12 S. W. 1071, a justice of the peace had wrongfully collected and appropriated the amount of a judgment recovered before him, and then, representing that a constable had done so, induced a friend of the latter to sign as surety a note purporting to have been signed by the constable but on which his name was in reality forged, the judgment creditor being induced to accept the note in settlement of his supposed claim against the constable. The claim was made in the argument that the surety was estopped by signing the note to show that the principal's name was forged, but the decision was rendered in favor of the surety on the ground of an entire want of consideration without the expression of any opinion on the question of estoppel.

b. Subsequent signatures.

The weight of authority seems, also, to require a surety to see to the genuineness of subsequent signatures, and to hold him liable notwithstanding the forgery of such a signature.

Thus, Grossman's Appeal (Pa.) 10 Cent. Rep. 339, 11 Atl. 725, holds that one who signs a note as surety with the understanding that the principal shall procure the name of another specified person as surety is not relieved from liability because the principal forged such person's name, where the payee had no knowledge of the condition, and had no reason to suspect the forgery.

And Hunter v. Fitzmaurice, 102 Ind. 449, 2 N. E. 127, holds that one who signs a note as surety, stating in the payee's presence that he will not be bound until it is also signed as surety by another specified person, is liable, although the principal forges the name of such person, and then gives the note to the payee, who receives it without knowledge of the forgery. In this case the court also holds that the fact that the payee said at the time the surety deceive or mislead, on the part of the appellant, to work an estoppel, and the appellee acting upon it in good faith, exercising reasonable care and diligence under all the circumstances; but, failing to exercise reasonable care and diligence, the appellee will not be permitted to estop the appellant, a stranger to the transaction, from pleading the truth.

Herman, Estoppel, p. 418; Lasley v. Lackey, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 806.

The appellant on this note had the right to plead that the signature of one of the parties purporting to sign it was not genuine, and to call upon the appellee to prove it.

Chany v. City Bank, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 215.

Before the conduct of a party will estop him from relying upon the truth, the other party must have been induced to act upon what he has done, and be without a reason-signed it that he wished additional security did not make the principal his agent in accomplishing the forgery.

Sharp v. Allgood, 100 Ala. 183, 14 So. 16, holds, on the contrary, that a surety who signs a note only on condition that another specified person shall sign as comaker is not liable where such person's name is forged, even though the payee did not know of the condition, as it was the latter's duty to inform himself of the genuineness of the signatures before acting on them. This case seems to have been decided, however, on the ground that the condition on which he signed was not met. It is also to be observed that some, at least, of the authorities on which the decision was rendered, such as Linn County v. Farris, 52 Mo. 75, 14 Am. Rep. 389, and Pepper v. State ex rel. Harvey, 22 Ind. 399, 85 Am. Dec. 430, have been repudiated in the states in which they were rendered.

III. Bonds.

a. Prior signatures.

In all cases of private bonds the court seems to have held that a surety warrants the genuineness of preceding signatures, or, at least, is liable notwithstanding a forgery of such a signature.

Thus, Lombard v. Mayberry, 24 Neb. 674, 40 N. W. 271, holds that one who signs as surety a bond guaranteeing the payment at maturity of notes sold, without being induced to do so by the obligee, and without imposing any condition as to other signatures, is liable, although some of the preceding signatures are forged, as by so signing he admits without warranty the genuineness of such other signatures.

This case was followed in Kansas City Terra Cotta Lumber Co. v. Murphy, 49 Neb. 674, 68 N. W. 1030, which holds that one who was induced to sign a bond as surety under the belief that a prior forged signature of a cosurety is genuine, is not relieved from liability where the obligee did not know of the forgery.

And York County Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Brooks, 51 Me. 506, holds that one who signs a bond for the fidelity of the collecting agent of an insurance company is not discharged because the name of a prior surety is forged, as his own signature is an implied assertion of the genuineness of the preceding ones.

And Terry v. Hazlewood, 1 Duv. 104, holds that one signing as surety a bond for the proceeds of tobacco in a warehouse is liable thereon, although the name of another surety is forged.

able way to have discovered the defect upon which the estoppel is relied.

Abney v. Bell, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 443.

The purchaser of a negotiable note, and especially so where the party as in this case loans the money direct to the party committing the fraud, takes the note at his peril as to its genuineness.

Cason v. Grant County Deposit Bank, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 635.

Mr. Roy G. Kern, with Mr. Thomas J. Bigstaff, for appellee:

After considering the signature of Gevedon as genuine, and signing the note after Gevedon's name was signed to it, appellant cannot, after it has passed into the hands of appellee bank, who, knowing that appellant's name was genuine, and under the law believing that he guaranteed the genuineness of the signature of said Gevedon, now be permitted to say that Gevedon's name was a forgery.

Hall v. Smith, 14 Bush, 604; Bigelow, Estoppel, 5th ed. p. 492.

The note was signed by appellant, and given to the principal Stacy to deliver to the bank. In such cases the principal is regarded as the agent of the surety.

Hubble v. Murphy, 1 Duv. 278.

Under a general plea of non est factum a question as to the conditional signing and delivering of a writing cannot be considered; it must be specially pleaded.

Hall v. Smith, 14 Bush, 604; Carroll's Code, p. 80, notes 32, 33; Garrett v. Ashcraft, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 38, 39 S. W. 51; Young v. Hildreth, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 113.

The acceptance of a bill, or the indorsement of a bill, is a conclusive admission, in favor of a bona fide holder for value, that

And Hall v. Smith, 14 Bush, 604, after citing the above case, says, by way of argument, that the true signatures to such bond were evidence to the obligee that all the signatures were genuine, and that such obligee had the right to presume that the sureties would not assume the liability without knowing who had or was to become liable with them.

Some cases have made a distinction between bonds of a private and those of a public nature, and have held that the surety was not liable in case of a forgery of another surety's name, seemingly in most cases on the ground that the person procuring the signature acted as agent of the obligee. Most of these cases have, however, been repudiated in the states in which they were rendered.

Pepper v. State ex rel. Harvey, 22 Ind. 399, 85 Am. Dec. 430, holds that one who signs a county treasurer's bond as surety is released from liability where the signature of a prior surety was forged, on the ground that the treasurer in procuring the signing of the bond acted as the agent of the obligee, or that his acts were afterward adopted by the obligee. But on a subsequent appeal, State ex rel. McCarty v. Pepper, 31 Ind. 76, the court held that the surety was not relieved because of the forgery, on the ground that he was not influenced to sign by any preceding name, the court also stating that there were cases which would hold him as affirming the genuineness of the preceding signatures.

And Seely v. People use of Neece, 27 Ill. 173, 81 Am. Dec. 224, holds that one who signs the office bond of a master in chancery under a belief that a prior forged signature is genuine is not liable, even though the obligee did not participate in the fraud, as by such fraud the surety was made to assume a different and greater liability than he intended.

This case was followed in Cornell v. People, 87 Ill. App. 400, in which a surety on a constable's bond was held to be released because of the forgery of a preceding signature as surety, where he had relied in good faith on the principal's representation that the signature was genuine.

But the above case of Seely v. People use of Neece, 27 Ill. 173, 81 Am. Dec. 224, was overruled in Stoner v. Millikin, 85 Ill. 218, supra, II. a, which was an action on a promissory note on which a prior signature was forged.

And Stern v. People use of St. Clair County, 102 Ill. 540, referring to the overruling of the above case of Seely v. People use of Neece, holds that a surety on a county treasurer's bond is 49 L. R. A.

not relieved because of the forgery of the signature of a prior surety.

And in People v. Coons, no opinion filed, cited in the above case of Stern v. People use of St. Clair County, on p. 554, a similar decision was rendered in an action on a treasurer's bond.

And United States v. Boyd, 8 App. D. C. 440, holds that a surety on the bond of a pension agent is not relieved from liability because the prior signature of a surety is forged, where he trusted to the principal in signing the bond, as he cannot shift the loss to the obligee, who received the bond in reliance on the genuineness of all the signatures, and to whom the signature of a surety might well be regarded as a representation of the genuineness of a preceding signature.

Chamberlin v. Brewer, 3 Bush, 561, however, holds that one who signs a sheriff's bond as surety, relying on the genuineness of preceding signatures, is not liable where some of them are forged. The ground of such decision is that the bond, when presented to him for signature, was in the hands of the court or officer who was to approve it, and that he had the right to believe in such case that the preceding signatures were genuine.

And in Gasconade County use of School Twp. No. 44 v. Sanders, 49 Mo. 192, it is held that one who signs as surety a bond to a county for money loaned by it is not liable where the bond was presented by a justice acting as agent for the county, who, on the refusal of such surety to sign unless another specified person should sign as cosurety, forged the signature of such person, and made use of the money for his own purposes.

But Carr v. Moore, 2 Ind. 602, holds that a surety on a bond to a school commissioner to secure a loan from the school fund was liable although the name of a prior surety was forged, where no misrepresentation was shown to have been made to such surety. The court also said that if the principal had been guilty of fraud in inducing the surety to sign, it could not have affected the result if the obligee did not participate therein.

Cook v. Boyd, 16 B. Mon. 556, holds that one who signs as surety a bond to prevent the levy of an attachment under the belief that a preceding surety's signature is genuine is not relieved from liability because such signature is forged, where the obligee did nothing to deceive him.

And Bigelow v. Comegys, 5 Ohio St. 256, holds that a surety on a replevin bond cannot the signature of the drawer in the one case, and all the prior parties in the other, is genuine.

Bigelow, Estoppel, § 1, p. 480.

Paynter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is based upon a writing which reads as follows:

Mt. Sterling, Ky., Feb. 26, 1893.

Ninety days after date, we, or either of us, promise to pay to the order of the Traders' Deposit Bank, Mt. Sterling, Ky., two hundred and seventy-five dollars, at their office in Mt. Sterling, for value received, with interest from maturity at the rate of — per cent per annum until paid, and the attorney's fees if suit be instituted on this note.

W. R. Stacy.

N. B. Haney.

W. M. Gevedon.

J. S. Wheeler, Surety.

No. 1,036. Due May 29. P. O. —

W. R. Stacy applied to the cashier of appellee to borrow money, and was told that he could do so by giving good security, and thereupon the cashier handed him a blank note which he took, and afterwards returned it to the bank, purporting to have been signed by W. R. Stacy, N. B. Haney, W. M.

Gevedon, and J. S. Wheeler. The bank accepted the note, credited Stacy with its proceeds, which were subsequently drawn out by him. Gevedon interposed a plea of non est factum, which he succeeded in sustaining to the satisfaction of a jury. The cashier believed the name of Gevedon to be his genuine signature at the time the note was accepted. It is insisted for Wheeler that he signed the note believing that the signature of Gevedon was genuine, and that he would not have done so except for that fact. It is also insisted for him that he is not bound on the note because Gevedon was adjudged not to be liable on it. The cashier had no reason to doubt the genuineness of Gevedon's signature. Wheeler signed the note as surety, and in doing so he guaranteed to the bank that every preceding signature was genuine. The bank had the right to presume that he would not have signed the paper if the name of Gevedon had been forged; therefore the appellant is bound on it, notwithstanding the name of Gevedon may have been a forgery. Stacy was acting for himself when he procured the signature of Wheeler to the note, as the bank was in nowise instrumental in obtaining his name to it. The note purported to be a complete instrument, and the bank had no notice of any wrong, and it was the fault of Wheeler in trusting Stacy, and he must avoid liability on the ground that he was induced to sign by the representation of the principal obligor, in which the obligee did not participate, that the forged signature of an apparent surety was genuine.

And State ex rel. Brown v. Baker, 64 Mo. 167, 27 Am. Rep. 214, holds that one who signs an administration bond on which the name of an apparent surety is forged cannot escape liability on the ground of such forgery, where the bond was complete on its face, and the officers accepting did not know of the forgery.

And State ex rel. Hewitt v. Hewitt, 72 Mo. 603, holds that one who is induced to sign a guardian's bond on the representation and under the belief that a prior forged signature of a surety is genuine is nevertheless liable if the bond is filed in the probate court, and is regular and complete on its face, and the officers of the court had no notice of the representation or the forgery.

And Linskie v. Kerr (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 765, holds that one who signs as surety the bond of a surviving husband is not released because a prior signature as surety was forged, if the obligee accepted the bond without notice of the forgery.

b. Subsequent signatures.

Colquitt v. Simpson, 72 Ga. 501, holds that the president of a bank chosen as a state depository, whose duty it is to furnish security on the bond required, and who signs it individually as surety, cannot escape liability on the ground that the name of one of the sureties which appeared on the bond after his own was forged.

And Mathis v. Morgan, 72 Ga. 517, 53 Am. Rep. 847, holds that a surety on the bond of 49 L. R. A.

a state depository cannot be relieved because of the forgery of a subsequent signature of a surety whose name preceded his own in the body of the bond, although he signed on the understanding that all the parties named in the bond should sign, and in reliance on a forged affidavit as to the amount they were worth, purporting to have been signed by some of the parties named in the bond as sureties, where such bond with all the signatures thereon apparently genuine was delivered to and acted on by the governor.

And in Sullivan v. Williams, 43 S. C. 489, 21 S. E. 642, the court held, McIver, Chief Justice, dissenting, that a surety on a bond for the release of an attachment could not introduce evidence in an action on the bond that the name of one of the principals to the bond was forged after the surety signed, and that the bond on its face bore evidence of the forgery, where it had been intrusted to the other principals to procure the lacking signatures.

Linn County v. Farris, 52 Mo. 75, 14 Am. Rep. 389, on the contrary, holds that one who signs a county treasurer's bond on condition that the principal shall not deliver it until it is signed by another specified person as surety is not liable where such other person's name is forged by the principal. The decision seems to have been rendered, however, on the ground that the surety never in fact executed the bond as the condition had not been performed, rather than on the ground of the forgery. The case, moreover, was criticised, and in effect overruled, in State use of Bothrick v. Potter, 68 Mo. 212, 21 Am. Rep. 440, which holds that a surety on a bond to the state is liable notwithstanding an unfulfilled agreement to procure another surety on the bond.

J. H. H.

suffer. The bank did not practice any fraud upon Wheeler, but the party whom he trusted did. When one of two innocent persons must suffer, the one whose negligence contributed to the loss must bear it. Holl v. Smith, 14 Bush, 611; Terry v. Hazlewood, 1 Duv. 109.

The judgment is affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

John BRAUN, Respt.,
v.
NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

- *1. The law implies a contract on the part of a parent who enters a railroad train with a child non sui juris and subject to payment of fare, to pay the fare of such child.
2. If he refuse to pay such fare, both may be expelled and removed from the train, even though the parent tenders payment of his own fare.
3. The forcible ejection and removal of a child of tender years from a railroad train on which it has taken passage with its parent, for the failure of the parent to pay the child's fare, is, whether rightful or wrongful, in effect the ejection and removal of the parent. If, in such case, the parent has paid his own fare before the removal of the child, such fare, or the unearned value thereof, must be returned, or offered to be returned, as a condition precedent to the right of removal.

(May 9, 1900.)

APPPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County overruling a motion for new trial after verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful ejection from defendant's train. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. W. Bunn and L. T. Chamberlain, for appellant:

If defendant had contracted to carry plaintiff's son the expulsion of the boy was wrongful. If no contract for carriage had been made, inasmuch as fare was neither paid, tendered, nor intended to be paid, defendant had a right to eject the boy, as it did, without physical injury, either at a station or elsewhere.

Wyman v. Northern P. R. Co. 34 Minn. 210, 25 N. W. 349.

A principal is only bound by acts of a special agent strictly within his authority, and a third party is bound at his peril to ascertain the limit of that authority.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, Agency, p. 351.

Even if the preceding conductors, knowing

*Headnotes by BROWN, J.

NOTE.—As to ejection of custodian for non-payment of child's fare, see also Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Orndorff (Ohio) 38 L. R. A. 140. 49 L. R. A.

the boy's age, carried him free, it is immaterial. Defendant is not bound thereby, not even if preceding conductors on the defendant's own road had done so.

Cox v. Los Angeles Terminal R. Co. 109 Cal. 100, 41 Pac. 794; Poulin v. Canadian P. R. Co. 6 U. S. App. 298, 17 L. R. A. 800, 52 Fed. Rep. 202, 3 C. C. A. 23; Dietrich v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 71 Pa. 432, 10 Am. Rep. 711; Weikle v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. 64 Minn. 296, 66 N. W. 963; National Bank of Commerce v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 44 Minn. 224, 9 L. R. A. 263, 46 N. W. 342, 560.

The alleged contract is either without consideration or invalid as an attempted variation by parol of a contemporaneous written contract.

Tickets are contracts for the carriage of one person each.

Dunlap v. Northern P. R. Co. 35 Minn. 203, 28 N. W. 240; Poulin v. Canadian P. R. Co. 6 U. S. App. 298, 17 L. R. A. 800, 52 Fed. Rep. 197, 3 C. C. A. 23; Hill v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 63 N. Y. 103, 29 Am. Rep. 103; Fetter, Carr. § 276.

The policy of the law arising from necessary business methods requires every passenger of fare-paying age to show some written evidence of his right to ride. If he does not he cannot expect to ride. His ejection furnishes no ground for damages, and his only cause of action is for the breach of contract.

Poulin v. Canadian P. R. Co. 6 U. S. App. 298, 17 L. R. A. 800, 52 Fed. Rep. 197, 3 C. C. A. 23; Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 135 Mass. 498, 46 Am. Rep. 481; McKay v. Ohio River R. Co. 34 W. Va. 65, 9 L. R. A. 132, 11 S. E. 737; Frederick v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 37 Mich. 342, 26 Am. Rep. 531; Forton v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 234, 41 Am. Rep. 23, 11 N. W. 482; Townsend v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419; Peabody v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 21 Or. 121, 12 L. R. A. 823, 26 Pac. 1053.

Messrs. Stevens, O'Brien, Cole, & Albrecht and Moritz Heim for respondent.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is one to recover damages for the alleged wrongful expulsion of plaintiff and his infant son from one of defendant's passenger trains on August 7, 1898. The facts are as follows: On August 5, 1898, plaintiff applied to a railroad ticket agent at Cleveland, Ohio, for through railroad tickets from that city to Hebron, in the state of North Dakota, for himself, wife, four children, and two adult persons, not members of his family. What occurred between him and the ticket agent is best disclosed by the evidence, as follows:

Q. Well, did you have any talk with this man before you bought the ticket?

A. Yes.

Q. Now tell us slowly, what that talk was, so all these gentlemen will understand you.

A. I come to the office, and ask what it cost,—a ticket to North Dakota, Hebron; one ticket. He tell me it cost $29,—one ticket.

Q. He told you $29, the price of the ticket?

A. Yes; one ticket. And he says when I buy more tickets I get cheaper. And I tell him I got four small children, and I and my wife and two girls, and he says—

Q. He says what?

A. He says, 'I give you four tickets for the whole family, for the whole eight persons, and you pay me for every ticket $27.-25.' And I say, 'All right,' and I give him $100, and put my name, and he gave me four tickets.

Q. Was anything said between you about the ages of the children?

A. No, nothing. I ask him before I buy the tickets, 'I got four small children.' He ask me how old the oldest one. I told him eight years. He says: 'All right. He pay nothing.'

The tickets were delivered to plaintiff, and he at once started on his journey with the members of his party, reaching St. Paul on the morning of August 7. The agent of whom such tickets were so purchased was an agent of the Nickel Plate Railroad Company, but was authorized to sell through tickets over connecting lines between Cleveland, by way of and over defendant's line, to said Hebron, North Dakota. As stated, plaintiff's party consisted of four adult persons and four children. Among the children was a boy of the age of eight years. Plaintiff obtained no separate ticket for the boy, and had no written evidence that he was entitled to passage with the other members of the party, but plaintiff claims that his right of passage was covered and secured by the contract with the Cleveland agent under which the tickets were purchased. Counsel for defendant do not question the authority of this agent to sell the tickets to plaintiff, nor the validity of the tickets. But they do question and contest the validity of the alleged contract for the passage of the boy without payment of fare. They insist that the authority of the Cleveland agent was limited to selling tickets, and that he had no authority or power to contract for the transportation of children without tickets, nor to agree for the defendant company that children over five years of age should be carried free. Defendant's passenger rates and instructions to agents were offered and received in evidence, from which it appears, among other things, that children under twelve and over five years are required to pay half-fare rates for tickets or transportation. Whether the Cleveland agent had authority to make a contract, binding on defendant, for the transportation of plaintiff's boy free,—for such is the result of the transaction shown by plaintiff's testimony,—is a question clothed in much doubt, and is difficult of solution. We are not agreed on the subject. And as another feature of the case, presented by the pleadings and evidence, renders a decision of the question unnecessary, we pass it without discussion. The evidence tending to prove such contract may be referred to upon the question whether plaintiff entered defendant's train with his boy, and insisted upon his passage without a ticket other than the one he himself possessed, in good faith, and without wrongful intent to defraud the company; and it was proper for the consideration of the jury on the question of damages. While we differ on the question of the authority of the Cleveland agent to enter into the alleged contract for the free transportation of the boy, we are agreed that plaintiff's recovery should be sustained on the rule laid down in the case of Wardwell v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 Minn. 514, 13 L. R. A. 596, 49 N. W. 206.

Plaintiff and his party entered one of defendant's trains on the morning of August 7, 1898, at St. Paul, to continue their journey to Hebron. Before arriving at Minneapolis, the conductor or ticket collector in charge of the train took up their tickets, and returned in place thereof conductor's checks or tickets, the precise nature of which is not shown by the evidence; but we may assume, basing such assumption upon a common knowledge of the custom of railroad companies in such matters, that the tickets or checks returned to plaintiff were the ordinary checks given by conductors, and entitled the plaintiff to passage on that day and train only. On discovering that plaintiff's eight year old son had no ticket, the conductor demanded that his fare be paid, or that he leave the train. Plaintiff refused to pay the fare, claiming that he was entitled to free passage under the contract with the Cleveland agent. The conductor refused to recognize such contract, and ejected the boy from the train as it was leaving the station at Minneapolis, but did not return, or offer to return, to plaintiff his ticket. The train was in motion at the time, but the boy was in no way injured. Upon the expulsion of his son, plaintiff left the train, and remained with him. Before doing so, he handed to his wife the conductor's checks or tickets given him in lieu of his tickets, and she continued on her journey with the other members of the party. Plaintiff and his son resumed their journey some four days later. It is conceded that plaintiff had a ticket entitling him to passage on defendant's train to Hebron, and it may be conceded that his son, who was of fare-paying age, had no ticket and no right to a free passage; and we have for consideration the question whether the expulsion of the son from the train for the failure of the father to pay his fare, without first having returned, or offered to return, the latter's ticket, was a violation of the contract to carry the father to his destination, or such a wrong as to render it liable in damages. The father having entered the train with his son, who, as we have noted, was but eight years old, and having refused to pay his fare when demanded, the defendant had the lawful right to eject them both from the train. Beckwith v. Cheshire R. Co. 143 Mass. 68, 8 N. E. 875; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Orndorff (Ohio) 38 L. R. A. 140, and cases cited in the note. This is on the theory that, as the parent is in charge of the child who is non sui juris, the law implies a contract on his part to pay the child's fare, and, on his refusal to do so, both may be expelled from the train. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Hoefflich, 62 Md. 300, 20 Am. Rep. 223, 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 373. There is no claim that plaintiff was personally expelled or removed from the train, or that he was requested or ordered to get off. The contention on his part in this respect is that the forcible removal of his son was, under the circumstances, a justification for his leaving the train, and, in effect, his removal as well as the removal of the son. Counsel for defendant conceded on the argument that, if the removal of the son was wrongful, it would operate as the removal of the father, but contended that, if the removal of the son was rightful, then such removal would not operate as the removal of the father. We cannot concur in this latter contention. The reason for the rule that the expulsion of the child operates as an expulsion of the parent is the same, whether applied to a case where the child may be lawfully and rightfully removed, or to a case where such removal is wrongful. The reason for the rule is found in the laws of humanity and nature. It is the parent's duty to care for and protect his child. There is an inseparable bond of unity between them. And to hold that where the child is forcibly removed and ejected from a railroad train in a strange city, among strangers, whether rightfully or wrongfully, the act of the parent in following the child is purely voluntary on his part, and that such removal of the child is not in effect the removal of the parent, would do violence to the sacred relations existing between parent and child, and the laws of humanity and nature. In such case the departure of the parent from the train is not voluntary in the sense that it is of his own choosing or of his own free will. On the contrary, the act of the railroad company in removing the child is the inducement, the cause, and it would be unreasonable to say that under such circumstances the parent left the train of his own free will. So we conclude that the ejection of a child of tender years from a railroad train for the failure of the parent in charge of and accompanying the child to pay its fare, whether rightful or wrongful, is in effect the ejection and removal of such parent. Gibson v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 904.

49 L. R. A.

It remains to be considered whether the failure of defendant to return to plaintiff his ticket, or its unearned value, renders it liable to him in this action. The complaint is broad enough to sustain such recovery, and we believe the question is ruled by the case of Wardwell v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 Minn. 514, 13 L. R. A. 596, 49 N. W. 206. It is there held that such failure to return the fare actually paid by the passenger renders the company liable. We quote from the opinion in that case: "As precedent to the right to expel him from the train, he [the conductor] should have returned to plaintiff what he was entitled to of the money, and until he did that he had no right to put him off. It is true, he returned it to him immediately after the expulsion. But the wrong had then already been committed, and could not be repaired by doing what ought to have been done before the expulsion." It was not the duty of plaintiff to demand the return of his ticket before leaving the train, but, on the contrary, it was the duty of the conductor of the train to return it, or its equivalent, as a condition precedent to his right to eject him. Bland v. Southern P. R. Co. 55 Cal. 570, 36 Am. Rep. 50. Nor is it important or material to the right of action that a ticket was subsequently furnished him, with which he continued his journey. Wardwell v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 Minn. 514, 13 L. R. A. 596, 49 N. W. 206. It is not disputed but that defendant's conductor or collector took up plaintiff's ticket, returning to him a conductor's check; and it is not claimed that the original ticket was returned, or offered to be returned, before the boy was ejected. If, as suggested by a member of the court, the original ticket had been canceled by the conductor, and thereby rendered worthless and of no value as an evidence of plaintiff's right of passage on a subsequent train, then it was the duty of defendant to return in lieu thereof its unearned value, or some evidence or token which would answer every purpose of the ticket uncanceled. We are unable to distinguish this case on principle from the Wardwell Case, and feel constrained to follow and apply the law there laid down. A verdict of $200 was sustained in that case, and no reason occurs to us why the same amount should not be sustained in this case. We have examined all the assignments of error, and find none of sufficient consequence to warrant a new trial. The charge of the court that the jury might take into consideration the plaintiff's pecuniary condition, in reduction of damages,—for such is the effect of the charge,—was in defendant's favor, and furnishes no ground for complaint. The fact that the instruction on this subject was favorable to defendant was recognized by its counsel, as shown by the exception taken thereto, and no exception was taken because it was adverse to defendant's rights or interests.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed,

Brown, J., on May 22, 1900, handed down the following response:

In view of the vigor and earnestness shown in appellant's application for a reargument on this cause, we deem it not out of place to add just a word in denying it. The original opinion was prepared after such consultation and examination as the press of business before the court would warrant, and the statement there made concerning the custom of conductors in taking up tickets from passengers, and returning to them a substitute amounting to no more than an evidence that the passenger has paid his fare, was based on what we supposed and believed, and still suppose and believe, to be known to every person who has ever traveled on railroad trains. The authorities supporting us are numerous. Isaacson v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 94 N. Y. 278, 46 Am. Rep. 142;

Smith v. Potter, 46 Mich. 258, 41 Am. Rep. 161, 9 N. W. 273; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hall, 83 N. Y. 338, 38 Am. Rep. 434; Gregory v. Wendell, 39 Mich. 337, 33 Am. Rep. 390; Downey v. Hendrie, 46 Mich. 498, 41 Am. Rep. 177, 9 N. W. 828. "Judges cannot denude themselves of that knowledge of the incidents of railway traveling which is common to us all." Siner v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 4 Exch. 123. And we may add, further, in taking final leave of the case, that the "conductor's exchange checks" appended to the application for reargument corroborate the assumption indulged in by the court. They expressly provide that they are good for one continuous passage to place of destination. And plaintiff, having begun his passage thereunder, was bound to continue it, otherwise the check would be invalid. Application denied.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
Paul SIMS.

(.....Miss.....)

The negligence of a gratuitous bailee of a mule while using the animal for the very purpose for which it was loaned is imputable to the owner, so as to prevent recovery against a third person whose negligence, combined with that of the bailee, caused the mule's death.

(February 5, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Madison County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's mule. Reversed.

Statement by Woods, Ch. J.:

This suit was brought by appellee, Paul Sims, against the Illinois Central Railroad Company, to recover damages for the injury of a mule by running cars in the town of Canton. The mule in question was at the time of the injury being driven by one Dixon to whom the owner, Paul Sims, had loaned it for the time being. The mule was driven upon the railroad track by Dixon, and struck by the cars, and fatally injured. On the trial the evidence as to the contributory negligence of the party driving the mule was conflicting. Witnesses for plaintiff testified that Dixon drove up to the crossing, and stopped for some time, as a switch engine was seen there, and it was thought that it would cross, but that the switch engine stopped, and that Dixon started across the railroad slowly with his wagon and team; that there were some box cars standing on the track, that prevented Dixon from seeing the north-bound passenger train, which was nearing the crossing, and ran into Dixon's wagon, and injured the mule. Several witnesses for defendant testified that when Dixon drove on the track the north-bound passenger train, which was due at that time, was coming near the crossing, and that the whistle had blown, and that the bell was ringing; that one Kennedy, an engineer of the railroad company, who was walking along the track near the crossing, hallooed to Dixon to "look out," and motioned to him to stop; that Dixon hurried his team, and attempted to cross before the train, and that the wagon was struck, and the mule injured. The court below gave a peremptory instruction to the jury to find a verdict for plaintiff, and from a verdict in accordance with the instruction defendant appeals.

Messrs. Mayes & Harris for appellant.
Mr. H. B. Greaves for appellee.

Woods, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears that the appellee had loaned his mule to one Dixon, to be used by him (Dixon) in hauling sand, and while so using the animal for the purpose for which it was loaned the injury was inflicted which caused its death. The case is one of injury by a stranger to a bailor's property in the hands and care of a bailee, and the question to be determined is: If the bailee was guilty of contributory negligence in the act complained of, is his contributory negligence imputable to the bailor? Acting within the scope of his employment, the negligence of the agent is imputed to his principal, that of the servant to his master, and that of a bailee for hire to the bailor. Why the contributory negligence of a gratuitous bailee, while using the property for the very purpose for which it was loaned, should not be imputed to the bailor who intrusted it to the bailee to be thus used, we are unable to see. There is the same privity of contract, in all essential features, as in bailment for hire and as in engagements between principal and agent and between master and servant. This view is re-enforced by the consideration of another question, viz., Could a gratuitous bailee, who was guilty of contributory negligence, recover in his own name against a stranger for an injury to property loaned? Certainly not, for the defense to his complaint would be upon the service. But the bailor and the bailee must recover, if at all, on the same facts, and under the same circumstances. We have held that the bailee may, in a proper case, recover in his own name. Baggett v. McCormack, 73

NOTE.—As to the liability of a third person to a bailor for injury to property in possession of the bailee, see also New Jersey Electric R. Co. v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (N. J. L.) 43 L. R. A. 849.
49 L. R. A.

Miss. 552, 19 So. 89. Whatever entitles to a recovery entitles either bailor or bailee to such recovery; e converso, whatever forbids a recovery to the bailee will also defeat the bailor's action. The evidence offered by the appellant tended to show that Dixon, the bailee in charge of the mule, and using it in accordance with the terms of the bailment, was guilty of contributory negligence in the act of injury; and, if this had been satisfactorily established, then this negligence must be imputed to Paul Sims, the bailor, and should defeat a recovery.

The evidence should have been submitted to the jury, that it might have passed upon the question of Dixon's contributory negligence; and, because this was not done, the case will be reversed, and remanded for a new trial.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (Division 1).

Thomas UTLEY, Appt.,

v.

Phillip M. HILL et al., Respts.

(.....Mo.....)

1. A ruling of the trial court upon the weight of evidence is not subject to review.
2. The liability of bank directors and officers under Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2760, for deposits accepted with the directors' assent, after they had knowledge that the bank was insolvent or in failing circumstances, does not extend to deposits received when they did not have actual knowledge of the bank's condition, but acted in good faith and were innocent of wrong doing, although they were negligently ignorant of the bank's condition, which they could have ascertained if they had not neglected to investigate or keep posted as to its affairs.
3. False statements in a report which a banking corporation is required to make to the secretary of state by Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2752, making it a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment for the directors to refuse to make the statement, or wilfully and corruptly to make a false statement, will not make the directors liable to a common-law action for deceit by one who made a deposit in the bank, relying on such report, if they made the statements in good faith, honestly believing them to be true.
4. A court may act upon the evidence reported by a referee, and find therefrom different conclusions of fact from those reported by him, instead of again referring the case.

(March 14, 1900.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Saline County in favor of defendants in an action brought to hold defendants liable as directors of an insolvent bank for losses to plaintiff as a depositor because of negligence and false statements on the part of defendants which were alleged to have caused the loss. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to the liability of bank directors, see Swentzel v. Penn Bank (Pa.) 15 L. R. A. 305, and note; Warner v. Penoyer (C. C. A. 2d C.) 44 L. R. A. 781; and Lamson v. Beard (C. C. A. 7th C.) 45 L. R. A. 822.

49 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Leslie Orear and Alf F. Reector, for appellant:

The finding of the referee in this case is a general finding, and the law does not require the report of the referee to be in any particular form, or that he shall incorporate special findings of fact with the general finding.

Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2153.

The court erred in eliminating from consideration, in determining the liability of the defendants under the first count of the petition, the effects of negligent ignorance, or that knowledge with which the performance of a duty imposed by law would clothe the defendants, and conclusively charge them with such knowledge.

3 Thomp. Corp. § 4107; Delano v. Case, 121 Ill. 249, 12 N. E. 676, 17 Ill. App. 531; Solomon v. Bates, 118 N. C. 311, 24 S. E. 478; Tate v. Bates, 118 N. C. 287, 24 S. E. 482; Baater v. Coughlin, 70 Minn. 1, 72 N. W. 797.

The duties prescribed by the Missouri statute for bank directors are personal duties, and by express provision of the statute the directors are thus brought into direct relationship to the depositors and creditors, and the directors are, as a matter of law, conclusively bound to know: (1) Those things which are necessary for them to know in order to properly perform their duties; (2) those things which a proper performance of their duties would bring to their knowledge shortly after their occurrence.

State v. Battley, 131 Mo. 464, 33 S. W. 41; Finn v. Brown, 142 U. S. 56, 35 L. ed. 936, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 28 L. ed. 49, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; German Sav. Bank v. Wulfekuhler, 19 Kan. 60; Marshall v. Farmers' & M. Sav. Bank, 85 Va. 676, 2 L. R. A. 534, 8 S. E. 586; Williams v. McKay, 40 N. J. Eq. 189, 53 Am. Rep. 779; Seale v. Baker, 70 Tex.

283, 7 S. W. 742; Kitchen v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 69 Mo. 224; Morgan v. Skiddy, 62 N. Y. 319; Gillet v. Phillips, 13 N. Y. 117; Feld v. Roanoke Investment Co. 123 Mo. 618, 27 S. W. 635; Brannin v. Loving, 82 Ky. 370.

If a person dealing with trust property fails to investigate when put upon inquiry he is chargeable with all knowledge that it is reasonable to suppose he would have acquired if he had performed his duty.

Lord v. Goodall, N. & P. S. S. Co. 4 Sawy. 300, Fed. Cas. No. 8,506; Laurence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 68, Fed. Cas. No. 8,136; May v. Chapman, 16 Mees. & W. 360.

Where there is a duty of finding out and knowing, negligent ignorance has the same effect in law as actual knowledge.

3 Thomp. Corp. § 4108; Kitchen v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 69 Mo. 265; Loring v. Groomer, 110 Mo. 641, 19 S. W. 950; Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. 92, 18 S. W. 188; Vaughn v. Tracy, 22 Mo. 420; Drey v. Doyle, 99 Mo. 466, 12 S. W. 287; Abbe v. Justus, 60 Mo. App. 308.

The statute makes such directors the active agents of banking corporations in directing and managing the affairs of such banks, and these duties cannot be delegated by them to any other agency so as to permit them to escape the effects of the knowledge of such facts as the personal performance of those duties would disclose.

3 Thomp. Corp. §§ 4107, 4108; Mechem, Agency, §§ 185, 186; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 536; 1 Perry, Tr. §§ 287, 402; Thompson v. Greeley, 107 Mo. 577, 17 S. W. 962.

The statute makes the failure of the bank prima facie evidence of both assent and knowledge on the part of the directors, and they may be estopped from denying knowledge on the same principle of law as would work an estoppel to deny any other fact.

Seale v. Baker, 70 Tex. 290, 7 S. W. 742; Williams v. McKay, 40 N. J. Eq. 189, 53 Am. Rep. 779; Janet v. Nims, 7 Colo. App. 88, 43 Pac. 147; Bigelow, Estoppel, § 538; 1 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 128; 3 Wait, Act. & Def. 436; Kinkler v. Jurica, 84 Tex. 116, 19 S. W. 359; State v. Buck, 108 Mo. 622, 18 S. W. 1113.

No man is permitted to set up or rely upon his own fault, or breach of duty in exculpation of, or as defense to, liability.

Williams v. McKay, 40 N. J. Eq. 189, 53 Am. Rep. 779; Gordon v. Bruner, 49 Mo. 572; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Alexander, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 306, 27 S. W. 981; Oakland Bank of Savings v. Wilcox, 60 Cal. 126; Thompson v. Greeley, 107 Mo. 577, 17 S. W. 962.

If the defendant directors knew that the Citizens' Stock Bank was open for the transaction of business and the reception of deposits at the time that plaintiff deposited his money in said bank, they must be found as assenting to the reception of deposits.

State v. Sattley, 131 Mo. 491, 33 S. W. 41; Seale v. Baker, 70 Tex. 283, 7 S. W. 742; State v. Yetzer, 97 Iowa, 423, 66 N. W. 737; Patterson v. Stewart, 41 Minn. 84, sub nom. 49 L. R. A.

Patterson v. Minnesota Mfg. Co. 4 L. R. A. 745, 42 N. W. 926.

Published statements are intended for the public, and are intended to be relied upon; and though such statements may not be addressed to the person injured, yet, if he sees them, and relies upon them, and acts to his injury, he has a civil remedy for damages for fraudulent deceit.

The fraudulent intent is shown when the statements are shown to be false, and were published by the defendants with the intention that they should be relied upon, although the defendants may not have known such statements to be false, but did know and were conscious of the fact that the said statements were published by them without knowing whether they were true or false.

Hamill v. Abell, 120 Mo. 188, 25 S. W. 516; Dulaney v. Rogers, 64 Mo. 201; Walsh v. Morse, 80 Mo. 568; City Bank v. Phillips, 22 Mo. 85, 64 Am. Dec. 254; Oable v. McCune, 26 Mo. 371, 72 Am. Dec. 214; Ring v. Charles Vogel Paint & Glass Co. 44 Mo. App. 111; Prescott v. Haughey, 65 Fed. Rep. 653; Litchfield v. Hutchinson, 117 Mass. 197; Bigelow, Fr. 509, 516; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 353, 354; Bolles, Bank Officers, § 87, p. 48; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. § 404, p. 577; Bank of Atchison County v. Byers, 139 Mo. 627, 41 S. W. 325; Trimble v. Reid, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 604, 41 S. W. 319; Hun v. Cary, 82 N. Y. 70; Solomon v. Bates, 118 N. C. 321, 24 S. E. 478; Bigelow, Estoppel, 5th ed. 610; Nauman v. Oberle, 90 Mo. 666, 3 S. W. 380; Union Nat. Bank v. Hunt, 76 Mo. 439.

Where the defendants in an action for deceit are charged with the duty of knowing the condition of the banking corporation and managing its affairs, and are conscious of the fact that they have the means of knowledge at their command, and publish such statements as to the financial condition of such corporation showing the same to be solvent without knowing whether such statements are true or false, but publish them as true as of their own knowledge, when they are conscious of the fact that they have no knowledge on the subject, such statements, if false and intended to be relied upon by the public, are fraudulent.

Cooper v. Schlesinger, 111 U. S. 148, 28 L. ed. 382, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360; Brooks v. Hamilton, 15 Minn. 26, Gil. 10; Hubbard v. Weare, 79 Iowa, 678, 44 N. W. 915; Graves v. Lebanon Nat. Bank, 10 Bush, 23, 19 Am. Rep. 50; Cooley, Torts, § 494; Bolles, Bank Officers, § 87, p. 48; Prewitt v. Trimble, 92 Ky. 180, 17 S. W. 356; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 2d ed. §§ 353, 354; Cole v. Cassidy, 138 Mass. 427, 52 Am. Rep. 284; Morse v. Swits, 19 How. Pr. 275; Cazeaux v. Mahi, 25 Barb. 583; Meyer v. Amidon, 23 Hun, 553; Fisher v. Mellen, 103 Mass. 506; Central R. Co. v. Kisch, L. R. 2 H. L. 100; 2 Addison, Torts, § 1184; Solomon v. Bates, 118 N. C. 321, 24 S. E. 478; Caldwell v. Bates, 118 N. C. 323, 24 S. E. 481; Tate v. Bates, 118 N. C. 287, 24 S. E. 482; Seale v. Baker, 70 Tex. 283, 7 S. W. 742; Bigelow, Estoppel, § 538; Nevada Bank v. Portland Nat. Bank, 59 Fed.

Rep. 345; 3 Sutherland, Damages, §§ 587, 588; Caldwell v. Henry, 76 Mo. 254.

Messrs. W. M. Williams, Samuel Boyd, John A. Rich, S. B. Burks, Thomas Shackelford, and Davis & Dugins for respondents.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by a depositor in the Citizens' Stock Bank of Slater against the directors thereof to recover $8,000, lost by the failure of that bank. The petition is in two counts. The first count is predicated upon § 2760, Rev. Stat. 1889, which makes directors of a bank individually responsible for deposits accepted, with their assent, after they had knowledge that the bank is insolvent or in failing circumstances. The second count is an action for deceit, charging that the plaintiff was induced to make such deposit by reason of false and fraudulent representations that the bank was solvent, such representations consisting of the reports made to the secretary of state, as required by § 2752, Rev. Stat. 1889. All other such misrepresentations were withdrawn at the trial, and are therefore no longer in this case. The answers are general denials. On motion of the plaintiff, and over the objection of the defendants, the case was sent to a referee, "to hear and try the issues."

The referee's report, omitting formal preliminary recitals, is as follows: "That in said cause I find the issues upon the pleadings and evidence as follows: I find the issues in said cause, from the evidence, in favor of plaintiff; that is, I find the facts stated in the petition in both counts are true as therein alleged, except as herein otherwise indicated. I find especially the following facts: First, that one Joseph Field acted as cashier of the Citizens' Stock Bank of Slater, Missouri, from 1882 until the assignment thereof, December 17, 1894; that during all that time he was elected at each annual election in December of each year a director of said bank, and was annually appointed cashier [here follows a finding as to the terms for which the defendants were elected directors, covering the periods involved in this case]; that defendant Hill was elected annually as president of said bank from the time of its organization, in September, 1882, being elected annually by the board of directors, and that he continued to act as its president until the assignment of said bank. I further find from the evidence that the statements made to the said secretary of state, and signed by said president and cashier, were attested as correct by defendants J. W. Field, R. B. Eubank, and W. I. Garnett, by their signatures as directors to the one purporting to show the condition of said bank February 20, 1894, and referred to in evidence; that the statement in evidence made to said secretary of state, and purporting to show the condition of said bank June 2, 1894, was signed and attested by defendants P. C. Storts, R. B. Eubank, and W. I. Garnett as directors; that the statements in evidence made to said secretary of state, showing the condition of said bank January 17, 1891, and May 16, 1891, were signed and attested by defendants Wm. I. Garnett, J. W. Field, and R. B. Eubank as attesting directors; that the statements to said secretary of state in evidence, showing the condition of bank January 2, 1892, and May 16, 1892, were signed by the defendants Wm. I. Garnett and J. W. Field; that the statements in evidence to said secretary of state showing the condition of said bank October 31, 1892, and April 22, 1893, were signed by defendants Garnett, Eubank, and Field as attesting directors; that the statement in evidence showing the condition of said bank September 16, 1893, made to said secretary of state, was signed by defendants Storts and R. B. Eubank; that at the time of signing said statements said defendants knew that the same would be published and were being published in the newspapers published and circulated in Slater, where said bank was situated; that the statements aforesaid represented and showed said bank to be in a good and solvent condition, whereas, in fact, I find from the evidence that said bank was insolvent at the dates mentioned in said several statements, and had been insolvent from December, 1887, until its close, December 15, 1894; that said several defendants, when they signed said several statements, did so without any examination of the books, notes, and securities claimed to be in the possession of said bank, and without knowing whether the statements contained therein as to the condition of said bank were true or not; that they severally signed said statements relying on said cashier's statement or representations that the same was true, and without knowing whether the same was true or not; that they signed said statements with the knowledge and expectation that the same would be published in the newspapers published and circulated among the people where the said bank was situated; that said statements were signed by said defendants without any order of the board of directors of said bank as such board; that said defendants signed said statements with full knowledge on their part that they had not examined the cash, notes, or books showing the condition of said bank, and which purported to be in the possession of said bank. I find further from the evidence that the directors of said bank only held annual meetings, and then for the election of cashier and other officers; that these meetings were just after the annual election of directors by the stockholders; that they never at any time required the cashier or any of the officers of said bank to give any bond; that the reputation of said Joseph Field while acting as cashier of said bank was that of a good business man, as well as a man of integrity and wealth, up to the time of said bank's assignment, and that defendants had knowledge of and relied on said reputation of said cashier for integrity and wealth. I further find from the evidence that during the said time said defendants were acting as directors of said bank they were frequently about the bank, and had access to the books, papers, notes, and securities belonging to said bank, and that they could, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, have known the true condition of said bank at the time of said several statements so made to the secretary of state as aforesaid, or could, with the means of knowledge at their command, have known that said bank was insolvent at the dates of said several statements so signed by them as aforesaid, by examination. That the books of said bank, which were accessible to said defendants, and could have been examined by them if desired, showed that one Mead Mercantile Company was constantly indebted from December 30, 1887, to the date of said assignment to said bank, in divers large sums of money, evidenced by notes and overdrafts, ranging from about $4,500, November 7, 1887, up to $77,000, December 15, 1894, with an overdraft of $7,825.97 at last-named date. That said indebtedness, December, 1888, amounted to over $60,000; June, 1889, to about $44,000; December, 1890, $45,000; December, 1891, to over $74,000; June, 1892, over $75,000; December, 1892, $73,000, with overdraft for $10,787.42 in addition; June, 1893, over $73,000; December, 1893, $73,000, with overdraft for $12,474.49; June, 1894, $64,500 in notes with overdraft of $14,483.29; December 15, 1894, note for $77,000, with overdraft for $7,825.97. That one firm, composed of W. B. Storts and J. D. Eubank, styled 'Storts & Eubank,' were constantly indebted to said bank in notes and large overdrafts from December 30, 1887, to February 13, 1892, in amounts ranging from $52,000 at the former date in notes (and overdrafts for $1,895.11) to $117,294 at the latter date. That between said dates the amount of indebtedness gradually increased, until June, 1891, it amounted in notes to $146,691, and overdraft for $10,778.32. That their overdraft alone amounted, June 30, 1888, to $16,401.19, with notes at over $52,000. That their indebtedness in June, 1889, was over $90,000; June, 1890, over $122,000; December, 1890, over $136,000. That said firm continued indebted to said bank, according to the books at the time of the assignment of the bank, for $117,294. That said book showed an individual indebtedness of said W. B. Storts of over $8,000 in June, 1891; over $19,000, December, 1891; nearly $25,000, June, 1892; over $30,000, December, 1892; over $35,000, June, 1893; over $38,000, December, 1893, over $54,000, June, 1894; and over $57,000 at the closing of said bank. That part of said indebtedness consisted in overdrafts at those dates. That the books of said bank showed on their face a constant indebtedness on the part of said cashier between December 30, 1887 (when he owed the bank $7,000 in notes and overdrafts), and over $19,000 at the close of the bank, on December 15, 1894. That the account of said cashier showed almost a constant overdraft, and frequently for large amounts. For instance, in December, 1890, his account showed notes due from him $6,000, and overdrafts $13,529.46; June, 1892, $11,340 in notes, and over $2,600 in overdrafts; in December, 1892, the same amount of notes, and $9,341.84 overdrafts; June, 1893, notes due by him $11,912, and overdraft $11,939.83; December, 1893, over $14,000 in notes and overdrafts; in June, 1894, $12,100 in notes, and $8,164.96 in overdrafts. That one firm, of B. P. Storts & Co. (said Joseph Field being a member of said firm), as shown by said books, was indebted to said bank in notes and overdrafts, in December, 1891, for over $6,000; in June, 1892, nearly $17,000; in December, 1892, over $15,000; in June, 1893, nearly $17,000; in December, 1893, nearly $22,000 (the overdrafts being over $7,000); in June, 1894, over $32,000; on December 15, 1894, $42,300 in notes, and $4,179.70 overdrafts. That one Josiah Baker, Jr., was between December 30, 1887, and December 15, 1894, constantly indebted as shown by the books of said bank, for large amounts of notes and overdrafts,—that is to say, over $17,000 at the former date, and at the latter date $77,500 in notes and $9,790.59 in overdrafts. That said accounts showed that in June, 1889, he owed the bank over $86,000; June, 1890, about $50,000; June, 1891, over $76,000; June, 1892, $83,000 in notes, and $13,094.39 in overdrafts; June, 1893, over $71,000; in December, 1893, over $56,000; in June, 1894, over $68,000. I find that said debtors were insolvent. I further find from the evidence that defendants all had knowledge that said debtors aforesaid were indebted to said bank at various times while they were acting as directors, but the evidence does not disclose that defendants had knowledge of the full extent of the indebtedness of said defendants; that said defendants had knowledge that said Joseph Field was a member of the firm of B. P. Storts & Co.; that defendants had knowledge that all said debtors aforesaid were using a good deal of money out of said bank, and that said Field, as cashier, was cautioned by them not to let any one man or party have too much money. I further find from the evidence that said directors, while acting as directors, committed to said cashier almost exclusively, if not entirely so, the matter of loaning money, and gave little or no personal attention on their part to the same; that, while they thus committed the management of loans and the taking of security to said cashier almost exclusively, they were about the bank frequently, making inquiry about the bank and its condition, and accepted assurances from said cashier that the same was always prospering; that, by a by-law adopted by the stockholders of said bank in 1882, it was provided that the cashier 'shall have full power and authority to create indebtedness against the bank, to sign all issues of indebtedness and make indorsements for the bank, and receive and receipt for and pay out money for the bank;' that defendants Garnett, Storts, and Hill were present at the adoption of said by-laws; that defendants knew during the time they were acting as directors that said bank was from time to time borrowing money from other banks, but it does not appear from the

